"The Dover Y's became interested in forming an L. T. L., which resulted in a membership of ninety-six; this, on account of its size, has been divided into two sections, the girls meeting one day, the boys the next. Many of the Y's are serving as teachers.

"Company H, Hampton Falls, has thirty-nine members, with an average attendance of thirty. A membership fee of five cents was charged and the money used to buy temperance lesson manuals. The proceeds from the entertainment, 'An hour with Mother Goose and her temperance family,' amounted to $12.65, and this was used to buy pledges, badges, marching songs, and to subscribe for twenty-five copies of The Young Crusader. Only one-fourth of the unions in the state have an L. T. L.

"Our National superintendent says: 'No union is complete without an active, wide-awake Loyal Temperance Legion in their town. Shall we not be wise enough in our generation to train our boys and girls to be the reformers of the coming generation? The autograph cards now have the pledge printed on one side, that the child may be more impressed with the thought that his autograph is really a signature to the pledge.' Send the cards to Ella Pearson, Epping, N. H., that they may be used at the state convention this fall before going to Chicago."

The third lecture in the W. C. T. U. course in Hopkinton occurred March 11, and was delivered by Rev. T. C. H. Bouton; subject, "Astronomy." It was very interesting and instructive, the result of much study. There are to be two more, which will be reported in another letter.

MRS. F. H. BAILEY,
State Reporter, Hopkinton.

MARYLAND.

EXCELLENT WORK.

The series of Bible readings given in Baltimore, under the auspices of the city union, somewhat more than a year ago, by Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood of New York, National superintendent of evangelistic work, was productive of so much interest and such admirable results that a second series was planned and given recently in that city by Miss Greenwood, with like success. Two of the readings were in the chapel of Emmanuel P. E. church; two in the chapel of Christ P. E. church, one to children, two in Brown Memorial Presbyterian church; one in Mt. Vernon M. E. church; one at the second meeting of a newly organized union, St. Paul, in the chapel of the First M. E. church; one at the quarterly meeting of the city union in Grace M. E church; and one at the yearly meeting of the Memorial union at state headquarters, or the Memorial Building. The churches mentioned are among the most influential of their various denominations in the city.

Among the subjects treated were "Fishers of Men," "Christ Our High Priest," "Character Building," "The Influence of the Home," "The Good Samaritan," and "The Duty of the Hour." The last was one of Miss Greenwood's strongest, most inspiring and helpful temperance talks, the W. C. T. U., its aims, methods, and results being dwelt upon fully and freely; but it was "none too strong," in the opinion of the pastor of Mt. Vernon church, where it was given. The reading on "The Good Samaritan" was admirably adapted to bringing workers into the ranks of the union, and several joined immediately after the exercises. Large audiences were the rule at these readings, and all expenses were covered by the collections.

Readings of an entirely different character for the financial benefit of the work were given later, under the auspices of the Woodbridge Y. W. C. T. U., of Baltimore, by that charming poet, James Whitcomb Riley. The program was varied with musical selections by Miss Katherine Willard. A fine audience, a delightful evening, and a handsome sum in the treasury resulted. The arrangements were excellent. Col. Richard Malcolm Johnston, the noted Southern writer, introduced the poet, and several Johns Hopkins men acted as ushers.

Among the noteworthy features in connection with meetings of importance in Baltimore, are the cards of invitation or notices, carefully and attractively prepared and printed, and distributed as widely and wisely as possible. The work of the city union prospers admirably under the leadership of its indefatigable president, Mrs. A. C. Robinson. Five unions have been organized recently; two among colored people by Mrs. F. E. W. Harper, of the National union; Mrs. Harper spoke at different churches and places during this visit twenty-nine times, arousing much interest in the work. Her daughter Mary is still in Baltimore, helping the new organizations.

Other excellent work led by the W. C. T. U. was the securing of a bill from the legislature lately adjourned, requiring matrons at all the police stations in Baltimore. Seventeen organizations for women and children cooperated with the union in this effort and Cardinal Gibbons gave the bill his emphatic indorsement and help. Every man outside of the assembly who was consulted about this bill, said the ladies could get nothing from this legislature, but "perseverentia vincet omnia." Visits to men of influence, to the editors of the leading papers, to the legislature itself (about twenty going on one day), and letters from members of the union all over the state were among the forces brought to bear for this purpose. The press did splendid work for the bill, urging its passage in various commendatory editorials, and after it had been obtained the Baltimore Sun "congratulated the ladies of Baltimore through whose efforts the bill has finally won recognition from the legislature," mentioning also that it "originated with the ladies of the Christian Temperance Union." The police board has since passed an order referring all applications of police matrons to a board composed of ladies representing the societies interested in the passage of the law; this board to report to the board of police commissioners upon the qualifications of the applicants. The bill has met with the full approval of the governor, as well.

The annual session of the Baltimore conference of the M. E. church held recently is worthy of note here because of the vote on the question of admitting women to the general and electoral conferences and for the "discussions on the great questions affecting the welfare of the church," by the lay delegates in conference, and their resolutions upon them.

The question on the admission of women received forty-one votes for, and one hundred and forty against. Dr. Buckley, of the Christian Advocate, addressed the conference, shortly after the vote, concluding his speech with the remark that he is "a happy editor." This action on the part of the conference was appropriately followed by the laying of two corner-stones at the Woman's College, one for the Latin school building and one for a new boarding hall, with addresses by various members of the conference (Dr. Buckley included), in which "all united in commending the higher education of women, and in praising this splendid institution."

The report on temperance was to the effect that "after two years of high license in this city and state, the conference is more than ever convinced that it is vicious in principle, and powerless as a remedy—an opiate to the public conscience."

A most solemn and interesting service was recently held in the chapel of the Maryland penitentiary. After the devotional services of the morning (Sunday) twenty-two of the prisoners came to the altar, were baptized and subsequently confirmed by the chaplain of the prison. This service was held at the earnest request of the men themselves, who had been attending the regular religious exercises there.

A house-to-house visitation in the interests of total abstinence, prohibition and the World's petition is under contemplation by the unions of Baltimore. Mrs. Mary Haslup, state organizer, and the popular president also of Baltimore county, is actively at work organizing new unions, and "mothering" others.

M. A. L.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

PROHIBITION PROBINGS.

Our state evangelist, Miss Emma Swartz, has been at Watertown, doing with her accustomed zeal the good work of her office. Mrs. Folger reports of her that "seventy-four visits were made from house to house; nine Bible readings given in church, and one children's meeting; one visit to the jail, where a song service was held, and temperance literature distributed; eight cottage prayer-meetings, from which was organized a Sunday-school among people who seldom or never attend Sunday-schools in our churches. This school is progressing under the care of Mrs. Fisher and her sister. Friday evening prayer-meetings are the result of Miss Swartz's ministrations in this same neighborhood, one conversion is reported and much interest was manifested."

Watertown union has been discussing "Press Work," "Temperance in our Sunday-schools," and "Scientific Temperance." The union resolved to place temperance leaflets in every Sunday-school in the city, also to advise each school to place scientific temperance text books in their libraries.

After reading Mrs. Folger's report of what the Watertown white-ribboners are doing, I could easily comprehend the following item which appeared in the Watertown News: "The parties who were here trying to arrange to open a saloon have given up the idea of attempting it and will go to Iowa as soon as the present legislature passes a license law. They concluded that public sentiment would not put up with a saloon in Watertown." What a blessed thing in every town would be just such a public sentiment as that.

It has been reported to me that there were thirty-six open saloons in Sioux Falls, eighteen in Yankton and eight in Eureka. Will the W. C. T. U. of these towns investigate these charges, ascertain the number of places where liquor is sold, legally and illegally, and report the result of their investigations?

A boy was sent to prison recently on a three years' sentence, for stealing a pair of rubbers. It was in a state which boasts of intelligence and justice, yet there is a saloon in every town in that state, and every saloon-keeper in the state violates the law which assumes to control his traffic, and is allowed to go unpunished! Is there justice in these things?

Brookings is elate with the prospect of entertaining the state convention next September, and the women are wide awake to the need of enforcing the prohibitory law as an argument against the resubmission fiend which liquor men are trying to introduce into Dakota sentiment. The women have furnished some funds, and attended the prosecutions of saloon-keepers. They petitioned the city council to revoke a billiard hall license that was no credit to the town, and their petition was granted; they have investigated the books of the druggists in the city, and will try to learn of other abuses of the best prohibition law in existence. The mite-boxes of this union will be sent to the Lucy Hayes' tablet fund. One column each week is conducted in The Individual, and one other paper publishes whatever temperance literature the women supply. They now have begun the study of the prohibition law in their meetings. I would like to impress upon the minds of every woman the importance of knowing this law thoroughly; every union should own a copy and every woman should become familiar with it.

The fourth district convention is announced for May 11 and 12 at Andover in Day county. Every local in this district should at once report to county president all the work done by them during the past year, that she may prepare her report for the district convention. The state executive committee convened at Mitchell, February 25. The resignation of state president, Helen M. Barker, was accepted with resolutions of respect and appreciation.

Mrs. Emma A. Cramner, of Aberdeen, duly elected vice-president at state convention, was confirmed by executive committee as president of S. Dakota W. C. T. U., and we are confident she will prove just, sweet and capable.

The executive committee recommends the president to make, in her circular letter just issued, the following suggestions:

"That each union donate $2 or give the proceeds of a social or parlor meeting to the support of our White Ribbon Journal within ninety days.

"That local unions hold public meetings to mold sentiment against the election of officials, state or local, who favor resubmission.

"That a committee attend the several political state conventions and urge the insertion of a plank in their respective platforms favoring the enforcement of prohibition.

"That if possible, we preëmpt the Fourth of July for God and home."

All reports to state reporter may be addressed to Webster, S. Dakota, after May 15.

A breezy letter from one of our South Dakota workers tells how six women put nine dollars into the local W. C. T. U. treasury one stormy winter's night. I send it in reply to the request in THE UNION SIGNAL for accounts of "How you Made Money." These women live in a tiny prairie town of not more than two hundred inhabitants, and the rustling white-ribboners have held six Demorest medal contests, thus exhausting all of the available material for such contests in the village. The women were not content, however, to give up the contest business because of this fact, therefore they organized a class of six married women, who, with one exception, had not recited since their school days. They thought at first they could not even memorize the selections, so many years had their minds been given to the routine cares of wifehood and motherhood. But women surprise themselves when they resolve to do, and in four weeks' time all were ready for the contest.

Not one failed in memory. The judges with difficulty decided which of three contestants merited the prize. Everybody was proud of these enterprising sisters, who, flushed with the novelty of their efforts, seemed to have suddenly grown young and beautiful. Now this little town of Andover suggests that "we have a county leather medal contest." Perhaps it's true that the women need this phase of education as much as do children, though the two methods would not interfere with each other.

IRENE G. ADAMS,
State Reporter, Lake Helen, Volensia Co., Fla.

NEW JERSEY.

DOTS HERE AND THERE.

March 17 the Union county spring school of methods met in Elizabeth. Throughout the day and evening the attendance was large and full of interest. The county president, Mrs. Dr. Tomlinson, of Plainfield, presided with much ability, and by her aptness kept the proceedings up to "high water-mark." The state president, Mrs. Bourne, and five clergymen from the city, were introduced, and made short addresses. Papers were read on various topics, among which press work, physical culture and industrial training for girls, came in for a large share of time, bringing out discussion. Plainfield union is thoroughly alive, and in its varied lines of work shows wide scope; for example, the Kitchengarden, Cooking Class Club for girls, and the Day Nursery in the near future.

Among the resolutions was one urging upon the members the necessity of keeping themselves informed about our work, and recommending every one to take THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temperance Gazette and State Minutes; another on the delusion called "high license" (and this is especially opportune in Union county); another on health; a most tender one on the loss, since their last meeting, of our beloved state president, and still another acknowledging the hand of our Heavenly Father in the selection of a leader in our hour of need, pledging their loyalty to her, and coöperation in whatsoever work God may point out. The blessed Word tells us to "sow beside all waters," and was most forcibly brought to my mind upon hearing read, recently, a letter from a dear, little, black-eyed woman of over sixty years of age, who, some eight years ago, was a true and loyal white-ribboner of Trenton, No. 1. After a time her duties called her to return home to the island of Jamaica, and ever since she has been praying "the National would send some one to start the work on the island." But, alas! no one came. Then this brave woman went from house to house in her own city of Kingston, and talked her thought into others, until a meeting was called and the thought and effort crystalized into a union of forty members, with our loyal one as its president. From this faithful effort the work is being agitated in different parts of the island, and means much more than we imagine in our far-away look, for almost the whole island is in some way supported by the rum interest. Surely, "all nations shall come unto thee," and thus carry the good news to them who are in darkness! Shall we not give this brave soul our earnest prayers? Truly the white ribbon is belting the world!

The last union our dear Mrs. Downs organized was No. 4 of Trenton (colored), and ever since they have been working as if under the inspiration of her last talk to them, which to those who were present, seemed to be of the Divine, it was so full of love and sisterly kindness. A very large and active Loyal Temperance Legion, cottage meetings and public meetings on the Sabbath, are the channels through which they work.

Mrs. Ellis has just closed a most successful series of meetings in Atlantic City. Twenty-two new members to the union and many signatures to the pledge, were results.

The New Jersey Methodist Conference, just closed, passed some most ringing resolutions on the temperance question. "While not advising taking party politics into the pulpit, we most emphatically declare to be in favor of that political party, by whatever name called, that will incorporate in its party platform the principle of prohibition of the liquor traffic, and will not cast their votes for any man, however solemn his pledges, who will permit himself to be a candidate for office in a party whose party platform favors the liquor interest, but here and now record our votes for prohibition pure and simple, and that to do this we must reconstruct our party affiliations," and 'Come out and be separate; thus saith the Lord.'"

The work of the W. C. T. U. was cordially indorsed, as being in accord with their church discipline on the subject of license and prohibition, and coöperation and welcome to their churches was recommended. Their influence was promised to induce boards of education to introduce into our public schools text-books on the effects of alcohol on the human system, as they had no hope of ever securing the law through the legislatures, which is largely controlled by the brewers. Surely there is a "sound among the mulberry trees!" and the women were not far from the right, after all, when, after many years, ministers in solemn conference adopt resolutions which seem to be the very counterpart of that famous St. Louis resolution of eight years back, which stamped the W. C. T. U. as a political organization! The only difference we can find is, that the women were eight years ahead in their conclusions, the brothers a little slow, that's all!

Now, if these resolutions will count in ballots next fall, we shall be most happy to proclaim the effectiveness of resolutions, which are more than "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal."

Just a word of our dear, departed legislature, and I am done. We breathe easier, we of the moral forces, for we didn't know what next. As a legacy to us, they have made no law which makes the liquor element hide itself, but rather have made it easier for the oligarchy to outwit the better element of society, for not one restrictive or prohibitive law is added to the statute. However, one praiseworthy act on the side of good morals I hereby record: A concurrent resolution was passed almost unanimously in favor of having the Columbian Exposition closed on the Sabbath, and we are inclined to think this result was largely brought about by the faithful work of our superintendent of Sabbath observance, Mrs. J. H. Cox, and Field Secretary Rev. J. K. Knowles, of the State Sabbath Union.

The race-track men took their defeat most quietly, but were working all the same, for during the last hours of the session, they introduced a "good bill," on its face, but one evidently for their benefit, and rushed it through before the very wise (?) legislators woke up to the true animus of the bill until they had voted for it. It is true there is no law on our statute legalizing gambling, yet the races are going on all the same, and now one, said to be the finest in America, closed last year, is opened for the summer. Why is it? There can be but one answer, it is that the law enforcers are in league with the law defiers, therefore the moral forces must subside. And they will!

N. L. CAMINADE,
State Reporter, Trenton.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A SUCCESSFUL Demorest medal contest has been held at Tyler, Texas.

THE April Iowa Signal greets its constituency in a a handsome new dress.

MCDONOUGH CO., Ill., convention will be held in Blandenville, June 16 and 17.

ONE who exemplified in her life the highest principles was Mrs. Mary A. Britton, of Centremoreland, Pa., whose loss is deeply felt by her co-workers.

MRS. MOLLIE MCGEE SNELL is on a temperance tour in the South. She will speak at the Mississippi state convention May 5, and Texas, May 18.

MADAME WILLARD'S doughnut receipt is meeting with great favor. "It is liked by all the ladies who have tried it." writes a cheery West Superior, Wis., white-ribboner.

JOE HESS, the converted pugilist, has just closed a week's meetings in Tacoma, Wash. He strikes harder blows for prohibition than he ever struck in the prize ring.

MRS. DORA EVANS, president of the fifth district Kansas W. C. T. U. has been engaged in Demorest contest work, which has quickened the temperance people into greater activity.

THE Central M. E. Church, Norwich, Conn., comprising 300 members, Rev. O. W. Scott, pastor, voted at a recent meeting against the opening of the Columbian Fair upon the Sabbath.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

The National Temperance Hospital, located at 3411 Cottage Grove Avenue for the past six years, has outgrown its present quarters and the latter part of May will move into a larger and more convenient building located on the north side of the city. The new site promises to be a pleasant one as it is near Lincoln Park and the pure air from the lake can be enjoyed by the patients. With more room the work of the hospital will be greatly extended. More patients can be received and taken care of than it is now possible to do. A greater number of those desiring to prepare for the work of the professional nurse can be accommodated in the training school.

So far in the history of this institution there have been but two endowed beds. If more beds were endowed a greater number of individuals could be brought directly under the practical teachings of temperance. The endowed bed is free to humanity and the endower has the privilege of placing patients in the room if he so desires. In this way the hospital can do much more charity work than otherwise; and this is one of the blessings the hospital can give, and one of the necessities it must meet. "They serve God well who serve his creatures," and one-half of humanity must extend a helping hand to the other half. The cost of an endowed bed a year is three hundred and fifty dollars, and can be supported by an individual, or a union, be it a local, county or state union. It is earnestly hoped that you who read this and have been more favored by inherited and acquired abilities and fortunes than many of your sisters and brothers have been, will make this one of the means to help humanity. Think of those sick and suffering with no friends, homeless and houseless by night and day, made so by no fault of their own, perhaps, and if their fault, the heart of flint cannot help being touched by their sufferings.

In the new quarters there will be a greater number of rooms and this will require additional furnishings. Those who are in sympathy with the work of the hospital and desire that its temperance teachings be more fully established, can greatly assist in it by sending donations in money, bed clothing, etc., as can be spared by the giver. Just now blankets, table linen and towels are much needed. Remember, that "wealth well used is as the net of the sacred Fisher who gathers souls of men out of the deep."

At the last meeting of the board of directors of the Hospital, a motion was passed requiring the adoption of a special street suit by the nurses of the Training School. A suit of navy blue with bonnet to match was thought pretty and desirable. This will distinguish the wearers as nurses of the National Temperance Hospital and place them before the world in a similar rank enjoyed by those of other institutions.

The hospital is controlled by a board of directors who live in different parts of the city and of the state of Illinois. However, any one wishing to communicate with any of its officers can do so by addressing them as follows: President, Mrs. M. E. Kline, 62 E. Forty-third street; vice-president, Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, 343 La Salle Avenue; treasurer, Mrs. Caliste E. Bigelow, 539 W. Adams street. Any donations are to be sent the matron, Mrs. Sarah M. Hornby, 3411 Cottage Grove Avenue.

All applications for a place in the Training School should be addressed to Dr. Linnie M. Ousley, resident physician, 3411 Cottage Grove Avenue.

ELLEN SNYDER, Sec.

Official Communications.

THE WORLD'S PETITION.

The World's Petition has received a million signatures, but before the first of April, 1893, we hope for a second million, and would rejoice were the present number to be trebled or quadrupled.

We want millions of signatures that we may say to rulers of every land as we present the Petition, "Herein and hereby the will of the people is expressed."

1. We want the names of women who are the petitioners.

2. We want the names of men (on another copy of the Petition), who approve and indorse this effort of the mothers and sisters of every land.

3. We want an expression of approval from public assemblies, organizations, societies, orders, etc. First, to call the attention of the people to the endeavor of the World's W. C. T. U.; second, to prove that the general trend of public opinion is in harmony with it.

4. Only persons over twenty-one years of age should sign.

5. We are thoroughly constitutional, inasmuch as the right of citizens to sign this Petition "shall not be denied nor abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." We would welcome the signature of the president of the United States, or the ruler of any nation, and their humblest subject.

6. Will each person sending for blanks give the number desired? Each canvasser must have two copies, one for women, one for men; thus, when ordering, multiply the number of canvassers by two, and send us the result as the number of copies needed for your locality.

7. With the date of your letter or card please give the name of your town (or city) and the state, as Boston, Mass.

8. Many have written: "If there is any charge and you will inform us, we shall be happy to remit." There is no charge, but the expense is great, and those who wish to lighten the financial burden of the World's W. C. T. U. can do so by sending postage with the order; one cent for four or six blanks, two cents for double the number. When circulars, reports, or literature are to be added, the postage is somewhat increased. This is a small amount for each local union or individual, but in the aggregate, a large sum for the World's union.

9. All blanks, however, to be used are of the same form, but easily adapted to all proposed uses. At the close of some of the Petition blanks are the words, "The above Petition is heartily indorsed by." When the Petition is circulated for signatures of women (they being petitioners, not indorsers), run your pencil through those words, in all other cases let them stand. Where these words are not found they can be added on Petitions to be circulated for indorsement. First, for signatures of leading men (against whose names should always appear their profession or occupation). Second, for indorsement of churches, societies, etc. In places of ordinary size (not large cities) all churches can place their indorsement upon one blank, as:

The M. E. Church, Burlington, Vt.	300 Members, M. E. Jones, pastor.

This will fill but two lines, and other churches may follow, each taking the same space, and if more room is required, paper can be pasted across the bottom of the sheet.

10. It will be impossible to transport the immense roll of signatures the wide world over, but we can first, display every foot of it at the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in the most advantageous manner; and second, copies of the petition in sufficient number can be printed on linen, to which can be appended the names of the highest officials in each nation who are petitioners, with the exact number of women in the land who join with them in the plea; a record of the societies and a number of their membership who indorse the Petition, also of government officials, of ministers, lawyers, merchants, physicians, etc., etc., and the aggregate of all these for the world. But to have these of convincing power, the Petition itself must exceed anything before known, and we believe the W. C. T. U. is the organization through which such victory will be achieved.

(The above is the method of presentation now proposed which will, however, without doubt, expand as the days go on, and if we, with those who indorse our effort, "pray without ceasing," have we not reason to hope, that as leading Christian women stand face to face with the rulers of the earth, pleading for the protection of their homes, the Spirit of the Lord will move royal hearts to grant the request?)

11. Send all Petitions, when signed, to Miss Alice Briggs, office secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill., and send for blanks to

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,
Ravenna, O. Sec. World's W. C. T. U.

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

We must have one million names this year. Will not men and women, youths and maidens, boys and girls, who love the great cause of home protection, paste this petition on a nice, white sheet of paper and circulate it to the best of their ability, sending the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Rest Cottage, Evanston, Ill.?

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report.

STOP AND READ THIS TWICE

We desire to call your attention to

• • • The Safest Investment you can make

The opportunity will not be long offered, as the small amount unsold will soon be taken. We refer to the stock of the

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association

It has an Established Business
Capital Stock, $125,000

Absolutely Non-Assessable
Dividends Paid Annually

PRICE PER SHARE, $25

ADDRESS ALL INQUIRIES TO WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

161 LA SALLE STREET, CHICAGO ILL.

Farmers who hate Whisky

LIKE THE Farm, Field and Stockman

CHICAGO, ILL.

IT IS THE LEADING FARM AND FAMILY PAPER OF THE UNITED STATES,

BECAUSE IT IS ALSO AN AGGRESSIVE ADVOCATE of TEMPERANCE AND PROHIBITION, AND AN UNCOMPROMISING ENEMY OF SALOONS.

It is the paper every farmer who believes in temperance and morality should have in his family.

It is the largest, most widely circulated, most practical and influential weekly Farm and Family Paper published.

: : PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR. : :

To each person who will send us his subscription within 30 days after the receipt of this paper and 50 cents extra, making $1.50 in all, we will send the FARM, FIELD AND STOCKMAN one year, and a pamphlet giving the Formula of the famous Dr. A. Wilford Hall's Health System, for the curing of diseases and the promoting of longevity without the aid of Doctors or Medicine. Nearly half a million people are using this system, and upwards of 25,000 ministers, doctors and others have testified as to its usefulness. The regular price of the secret of this system has hitherto been $4.00.

Lady Canvassers wanted to sell our publications on our NEW PLAN! Money can be made Write for terms.

HOWARD & WILSON PUBLISHING CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

To the Cincinnati Convention via the B. & O.

Delegates and others attending the Cincinnati Prohibition Convention in June, are requested, before choosing their route from any point, East, West, North or South, to communicate with any of the following agents of the B. & O., who will cheerfully supply all information relative to the lowest rates obtainable, the most picturesque, quickest and safest route, and who will make special arrangements for the transportation of special parties in special cars: L. S. ALLEN, the Rookery, Chicago: W. E. REPPENT, Columbus; O. P. MCCARTY, Grand Central Station, Cincinnati; C. P. CRAIG, 415 Broadway, New York; A. J. SIMMONS, 411 Washington Street, Boston; C. R. MACKENZIE, 833 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia: B. F. BOND, Baltimore; S. B. HEGE, Washington. Pullman accommodations. Two Vestibuled Limited Express trains daily between Cincinnati and the East. Quickest and best train service to Cincinnati from Columbus. The B. & O. is the most attractive route all the year around between Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati and the East.

A Choice List of Summer Resorts.

In the Lake regions of Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa and the two Dakotas, there are hundreds of charming localities pre-eminently fitted for summer homes. Among the following selected list are names familiar to many of our readers as the perfection of Northern summer resorts. Nearly all of the Wisconsin points of interest are within a short distance from Chicago or Milwaukee, and none of them are so far away from the "busy marts of civilization" that they cannot be reached in a few hours of travel, by frequent trains, over the finest roads in the Northwest—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, and Milwaukee & Northern Railroad:

Oconomowoc, Wis.	Clear Lake, Iowa.
Minocqua, Wis.	Lakes Okoboji, Iowa:
Waukesha, Wis.	Spirit Lake, Iowa.
Palmyra, Wis.	Frontenac, Minn.
Tomahawk Lakes, Wis.	Lake Minnetonka, Minn.
Lakeside, Wis.	Ortonville, Minn.
Kilbourn City, Wis. (Dells of the Wisconsin.)	Prior Lake Minn. White Bear Lake, Minn. Beaver Dam, Wis.
Lake Madison, So. Dak.	Madison, Wis.
Delavan, Wis.	Big Stone Lake, So. Dak.
Sparta, Wis.	Pewaukee, Wis.
Elkhart Lake, Wis.	Wausaukee, Wis.
Ontonagon, Mich.	Marquette, Mich.

For detailed information, apply to any coupon ticket agent, or send stamp for a free illustrated tourist folder, to Geo. H. Heafford, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

Do You Want To Know

Just what we have in stock that would be desirable to use as a birthday token? We should be very glad indeed if we could show you a sample of each, and demonstrate to you the fact that for a very small amount you can show a member of your family or a friend that you have a loving remembrance of the anniversary. But we cannot, so must content ourselves with the enumeration. Look, then, we have

BOOKLETS.

A specially inscribed card sent with each: "A birthday greeting, with best wishes." Each booklet in a fancy box. These booklets are all richly jewelled, frosted and embossed, with indented cover lettering and fancy cut edges. The coloring is unusually delicate and harmonious. Each contains a beautiful poem, and the illustrations are of the finest and best quality. The cheaper ones have on the average six pages and cover; the more expensive, twelve pages. The quantity is therefore limited, but what there is, is of the best quality. Taken as a class they constitute a line of goods finer than any other we carry. The ones named below represent a large variety of others, uniform in design and quality, but varying in contents. A full line of all in stock.

Quiet Resting Places. Margaret Haycraft.... $ .25
"Snowflake" cover, indented letters, forget-me-nots in illustration.

The Wheel of Life. Charlotte Murray..... .25
Design on cover, showing title encased in a wheel:

Home Light. Charlotte Murray..... .25
Fancy cut edges, gold print.

Much More. Charlotte Murray..... .25
Same in design as "Home Light."

Crowned With Promise. M. S. Haycraft ... .50
Imitation leatherette cover, gold print.

The Star of Life. Margaret Haycraft .. .... .50
Rainbow-hued front cover with "starlight," gold print.

Love Divine. Same author..... .50
Containing poem, "The Whisper of the Roses," with suitable illustrations. "Snowflake" cover indented.

Light at Eventide. Same author..... .50
Salmon-tinted cover, illumined with green and gold.

Breast the Wave. Fairlie Thornton ..... .50
Buff and gold cover. The spirit of the poem is "Work for the Master."

The Master Himself...... ..... .75
Illustrated by Marie Von Beckendorff. Silver print on cover. Inwrought lace design.

Forget Not all His Benefits. Fairlie Thornton .... .75
Spirit of the poem, "Kept for Jesus." Silver print and flowers embossed on cover.

The Lord Reigneth. Charlotte Murray 1.00
Silver printed cover. Inwrought lace design, exceptionally rich in coloring.

The Unfailing One. Charlotte Murray..... 1.00
Mistletoe design in gilt and light buff. One of the best of them all. Quoted from contents.

"Do you want a word to cheer you,
* * *
Just a touch that will bring comfort?
* * *
It is this, 'He never faileth!'"

CARDS.

1. Scroll with Birthday Wish.....	$ 04
2. Folder with Greeting.....	.05
3. Oval with Flowers and Birds	05
4. Double Semi-circle Fold.r. New and beautiful.....	.15
5. Violet and Wild Rose Set. Delicate tints..	10
6. Tasseled Folder. With celluloid cover and inside pages.....	.25
7. Low cut Folder. Exquisite tints.....	.5
8. Apple Blossoms. Large cards with poem	.10
9. Open Wreath Cards. A beautiful design..	.20
10. Jeweled Cards. Corner of raised work....	.10
11. Childhood Set. Various shapes.....	.02
12. Carol Set. Child faces, or birds	.03
13. Jeweled Folder. Birthday wish in gilt letters. Beautiful.....	.25

A fine assortment which we have not space to enumerate, at 5 and 10 cents. State the price you wish to pay, and we will make as good a selection as possible.

We Remove Our Business Office

Into the Temple May 1st, and as we have on hand a limited supply of back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL which we would like to send on a mission of usefulness, rather than take them to our new quarters, we will agree to send them to you for missionary purposes at ridiculously low prices. See.

For 10c, ten copies.
For 15c, twenty copies.
For 25c, fifty copies.

Now is your chance to get good reading for your neighbors at less than cost of postage. These papers are very fine, as you know. Do not delay. Send at once to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Do Not Fail

To see that your Sunday-schools are provided with the Temperance Lesson prepared for May 22d. We have already referred to its value, and only wish now to urge that orders be sent in early to prevent disappointment. Do not forget.

The following liberal terms are offered: 100, 50cts; 500, $2; 1,000, $3.50; 2,000, $6; 5,000, $12. Add postage at the rate of 12 cents per 100. The Young Crusader and the Lesson will be sent on the following terms: 100, $1; 500, $4.75; 1,000, $9; 2,000, $15; 5,000, $35; 8,000, $48, postpaid. Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

The new edition of "Thumb-Nail Sketches" contains a sketch of Miss Ames, by Miss Willard, also a picture of her, neither of which was in the book sold in the Boston Convention (Miss Ames declining to put herself in the book). "Thumb-Nail Sketches" is a beautiful book, an ornament to any parlor table. It is bound in white and tied with our white ribbon (which to us means so much), and every white-ribboner would prize it, and from its pages get value received. In this little book we have the names of all included in the annual leaflet of the W. C. T. U. for 1892, also the names of our distinguished and devoted fraternal delegates from foreign lands, and the leading vice-presidents in the world. Next to the added power of personal acquaintance with those to whom we listen, this book with its pen pictures and its photogravures, will serve that end. Its worth is inestimable to the local worker. I would especially recommend the conventions to send for it and sell to the delegates.—Missouri Home Guard.

Price 30c per copy. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

"Best & Goes Farthest."

"Once tried, used always."

"But Law, there's No credit in being Jolly when you Have VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA to Drink."

MARK TAPLEY.

PERFECTLY PURE.

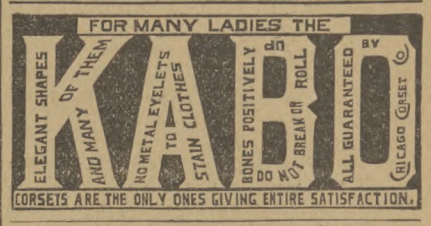
Its great success has, of course, led to many imitations, but it is generally admitted, and a comparison will easily prove that none equals Van Houten's in deliciousness, and nutritive qualities.

The Standard Cocoa of the World.

Sold in 1-8, 1-4, 1-2 and 1 lb. Cans.

☞If not obtainable from your grocer, enclose 25cts. to either VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, 106 Reade St., New York, or 45 Wabash Ave., Chicago, and a can, containing enough for 35 to 40 cups, will be mailed. Mention this publication. Prepared only by VAN HOUTEN & ZOON, Weesp, Holland. A7.

GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS Give better satisfaction than any other. Are the best substitute for corsets.



Van Houten's Cocoa. Best and goes farthest.

"GRANULA is a prepared food sold in packages ready for the table. For years I have recommended it for invalids and children. Ted, a bright five-year-old, spent several months with us. She became very fond of Granula; each meal she would say, 'I want nothing but Grula.'"—Alice B. Stockham, M. D., author of "Tokology." Address Granula Co., Dansville, N. Y., for pamphlet.

CALIFORNIA.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad. Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 621 Rialto Building, Chicago, Ill., if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.

Excellent Service.

At 5:45 P. M. The "Fast Train" leaves Chicago via the Wisconsin Central Lines for St. Paul, Minneapolis, Ashland, Duluth and the Irontowns, composed of Through Pullman Vestibuled Sleepers to Chippewa Falls and Eau Claire, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Ashland and Duluth, making close connections at Union Depot, St. Paul, with the new train which has just been placed in service via the Northern Pacific Railroad to the Pacific Coast, leaving St. Paul daily at 9:00 A. M.

At 10:45 P. M. The "Pacific Express" leaves Chicago for the Pacific Coast via the Wisconsin Central and Northern Pacific Lines, composed of Pullman Vestibuled Drawing-Room and Tourist Sleepers, running through to Portland, Ore., and Tacoma, Wash., without change.

For tickets, time-tables, berth reservations, etc., apply to City Ticket Office, 205 South Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., or to JAS. C. POND, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Our Children.

THE ZAMZUMMIMS.

Deuteronomy 2 : 20

BY JOHN P. TROWBRIDGE.

In the ancient days of story,
When the earth was fresh and green,
There were men of lofty stature
Such as now are never seen.

There were giants in those ages,
In whose presence we should be
Like the Lilliputian children,
In their home across the sea.

They could smite a gathered army
With the terror of the fates,
Or destroy a boastful city,
While they carried off its gates.

But, my children, have you noticed,
In the records of those times,
How these giants, hard and haughty,
Were addressed in haughty lines?

"The Zamzummims," was their title;
And it must have been a strain
On the folks who lived around them
To have grappled such a name.

Had it been but Jones or Johnson,
Or but Smith, or even Smyth,
People might have learned to speak it
Without hazarding their life.

But I wonder, while we're talking
Of these mighty men of yore,—
Of these lusty sons of Anak,
Who have slain a hundred score,

How the plan would work, supposing
We should leave the modern way,
And attach the hardest titles
To the giants of to-day.

There's the wine cup for example,
What a monster that has been
In its ministry to Satan,
And to all his kith and kin!

And the cider-barrel also,
With its iron-banded staves,—
That has helped to dig a million
Of unhappy drunkard's graves.

There's the club-room of the wealthy
In a parlor overhead,
And the grog-shop in the cellar,
Where the criminals are bred.

There's the license of the traffic,
As supported at the polls,
Where the hypocrites are busy
In the bartering of souls.

What a company of giants
To be full in league with death!
How they polish up their titles!
How they sweeten up their breath.

How they try to keep in fashion
With the modern styles of speech,
And select their evil mottoes
From the words in easy reach.

If I had my way, I'll tell you
What I certainly would do,—
I would change the present system
In a special point or two.

I would put the hardest labels
On the cider, wine and gin,
And, instead of Liquor Merchant,
I would write it, Zamzummim.

I would fix it so that children,—
Such as each of you, my boys,—
Could not speak the tempting language
Which the drunkard's lip employs.

I would go to Greek and Hebrew,
And to the Algonquin tongue,
Till I found the worst of letters
To express the thought of rum.

I would introduce a system
Which, without a fault or flaw,
Would be sure to leave its user
With a broken under jaw.

And, perhaps, by that maneuver,
When 'twas practiced once or twice,
A stop might come to talking rum,
Profanity and vice.

Bethlehem, Conn.

A MODERN DANIEL

BY J. F. COWAN.

(Concluded.)

John saw early in the evening what he was in for. Strange as were his surroundings, and uneven as were the odds against him, it only made the boy more resolute and possessed when the crisis came. Up to a certain point he could not decline their entertainment of him, yet every mouthful choked him when he thought of what was to follow.

There was one vision ever before his mind which alone nerved the boy, as the plates were removed and he heard the rattle of bottles among the broken ice, and the clinking of glasses which betokened the last change of courses. It was a little picture of life, the scene of which was laid among the pretty hills of his country home. The faces he saw in it, the expressions they wore, the meaning of it all, in that little darkened room in the farm cottage, seemed to give him the courage if not the years of manhood.

"Yes, fill it for him," his neighbor was saying to the waiter behind them, who had glanced doubtfully at John's still upturned glass. "You'll join us in a toast with champagne, of course, Robb—no?"

"I—I—" John began, trying to formulate his principles into coherent phrases. "You have heard them speak of a Eugene Robb, a former student here?" he suddenly asked, almost breathlessly awaiting the answer.

"Gene Robb? Of '87? Why, of course. He was a frater of ours. You'll find him honorably mentioned all through the record—not the college, the society; Didn't stand in so well with the faculty. Gene was a lark. Not a family connection? Might have known, not a bit alike. Don't hear of Gene from the senate or supreme bench. Ha, ha! Wonder what has become of the poor devil anyway?"

"Eugene Robb was my brother. He is now in Newton Insane Asylum. He drank to excess and shattered his mind!"

Those three sharp sentences fell upon the ears of the gay revelers like a thunder-clap.

"Too bad!" some one ventured.

"Never could stand this sort of racket!" another one ventured, as if trying to relieve the awkwardness of the situation.

"No, he could not stand it," was the answer in quiet but intense tones. "But when Eugene came here he was as free from intoxication as I am now. He thought he could stand it. He thought it would be easier than to stand against the customs and sentiments of the place. I presume you all think so. But, until I can forget Eugene's staring eyes and fearful shrieks, and my father's smitten face as he lay on his dying bed, wounded fatally by the failure of his first-born son, I shall try to stand the second instead of the first. I believe you will give me the right to try?"

And no one said nay to that brave, sensible speech. There was not a young man in the college who could find the courage to openly cavil at such a decision, however much they might be disposed to regard John's attitude as an invasion of which to be jealous.

From that time John's influence with many of them was undisputed. There were those who were weak rather than vicious, and to this young man of nerve and resolution they turned for leadership.

The rest of the story, old Ike, the stage-driver, told at the close of the year, as he cracked his whip down the road with the last load of departing guests and trustees who had come to witness the commencement ceremonies.

"Yas," he said, overhearing a remark from one of the back seats about the gratifying change that had taken place in the morale of the students, and the more manly and earnest tone of their amusements and work—for it was understood that Isaac was a privileged character—"yas, he's the heart of hickory, that young feller is. I knowed it the first time I saw him, but I wan't sure that he'd had the seasonin' that makes a good whip-stock. I hadn't heard about that there brother of his'n, and father, though many and many's the time I've hauled the other one home in my wagon as helpless as a log. Them young fellers can have a game of football, or a boat race, or a little gathering among themselves, now, without getting beastly drunk; and he's in with 'em, and at the head; but they had to come to his stand; he wouldn't budge an inch toward theirs."

"I understand he is a total abstainer," remarked one of the gentlemen. "How does his uncle take that?"

"He brought pressure to bear on the boy, too, when it first came out, and came down here to see him about it; but he's as proud of him now as the rest of us are." answered a tall, dignified man with long, gray beard.

"You're right, president," said Isaac, winking over his shoulder; "it wan't no truer in the days of that other Daniel than it is now, that the young man that has the courage to honor God, the kings and great men of the world love to honor. We'd be in bad shape for college presidents and professors if it wan't for some such young men. G'long, Kate! Gee in there, Nance!"

Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I wonder how many of you read the account on our page, a few weeks ago, of the dear little girl whose heart was so tender and warm towards every living thing? If you cannot call it to mind, look up your UNION SIGNAL of March 3, and read about little Dorothea Langton; then think that if you can be great in no other way, you can be great-hearted in your desire to be good, and to do good. Isn't that the highest ambition, after all? What do you think about it?

The question has been asked, whether we are to have a badge for our cozy corner children. No, not a special badge; but the bands of white ribbon will encircle and draw us closely together in our corner.

Yours, in these bands always,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

When THE UNION SIGNAL comes we are all busy cracking the soft-shelled nuts. I will be nine years old next month. MAGGIE M. SHEPHERD.
Crawfordsville, Ia.

Here are answers to the puzzles. I am ten years old and in the sixth grade. PERRY C. CHASE.
Hiawatha, Kan.

I have so much enjoyed hearing mamma read out of THE UNION SIGNAL. MARIAN ODELL.
Mt. Vernon, Ia.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

34.

AN ACROSTIC BLANK.

(Give the Bible References.)

It seems to us from the acquaintance which we have had of —— —— —— through her writings, that she is the possessor of that

—ove which "suffereth long"
—nd is kind.
—oth not behave itself unseemly.
—ea, "and seeketh not her own."

—opeth all things.
—ndureth all things.
—ever faileth.
—ejoiceth not in iniquity.
—ea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

—trength and honor are her clothing, and she shall rejoice in time to come.
—nly with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked.
—any daughters have done virtuously but thou excellest them all.
—xcellent speech.
—ejoiceth in the truth.
—he openeth her mouth with wisdom.
—xample of the believers.
—he Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit.

CHESTER L. HAMPTON.
Springville, Iowa.

35.

DIAMOND.

```
      1 *
    2 * * *
  3 * * * * *
4 * * * * * * *
  5 * * * * *
    6 * * *
      7 *
```

1, a letter; 2, a drink which contains my fourth; 3, contests of speed; 4, a liquid poison; 5, pains; 6, is caused by my fourth; 7, a letter.

36.

DECAPITATIONS.

1. Behead and curtail an article of dress and leave a wheeled vehicle.
2. Behead and curtail to quiver and leave a home for a kind of insects.
3. Behead and curtail to snarl and leave a quarrel.
4. Behead to clean out and leave a kind of cloth.
5. Behead an imaginary being and leave a crowd.

Answers in three weeks. Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, UNION SIGNAL, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED APRIL 7.

25. Lain, nail: leap, peal; line, Nile; dale, lead; emit, mite.

26. Temperance boys and girls.

27. The wages of sin is death. Temperance in all things good.

Correct answers: Ernest J. Colby; Rebecca; Myrtle Cochrane; Justina Babb; Nellie May Rogers; Grace Townley.

Kernels.

"There is a time to laugh."—SOLOMON.

"How did you like the little dog I gave your wife?"

"I never saw one I liked better. It died the next day."

STRANGER—What occupation has that man who is swinging in the hammock over there, sonny?

Boy—He hain't got any occupation that anybody in this town ever seen. He's an editor.

JUDGE—And I understand that you prefer charges against this man?

Grocer—No, sir; I prefer cash, and that's what I had him brought here for.

THE MATTER OF AN ALLOWANCE.

To any young couple about to enter the state of conjugal bliss, the following adjustment of the matter of the allowance is cordially suggested. There is no patent on the method proposed, and there seem to be no exclusive rights as yet:

"My dear," whispered the young man, "as we are so soon to be married, we should take a practical view of life and profit by the mistakes of others. For instance, there is the subject of a regular allowance every week for spending money, you know."

"Oh, I've thought of that," she replied, sweetly.

"Have you?"

"Yes, indeed, hundreds and hundreds of times; and lately I haven't thought of much else."

"Eh?"

"Yes, your income is $2,000, isn't it?"

"Yes, and I want it to go as far as possible toward your happiness."

"Of course. Well, I've talked it over with mamma, and she thinks an allowance of one dollar a week will be plenty."

"Indeed?"

"Oh, yes. You can walk to the office, you know, and carry your lunch, you know, and so you can use the whole dollar for cigars, and neckties, and things."

TO THE INFLUENZA GERM.

By the shivering fits which chill us,
By the feverish heats which grill us,
By the pains acute which fill us,
By the aches which maul and mill us,
By the quacks who draught and pill us,
By the hydropaths who swill us,
By the allopaths who bill us,
By the nervous fears which kill us,—
Tell us, tell us, wee Bacillus,
What, and why, and whence you are?

Say, are you a germ atomic?
Have you uses economic?
Are you truly miasmatic?
Are you solid or lymphatic?
Frankly, is your cause zymotic?
Are you native or exotic?
When your business is transacted
Is your stay to be protracted?
And do you intend, Bacillus,
To return again and kill us?
Do make answer, if you please!

Tell us briefly, tiny mystery,
What's your source and what's your history?
Clear the clouds of obfuscation
That surround your incubation!
Furnish, without more obstruction,
Your belated introduction.
Let us know your why and wherefore,
What it is you're in the air for,
And meanwhile, O wee Bacillus,
Since with morbid dread you fill us,
Prithee, take your leave at once!

THE late Baron de Rothschild once took a cab to his offices, and, on alighting, tendered the proper fare. The cabman received it, but kept his hand open and looked at the money significantly, which caused the baron to inquire whether it was not right. "O, yes," replied the cabman, "it's quite right, but your sons usually give me double." "They do, do they?" was the baron's reply; "well, they have a rich father and can afford it; I have not."

"MADAM," said the judge, sternly, "you must answer the question. What is your age?" "I was born the same year your honor was. That would make me about—" "It isn't necessary to go into particulars," interposed the judge, stiffly. "Gentlemen, have you any further use for the witness? You may stand aside, madam."

THE Egyptians had a very remarkable ordinance to prevent persons from borrowing imprudently. An Egyptian was not permitted to borrow without first giving to his creditors in pledge the body of his father. It was deemed both an impiety and an infamy not to redeem so sacred a pledge. A person who died without discharging that duty was deprived of the customary honors paid to the dead.

Publisher's Notes.

Now We Have It.

For a long time we have been anxious to find some illustrated work descriptive of the great event which is challenging the attention of the world, and which is so soon to take place, but have not succeeded in securing one to suit until now. We have at last made arrangements for an edition of the

Columbus Memorial,

a large folio volume, 12x15 inches in size, printed on super-calendered paper, neatly and attractively bound in heavy enameled paper. It contains 44 pages and shows the progress and achievement this country has made in four hundred years. It contains:

Letter press and full page map of discovery, 1492 to 1606, 116 years.

Letter press and full page map of settlement, 1607 to 1673, 66 years.

Letter press and full page map of wars, 1673 to 1773, 100 years.

Letter press and full page map of independence, 1773 to 1789, 16 years.

Letter press and full page map of constitution, 1789 to 1845, 56 years.

Letter press and full page map of dissension, 1845 to 1860, 15 years.

Letter press and full page map of secession, 1860 to 1865, 5 years.

Letter press and full page map of peace, 1865 to 1892, 27 years.

Map of the city of Genoa, Italy, supposed birthplace of Columbus, with biographical sketch of Christopher Columbus.

Three pages, general descriptive matter "World's Columbian Exposition," from its inception to the present time, with a carefully prepared and authentic table of the World's Fairs that have been held at different times throughout the world, from "Crystal Palace" 1851, to the "World's Fair" of 1893.

In all their magnificence are portrayed Machinery Hall, which alone cost $1,200,000; the Manufacturers' Building, the Art Palace, the Administration Building, the Government Building, the Electrical Building, the Horticultural Building, the Agricultural Building, the Transportation Building, the Fish and Fisheries Building, the Woman's Building, designed by a woman; the Mines and Mining Building, the Forestry Building, beautiful illustration of the wonderful lagoon scene; grand bird's-eye view scene of the Exposition buildings; double page map or diagram, showing the relative position of the main buildings, including state buildings and size of each, etc., etc.

We will send this and THE UNION SIGNAL one year, postpaid, for only $1.30, or we will send it to any address postpaid, in return for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1.00 each.

Tell the children to ask their friends to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. If they send five new names and $5, we will send one of the beautiful "Columbus Memorials" postpaid, to any address they may indicate.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Just Send for One.

We mean a sample of the Sunday School Lesson prepared for May 22. It is the finest we have ever issued, beautifully illustrated. We cannot do it justice, so do not attempt a further description except to say that Mrs. Helen G. Rice and Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson have developed the best thoughts underlying the lesson taught in the Scripture selection chosen as the theme for that day.

Let us all unite in an effort to place it in the hands of every teacher and pupil in our Sunday-schools without delay. Time is short.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Removal Sale.

It will take some time to remove our supplies so that orders that reach us before May 7 will be filled at the rates here advertised, if the supply is not exhausted.

Back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL, 50c per 100.

Back numbers of The Young Crusader, 50c per 100.

Wall-pocket packages, 50c.

A fine aquarelle tint picture of Miss Willard, price 50c, and one of the impressive cartoons, "The Mill and the Still," price 10c, both for 50c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want a Photograph

of one of the National W. C. T. U. leaders? You can have it. Write to us for information, and we will tell you how.

Jack and Jill wouldn't have had to carry so much water if they had used

Gold Dust Washing Powder,

and their work would have been sooner done, for nothing else that

Cleans So Well,
So Quickly, or Costs So Little

has been discovered.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR — COLD BLAST — NO DUST — NO QUILLS — CHICAGO

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. Wishing to introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS and at the same time extend our business and make new customers, we have decided to make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph, Tintype, Ambrotype or Daguerotype of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work, and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish, not interfering with the likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address all mail to THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO. Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to anyone sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

PERFECTION FLOUR BIN AND SIEVE

KEEPS FLOUR PERFECTLY DRY AND FREE FROM DIRT VERMIN ETC.

COMBINES BIN SIFTER PAN & SCOOP. AERATES AND PRESERVES FLOUR FROM MOLD

Avoids the great inconvenience of reaching into a barrel or sack. No scattering. Saves time and waste. Once tried you would not be without it for many times its cost. Send for circular.

Prices to hold { 25 lbs. $2.50 / 50 lbs. $3.00 / 100 lbs. $4.00 } Your dealer sells them or ought to. If he does not please write to us.

SHERMAN & BUTLER, Manufacturers, 26-28 W. Lake Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association OF AMERICA
PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.

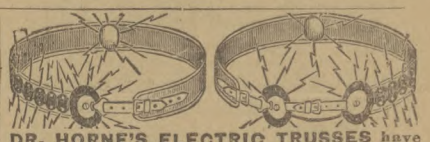
It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.

New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.

It will pay you well to write to us.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.
902-904 Royal Insurance Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR
Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish. FREE
St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.



DR. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES have cured 10,000 Ruptures in 15 years. The only Electric Truss in the world. 60-page book free.
DR. HORNE, INVENTOR, 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.
Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH

Taken internally and used locally with Inhaler. At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book "Common Sense Talk" and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured. All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dept.
C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 53 Jefferson St., Chicago

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE
by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address
Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample Sold by all Druggists.
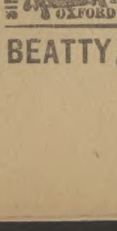
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.



$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine, perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

BEATTY Pianos $175 Organs $48 Want Ag'ts Cat. free. Dan F Beatty, Wash'ton, N J

45 sold in '88
2,288 sold in '89
6,268 sold in '90
20,049 sold in '91
60,000 will be sold in '92

A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes.

☞ These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermoter. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country."

Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 8 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer, in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO., 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27 and 29 Beale St., San Francisco.

GALVANIZED It is not enough to make portions of a wheel of galvanized metal. That leaves exposed edges and is not so good as painting. The Aermotor is galvanized after being completed, thus absolutely protected from rust and decay.

The Aermotor Pneumatic Water Supply System enables you to supply every part of your house with water without an Elevated Tank.

"WHAT I EAT, THAT I AM."

GRANULA

AN INCOMPARABLE FOOD

Discovered by JAMES C. JACKSON, M. D., Founder of the Famous

DANSVILLE SANATORIUM,

Being the life-giving principle of WHEAT. Easily digested; readily assimilated by all. "A universal favorite wherever known."

Trial Package 36 cents, by mail postpaid. Send for our Pamphlet (free).

GRANULA MFG. CO.
DANSVILLE, N. Y.

Spoons and Forks without our Fork's

"XII" SECTIONAL PLATING ARE THE MOST ECONOMICAL FOR GENERAL USE

1847 ROGERS BROS. "XII"
SPOONS AND FORKS

Are plated THREE TIMES HEAVIER on the three points most exposed to wear.

SOLD BY FIRST-CLASS DEALERS.

BAKER'S COCOA
IS ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used

VOSE & SONS PIANOS
EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

"Ring out the words, Wild Bells! Sound the good news, Sweet Bells!

Dr. O. P. Brown's
ACACIAN BALSAM

healed my throat, cured my lungs, stopped my cough, restored my voice!" This old, tried, Herbal Remedy loosens, heals, strengthens. Cures coughs, colds. 50 cts. and $1.

J. GIBSON BROWN, 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease. Lizzie N. Armstrong writes: "If I knew I was to be the mother of innumerable children it would have no terrors for me, so great is my confidence in the science of TOKOLOGY." A mother writes: "TOKOLOGY treatment under God, saved my life in childbirth, and gave me a strong, healthy baby." Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO. 277 Madison-st. Chicago

Publisher's Dep't.

Bits of Experience.

Last year a distinguished W. C. T. U. woman was to give a lecture in a town of a state that thinks uncommonly well of itself. A presbytery was in session at the time, just opposite the court-house where this temperance meeting was held. The presbytery adjourned because its audience was sure to be a minus quantity; but not a preacher entered the court-room to help those Christian women in their work of salvation, not by so much as asking God's blessing in the opening prayer. The W. C. T. U. president, wife of an elder in that church opposite, was equal to the emergency, and women of that community who had taken no part with the W. C. T. U. were welded to it from that hour by links of hot indignation at the slight of the preachers. Somebody sent the regular pastor of that church opposite by way of "coals of fire," THE UNION SIGNAL for one year. The other day, on Sunday morning, in his pulpit, he prayed earnestly for the temperance women of the land, that God would bless their heroic efforts and give them victory. He has made a long step heavenward in a year. That man believes now that God knew what He was doing when He set women to working for Him. Gladstone says, "The press, the platform, and petition, are the levers for regeneration."

A local union in a town of 2,000 inhabitants voted to send THE UNION SIGNAL one year to the three pastors there resident, from none of whom had the slightest encouragement been extended to the W. C. T. U. Six months later, the most conservative among these pastors said to the president of the W. C. T. U.: "Some one is sending me THE UNION SIGNAL. I read every word of it. It is a splendid paper, and has converted me."

MORAL:—Send THE UNION SIGNAL to your pastors, and other leaders of thought you desire to convert.

I would have every woman in our county that would read THE UNION SIGNAL, have the chance to do so for one year at least; we are taking fifteen different papers, and I read the most of them; one of them is the Woman's Tribune; but they might all go before I would give up THE UNION SIGNAL. Would have it if it was three dollars a year, and I had to take in washing to pay for it. The fact is, I do not see how any W. C. T. U. woman can do much effective work without it; to me it would be like trying to keep house without anything to keep house with. It ought to have at least 100,000 subscribers. Our W. C. T. U. organization numbers over 200,000, and surely one-half of those ought to take the paper. Our local union numbers only seventeen, and eleven of them are subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL, and I shall feel as though my work is not well done until every one of them are subscribers and readers of one of the best papers in our land.—Extract from a letter.

Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, World's W. C. T. U. press reporter, says of THE UNION SIGNAL and WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON, organ of the National W. C. T. U. and British Woman's Temperance Association: "THE UNION SIGNAL is stocked with the amplest supply ever found in a literary storehouse. There are facts upon facts for the Gradgrinds; there is close reasoning for the thinker; there are stories for those to whom great truths are best brought home by illustrations; there is poetry to sing itself in the twilight hours to weary workers, and through all and best of all there is in every issue of the paper the breath of a deep and joyful faith that God, who has brought us so far will bring us all the way."

We earnestly urge all white-ribboners of Michigan to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. You need it to be well informed in regard to the work all over our own and other lands. Send $1 to the W. T. P. A., 161 La Salle Street, Chicago, and have THE UNION SIGNAL sent to you for one year.—Michigan Union.

I wish every member of every union would read THE UNION SIGNAL every week. It is the best temperance paper we have; it is an educator that is felt in any home where it is read, and is always on the side of peace, purity, temperance and right.—So. Calif. White Ribbon.

"The Timely Talks are admirable. I am so glad to have them to distribute. I am sure they have done much good in our community." So writes a friend.

Get Ready

To spend ten days at the World's Fair. We will tell you how you can do so very soon.

Send for Color Samples and Price List. Patented February 23, 1886. Examine closely Stamp on inside of Waist.

TAKE NO OTHER.

THE GENUINE JACKSON CORSET WAISTS

ARE MADE ONLY BY THE

JACKSON CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.

The manufacturer's name is printed upon the boxes, and stamped upon inside of clasp in each waist. They are the most popular articles of the kind now on the market. You should have one of them.

BE SURE AND GET THE RIGHT THING. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, SEND $1.25 FOR SAMPLE.

AGEM FOR ALL WHO WANT TO BUILD

Our new book of 172 pages, 8½ x 11 inches The "Cottage Souvenir," containing a great variety of Designs & Plans of costing from $500 to $10,000.

Artistic Dwellings

The Beauty and Completeness of these Designs, combining so many new features, has given this book a wonderful sale, and hundreds of Beautiful Homes are being built in all parts of our land from its designs. Price $2. Send for prospectus and sample pages, FREE.

GEO. F. BARBER & CO., Architects,
KNOXVILLE, TENN.

PEATS THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT CHICAGO

Retails all grades of WALL PAPER of the newest designs and latest colorings in small quantities; many patterns cheaper than your home dealer can buy them.

GOOD PAPER, 3c. GOLD PAPER, 5c.

Handsome parlor paper 10—12½—15c per roll with wide border and ceiling to match.

If you intend to use any WALL PAPER whatever send 10 cents for postage on samples and his guide "HOW TO PAPER" will be sent free. Agents sample books $1. See his samples before you buy.

ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant,
136-138 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

A Sample Cake of Soap and 128 page Book on Dermatology and Beauty: Illustrated; on Skin, Scalp, Nervous and Blood diseases sent sealed for 10c.; also Disfigurements like Birth Marks, Moles, Warts, India Ink and Powder marks, Scars, Pittings, Rednessof Nose Superfluous Hair, Pimples, etc. JOHN H. WOODBURY, DERMATOLOGIST, 125 West 42d Street, New York City. Consultation free, at office or by letter

3 Cakes for $1.00.

SIR HENRY THOMPSON, the most noted physician of England, says that more than half of all diseases come from errors in diet.

Send for Free Sample of Garfield Tea to 319 West 45th Street, New York City.

GARFIELD TEA Overcomes results of bad eating; cures Sick Headache; restores Complexion; cures Constipation.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

ASTHMA

WORST CASES CURED TO STAY CURED IF UNCOMPLICATED BY ORGANIC DISEASE. Incurable cases declined.

WE WANT NAME OF EVERY ASTHMATIC. Examination free by mail.

P. HAROLD HAYES, M.D.
BUFFALO, N. Y.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.

TAKE A COURSE IN THE SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW. (Incorporated.)

Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to

J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y,
DETROIT, MICH.
525 WHITNEY BLOCK.

PURE GUM RUBBER GOODS

Of Every Description; also,

Mackintosh Clothing;
also, Japanese Tissue,

For Mending Without Needle or Thread,

ELASTIC TIP CO.,
Headquarters 152-154 Lake St., Chicago

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS

CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.

Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.

N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,
163-165 DEARBORN ST. - CHICAGO, ILL.
New York. Boston.

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL in your own home. First-class Sewing Machines at wholesale prices.

$35 Standard Singer Machine for $9.50
$45 " " " $15.50
$55 Arlington " $19.50

All latest improvements, light running. Warranted 5 years. Complete set of attachments FREE. Send for catalogue.

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 358 Dearborn St. B 201 Chicago, Ill.

BABY CARRIAGES

We manufacture to sell direct to private parties at factory prices, and deliver free of charge to all points in United States. Our new Catalogue free. Address

C. T. WALKER & CO., 199 E. North Ave., Chicago, Ill.

YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTIGIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

FAT PEOPLE You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by DR. CLARKE'S Home Treatment. Proofs estimonials, Free. F. B. CLARKE, M. D., Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

☞ See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

A LADY WANTED

in each locality to manage Toilet Parlor at home; write, obtain names, send circulars. $5 to $15 weekly. Our Toilet Art Book Free. Send stamp. SYLVAN TOILET CO., Port Huron, Mich.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free.
G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free, Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St., Chicago.

10 cents pays for the best ladies' paper published for three months. Ladies' Bazar, Chicago, Ill.

"Why stand ye all the day idle?"

10 DOLLARS PER DAY

is not easily made in these times, but it can be made working for us in any locality. We have agents that have made more than $25 per day, the whole secret is we have something that every housekeeper wants and will buy at sight without any urging. If agents prefer will pay a straight salary of $75 per month and expenses. Full particulars sent free to all points where we have not already secured an agent. Exclusive territory given. Can refer to any express company in Boston as to our integrity. Address, (in full,)

STANDARD SILVERWARE CO.,
Order Dept. 127 Boston, Mass.

These Are Some of Our Supplies.

BIBLE READINGS.

By Hannah Whitall Smith.

Published Monthly.

One copy, per year . . . . . $ .12
Ten or more copies, per year, one address, each 10
In orders of fifty or more, per copy 00½

Songs of Deliverance.
"I Can" or "I Can't." Which?
"Me."
"Spiritual Diseases."
The Law of Kindness.
God's Namings.
Wherefore Didst Thou Doubt?
No Things vs. All Things.
Giving and Receiving.
In Everything Give Thanks.
What Think Ye of Christ.
Obedient to the Heavenly Visi
Conformed to the Image of Christ.
That Ye May Know.
Invisible Things Seen by Visible Things.
Wholly Following.
God's Thoughts vs. Man's Thoughts.
Secret of the Lilies.
The Will in Religion.
The Hidden God.
What Is His Name?

To be Published in 1892.

January—Our Father. Hannah Whitall Smith
February—Follow His Steps. " "
March—Fishers of Men. Elizabeth W. Greenwood
April—Wisdom. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes
May—The Sunshine of Commendation. Elizabeth W. Greenwood
June—Boys of the Bible. Mrs. J. H. McMinn
July—Girls of the Bible. " "
August—The Model Worker. Mrs. J. K. Barney
September—The Open Vision. " "
October—To-Day's Christianity. Lady Henry Somerset
November—"Bringing in the Sheaves." B. V. Cushman, M. D.
December—Our Successes and Failures. Esther Pugh

For other Readings for the year, send for Folder. See p. 8.

For Bible Readings in pamphlet form, see p. 34

RESPONSIVE READINGS.

[These form a part of the W. C. T. U. Course of Study and are especially designed for the use of local Unions. They give timely information and suggestion on department work and topics of the day allied to the subject of temperance.]

Published Monthly.

1 copy per year . . . . . $ .10
13 copies, to one address 1.00
20 " " " 1.50
30 " " " 2.00
40 " " " 2.50
100 copies of one number 50

Work Among Soldiers and Sailors. Mrs. Sarah A. McClees
Equal Suffrage. Mrs. I. B. Cole
Aggressive Work.
Work of Evangelistic Department. E. R. Greenwood
Scientific Temperance Instruction. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt
Flower Mission. Jennie Casseday
School of Methods. Mary Allen West
Music. Mrs. M. D. Kimball
State and County Fairs. Mrs. J. R. Nichols
Hygiene. Orpha D. Baldwin, M. D.
Gospel Temperance Work. B. V. Cushman, M. D.
The Loyal Temperance Legion. Mrs. Helen G. Rice
An Organizer's Question Box. Henrietta L. Monroe
Work Among Foreigners. Mrs. S. F. Grubb
Sabbath Observance. Mrs. J. C. Bateham
How to Have a Good Convention. (A Symposium)
A Talk on Parlor Meetings. Mrs. Anna M. Hammer
The Flag on the Schoolhouse. Alice M. Guernsey
Christian Stewardship and Systematic Giving. Mrs. Esther Tuttle Pritchard
Our Work. Mrs. Ida B. Cole
Gospel Temperance Revivals—Preparations for Them. B. V. Cushman, M. D.
"Given to Hospitality." A Symposium
"Safe Moorings." (Work Among Sailors).
Advance Steps, 1890–1891. By the National Superintendents

To be Published in 1892.

January—W. C. T. U. Work in the Country. Mary Allen West
February—Bible Study. Rev. Alfred A. Wright, D. D.
March—How the W. C. T. U. Looks to Outsiders. A Symposium
April—"Wherewithal Shall We Be Clothed?" Mrs. Frances J. Barnes
May—Practical Hints For Social Work. Jennie A. Stewart
June—The Nation's Gatekeepers. Mrs. S. F. Grubb
July—True Patriotism. Mrs. J. C. Fernald
August—Railroad Work. Jennie Smith
September—The World's W. C. T. U. Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge
October—Gospel Politics. Frances E. Willard
November—Harvest. B. V. Cushman, M. D.
December—Looking Backward. A Review of the Year

For Folder (free) giving list of Topical Readings on the above subjects and leaflets for distribution each month, send to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

TIMELY TALKS.

This series of leaflets is designed for distribution in public meetings. It covers a great range of topics, aiming to touch all phases of the temperance question. It is especially rich in material for no-license campaigns. See titles.

Per 100 . . . . . $ .30
Per 1,000 . . . . . 2.50

1. Shall We License the Dram-Shops? Prof. Geo. E. Foster
2. How the Dram-Shops Pay the Taxes. Prof. Geo. E. Foster
3. How the Dram-Shop Helps Business. Prof. Geo. E. Foster
4. The Delusions of High License. Herrick Johnson, D. D.
5. License, High or Low, Wrong in Principle. Herrick Johnson, D. D.
6. Songs of Home and Native Land,
7. Our Drink Bill and the People Who Pay. Rev. J. C. Fernald
8. The High License Craze. Rev. H. H. French
9. Tobacco at Yale and Amherst.
10. The Child and the Commonwealth. Mrs. Julia R. Parrish
11. Does the Bible Teach Subjection of Women? Mrs. S. A. Burkhalter
12. Fallacies of High License. Frances E. Willard
13. High License is a Backward Step. Pres. John Bascom
14. Symposium on High License. Mary Allen West
17. On Which Side are You? Frances E. Willard and Mrs. M. T. Lathrap
18. The Distillery vs. The Farm. Mary Allen West
21. Science and Total Abstinence. Narcissa E. White
22. Woman's Work For Social Purity. Anna Garlin Spencer
23. Let Your Women Keep Silence in the Churches.
24. Prohibition Not an Invasion of Personal Liberty. Herrick Johnson, D. D.
25. The Liquor Traffic and Foreign Missions. Compiled by Mrs. C. A. Dunham
26. The Rights of Those Who Dislike Tobacco. Anna Garlin Spencer
27. Scientific Temperance: What is it? Mrs. Mary H. Hunt
28. Evangelistic Work of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry
29. High License—Is it a Step Toward Prohibition? Mrs. Clara Hoffman
30. Restriction or Prohibition? Neal Dow
31. How to Make Prohibition Prohibit. Neal Dow
32. Why William Dustin Became a Prohibitionist. Mrs. A. E. Sigsbee
33. The Greatest Party. Frances E. Willard
34. The Observance of the Sabbath. Rev. B. W. Williams
35. The Other Side. Mrs. C. A. Dunham
36. Down With the Traffic. John P. St. John
37. Echoes From History. Charles Sumner on the Third Party
38. Why Vote for the Prohibition Amendment? Walter Thomas Mills
39. The Present Phase of the Temperance Question. Rev. J. H Ecob, D. D.
40. The Pledge.
41 and 42. License vs. The Moral Law. Rev. F. L. Goodspeed

SIGNAL LIGHTS.

Small Folders, suitable for distribution at public meetings, for letter slips, etc. Intended to awaken thought and kindle thought into action.

Per 100 . . . . . $ .15
Per 1000 . . . . . 1.25

1. Individuality of Conscience in the Voter. Frances E. Willard
2. The "Good Old Times" in Maine. Neal Dow
3. Why the Old Parties Have not Met the Saloon Issue. Prof. W. G. Frost
4. The Moral Unsoundness of High License. Herrick Johnson, D. D.
5. The Crime of the Nations—What Can We Do? George C. Hall
6. Forward and Not Backward. Prof. W. G. Frost
7. Smoking.
8 to 13. Words for Wage-Workers. Mrs. Augusta C. Bristol
14. Prohibition Prohibits.
15. Liquor on the Congo. Henry M. Stanley
16. A Voter's Soliloquy.
17. Opium and Other Narcotics. J. G. Kerr, M. D.
18. Temperance and the Labor Question. Frances E. Willard
19. Facts About High License in Missouri. Mrs. Clara Hoffman
20. The Reason Uncle Zachary will not Keep or Sell Cider.
21. The New Declaration of Independence. Rev. F. O. Blair
22. Somebody is Praying for You. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry
24. The Tobacco Habit and its Effects upon School Work. H. H. Seerley, Principal of Iowa State Normal School
25. Who Killed Carroll? S. W. Packard
26. A New Era in the Temperance Reform. Frances E. Willard
27. Facts For Organized Labor. Mrs. Augusta C. Bristol
28. Needed—Only Pieces of Paper. Geo. C. Hall
29.
30. The Drummer's Story. E. A. C.
31. Why a Pledge Against Cider? Sallie B. Hoskins
32. What Shall be Taught the Children? Mary H. Hunt
33. Alcohol and Health.

GOSPEL LIGHTS.

Note-book size, printed on one side only, designed especially for distribution at Gospel Temperance Meetings.

Per 100 . . . . . $ .15
Per 1000 . . . . . 1.25

1. What is a Temperance Pledge? Mrs. S. M. I. Henry
2. Why Should I Sign the Pledge? Mrs. S. M. I. Henry
3. A Message for You.
4. How Long Will He Hold Out? B. V. Cushman, M. D.
5. A Saloon Keeper's Temperance Lecture.
6. A Saloon Keeper's Fears
7. A Weather Parable. Mark Guy Pearse
8. The Will of God. Prof. Henry T. Drummond

NATIONAL PROHIBITORY AMENDMENT LEAFLETS.

1. The Constitution of the United States.

Price, each . . . . . $ .05
Per 100 . . . . . 2.00

2. The Joint Resolution.
3. National Prohibition. Hon. Henry A. Blair

This series, prepared under the direction of Mrs. Ada M Bittenbender, National Superintendent of the Department of Legislation, will be found fully outlined in the "National Prohibitory Amendment Guide." It is designed, as the name indicates, to help forward the solution of the temperance question as a national problem.

Nos. 2 and 3, per 100 . . . . . $ .50
Per 1,000 by express, at your own expense 3.50

Signal Notes.

AUSTRALIA is said to be the best customer England has for beer.

THE Irish Presbyterian Church has aroused itself against the drink traffic and traffickers.

EIGHT measures relating to temperance have been introduced into the British parliament during the present session

SIR WILFRID LAWSON says he has tried, and will try, to secure the prohibition of the liquor traffic as the best aid to temperance.

MR. MOODY is promoting the establishment, in Scotland, of an evangelistic training school for Christian volunteer workers.

SOME of the most influential students of the University of Pennsylvania have organized "The Temperance League of the Holy Cross," the object of which is to do away with the use of wine at class suppers.

TO THE war policy of Greek and Servia, which sinks the bulk of their revenue in the "bottomless pit of military and naval armaments," may be credited their present financial straits and lack of commercial and industrial development.

A GERMAN medical authority writing of epidemic diseases says: "The surest preventive is sulphur. Put half a teaspoonful of flowers of sulphur into each of your stockings and go about your business. Never go with an empty stomach, eat no fresh bread or sour food."

IT is said on eminent scientific authority that unless the sun "mends his extravagant ways" and gives out his heat less like a spendthrift that this delightful residence planet will have to be abandoned by the human race within the brief space of 5,000,000 years.

THE Christian churches of Great Britain and Ireland are united in their determination that the growth, manufacture and sale of opium, (except for medicinal purposes,) shall be prohibited. As it is a government monopoly, a single blow will crush the evil traffic. Resolution will win.

A COMMUNITY without women of equal social action, a church without her equal ecclesiastical action, and a state without her equal political action, are very much what a home would be without a mother, wife, sister, daughter or friend. Men have carried civilization just as far as they can do it alone.—Boston Traveller.

To the Chicago free kindergarten association a request has just come from Bombay, India, for samples of Bible cards used by the association in its free kindergartens. This institution is doing an excellent work, and this adoption of its method for imparting religious instruction is only one of many tributes to its practical and efficient way of doing things.

THE "married women's bill," which was read a second time in the English House of Commons—and will probably become a law, is intended to protect husbands from the misdeeds of their wives by limiting the power of married women to bind their husbands in making contracts. "It is no part of the policy of women to let any husband suffer an injustice," comments the Woman's Herald.

THE journalism of Japan has grown marvelously within the brief period of constitutional government. Last year there were as many as 550 Japanese newspapers and other periodicals, and in the city of Tokio alone there were 17 political dailies, with a weekly circulation of over 1,000,000 copies, besides weekly and monthly publications devoted to progress, science, literature, the fine arts and social affairs.

A CALL has been issued to all ex-soldiers and their sons desiring to enlist in the "Prohibition Army of the Blue and Gray" for a national convention and campfire at Cincinnati, O., Tuesday, June 28, 1892. The motto of this new organization is to be "We are brothers, once divided, now united to conquer rum," and all inquiries should be addressed to R. E. Hudson, Grand Commander, P. A. of the B. and G., Alliance, O.

Good Cooking

Is one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc. use Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk Directions on the label. Sold by your grocer and druggist.

HOW TO WASH FLANNELS.

Dissolve fine shavings of Ivory Soap in boiling water, and when cool enough to bear your hand in it, immerse one piece of flannel. Don't rub it with soap but knead it with the hands. Don't rinse in plain water or in cold water, but make a second solution, warm and well blued, for this purpose. Use a clothes-wringer; hand-wringing is insufficient. Dry quickly out-doors or before fire. If left to stand wet, flannel shrinks.

Cut out these directions and tell the servant to follow them with Ivory Soap. It keeps the flannels very soft.

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

PILES CURED FREE. New, Painless. Certain. Gives instant relief and lasting cure—never returns. To prove it we will send a trial package FREE, to any address. PYRAMID DRUG COMPANY, Box 35, ALBION, MICHIGAN.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory. Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. Also 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations. NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

Hendryx' Compendium of Book-keeping and Business Forms for Self-Instruction.—As comprehensive, thorough and practical knowledge may be gained by its study as under an instructor. Price $1. Instructions in Book-keeping and Stenography by mail. F. H. HENDRYX, 178, Bath, N. Y.

Artistic Wall Paper

If you only knew it, costs no more than—the other kind. Do you know how to get it? We can tell you—100 samples for 8 cts. Prices 5 to 50 cts. a roll. A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St., Phila.

School of Expression. Vocal and literary training. Opens October 6. S. S. CURRY, Ph. D., 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

Harvard University. Summer Courses, Voice & Expression. 5 weeks Jul. 15. Address S. S. CURRY, 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass

Province of Expression. Broadest survey of the whole subject.-Herald. School of Expression, 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

FREE By reading the 36-page pamphlet (sent free) you will be told all about HARVEY and why you should buy inside the village lines and from the Founders of HARVEY. Address

The Harvey Land Association, 819 TO 825 THE ROOKERY CORNER OF LA SALLE AND ADAMS STREETS CHICAGO, ILL.

CANCER LUPUS AND TUMORS

Dr. McMichael of Chicago, who has made the subject a special study for twenty-five years, has recently published the result of his investigations in his treatise on "Cancer and Tumors." It is a work of sixty-four pages, characterized by plain unvarnished statements and its total absence of extravagant and bombastic claims inspires the confidence of the reader, whose reason and common sense are appealed to. Dr. McMichael is an authority in his special branch of science, and has achieved remarkable success. By his method he succeeds in effecting permanent cures in 80 per cent. of cases treated without cutting; while 97 per cent. of the cases operated upon with the knife eventually die from return of disease. The most remarkable features of the work are the reports of cases extending over a period of twenty years. In many instances the disease had been cut out by surgeons two and three times and then given up as hopeless and were afterwards cured by Dr. McMichael's method. Copies of the book will be sent free to any address. In writing please send the addresses of friends who would be interested, and copies will be sent to them also.

It does not advertise a medicine, or any other catch-penny device.

Address L. D. McMichael, M. D., 180 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Odell Double-Case Typewriter.

ONLY $20.00.

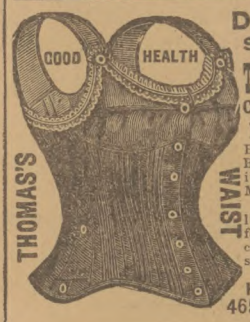
50,000 IN USE.

NO TYPEWRITER will equal the work of our Double-Case for clean impression, perfect alignment, and number of copies of manifold at one impression.

Our new machine has 78 characters, and is the only one where a capital or small letter can be obtained without changing the position of the hand.

To any subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL we will send the Typewriter upon receipt of Five Dollars. The balance to be paid in installments of $5 each, 30 days apart. The machine can be returned if it does not do just as we say it will.

ODELL TYPEWRITER CO., CHICAGO, ILL.



DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.

Thomas' Good Health Corset Waists BY MAIL. Ladies $1.50 Misses 1.25 Children. 60

Best for Economy, Health and Beauty. Buttoned or to clasp in front. Long or short waist. Material the very best.

Thousands mailed in the last year, with entire satisfaction to Patrons. Money cheerfully refunded if not satisfactory.

Agents wanted everywhere.

H. A. Thomas & Co., Manf's 465 W. Van Buren St. Chicago.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D. W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid

Keeps the hair in curl for days Innocent as cologne. A toilet necessity. Not sent on trial. 30,000 Ladies have Endorsed It At druggists or prepaid 50c. LADY AGENTS wanted. DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (H) LaSalle St., Chicago.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF

Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.

We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.

GRAND TERRACE ADDITION

For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR

DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 remarkable illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 61st thousand. 5,000 more Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $200 a month. Experience and capital not necessary, for We Teach All, Give Credit and Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

LADIES WHO BUY NECKTIES, for Husband, Brother, Father, Son, or any other man, send stamp for Illustrations and Samples of Men's Neckwear.

RICHMOND NECKWEAR CO., 52 De Kalb St., Chicago.

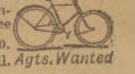
DIAMOND DYES give the fastest, brightest, handsomest colors, and make the old clothes look like new. They are the original and only reliable package dyes. Sample card free. WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

READERS can have PAPERS and MAGAZINES sent them from Publishers all over the country, by sending 25 cts. to the CENTRAL SUPPLY CO Chicago. Mention this paper.

SYLPH CYCLES RUN EASY

Hollow Tires.

Perfection of cycle manufacture; no need now to ride springless cycles or depend on tires alone for comfort. SYLPH SPRING FRAME destroys vibrat'n. Light, simple, strong. Cata. free



Rouse-Duryea Cy. Co. 77 G St., Peoria, Ill. Agts. Wanted

WANTED Women to take Crochet work to do at home. Steady work. Write for particulars. L. WHITE & CO., 209 State St., Chicago, Ill.

FREE An elegant silver bonbon dish or solid silver souvenir spoon for every 25th subscription sent direct to the Gertrude Quarterly, devoted to Dress Reform. Address GERTRUDE QUARTERLY, Box 1088, Chicago, Ill.

DRUNKENNESS cured by using BOSTON DRUG. Absolute secrecy guaranteed or money refunded. Price $1. All druggists, or by mail W. R. BROWN & CO., 105 Chauncey St., Boston.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

Mrs. Cusha D. Herrick 2419 19th St 9302

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII.—No. 18.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, May 5, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Terrible landslides are reported from the Austrian Tyrol.

Northern California is again trembling from earthquakes.

The World's Fair buildings were damaged by wind last week to the extent of $10,000.

Minneapolis is expecting about 500,000 people to attend the National Republican convention.

May Day passed off peacefully in the old world, the only anarchic demonstrations being in Italy and Belgium.

The public galleries of the Paris bourse were closed last Friday because of the rumor that the buildings were to be blown up.

The force needed to make the World's Fair hum, when it was held in Paris, amounted to 6,000 horse power; in Chicago it will be 16,000.

Our National president spoke before a thousand working girls in Tremont Temple, April 20, the Alpha Phi Literary Society of Boston University, April 21, and before the Boston School of Oratory (Dr. Emerson's) on the 22d.

A million dollar stock company has been formed in Chicago for the purpose of erecting pretty villas near Jackson Park to accommodate hundreds of families in private homes during the Columbian Exposition. The culinary departments will be centrally located and run on the coöperative plan.

The commissioner appointed by the governor of Minnesota to distribute foodstuffs sent by western farmers on the steamship Missouri to the famine districts of Russia, testifies that the Russian government offered every available facility for distributing the food, and that the nobility and landed proprietors are doing everything in their power for the relief of the starving peasants, one noble family supporting 30,000 people.

It is now announced by the proper officer of the World's Exposition that "the matter of closing the Exposition on Sunday" will not be taken up for consideration by the board of directors till the spring of 1893. What this means is evident; namely, that the interests of money making in the Exposition are to be served at the expense of the best Christian philanthropy and home sentiment of the nation. It is not uncharitable to state the belief that the Exposition will be made a Sunday beer-garden. Mrs. Bateham sets the key-note for action on another page. Be sure to read it and act accordingly.

ALL applications for speakers and all letters regarding the Lecture Bureau should hereafter be addressed to Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, chairman, room 1115, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle streets, Chicago, Ill.

THOSE who think that General Booth's grand scheme for letting in light on "Darkest London" has not succeeded, should ponder his own words in the first speech made after his return to England from his recent journey around the world: "I went to make further inquiries as to the working out of the great social scheme, and I am satisfied that every promise I have made, and every advantage I have held forth as flowing from it, can be brought about in the most successful fashion, even surpassing my brightest anticipations. I am now convinced that there is an abundance of room, not only for the submerged classes of this country, not only for the poor and needy of this land, but of all lands; that there is room enough in this world for its populations, aye, even if they were four times larger than they are; and that, properly managed and systematically led forth, all could find, not only bread enough, but enough and to spare, for themselves and families."

WHOSE public sentiment gives us the saloon? It is the outcome of the deliberate choice based upon motives wholly selfish, in the man who drinks, in the man who sells, and the other man in business, political or professional, who does not wish the ill-will of the man who drinks and sells. The majority of the adult population has no voice in the decision by which the saloon is permitted in the community through the votes of the classes we have mentioned.

WE like the suggestion of Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward that the hand-to-hand encounter with drink and the victories won be set forth more at length in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. Contributions are hereby sought. Let us have brief, telling recitals from men and women in the rescue work for which the great white ribbon ship would make the voyage of life secure for all. Her officers and crew have not forgotten to fit her out with life-boats for the dismantled and distressed.

THE indorsement by the Right Worthy Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the Polyglot Petition involves 600,000 individual indorsements; hence the equivalent of 600,000 signatures. The Salvation Army is alert and will send in a great harvest before the year is out, but white-ribboners do not wish to be outdone by any other society at work for the petition that originated with the W. C. T. U., and is to be carried by us around the world, although we shall be glad of representatives from the other associations that have helped us so greatly.

WORTH discountenances the demi-train and makes short street gowns for his customers. The Supreme Sanitary Board of Hungary has taken to surgery, and operates on "street-sweepers," declaring skirt-cutting a necessity for the public health; that the trailing dresses of women gather up and distribute in the home the germs of tuberculosis, diphtheria, typhus fever and other diseases. Fashion, science and common sense make a triumvirate whose absolutism is the "divine right," and should be the woman's.

AN inexplicit report comes from Pernambuco, Brazil, of the stoning of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt in that city by Romish students. In company with her interpreter, Mr. Nind, she was driven from the hall which had been engaged for her lecture, and followed some distance by a mob, whose lawless and cruel actions were not interfered with by the police. Fortunately Mrs. Leavitt was not seriously hurt, and will continue her journey into other portions of Brazil with the same dauntless spirit that has characterized her wonderful eight years' mission. This is the first time Mrs. Leavitt has been shown the slightest incivility, and we praise her Deliverer for sparing her precious life this time.

THE election of the anti-lottery state ticket in Louisiana, April 22, was the death-warrant of lottery companies in the United States. It was a national triumph, for there is not a state in which it has not left its loathsome trail, and its continued life meant moral blood-poisoning for the nation. The expiration of the charter of the Louisiana Lottery Company in 1893 will end the whole matter. The fearful struggles of Louisiana for four long years to prevent the re-chartering of the lottery recalls a sentiment of Millet: "I see in the plains, on a stony-hearted piece of ground, a back-broken man trying to raise himself upright for a moment to breathe. But not alone that. I see very well the aureole of the dandelion, and the sun also—far down there behind the hills, flinging his glory upon the clouds. The tragedy is surrounded by glories." The glory of this victory to America is the evidence that evil is not necessary, and that the sense of good in all the people is stronger than the tragedy of ruin.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET, in her first meeting after returning to her own country, held in Liverpool, April 21, expressed her deep regret that Mr. Gladstone had declared against parliamentary suffrage for women. It seems from later dispatches that he spoke highly of the municipal ballot for women, admitting that it was justified by its results. We therefore have great hopes that when he learns more fully the intelligent, organized opposition he must meet, led by one of Lady Henry Somerset's influence and indefatigable purpose, the "Grand Old Man" will still further temper his mildly spoken objections to "the next thing."

MRS. E. B. GRANNIS, editor of the Church Union, is the most persistent and capable advocate of a visible oneness in the church of Christ that has been thus far raised up. Her paper knows no denomination, but knows the unity of the body of Christ. THE UNION SIGNAL is glad to recognize the admirable work of one who has edited and published every week for over ten years, and every month for eight years previously to that, this bright, progressive paper, which has a constituency of 20,000 families, including the greatest number of ministers in various denominations of any religious paper published in the United States.

THE 28th of April set up another mile-stone along woman's pilgrimage to the land of promise. On that day she beheld "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union then entered into the long anticipated possession of the Temple. The World's, the National, the Illinois State headquarters, the Chicago Central Union, the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the editorial rooms of THE UNION SIGNAL, Oak and Ivy Leaf, and The Young Crusader, each in beautiful suites of apartments, occupy nearly the whole of the eleventh floor, and from their eyrie windows grasp the four corners of the globe—earth, deep blue lake, sky, and "the humanity that beats its life along the stony streets." Every place was blockaded with packages and furniture, for hundreds beside W. C. T. U's were moving in; workmen and National officers, scrubbers and editors, errand boys and secretaries, "our girls" and visitors elbowed each other in delightful bustle, and with an exaltation of countenance that spoke a heart on fire. "Whatever is done or left undone I'm going to that prayer-meeting," said everybody. At ten a. m. there was a steady trend of the throng eastward to the Illinois headquarters where an almost tearfully joyous band of white-ribboners met to sing, with as deep a fervor as echoed on the Red Sea shore,

"Sound the loud timbrel, exultingly sing,
Jehovah has triumphed, Messiah is King."

Crusaders and maidens, the Central W. C. T. U., the stranger within the gates, recounted the victories of faith that had made the Temple rise. Inexorable justice arranged that Mrs. Carse unexpectedly led the meeting; none knew so well as she how every brick in the walls had been watered by woman's tears and hoisted into its place by woman's prayers. She said: "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Everybody came down from that meeting like Moses from the mount. The children of the faith shall point to this day as did St. Paul to Noah and Abraham and the walls of Jericho. It is involuntary to wonder if the liquor traffic had been up there with God and "those women" if it would not have felt like the man who lost his wife, "kinder discouraged"; for it could not help recognizing that this day's event gives an impetus to W. C. T. U. work all over the world, and, with a power like Lick's telescope on Jupiter, brings doomsday for rum within range.

Contributed.

CAMPAIGN SONG.

BY ARTHUR POLLEN.

Dedicated to Frances E. Willard and Isabel Somerset.

Sisters, arise! Hark! the trumpet has sounded:
All are Christ's children, whatever our race,
Be all His servants true,
Now is the harvest due—
Each is all powerful
Armed with His grace.

Sisters, arise! Each soul to be rescued,
See, He has purchased at price of His life.
He that was crucified
Bids us be at His side—
Ours not to falter, when
He leads the strife.

Sisters, arise! and raise the sad sisterhood,
Chained and bowed low in the fetters of sin.
His love is e'er the same
Who to save sinners came—
Who did forgive and love
The Magdalene.

Sisters, go forth! to succor the little ones
In the dark places forsaken, distressed;
Teach them His name to bless
Who guards the fatherless—
These are the lambs that Christ
Jesus loves best.

Sisters, be free! and win ye your right to vote,
Woman too long in her serfdom has lain,
Seize now the key of power,
Now, in the winning hour—
Double your strength for the Coming campaign.

Sisters, be brave! and put on the ribbon white,
Rank ye in order and join the array.
Go, where they heap the slain,
Go, where the foemen gain,
Go, where men's hearts are faint
In the affray!

This poem was an inspiration, on the cars, as Mr. Pollen and his pupil, the young Earl Somerset, were en route in the far West on their recent hunting expedition. Mr. Pollen, a graduate of Oxford University, is a young man of rare accomplishment and soon to be a barrister.

AMERICA'S WILLIAM T. STEAD.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The man whom we have characterized in the headline was born in Massachusetts, April 17, 1842. His parents were of Puritan stock, and he grew up among the best traditions and influences of a New England country home of the purest type. His early education was acquired in the public schools of his own town, and was shaped mainly to afford preparation for a mercantile career. At the age of sixteen he took a position in a drygoods store, where he remained for two years. Although up to this time his special taste and qualification for professional life had not declared themselves, he still was not satisfied to be absorbed altogether in business concerns, and in such spare time as he could command, he carried on, by himself, the studies begun at school.

When eighteen years of age he determined to abandon mercantile life, and continuing his studies at the Academy of Lancaster, after two years of preparation, entered Amherst College. Here his tastes led him to devote himself principally to the classics and to philosophy. Graduating in 1866, he was invited to the principalship of the Amherst High School, where he remained until 1870, filling the position with marked ability. He then became professor of Greek in Williston Seminary, East Hampton, Mass.

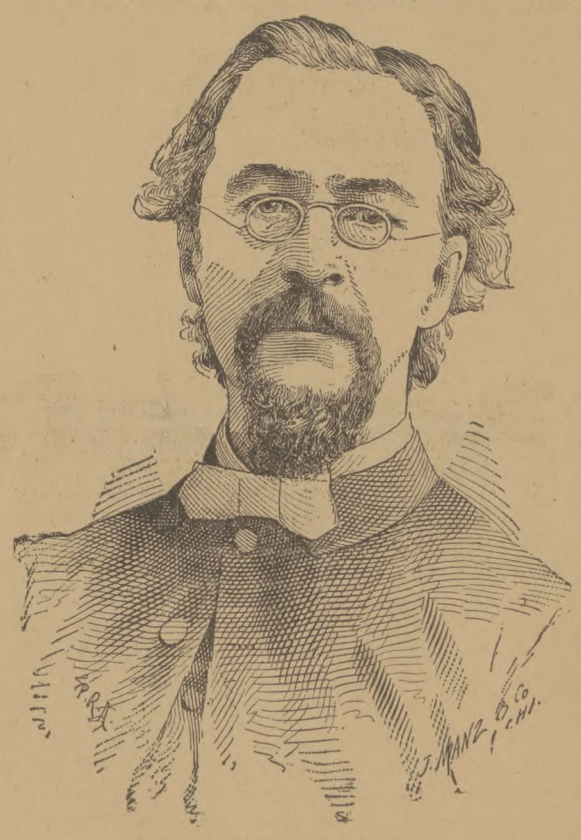
Two years later he resigned this position and went abroad for two years of study in philosophy and theology at the German universities. He attended lectures at Halle and Leipsic. Among the distinguished scholars under whose influence he fell at this period were Tholuck and Erdmann. On returning to America he devoted some time in his own home to the study of Sanscrit, and brought out a book on the forms of the Latin verb illustrated by the Sanscrit.

He had not yet decided absolutely to devote his life to the Christian ministry, but in 1874 he received a call to the Congregational church in Lenox, Mass. Here he rapidly became a pulpit orator of reputation, by reason of his originality and power. In 1880 he received from his Alma Mater the degree of Doctor of Divinity. In the same year he accepted a call to the vacant pulpit of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, New York City, where he has served as pastor ever since. From the first it was his aim that his church should be a working body, in which each member should distinctly realize that he was his brother's keeper. No church in the great metropolis has made more vigorous and successful efforts to reach the ungospeled masses.

In 1886 the cherished plan of this good pastor was carried out by establishing a Rescue Mission on Third avenue, which has become a center of religious and humanitarian work. Personal contact of good people with those whom they would help is a large factor in all this work. He is progressive in theology and has earnestly urged the substitution of a shorter and simpler creed.

On the death of Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, in 1891, he was chosen president of the famous society for the prevention of crime. On becoming president of the aforementioned society, Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst—for it must have occurred to every one that it is of him we are writing—determined to see if the laws of New York City, for the prevention of crime, could be enforced. The whole country knows how he went about his work, and what its results have been. They are without a parallel save in the daring of William T. Stead, who in three weeks caused such a revolution of feeling throughout the British nation that the law for the protection of women, which had hung fire in the Parliament during nine sessions, passed with hardly a dissenting voice.

Like Mr. Stead, Dr. Parkhurst determined to know whereof he affirmed. He descended into the depths of New York's sin and shame, holding the clue of Christian faith and manhood. He saw for himself, and not for another, the abomination of desolation which the apathy of the Christian public had allowed to run riot for generations. Those who had permitted this state of things to develop and become crystallized were many of them quick to say, "Dr. Parkhurst has gone too far;" but the real question is, Have not the evils that he brought to light gone far enough? It ill becomes those who have done nothing to raise New York from the level of Sodom, to which it is rapidly descending, to criticise the brave Christian hero, who has chosen to risk life and reputation in the effort to cleanse this Stygian stable. Tens of thousands of good people did not dream that such vileness could exist and be tolerated by the police and the city authorities; but they know now the facts in the case. Dr. Parkhurst, who is a man of the keenest intellect, did not leave his position undefended. He explicitly certified to over two hundred cases of violation of law, concerning which he was ready to testify. On April 2d was published the report of the grand jury before which these facts were placed, and which distinctly declared its belief that "proofs have been produced and our own observation clearly shows that the existence of open saloons and the sale of liquor in them at unlawful hours is a general rule; and it is clear that there is very little attempt by the police to interfere with these practices." The jury also said, "The police are either incompetent to do what is frequently done by private individuals with imperfect facilities for such work, or else there exist reasons and motives for such inaction which are illegal and corrupt. The general efficiency of the police department is so great that it is our belief that the latter suggestion is the explanation of this peculiar inactivity."



DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST.

Dr. Parkhurst has been greatly criticised by men, both good and bad, and has come out in a letter to the public in which he says that he has proofs of the charges, that he has no apologies to make, that he has earned the power to say, "I know" at great cost to himself, and is willing to endure the criticisms of any who disagree with him as to the methods by means of which alone he was able to put the case of the people versus the police squarely before the public.

The press has very generally stood by him. The New England Methodist Episcopal Conference, amid loud applause, adopted warm resolutions in his favor. The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union has sent him its thanks, and the whole question has gone to the splendid everybody that knows so much more than anybody.

Inspector Byrnes, the most successful detective expert of modern times, has been put at the head of the police, and has publicly announced his intention to enforce all the laws of New York without fear or favor. This is a direct result of the work done by Dr. Parkhurst. The saloon-keepers and their friends are loud in their criticisms, pointing out Dr. Parkhurst as the worst man in history, and a certain following of editors of the baser sort echo their cry. Anonymous letters are sent him, warning him that his life is in peril; and altogether, the reverend doctor has not had a very delectable outcome of his devotion to the interests of the public. But he is not in the least degree disconcerted, and the movement of which he is the center has every prospect of depriving the police and the Tammany ring of the seven million dollars a year that they extort from saloon-keepers, gambling houses and haunts of shame, as hush money. This is a result that might well offset the uncomfortable epithets applied to Dr. Parkhurst by those who, in a thousand years, would never have wagged a tongue or a pen to make the city better.

On the 12th of April, we had an interview with Dr. Parkhurst, visiting his home, and obtaining from his accomplished wife, by a special and urgent request, the photograph from which was made the engraving published in THE UNION SIGNAL of this week. The Doctor was not at home, having been called out on important business connected with his work, but he came to see us at the Hotel Brunswick that evening.

On contemplating his clear-cut face, intellectual brow, keen eyes, scholarly figure and bearing, our first thought was, How could you ever be so disguised as to escape recognition in the purlieus of New York, as a man of the highest culture and character? we asked him, and he said he was accused of being a judge or minister, and replied, "I am now acting as sheriff," which was, in truth, precisely what he was doing, the technical sheriff having been, for an indefinite period, off duty, so that some good citizen had to serve in case of the military exigency that had befallen!

"I would do the same again," said the Doctor, for he is made of stern stuff; in fact, belongs to the "old guard" that will die, but will never surrender. He said, "If the police fear and hate me, it is because they perfectly well understand that I know the facts in the case; by dint of most trying and unenviable experiences I have made myself master of the situation."

"What do you think will be the outcome, Doctor?" was a natural question. He answered,

"Oh, this is an educating process; the liquor shops may all be open again, but the feeling of the people will not be just the same. There is a sympathetic interest everywhere among the forces of God and humanity. An object lesson like this cannot but educate whoever contemplates it. I am depending especially on the good that young ministers will get out of this incident in our city affairs. I am a trustee of the Union Theological Seminary, and I want our students to learn that a pastor has something to do beside fitting his people for heaven. Lady Henry Somerset has accomplished a noble mission by her earnest utterances in our large cities, enforcing this principle. The apathy of the better class of our citizens has been as great a hindrance, almost, as the venality of the police. Good men seem to lack a keen consciousness of civic obligation, and I hold that it is the business of the pastor to indoctrinate the citizen as to his duty. Our best men shed municipal responsibility. It is astounding to see that their Christian obligation to the body politic sits upon them so lightly. This is one side of the great problem, in the midst of which all the large towns and cities of the country are now involved.

"Another side is, that money accumulates from our saloons as a fund from which to pay the police for exemption from interference; and in New York City, and doubtless in all our cities, the basest political organizations handle that money, and use it to elect just such men as they please to control the city government. The Tammany Ring, in New York City, feeds on the hush money of the criminal class. Its capital is invested in saloons, gambling-houses and houses of infamy. I have learned how they carry out this system. I have found out that gambling-houses are run from the headquarters of the police. They pay their money directly into headquarters to get their immunity. They are all reported, classified, and on record at police headquarters, although these officers are sworn not to allow the existence of a single gambling house, the laws of the city being explicit on this subject. Houses of ill-fame are not administered from police headquarters, but by the captains of police. It is a most curious thing to study. No receipts pass for value received; and in order to escape observation, the collections paid over by the miserable keepers of these houses are made at any time between the first and tenth of each month. In some cases the women go to police headquarters and pay over the money; in others, the officer calls for it. Besides all this, it is a notorious fact that a patrolman in New York City pays to the political ring that controls the city, three hundred dollars for his office! This does not go directly to the politicians, but passes through the exchequer of the police themselves.

"I feel more and more," said Dr. Parkhurst, "the breadth of pulpit duty; and I hold that any question having ethical ingredients in it is a question the pulpit ought to handle. Far better men go into public life in London than in New York. I presume that, as you say, Lady Henry Somerset is right in attributing this, partly, at least, to the greater interest taken by women in public affairs in Great Britain. It is a waste of the raw material fairly, this indifference of intelligent women to the public good in America. The brag of our women in New York in the best circles often is, that they do not care for public affairs; they wish to hold utterly aloof from them. But I think this is a harm to the boys. What a boy hears talked about at the fireside and round the evening lamp molds his character and if he finds his mother looking down upon the public interests and discounting the men who labor in those interests, that boy is likely to dissever himself wholly from those great duties by which quite likely he might most bless the age he lives in. The strategic point that we must win is an utter change in the conduct of civic affairs in respect to the enforcement of law; for it is a terrible fact that at present we have in this city and I believe in all the large cities of the country, police protection of vice, organized and carried on by means of bribes, so that the very men whom we as tax-payers support with good salaries, are the men who permit our cities to become a hissing and a byword.

"There is a way out of this wilderness, and I believe it is to be found by the manly, patriotic, courageous action of the Christian ministers and people, who, as everybody will admit, are the leaven in the lump of our great cities. That I am not speaking from theory is demonstrated by the action of Jersey City this very day. Probably it is, if possible, a worse city than New York, and yet the rally at the ballot-box whipped Tammany, horse, foot and dragoons, by a majority of three thousand votes, or thereabouts, and they are to have a clean and decent management of city affairs. The new officers are men of probity and standing, and those who have so long held the city in the hollow of their hands for their own base purposes, practically confessed judgment as soon as the result at the polls was known, by setting on fire that part of the city hall in which were the treasurer's books and other records, which, passing into the hands of the new officers, would be likely to betray their villainy."

After this manner talked Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, a thorough-going, conservative-appearing Presbyterian minister; and, as we saw the twinkle in his eye, the firm, strong lines around his mouth, and knew what he had done, we said in our hearts, "There is always a day after to-day, and whoever declares that municipal politics cannot be redeemed, is a traitor to his race."

HELEN L. HOOD.

It is in the nature of poetic justice that so redoubtable an opponent of King Gambrinus as Helen L. Hood should have been born in the city of Milwaukee, Wis., that paradise of beer. This event occurred on the 28th of October, 1849, and in the public schools of that city her earliest education was received. When in her teens, she became a pupil in the Milwaukee Female College, famous among educators as having been founded by Catherine Beecher, and having Miss Mary Mortimer as its informing genius for many years. Here Helen attended school till she was within four months of graduation, at which time occurred an event, the most sorrowful in her history, until her great bereavement of 1891. Her noble, cherishing mother died; and this obliged the daughter to miss taking the diploma to which she was well-nigh entitled. Her grief, and the fatigue resulting from her devotion to her studies, brought on typhoid fever, the only severe illness from which she has suffered, for she is by nature robust and vigorous in body and soul, as her fifteen years' temperance work have proved. Some of her classmates were Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the famous poet, and the two Plankinton sisters, Anna and Elizabeth. During the year after she left school she taught a large class in music, had a Sunday-school class in the Baptist church of which she and the rest of her family were members, and played the organ in the church during the absence of the regular organist.

At the age of nineteen she entered on the arduous work of organizer for the Society of Good Templars in Minnesota, and under its auspices was sent to the frontier. She is the first woman who spoke publicly in the territories, so far as we have been able to learn. The strain proved too great for one of her youth and inexperience, and she returned to the town of Albert Lea, Minn., where she met Mrs. J. Ellen Foster and traveled with her in the temperance work for three or four months. In the autumn of '79, Miss Hood came to Chicago, and soon after began work with the local W. C. T. U. of that city. At this time Frances E. Willard was President, and had established in the headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. the first office known in the annals of the white ribbon movement. A desk was assigned to Miss Hood, side by side with that of the President, and together they toiled for the salvation of men who were under the bondage of drink, this being in early years almost the sole line of work to which the Chicago union was devoted; and in the interests of which it held a daily gospel meeting in lower Farwell Hall. Miss Hood worked on, bearing the burdens for which her broadening shoulders became fitted, till she was made corresponding secretary of the local union in Chicago; and for years filled the position of corresponding secretary in the state W. C. T. U., also that of superintendent of railroad rates in the National society. It is through her energy that the great excursions to the National have been successfully planned and carried out. Her latest promotion was the choice that fell upon her as custodian of the archives of the World's W. C. T. U., to which responsible position she succeeded on the death of her beloved friend and comrade, Julia Ames. There is no work undertaken by the Chicago union, or that of the state of Illinois (both of which have stood at the very forefront of the battle from the first) of which Helen Hood's head, heart and hand are not integral parts. The great lodging house for friendless men, the Bethesda Mission, with its daily gospel meeting, the Anchorage for women, the temperance restaurant, the state paper of the Illinois W. C. T. U., the great work of building the W. C. T. U. Temple (of whose board she has been secretary from the beginning), these, and many other less known lines of Christian effort have been helped on by the capable efforts, the unflagging zeal and the great-hearted willingness of Helen Hood. She is a woman of most noble character, ready to work hard all the time, and never asking for recognition or reward. Her whole life has been devoted to noble deeds, and to comfort and help others in distress is her proverbial mission. Her comrades have known her to take the last penny in her purse and give it to those more needy. She has especial fondness for little children, and is greatly beloved by them.

HELEN L. HOOD.

In 1885, on her way to the convention of the National W. C. T. U. (held that year in St. George's Hall, Philadelphia), Helen Hood, who for some years had been a member of Miss Willard's family at Rest Cottage, and among the most trusty councillors of that leader, met Miss Julia Ames, who had just come into the work. Between the two a most devoted attachment sprang up then and there, which continued till the lamented death of Miss Ames, on the 12th of December, 1891. These two women of rare gifts, benignant personality, and tireless diligence, stand forth in the minds of white-ribboners as double stars of the first magnitude. The industry and devotion manifested by them has not been excelled by that of any of their coadjutors. Every morning they left Rest Cottage betimes, took the train for the city, worked hard all day—one in her office as secretary, the other in her office as co-ordinate editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, and they at night came home, weary and worn, to recount the business incidents and plans of the day, and to occupy the evening in council with the President of the National Society. This routine was varied by attendance at conventions and by too brief vacations; a week or a fortnight in the heat of summer. Since she has lost the comrade who understood her thoroughly and loved her well, Miss Hood seems to live in the purpose of perpetuating and extending the memory and work of Miss Ames, so that the world shall be the better, not only in her own, but in all lands, for the life, character and heroism of that noble young woman. Although she would not permit her name to go upon its title-page, Miss Hood has been one the chief editors of the beautiful volume, "A Young Woman Journalist," just brought out from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, a book that will be an inspiration to every young person who reads it—a book unique in its plans, its style, its illustrations.

The abilities of Miss Hood so impressed Lady Henry Somerset that she invited her to England to help organize the World's W. C. T. U. throughout Great Britain; and the officers of that and the National W. C. T. U. have made her a fraternal delegate to the British Women's Temperance Association, which meets in London, May 3d to 5th. Miss Hood is now a member of the Methodist Church in Evanston. Hers is indeed "Christianity in earnest" and "Christianity applied." She is one of the most valued and devoted friends of Madam Willard, whose rare spirituality has been the chief consolation of this, her "younger daughter," in the sorrows of this most eventful year of her life thus far. Her comrades believe that many years of effective work lie before Miss Hood, who brings a remarkably varied and complete knowledge of the principles, purposes and plans of the white-ribbon army to her new and more extended task. It is quite likely that she will go around the world with the commission of women who are to carry the Polyglot Petition. Miss Hood is a good writer, forcible and clear, as her annual reports abundantly prove. The chapter she has written in the life of Miss Ames is a prose poem in style, while the pages of the narrative make it the most touching chapter in that volume, enriched by so many well-trained pens. This brief sketch is meant merely to let our great constituency know more about one whose name they have often seen in our official organ, and whose presence will, we hope, yet become familiar in all countries where the white ribbon is known and loved.

MILLIONAIREISM AND POVERTY.

BY REV. C. H. ZIMMERMAN.

Those who have read preceding articles on taxation can see that our unjust methods of direct and indirect taxation are very large factors in the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few millionaires and in the corresponding impoverishment of the masses. Other causes of millionaireism are land monopoly and industrial monopolies, both of which are fostered by unjust taxation. Most of the enormous fortunes in this country have been made out of the unearned increment of monopolized land, originally bought for a nominal sum, or obtained as grants to individuals and corporations. Holding unimproved lands for the increment that comes from the increase of population around or near it, while it enriches the holders, promotes poverty by keeping desirable land at so high a price that the poor can neither buy nor rent it for homes or for industrial uses.

The most profitable of all monopolies has been that of railroad and mining lands and unimproved land in and near growing cities. Many instances might be given in which from five hundred to one thousand per cent has been made in from ten to twenty years on investments in land held for the unearned increment in or near cities; for example, when the city of New York was entirely below Canal street some men went up into the interior of the island and for a small sum of money bought considerable tracts of what was then farm land. The city extended in that direction and surrounded this land, most of which the owners refused to sell or improve until it reached a fabulous price, so high that only the rich could obtain lots for homes or business purposes, while the poor were crowded together in the many-storied tenement houses of the city. The owners of that land became millionaires without doing anything to earn their wealth except to keep the land out of the market until they got more per foot than they paid per acre.

Similar transactions have occurred and are occurring in all our large and growing cities. Is there any remedy? The socialists propose that there shall be no private ownership of land (or other wealth) and that the government shall own all land for the free use of all the people. But that remedy is very remote I know of no near remedy possible, but to tax such lands so heavily that their owners cannot afford to keep them out of the market, and this is the only exception I would make to the income tax as the sole tax, as should have been stated in last paper.

The limits of an article do not suffice to describe fully how industrial monopolies enrich the few at the expense of the many. The most that can be done is to call attention to some of them; to the trusts which have been organized in nearly all the leading industries of the country for the purpose of securing a monopoly; to the railroad, telegraph, telephone, city-lighting, street-car, mining, oil, gas, sugar, grain, meat, commercial and manufacturing monopolies, all of which are combinations of capital and skill for the purpose of securing the ability to raise the cost of commodities to consumers and to reduce wages, or resist advances therein, whenever it is to the interest of the monopolists to do these things.

It is truly said that a few large industrial combinations can supply the public more cheaply than many small producers, and this is the supreme argument for government management of industries for the purpose of giving their vast profits to the people. But so long as they are in the hands of private corporations they are certain to be managed for the enrichment of the men in those corporations and not for the benefit of the public. They are not charitable or philanthropic organizations; their sole object is to make money, and they use their tremendous power, legally, as far as they can, and illegally, as far as they dare, for that purpose.

The most effective device for securing an industrial monopoly is the trust. Its object is to obtain millionaire fortunes for the men in it. To do this it seeks to crush out as many competitors as possible, drive them entirely out of the business, or force them to become employés, the profits on whose labor shall go to enrich the trust. This is done by the simple process of reducing prices so low that concerns with small capital cannot continue in business. This temporary reduction of prices leads some people to think that the trust is a benefit to the public. But when it has reduced as many competitors as possible to the condition of wage earners, or driven them out of the business, it takes into the trust those who are too strong to crush, and then proceeds to recoup itself for its losses during the crushing process at the expense of all consumers, by putting up its prices as high as their purchasing power will stand.

The purpose is always to reduce the membership of the trust to the lowest possible number, since the fewer individuals or corporations there are to share dividends, the greater will be the share of each. Therefore, only those that are too large to be driven out of business are taken into the trust. As it grows stronger, it requires larger and larger corporations to compete with it. Upon this point, the Hon. David A. Wells says in his "Recent Economic Changes," "In every trade the standard of necessary size, the minimum establishment that can hold its own in competition, is constantly raised. The little men are ground out, and the littleness that dooms men to destruction waxes year by year." Next to the liquor traffic, the trust is the most comprehensive, skillfully-devised and perfectly-adapted agency for making millionaires at one end of the scale and paupers at the other, the world has ever seen.

Millionaire fortunes for the few mean poverty, hardship, want, pauperism for the many. The concentration of more than half the wealth of this country in the hands of 30,000 persons, or one-twentieth of one per cent of the population, must inevitably result in poverty for millions of the people. What is the remedy? Happily, the greatness of the evil is opening the eyes of the people to the true remedy The tremendous power of the trust to impoverish the many and enrich the few when managed for personal ends, shows what a blessing the trust would be in the hands of the government for the benefit of all the people.

Then let the good work begin by the municipalization and nationalization of those industries which have public functions. Let gas and electric light plants and street car lines be owned and managed by the cities for the benefit of the people. Let telephones, telegraphs and railroads be nationalized. When we shall have proved by experiment that these industries can be successfully managed by government, then we shall be prepared for the next step—to nationalize the mining industries. If this works well, then try the oil industry, and so on; but go no farther and no faster than success in the preceding steps shall warrant. Surely this is safe and rational. I know of no other possible remedy for the growing evils of millionaireism and consequent widespread poverty and discontent which not only menace popular government, but threaten the destruction of civilization.

The People's Party platform wisely demands that the initial steps of this remedy be taken. Other party organs and leaders sneer at that platform; but they should, rather, for their own good, recognize the pressing need and justice of most of its demands. It is for the purpose of calling the attention of Prohibitionists to the importance of these issues and the necessity of incorporating them in our platform, that these articles have been written.

Evanston, Ill.

LONDON'S METHODS WITH TRAMPS.

BY JOSIAH FLYNT.

The life of London's poor has furnished material for countless books, pamphlets and articles. But there is a phase of human existence in this great city which has not been so prominently placed before the general reader. Tales of enforced pauperism have engaged public attention and the voluntary idler of London has been allowed to go his way unmolested by general curiosity. The beggar who wants work, but cannot find it, has engrossed our consideration, and the tramp, meanwhile has continued his begging, calmly and steadily. Those who have visited London and its "congested districts," have studied its shelters, refuges, homes for the poor, workhouses and, perhaps, have investigated General Booth's partly materialized plans, may have done all this and yet scarcely encountered the tramp.

Probably no city in the world offers such inducements to the voluntary vagrant as London. There is certainly no other place where a loafer has such a fair chance at begging, especially in the streets. Although there is a law against appeals for alms in public places by able-bodied adults, trampdom apparently thrives in spite of it, and it is seldom that one hears of beggars sentenced to confinement; and, naturally, when there is a laxity in the enforcement of law, there will be found a quick-witted and self-instructed class of law-evaders. Hence it comes that in London other means than law have been used to lessen voluntary vagrancy.

I found two treatments of tramps in vogue in London. One—the casual ward system—supported by the taxpayer; the other—the common lodging house system—kept up and fostered by people interested in gain. There are benevolent societies, public and semi-private, which also work in the hope to lessen the evil, but these are not, as yet, a prominent feature; for the bulk of tramps patronize those first named, and it is by studying them that one must learn how London gets along with its homeless beggars.

I studied first the common lodging house treatment, because it is in these houses that one finds the voluntary loafer most at home. There are one thousand of these houses in the metropolitan police district, affording shelter for about thirty-five thousand people. A noticeable peculiarity in the distribution of these houses is that the lowest types are generally found in groups, thus: stretching across London from west to east; then the Bangor street, the Westminster, the St. Giles and the Whitechapel groups. The usual price of a night's lodging in these houses is fourpence. Sometimes I came across a "sixpenny" house, but it was rare in these particular districts. A large proportion of these places were frequented by members of the lowest classes of society. I visited fully a dozen, and I must confess that the London tramp can carry off the palm for being the dirtiest and wretchedest beggar of the Anglo-Saxon tribe. I had thought that the American tramp was depraved beyond description and that my eight-months' intimate acquaintance with him gave me opportunity enough to find him out, but he cannot compare in depravity with the tramp that London cares for in its common lodging houses. Unfortunately, these places afford him a home perfectly in harmony with his own bestial temperament. They are dirty, filthy, immoral, and many of the worst class of houses are even watched over by a tramp! They could not be successful business ventures except just as they are, for the tramp demands a cheap place where he can meet and associate with his cronies, and fourpence is not a price that yields profit to the proprietor and niceties to the visitor. Consequently they are simply dens for thieves and idlers, but they, nevertheless, represent London's most popular method with vagrants. It is needless to say that a system of this character only aggravates and fosters the evil. It makes no attempt at moral improvement, and simply affords a night's lodging when the weather is too inclement to sleep out.

There are, however, in London a few model lodging houses which were instituted for the purpose of offering to the homeless wanderer a night's lodging, coincident with cleanliness and morality. It was thought that this innovation would have a good effect upon vagrancy and possibly lessen the evil. The idea is, of course, that when filth and indecency are replaced by their opposites, better instincts will assert their sway. And some have bravely contended that, if a vagrant could be brought in touch with respectability, he could be won away from his wild tendencies. This is certainly an optimistic view of the case. It means that the tramp can be appealed to by tender measures. Perhaps General Booth in his comprehensive labors for the poor, worthy or unworthy, is the most marked representative of this idea. His work in London is noted for foundation on this principle.

The question may well be asked here, Does this superior lodging house come in contact with voluntary vagrants? Can we find tramps under more favorable circumstances than in the lower order of Salvation Army shelters? and, Does this shelter tend to engender a desire for something better? One thing is certain: the tramps still find the loathsome places the more congenial, and costermongers, day laborers and men who could live in nicer dwellings are satisfied with merely nominal advantages.

Nor is the second method, the casual ward system, much more successful than the lodging house in treating trampdom. These wards are places where a man can get food and lodging by earning them. There are now twenty-five in London, and there is accommodation in them for 1,647 persons. The doors of the casual wards are usually opened in winter about five, and in summer about six o'clock in the afternoon, and at most of the wards, for some time before the appointed hour, the casuals will be seen collected at the door. Admitted within the gates, each applicant for relief is questioned as to his name, age and occupation, where he slept the previous night, and where he is going after his release. Then he is searched, and any money or other property found on his person is taken away. Articles other than money are given back to him before he leaves. After the search comes the bath, when the casual must strip and leave his clothes with the overseer, who has them "baked." The clothes are returned in the morning, and in the meantime a clean nightshirt is furnished. The diet is coarse, but wholesome and varied. The supper and breakfast of adult males consists of six ounces of bread and a pint of broth or oatmeal gruel; for dinner, either eight ounces of bread and one and a half ounces of cheese, or six ounces of bread and a pint of soup. Every day that a vagrant is in the ward, except Sundays, he is supposed to finish a task of work consisting of picking not more than four pounds of oakum, or breaking not less than thirteen hundredweight of stone. This work is by no means excessive and may easily be finished early in the afternoon, instead of late, as usually occurs. The detention of the casual continues until the second day after his admission. If a vagrant is recognized at any of the metropolitan wards more than once in a month, he will be detained until the fourth morning after his admission.

Expert evidence shows that only five per cent of the habitués of casual wards are reclaimable and it also definitely says that this percentage is composed of newcomers to the ward. In other words: besides drink, crime, and roving tendencies, the casual ward itself has a tendency to make of its inmates hardened vagrants. But its admirers claim that since greater powers of detention have been given to the overseers of wards, the system has acted as a deterrent. This, however, appears very superficial, for the nightly average number of inmates during the last ten years has been 825, in spite of increased powers of detention. Furthermore, the yearly average number of vagrants identified by inspectors as having been in metropolitan casual wards oftener than once a month, was 16,646 during the years 1884–1889. These last figures are particularly instructive for they tell us in a general way that these thousands can usually be termed voluntary vagrants. It is said by experts that no bona fide workman is ever found in a casual ward twice in one month.

It has been estimated that there are about fifteen thousand professional tramps in London. These men would rather suffer imprisonment than work. They prowl around the streets, watch cabs, run a few errands, sell obscene pictures and do a "little tattooing" now and then. London allows these men to frequent common lodging houses and also throws open the doors of the casual wards for their entrance, when they cannot beg enough money for a night's rent. So far as my studies allow me to judge, I should say that the London tramp was even more a pet of the law than his American cousin; and that the London tax-payer is even more generous than the American, for he not only pays to support the casual wards, but also gives alms to beggars to support the common lodging houses. And in doing this he unconsciously, perhaps, yet truly hinders the casual wards from doing their corrective efforts and helps the lodging houses to aid the wards in their destructive work.

There is growing in London a sentiment in favor of strict penalties for able-bodied beggars and tramps. People are becoming more and more convinced of the need of enforcement of law. They have become skeptical of the value of either of these remedies, for like some medicines they seem very far from reaching the real seat of the disease. There is a law, and a rigid one, which if enforced would soon be successful in abolishing voluntary vagrancy, and perhaps the low lodging houses also, which would have to close for want of patronage. The law can be autocratic and answerable only to the law-maker. Some may ask how London could possibly prosecute and punish all of its beggars. For a while there might be an unwieldy mass of vagrancy to attend to, but a continued series of strict judgments, together with careful watchfulness, would soon inspire vagrants with fear. And only that which makes tramping a hardship will hinder the growth of voluntary pauperism. It is this truth which we must remember in dealing with our own tramps.

London.

SIDE-LIGHTS—FOR WORKERS.

II.

Mrs. Mary Woolley, wife of our John G. Woolley, being asked for the facts respecting the conspiracy of the saloon-keepers of Minneapolis to entice her husband back into drinking, so as to destroy his influence against their business, relates the following thrilling experience:

"I hardly know how to give you the facts you wish, for those days were so full of joy and anxiety. From the time of our entrance into Christian work we had many difficulties, but were wonderfully led in all, and now, as we look back, we can say God was our guide, our perfect way. When the call came to work in our old home, Minneapolis, my heart leaped with joy. First, the thought that our people believed in my husband was like a healing oil to my tired heart. Then, he was saved, and I wanted all my friends to 'see the salvation of our Lord.' But letters began to come, telling me that it would not be safe to return—that old drinking habits and enemies would cause his downfall. We read the letters, prayed much—and went. My husband's perfect confidence that he was a redeemed man was beautiful and pitiful too; for in this work, upon which he was entering with shattered nerves and no preparation as a Bible scholar, all he had was his faith and his story.

"Monday night the meetings began in Harmonia Hall, the German opera-house. We were met at the top of the stairs by an officer, who served a writ for debt upon my husband. I was frightened, but no word was said. We made our way into the hall. As we entered the door the fumes of beer met us, and when the platform was reached we discovered the floor had been sprinkled with beer. My heart sank! The previous warnings came back to me in great black letters. That would have seemed enough for one night, but the climax came in the after-meeting. A man, under the influence of liquor, rose for prayers, and told how he found his way to the meeting. Early in the evening he was in a saloon and overheard the proprietor propose to a crowd of men that 'he would be one of ten to give fifty dollars each to get Woolley drunk.' The proposal was received with great favor, and this man believed it was to be carried out. Hearing this he thought he would like to see such an important man, one whom the saloon hated so heartily, and he inquired where this Woolley was. He came to the meeting, gave his testimony, and the next morning the reporters had the facts in the papers. Good people were outraged, our cause wonderfully helped, and the work grew from that hour to be of great power. 'God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform.' Can you imagine three more dramatic events, in one evening, meeting a young Christian on the threshold of his first work?

"At the close of the meeting friends gathered around us in great alarm. But I remember my husband said, 'There are not enough saloon-keepers nor devils to tempt or drive me back to the old life.' As I look back to gather these facts, I feel—I know, that God not only saves but helps."

Correspondence.

COMMISSIONER HANNAH OUCHTERLONY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A few days since I was privileged to dine with the woman whose name and title stand at the head of this article. If THE UNION SIGNAL were a paper circulated among the people of Sweden alone, I would find no occasion for this sketch, as their secular papers have already said much more than I shall be able to repeat in my brief article.

There has always been in my heart a desire to introduce to the largest circle of people within my reach, the man or woman who brings blessing or inspiration into my own life: these lines are the outcome of such a desire. Ten years since, when the work of the Salvation Army was hardly known outside the large centers of Great Britain, the General's eldest son, Mr. Bramwell Booth, whose nerves and brain had been overtaxed by the strain of work carried on by few hands, was invited by an English friend to accompany him to Sweden for several months of absolute rest. But as soon as returning health brought back, in some degree, his former vitality, he accepted an invitation to speak, through an interpreter, to a company of people met in a Christian home for an evening of worship. In the Providence of God, Miss Ouchterlony was present at this meeting. Both at this service and in the successive parlor meetings held by Mr. Booth, the Lord dealt very specially with the heart of this young lady. For several years she had been an earnest follower of Jesus, and among the cottagers had held meetings with the peasants to help them to find her Lord and Saviour. As her father was a lawyer and her education that which is usually secured by the professional class for their daughters, we see how strong must have been the convictions which led her to labor among the people which her earlier life had shut away from her.

I was much impressed with this fact, as, at my request, the commissioner told me something of her history, that it is impossible for an English or American woman to appreciate in any full sense the strength of the barriers to be broken down by the leader of woman's public ministry in Sweden. The state church, Lutheran, has for centuries looked upon the public testimony of woman as an outrage against Christianity. The way has not been prepared by such revivals as Quakerism and Methodism in which woman returned, in some measure at least, to the position she occupied in the early church. It would need a woman of no ordinary strength to face this conservatism entrenched by centuries of preaching and practice. The face of the lawyer's daughter suggests that had she been born a generation later or in our free America she would probably have been at that age a partner in the firm known as "Ouchterlony and Ouchterlony."

The family were originally from Scotland and this fact would lead us to expect to find an intellect peculiarly fitted to inspect matters of theology, and thus prepare her to be an instructor of others in experience and doctrine. Following the meetings referred to above, came a great struggle, which all great leaders must experience as a part of the price for the reception of light not yet enjoyed by their friends about them. God was certainly calling Miss Ouchterlony to Salvation Army service.

It was then decided that she should visit London, study the movement before joining its ranks, a suggestion which has usually been urged upon persons whose sympathies or higher influences seemed to lead them toward our work. So, in company with a young woman with a peculiar gift for song, who had been brought to Christ in one of her cottage meetings, she visited the Army in London, where, in a great "all night of prayer," Miss Ouchterlony received the crowning blessing of the Gospel, the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The inward fight was ended, and now as a commissioned major with two lieutenants, she started for her Northern home to attack the strongholds of sin and Satan, to prove herself a warrior, whose victories have not been surpassed in all the great world-wide achievements of Salvation Army heroism.

Wise leader as she was, Major Ouchterlony began her work in the capital. It would be most interesting to compare the newspaper caricatures of these early efforts, and the columns devoted to a review of the work and its leader, when, a few weeks since, the Swedish commissioner bade farewell to her comrades at home to become an international traveling commissioner. Extreme methods were not introduced. As it was, the largest halls within their reach could not accommodate the crowds who thronged to hear these two women and an English lad who were announced to "speak and sing for Jesus." The difficulty in managing the crowd who could not gain admittance gave the police a pretext for reporting these gatherings as a "nuisance," and the hall was closed.

But, nothing daunted, these Salvationists stood on a platform in a yard loaned for the occasion, while great crowds, with the packed snow for a carpet, listened hour after hour to what they had to tell them of their inward knowledge of Jesus as a personal Saviour. One of the "honorable women," a countess, then opened her home; later other buildings were secured, and, with God's blessing, the most solid work that the Army has known was carried on under the leadership of this gifted and anointed woman. This was also a signal for extending the war to other foreign centers, and had much to do with results on the Continent and elsewhere.

The commissioner leaves behind her five hundred officers and eleven thousand soldiers, besides the great number of converts who have remained in their old church homes. The social wing, with food and shelter for the destitute, homes for fallen girls, and all the other branches of Army work, are now in operation. We cannot follow the influences of this life. The work spread into Norway and Finland, and what may not be hoped for among the peasants of Russia when God opens the way for other than the state church to carry His message of peace to that people!

Next to our promoted Army Mother and her daughters, this woman has no superior in our ranks as a woman leader. May we not say more, and judging by results, add that it is most improbable that any man should have carried forward, on such substantial foundations, the work we have now before us as a result of this consecrated life. Truly, and women, a "great host," thank God, are scattering the rays. These few characters on the Continent will be to the next generation of women what those sainted leaders, few in number, of the last generation have been to our sisters in England and America. As Commissioner Ouchterlony comes to "the states" in the interest of the thousands from her native land who are making American homes, we pray a hearty God-speed may be given her by the white-ribbon army who are never last to recognize the wealth and worth of woman's heart and brain and devotion.

"The morning light is breaking,
The darkness disappears,"

CAPT. ALEXANDER LAMB.

London.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole.

The Chicago Evening Journal of April 23 contains an article which gives an impression of how the Temple is regarded by outsiders. The article is almost two columns in length. We give below a few extracts: "Among all the Chicago skyscrapers that are to be thrown open to their tenants on May 1, probably the most beautiful is the Woman's Temple, the future home of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; the finishing touches are now being put on it. The interior finish of the building is in some respects the finest in the city. From top to bottom the halls are covered with beautiful Florentine mosaic pavements, the wainscoting is of the finest marble, and the woodwork is elegant antique oak. There are eight high-speed passenger elevators, disposed in a concave semi-circle, in the rear of the vinculum; and the rotunda in front of them, on the ground floor within the main entrance, consisting of an imposing archway of carved granite, is a marble palace. The safety vaults, the wardrobes and the various conveniences are all of the finest description. The tenants of the Temple are to be some of the wealthiest institutions and business houses of the city." In speaking of the eleventh floor which is occupied by the different W. C. T. U. societies, the Journal says: "This floor contains probably fifty rooms, and looks as if a woman had planned it. It abounds in nooks and corners and strange shaped apartments, and is a model of convenience and beauty. What will surprise many people, the prospect from the eleventh and other upper stories of the Temple is positively the most beautiful in Chicago, especially to the north and east. One can see farther, of course, from the top of the Auditorium tower, but the tower view, consisting on one side entirely of water, is very flat compared with the Temple view, which has the handsomest buildings in the city for a foreground, while beyond them lies the water of the lake like a crescent of the deepest blue. The effect is singular and surpassingly beautiful."

* * *

Nobly are the unions entering the list to raise each $100—Mrs. M. Y. Mahan, president of the Griggsville, Ill., W. C. T. U., tells how it earned most of its pledge, having sent some time ago $33. In February, it was decided to raise the balance of the $100 and the dollar plan was tried—or the experiences of how the dollar was earned; it proved a perfect success and the balance, $67, was raised without any trouble. All large unions should try this plan and insure the certainty of their name going on the tablet of their state. The Mary Allen West union, Chicago, Ill., sends $34, which completes their gift of $100. The Oshkosh, Wisconsin, union sends $67.47, which completes a $100 gift. The St. James, Minn., W. C. T. U., sends $25 as first payment on a pledge. The Amory Hill union, of Springfield, Mass., sends $8.40, first payment on a pledge of $100. The West Peotone, Ill., W. C. T. U., sends $26.60 on a $100 pledge; Amboy, Ill., $50; Wellfleet, Neb., $13.30; Rock Valley, Ia., $35; Belvidere, Ill., $48.30; Oberlin, Ohio, $10; Sharon Springs, N. Y., $25; Minto, N. Dakota, $50; Ludington, Mich., ninth district, $67.60; Sharon Springs, N. Y., $25; Arno, Mo., $15; The Y's of St. Augustine, Florida, $15 and the Marietta, Ohio, Y's, $15.

* * *

Mrs. L. D. Carhart, Marion, Iowa, sends $100 in memory of her aunt, Mary V. Sparman. The Mt. Kisco, N. Y., W. C. T. U., send $50, first payment on a pledge of $100 in memory of Maggie L. Knapp. The Mary F. Thomas W. C. T. U., Richmond, Ind., send $50 which completes their payment on the Dr. Mary F. Thomas tablet. Emily Harland, Sherwood, N. Y., sends $4 for the Mrs. Elizabeth Comstock memorial. Mrs. Minnie Leeds, Michigan City, Ind., and Mrs. Morrison, La Porte, Ind., each send $1 to the Elizabeth Comstock memorial. Miss Carrie Todd, Reading, Mass., sends $1.50 for the Yolande Ames memorial window. She earned it by putting a mite-box up in the factory where she is a bookkeeper.

* * *

"I inclose," writes Sarah Brooks, Marlborough, Ohio, "a small contribution to the Temple. Many years ago a dear old aunt gave my sister and me each a gold dollar. We valued them too highly to exchange them for anything, but lately while longing for means to help the Temple, these came into my mind, and it seemed a sin to keep even so small a sum idle; I cannot quite make up my mind to get a money order with them, so mail them direct to you." Five dollars comes from Mrs. M. L. Bissell, Ft. Scott, Kan. She writes: "This is the sum of my 'littles,' and is given most cheerfully, wishing the amount might be far greater." Mrs. Jennie K. Lewis, Fort Logan, Montana, sends $9.30. Mrs. S. A. Keifer and her daughter, Grace, send $8.36. They write: "We are much interested in the Temple and like to think that we have a few bricks in it." James T. and Nancy A. Kirk, Junction City, Ore., send $10; they close their letter by saying: "May the blessing of our divine Father be ever around and over the beautiful Temple is our prayer."

* * *

The Temple Trust Bonds are selling well. We give the names of a few of the states which have taken the lead in purchasing them. Massachusetts, $46,800; Illinois, $27,400; New York, $18,500; Pennsylvania, $13,300 and Michigan, $11,900. Let all women who desire a safe investment purchase these bonds; they pay six per cent interest, paid semi-annually. Write Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle St., Chicago, for further information.

* * *

All checks and post-office orders should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh, and sent to her at the Temple, Chicago. A two-cent stamp will secure a Temple mite-box and all documents in regard to the Temple, including circular giving prices and description of silver models. Address Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago, Ill.

Our Children.

WHAT WOULD YOU THINK?

BY H. E. BRANCH.

What would you think if the birds and the flowers
Should say that the dew and the sweet summer showers
Were not what they wanted to bathe in and drink,
They'd like something stronger;
Now what would you think?

And what would you think, some pleasant spring day,
If the robin and wren and pretty bluejay
Should go reeling and falling because of strong drink
(Just like men and boys,)
Now what would you think?

And what would you think, if you picked a bouquet;
And found that the flowers acted just the same way;
And all of them tipsy because of a drink.
(How queer it would be;)
But what would you think?

Well, if it is silly and foolish for them,
Don't you think it is worse for the boys and the men,
Who lose both their bodies and souls too, through drink.
Now what do you think?

A MAY KING.

BY JULIA D. PECK.

"They've chosen me May Queen!" cried little Tassa Terry. "Are you glad, mamma? I'm so happy! We are going to Oak Glen, and Mr. Allen has promised to row us across the lake. We are to carry our lunch; and please, mamma, will you make me some gooseberry tarts, and some seed cakes? Oh! I can hardly wait for to-morrow."

"To-morrow will come soon enough if such an elaborate lunch is to be prepared," mamma said, smiling.

"I don't know why boys can't be May Kings," said Bernie. "We boys are always snubbed."

"A May King!" cried Tassa. "How very funny that would be! Would you want a wreath of flowers on your head, and have the girls all dance around you?" and Tassa laughed merrily.

"I don't see anything very funny about it," said Bernie. "We boys never have our rights! Well, I don't care! Ted and Cornie, Dannie and I are going fishing. Cornie knows of a place in his father's woods where the trout are thick and we are going to carry some lunch, too, and build a fire and cook some fish. Mr. Cole said we might if we'd be careful. I guess boys have more fun than girls after all, if they can't be May Queens or Kings."

"My boy, you can be a king if you choose," said mamma.

"Why, mamma Terry!" exclaimed Tassa.

"There are no kings in America, are there?" asked Bernie, very much surprised.

"Yes, dear," said his mother; "there are a good many kings and queens, though they do not wear any crowns yet—sometime they will have them; and if you, Bernie, make your hands, your feet, your talents, your eyes, your ears, and your tongue, your willing subjects to do good with, and make the world better and happier, you will be a king, and sometime you will have a crown."

"I think I know what you mean," said Bernie; and he thought about it that night until he went to sleep.

The first day of May dawned bright and sunny, but poor Tassa awoke long before morning with an aching head and a sore throat.

"Bernie must go and tell the girls that you are sick, and cannot go with them," mamma said.

"Oh! mamma! It is more than I can bear—it truly is!" sobbed Tassa.

"My little queen must be brave," said mamma, as she kissed the flushed, tearful face.

Tassa tried hard to be brave, but when she saw Bernie start off with his friends for a long day in the woods, she could not keep back the tears.

Bernie ran back to say "good-bye."

"I'm sorry, sis," he said, "but don't cry, and I'll bring you some trout for your supper."

"I guess you wouldn't like it to have me go off and have fun, if you were sick," sobbed the little girl.

Bernie ran on to join the boys, who were in the best of spirits, shouting, whistling and talking merrily; but Bernie was unusually silent. Presently he stopped, and cried out:—

"Oh! boys! look at this arbutus!" and he was down on his knees pulling up the pink, fragrant flowers by handfuls.

"Do come on!" cried Cornie. "What do you want of those things? Don't be a girl!"

"I'm going to run back and carry some to sis," said Bernie; "she's sick and she's awful fond of flowers. You go on and maybe I'll catch up, if Tassa don't want to have me stay with her."

"Don't be a goose!" said Dannie. "You've no right to go home and spoil all our fun. You always catch more fish than anybody else."

"Come on, boys," said Ted. "We don't want to waste any more time talking. Bern wouldn't be so mean as to back out now."

Bernie's face flushed, but the earnest look did not go from it. He was thinking of what his mother said the day before.

"I want to go as much as you want to have me, boys," he said, "but I've got to go back—there's no use talking. Here's my lunch basket and if I don't catch up with you before you get to the 'big rock,' you may know I can't come." Then Bernie turned and started for home on a run, and the boys went on without him.

Tassa's face was buried in the lounge cushion when Bernie burst into the room, with his hands full of flowers. She looked up and her face grew very bright.

"Oh! oh!" she cried. "I never saw such beauties! I thought you had gone fishing."

"It was pretty hot," said Bernie, "and then it was so far I thought I wouldn't go. Besides, I didn't know but you'd like me to play 'Authors' or something with you. I thought you looked rather blue when I went off."

"I'm so glad," said the little girl. "Please bring me a big, deep dish, Bernie. Oh! how sweet they are. There are so many, too. How I would like to send Mrs. Grey some. She was sick last Sunday so we had to have another teacher. She is so fond of flowers, I 'most know these would cure her."

"I'll take her some," said Bernie. "It won't take me long to run over to the parsonage."

"Was Mrs. Grey pleased with the flowers?" asked Tassa, when Bernie returned a few minutes later.

"Pleased," said Bernie, "she just put her face down in them, and when she looked up there were tears in her eyes, though what she was crying about is more than I know; and she said to tell you that you couldn't have sent her anything that would have done her so much good. She sent her love, and a lot more that I can't remember, and she made me take this game of 'Parcheesi' to amuse you with. It's jolly! Cornie and I always play it when I go over there."

The children played the fascinating game until lunch, and Tassa was so interested she forgot her sore throat. After lunch she was ready for something else.

"Do think of something new to do, Bernie," she said, "or my throat will begin to pain me again. I want to do something I never did before."

"I know just the thing," said Bernie. "Ted's sister was making one when I was there, one day. You take all the old pictures you have and cut them out, the men and animals, houses and everything separately, and paste them on to a big piece of pasteboard to make one picture. You have to study to group them so they'll look natural. It's great fun!"

"Hurry and get the pictures," said Tassa; "and mamma, please make some paste, my head pains me so."

Bernie patiently climbed the attic stairs several times, and brought down armfuls of old illustrated papers, and a big piece of pasteboard; he got his mother's light work-table, and then they began to cut the pictures.

"Now we must find sky to paste across the top," said Bernie, when a large pile of objects had been carefully cut out. "Then we must put in the other things so no one will know where they are joined."

"This old woman, churning, I will put under that big apple tree," said Tassa. "I'm sure she'll like it better than staying in the house. Oh! it is fun! Why didn't you tell about it before, Bernie?"

"I thought I'd save it till you were sick or something. I'm going to have these men and women and children all going to that church, and this man, with the prayer-book under his arm, is the minister."

The children became so interested that it was tea-time before they had thought of such a thing, and their papa came home.

"Why! how is this?" he asked. "When I went away this morning, Tassa was crying and Bernie was hurrying off for a day's fun, and when I came home I found you laughing so merrily, I thought there must be a party here. What has become of my little girl's sore throat?"

"We've had such fun," said Tassa, "I've most forgotten all about it. Just look at our picture."

"That is quite a study," said papa, examining it carefully, "and very ingeniously done. We will have it framed and hung in the sitting-room, where we can study it at our leisure."

"I think," said mamma, "that we shall have to call Bernie our 'May King,' and I am sure he deserves a wreath of laurels; for he gave up, willingly, his own day's pleasure, and has used his eyes, his tongue, his feet and his hands, to amuse and make happy his little, sick sister. I am sure any one who has such willing and obedient servants must have a kingly heart."

"'Twasn't anything," said Bernie. "It was jolly fun." But his face flushed with pleasure at his mother's praise.

Shelburne, Mass.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A May greeting to you all! If this warm weather keeps up, our cozy corner will have to be moved from under lamplights and by firelights into the beautiful, bright daylight, and our seats to rustic benches and grass plats—if the grass is not damp. I suppose a number of you have been in the woods gathering the lovely wild-flowers which are such beautiful promises of God's love to us. I know you all love the glorious springtime as I do. I see it in your faces. It's deep down in your hearts, I know. Then let us welcome the spring, for all the happy, out-door times and the good things it brings. They are too many to talk over in this letter, but we can think about them and thank our Heavenly Father for His goodness and loving kindness to us. Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

May I come in? It looks so cozy and nice. I think the name given to it suits it very nicely.

LILLA SPENCER.
Janesville, Minn.

I did not vote for a name for our page, but I think "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner" is the best of them all. I enjoy reading the stories and working the puzzles very much.

LEOTA L. BROWN.
Chicago, Ill.

I enjoy the letters and the puzzles in the Cozy Corner. I am glad the children are not forgotten in THE UNION SIGNAL.

FLOSSIE HENNINGES.
Cleveland, O.

I have read the nice little letters from the little boys and girls. I love THE UNION SIGNAL very much. I love Aunt Jane's letters. I send love to you. I am seven years old. Your loving little friend,

Avalon, Mo. BERNICE BUTLER.

I read THE UNION SIGNAL every time it comes. Your stories are so interesting that we hail them with delight.

Saranac, Mich. GENIE M. ROWE.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

37.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of 19 letters.
My 16, 1, 10 and 8 means family.
My 5, 15 is a nickname.
My 12, 18, 9, 4 means relish.
My 19, 11, 14 is a large mythical bird
My 2, 17, 14, 6, 3. 7, 13 means unsafe.
My whole is something to which children may belong.

Clinton, Mich. RUTH TAYLOR.

38.

ZIGZAG.

1 . * . .
2 . . * .
3 . * . .
4 . . * .
5 . * . .
6 . . * .
7 . * . .

1. Part of a circle; 2. a sly look; 3. a piece of land; 4. the face; 5. an article; 6. a fruit; 7. to unite. Zigzag down: narration.

SOLON.
Waterman, Ill.

39.

HIDDEN TEXT.

(Give Bible references.)

1. I love them that love me.
2. I, the Lord, will hold thy hand.
3. He will guide you into all truth.
4. My hope is in thee.
5. He will be with thee.
6. I can of mine own self do nothing.
7. He kept him as the apple of his eye.

A word is hidden in each quotation which, when found and read in the order given, will form a beautiful promise.

REBECCA.
Keene, N. H.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED APRIL 14.

28. Romance, France; guess, S; still, will; hard, lard; true, few; Frances Willard. F. E. W.

29. Easter.

30. 1. Lady Henry Somerset; 2. Frances E. Willard; 3. Mary Clement Leavitt; 4. Eliza J. Thompson; 5. Mary Allen West; 6. Mary A. Woodbridge.

Correct answers: Lily Farnsworth; Ernest J. Colby; Leota L. Brown; Chas. Crocker; Olin and Willard Hawley; R. G. H. Hill; C. L. Hawke; Ruth Taylor; Geo. L. DeGaut; Fona Goudey; Mabel C. Howard; Alta Drake; Flossie Henninges.

The Household.

NEVER KNOW AGE.

BY MARIA BARRETT BUTLER.

She cheerily said, "We are growing old
If we count by the years, my friends;
And looking beyond, we may dimly behold
The mansions celestial of which we are told;
May catch the light from a luminous shore—
The tone of a voice familiar of yore,
The launch of a shallop, or stroke of an oar—
Ah, we know the signals, my friends.

"And yet, if we reckon by other than years
We are youthful still," she smiled;
"For a quickening sense of the anguish and tears,
The loves and the blisses, despairings and fears
Of humanity's heart, so filleth each day
That, thoughtless of self, we work while we may,
Forgetting the mile-stones passed on the way—
And thus we keep youthful, dear friends.

"Ah, yes, all too busy for folding of hands
In idle regrettings, are we;
The broader outlook from where each of us stands
Revealeth fresh work that our interest demands,
And grateful that yet we may offerings bring
For the final 'Well done,' we can silently sing
A jubilant song of perennial spring—
And never know age, sweet friends."

THE WRATH OF THE LAMB.

BY MARSHALL SAUNDERS.

"Oh, the wrath of the Lamb, the wrath of the Lamb!" The boy's shrill voice soars above the jingling of glasses, the jests, the laughter, the noise and turmoil of the room.

The men look up, their faces red and angry in the light of the huge fire that goes roaring up the chimney. There stands the boy in their midst, a pale, slim lad, lifting up his voice against them. Then oaths and angry exclamations break out. "Shut up, you youngster, do you think you are in church?" shouts some one. "Tear a leaf out of his Bible!" calls another, "and he'll sit down fast enough." A torn and shattered Bible is snatched from the boy's hand, several leaves torn out and stamped on the floor, and the mutilated book handed back to him. A roar of laughter goes up at his dismayed face. The boy looks like a corpse to-night. Then he is roughly pushed back into his seat, and the gambling and drinking go on. The wind may blow and the storm may rage outside, but Jinks's cellar is a safe retreat. How the fire tears up the chimney to-night, and what a light and heat it gives out. They scarcely need the candles stuck in bottles around the walls. There are little tables scattered about the room; all are occupied, and the play is wild and high. Behind the bar-counter, where the firelight dances over bottles and glasses, stands Jinks, lynx-eyed Jinks, watching the lambs of his fold. Strong and vigorous lambs they are, their muscles hardened by work in the machine shops of the town. They look like an assembly of blacksmiths. Largest of all, towering among them when they are on their feet, is their leader, Big Ben, foremost in strength, in daring, in wickedness. His lips are raining oaths to-night, and his young brother crouching before him, presses his ragged Bible to his heart and shudders with fear.

It is the end of the holiday season. How Christmas has been kept in Jinks's cellar, it is better not to tell. The wildest drinking set of the town congregates here in the suburbs, where the basement of an unoccupied house has been utilized as a bar-room. Jinks's saloon in the town burned down, and during its rebuilding they were obliged to move out here. Now, to his surprise, no one wants to go back. His patrons are mostly young, strong men. They don't mind the walk, there are no policemen about, and they can make as much noise as they please and go home as late as they like. Poor, silly Bill; night after night, though he has wet his brother's hand with his tears, he has been dragged here. Ben, drunk or sober, profaning his mother's memory in a dozen shameful ways, has yet never broken one promise he made her. He tried to once; he went to Jinks's cellar alone, and when he opened the door he could have sworn that he saw, his mother's death-bed rising up amid the noise and smoke and liquor fumes of the place. He saw her wan and shadowy face, he heard her wailing cry: "Promise me, promise me, Ben, that you will never leave your brother!" He flung himself out of the room, rushed home, and brought Bill back with him. Poor Bill, poor silly boy, he had rather stay at home, had rather face the manifold terrors of their lonely garret, than come to this horrible place. "Oh the Lamb, the Lamb!" he mutters, rocking himself to and fro, "the Lamb on his great, white throne; He is angry when He looks down at these men."

Ever since that day, two years ago, that Ben let fall an iron bar against his sunny, young head, he has been like this. Foolish and weak, crooning over his mother's Bible as if it were a child, taking it to bed with him, rising up in the morning with it under his arm, carrying it to the machine shop, wrapping it in his coat and laying it under a bench, while he potters about among the bits of iron and steel where his simple tasks are allotted him. Revelation has all been torn from his book—Revelation that he loved so well—but sentences from it are always on his lips. Formerly he was content to sit a whole evening muttering them over; now, as if possessed by a spirit that he cannot control, he rises up at intervals and launches at the heads of the smokers and swearers and drinkers a sentence that rings in their ears, and angers and confuses them, coming, though it does, from the lips of a partial idiot

Ben is furious with him. He was only to bring that Bible here on condition that he kept it to himself. Like a surly bear, he sits eyeing his young brother. The lad is getting stubborn. He will have to knock it out of him. "You young sinner," he calls savagely, as he sees Bill trying to get on his feet again, "you young sinner," stretching over his table, and bringing one powerful hand down on the boy's shoulder, "if you open your mouth again to-night, I'll chuck you out in the snow."

Like a hunted creature the boy shrinks back into his corner, his eyes gleam strangely from under his matted hair. Ben has forsaken him—the bitterness of death is upon him. With a shriek that curdles the blood of the most reckless in the room, he flings out his arms toward his brother, from his lips bursts a last wailing, warning cry; "Oh the wrath of the Lamb!" and he falls senseless to the floor.

Ben is beside himself to-night. With a roar like that of an infuriated wild beast, he springs at his young brother, kicks him, rolls him over and over to the door, flings it open, plunges him into a snow bank to bring him to his senses, then throwing his Bible at his head, he tells him to get home, and reëntering the room, slams and bolts the door behind him. There is a loud burst of applause. "Good for you, Ben!" "Serves the young ranter right—" "Jinks's cellar don't want any Bibles." "You've stopped his tongue!" Ben sits down, buries his face in his glass, and the usual uproar of the room goes on.

For one long, awful hour he sits there. He handles his cards, he calls for brandy, more brandy, which he cannot drink, for it chokes him as if it were liquid fire, and in every glass he sees his mother's face, like the face of a soul in torture. He must go and bring back that young rebel before he can begin his evening. With low, fierce wrath he springs to his feet, knocking over the table in front of him with a crash. He is plied with questions. "I'm going home," he says angrily. "Hands off!" as a dozen outstretched arms are laid upon him. He brushes his companions aside as if they were flies, hurries to the door, and opening it steps outside. It is terribly cold. The wind cuts his face like a whip, and blinded by the glare of the snow, he stands for an instant rolling his hot eyes to and fro, trying to discover the path. His foot stumbles against something. With a muttered curse he kicks it aside. It is his mother's Bible, and if it is here, Bill is not far away. But for once this does not hold good. Bill is nowhere in sight. He searches all round the building, examines the windows, where in his fright and loneliness Bill might have crept to look at the light within. But no Bill is there. Well, he must have gone home.

Doggedly he turns his face toward the town—then a sudden thought strikes him. He examines the snow to the right and the left of the path. Yes, there are fresh footsteps. He plunges into the snow, and follows them round the corner of the house. They are leading away out over the hill and down to the hollow where is the town graveyard. What a dance that boy is leading him—out to the graveyard this time of night, when the headstones will be sticking up through the snow like sheeted ghosts. He will break every bone in his young body. Will he—over his mother's grave, where the frightened boy has taken refuge? Over the dead mother-heart, that used to beat so lovingly for them both? He pulls himself up for an instant. Surely that was her voice on the night wind, "Come unto me all ye that labor." How she used to sit in her arm-chair reading to them, Bill's curly head on her breast—yes, he will. The flash of tenderness is over; he snorts impatiently, shakes himself, and swearing almost continuously, plows heavily through the snow-drifts.

He has not far to go. A few paces further, and he stops abruptly. Why, there is Bill, lying on his face in the snow, his arms outstretched in the direction he wished to go. Ben's wrath redoubles. He is about to pounce upon him, to shout furiously, "Get up, you young rascal!" when a quick suspicion restrains him. He creeps to the boy's side. "Bill"—gently, "Bill!"

There is no answer. He puts out a hand, seizes the boy by his thinly clad shoulder, and turns him over. There is an unearthly smile on the waxen features. Ben looks at it, then stares wildly up to the sky like a man bereft of his senses.

. . . . . .

Inside the cellar all goes on merrily. There is a great noise, a great smoke, the fire roars up the chimney, and Jinks smiles contentedly, so contentedly. How can they guess of the scene being enacted within a few rods of them—of the dead boy lying in the snow, of the strong man in his agony, of the finger of God laid on a wicked heart? They are laughing, singing, shouting, enjoying themselves after their fashion, when the door swings silently open; there in their midst again is Big Ben, bare-headed and ghastly pale, bearing in his arms, as if it were a baby, his brother's slim, silent form

Without a word, almost noiselessly, he passes between them, and goes right up to the other end of the room where he lays the dead boy on the counter before Jinks. Jinks, who thinking that the boy is simply chilled, jocularly asks if he shall mix him a corpse reviver.

With terrible swiftness Ben's right hand goes out, he crushes the man back against his bottles, shakes him as if he were a reptile, then, dropping him, points grimly to the boy's face. Jinks, horror-stricken, his knees knocking together, his mouth full of blood, stands gazing alternately at the dead boy and his not less terrible living brother. Jinks quails with fear and looks appealingly at the group huddled together at the other end of the room.

But they will do nothing to help him. Not for free drinks for a year would one of them approach that counter. For several minutes there is a grim, horrible silence. Nothing is heard but the crackling of the fire. Then Ben gives up the motionless cat-like attitude in which he has stood watching the saloon-keeper. He lays one hand on his brother's breast. With an awful distinctness that makes Jinks's flesh creep, he swears two oaths—one is eternal hatred to the liquor traffic, the other, his intention to lead a better life. Then swiftly, silently, as he came, he gathers up the dead body to his breast and slowly leaves the room.

. . . . . .

That was two years ago. The boy was buried by his mother's side and Ben took his Bible. That Bible emptied Jinks's saloon. It drove him out of the liquor traffic into an awed, subdued and changed life. In Ben's hands it was a sword, charged with a power over his old companions that they could not resist. He haunted them incessantly, two texts on his lips—"The wrath of the Lamb"—"the love of the Lamb." And now it is a common saying that the devil runs when he sees Big Ben coming down any of the back alleys or slums of the town, with his mother's Bible under his arm. Broken-hearted mothers on earth, God will be as true to His promise to you as He was to that mother in heaven, looking down on Jinks's saloon.

THE BLESSED WILL OF GOD.

BY HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.

Alfred Cookman said of his life that it was a continual "yes" to his Heavenly Father. May we be as children who always say "yes" to their parents. How sweet it must be to God to have us say "yes" to Him, no matter what He asks. But, in order for this, we must see Him in everything; for it is one thing to say "yes" to His will and quite another to say "yes" to the will of man. And since a great part of our lives is made up of our dealings with our fellow-men, we must be able to lose sight of them in all that comes to us, and must see the hand of our God alone. We must pass over second causes and deal in each matter directly with our God. Therefore we need a God who will enter into every little detail of our lives; one who will not let a sparrow fall to the ground without Him and who numbers even the very hairs of our heads. And such a God we have. If He then is for us, who can be against us? If He is on our side, who can harm us? We may, indeed, triumphantly say, "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me." Neither man nor woman, nor Satan, nor the elements of nature, can touch that Christian who is trusting the Lord, unless He sees it is best, and allows it to be done.

Oh, dear friends, tell me, does not God's will look sweet to you? I think when it came to the point of a deliberate choice, every Christian would say, Give me God's will. The only thing we need be afraid of in life, would be, lest His will should not be done; lest our own will, or somebody's else should triumph. Faber says, that man always reigns who sides with God.

If you are resting in your own will, or on that of any man, you are running an awful risk; but if everything is put into God's hands you run no risk at all. Some old writer says, The will of God is not a load to carry but a pillow to rest on. So you will find it; and if you wake up in the night anxious, I advise you to sing yourself to sleep with this sweetest of songs, Thy will be done! Thy will be done! Thy will be done!

UNION SIGNAL
WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.
MARGARET A SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President Board of Directors.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same the Lord's name is to be praised.—Ps. 113: 3.

"YE SHALL KNOW THE TRUTH, AND THE TRUTH SHALL MAKE YOU FREE."

It is the business of the white-ribbon army to branch out into the world. This effort began in 1883, when Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, without purse, scrip or staff, started on the long journey, sailing from San Francisco to the Sandwich Islands, thence to Australia, and so on, during a "royal progress" of seven long and lonely years.

The first convention of the World's W. C. T. U. was held in Faneuil Hall November 10, 1891, where Mrs. Leavitt re-appeared, and strong foundations were laid for a society that should be to the globe what the National W. C. T. U. is to the globe's greatest republic.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, the schoolmaster of our movement, had been already appointed superintendent of the department, which had for its object the introduction of scientific temperance instruction in all schools, as part and parcel of the course of study, beginning with the primer and closing with the highest class. In pursuance of her great task, Mrs. Hunt long ago sent out to every missionary whose name she could obtain, a statement of the methods, plans and purposes of the white-ribboners, with a personal letter urging coöperation. She received innumerable replies, testifying to the intelligence and zeal of our foreign missionaries, who find their greatest foe in the brain poisons of the world. Among many other methods, one was recently suggested by Mrs. Joseph Cook, than whom we have no more thoughtful or well equipped white-ribboner. This was to call together the missionary leaders of New England, centering in Boston, that they might hear from Mrs. Hunt, and steps be taken to make scientific temperance instruction in the schools an organic feature of the world's missionary movement.

On the 19th of April, 1892, the large parlors of Mrs. Cook on Beacon street were filled with a representative assembly of foreign missionary experts from all the leading denominations. As was most appropriate, Mrs. Dr. A. J. Gordon, president of the Boston W. C. T. U., presided,—the interest in foreign missions felt by herself and husband being second to that manifested by no other pair that could be named. In a condensed and vivid way, Mrs. Gordon gave an account of the origin, progress and results of the mighty movement for the education of our people through their children, in the most recent results of physiology and hygiene, as related to the use of alcoholic beverages, opium, nicotine and other narcotics. She mentioned that out of the forty-four states composing the republic, only six remain in which this instruction has not been rendered compulsory through the public school system. Mrs. Gordon also related what might be called "the battle of the books," extending over many years, as a result of which we have admirable text books of all grades that are now furnished by the best publishers in the nation; and have, by the law of survival of the fittest, uprooted the books having vagaries more or less acceptable to the liquor power. The announcement was then made that Mrs. Hunt had just returned from a tour through the maritime provinces to which she was urged by the white-ribboners of Canada; and as a result of which, they and she have obtained from the parliament of Nova Scotia just such a scientific temperance law as they desired. This is good news indeed, and shows that the World's W. C. T. U. is not a name, but a great and shining fact. Mrs. Hunt stated in her clear and concise way, the objects of the instruction given, its Christian basis, its vital and organic relation to the temperance movement, urging the coöperation of all present in the introduction of these methods throughout all missionary lands that have proved so advantageous in our own country.

Our senior editor was then asked to speak, and referred to the appropriateness of such a meeting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cook, whose names were the synonym of everything enlightened, pure and good. She concluded with the famous sentence of Mr. Cook, that wherever you touch a natural law, you touch the ever blazing Sinai of God's commandments, with their unescapable penalties. She urged that missionaries and Christian teachers would find immense advantage in basing their instruction on natural law, and claiming the whole realm of cause and effect as the present proof of a sustaining and benevolent Creator, whose modes of action are the laws by which we live. She thought this method would help to harmonize the different schools of religious belief, and furnish the best connecting link between Christianity and the Oriental religions which it is to replace. She spoke most highly of Mrs. Hunt's achievements, and hoped it would not be long before the bright torch with which she had lighted up the republic might be carried in her steady hand "around the world, around the world," according to the anthem of the World's W. C. T. U.

Addresses were made by several missionary ladies, one by Miss Campbell of Pekin, who told of a wealthy Chinese lady on whom she called, who was found seated in state; and on being inquired of as to how she passed her time, replied, "I have my pipe and I smoke; I have my cards and I play." This was the sum total of her freedom and expansion. Miss Campbell said that a Chinese woman who was a confirmed opium smoker, was visited by her in the effort to aid her in shaking off this bondage; she gave her age as fifty-seven years, and said she had been twenty years a smoker. Miss Campbell persuaded her to go to the missionary home, telling her that in fifteen days she could be cured. The woman wept and said that "tears had been her bitter food" because of her many fruitless times of repentance, and that she would now by God's grace, make an earnest effort. The next day she told Miss Campbell that she was sixty years of age, but had feared lest they would not receive her if they knew that she was so old, hence she had been tempted to tell what was not true, but repented and confessed. She now lifted up her heart to God anew for help, and in fifteen days received so much of spiritual power that she was a cured woman and has so remained. A very bright mandarin was Miss Campbell's teacher. He asked if the Queen of England was a Christian woman, and on being informed that she was, he said, "If there is a heaven, and if I get there, I shall go up to that Queen and say to her, 'What right have you in heaven, when you did so much to spoil my China with your opium?'" This mandarin told Miss Campbell that the better class of Chinese do not drink in public. It was therefore thought that they refrained from liquors, but nothing was further from the truth. Drunkenness was a curse to them, as well as the use of opium.

Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, of Spain, spoke earnestly and with pathos of her devoted interest in the temperance movement, and of her rejoicing in view of the present meeting, and the great outcome that might be hoped from it. Mrs. Gutterson, of Magdala, India, said that the Brahmins taught their people never to use intoxicants. The Aryans had declared against it in the most ancient writings, and the early Brahmins would not eat bread even, because they said fermentation had occurred in it, not at first understanding that the heat had expelled all evil traces of any such chemical action. She referred to Yung Wing, the Chinese patriot, with whom she had dined lately. He admitted that China had given no spiritual light to the world, but had contributed largely, by its ingenuity, to the comfort of the world in material things. He had added, "but if we have not given light, we certainly have not brought darkness; while you Anglo-Saxons have covered our country with the blackness of strong drink and opium." It was Mrs. Gutterson's emphatic verdict that the only way out is to teach the children throughout their school years, by methods systematic and continuous, that which will not only forewarn but forearm them against nerve poisons of all kinds. Miss Bennett, of Japan, said that the bright, quick-minded people of that country are ready for anything that is foreign, and especially favor whatever comes from America; that we should find alcoholic drinks in remote towns and villages, where there was no other token of our occidental civilization! Tobacco was universally used, being raised by the farmers, and men and women alike were confirmed smokers. It was also offered as soon as one entered a store or shop; but the pipes were not larger than a child's thimble, and not more than three whiffs were taken, so that compared with our method of smoking, theirs could hardly be considered worthy of mention, as their tobacco was very mild; but this fascination would grow by what it feeds on, and as their relations are becoming every year more intimate with us, they would become consumers of our own "vile weed." She also said that California wine was now imported into Japan, merchants regarding that country as one of their best markets.

Miss Everett, of Burmah, who wore the white ribbon, as did most of the ladies who spoke, said that she had repeatedly been confronted with this reply, "See the toddy men;" (that is what the natives call the gin shop keepers), "turn them out first; they are from your own country; and then we will listen to what you have to say." She spoke of a mountainous tribe in which the women are laden with brass ornaments that made them practically prisoners, and of the efforts of missionary women, by teaching them that the image of God ought not thus to be desecrated, to induce them to dispense with this mass of metal. At last fifty women came before the missionaries, and on being implored and finally commanded to take off these hideous ornaments, they were unwound, coil by coil, by the men missionaries, who alone were strong enough to loosen them. Miss Everett said she thought that in like manner we must take hold of the narcotic habits of the orientals, and with infinite patience unwind them coil by coil, the instruction of the children offering much the most hopeful point of contact.

The ladies spoke very highly of the work of Mrs. Leavitt, concerning which they were evidently well informed. Miss Butler, daughter of the distinguished Rev. and Mrs. Butler, of the Methodist Church, said that when she asked natives of India to accept Christianity, the reply had many a time been given, "Do you want me to be a Christian, that I may become a drunkard like that English soldier yonder?" She thought that not only must we have scientific temperance instruction in all the missions, but that every effort must be used to put the books in the English schools of India, where so many Eurasians have their education. She said the women of India, according to her observation, were many of them remarkably bright, notwithstanding their lack of education, and they never cease to wonder why we come to teach them the doctrine of brotherhood when others come from our own land with intoxicants. It is almost impossible, she said, to explain this to them. And in one home, with the thermometer at 104, the mistress of the establishment, desiring to show special consideration to her Christian teacher, had ordered from the bazar whatever was thought to be most desired by Americans; and the American found herself face to face with a bottle of brandy! Miss Butler said she tried to show the difference by illustrating concerning that between gilt and gold, but had much difficulty to make herself understood. Miss Butler has also been a missionary in Mexico, where the pulcha is universally used as a drink. It resembles beer, and the people are slaves to it. She, however, believed that American ideas were becoming more and more popular in Mexico, and that on the crest of this new hospitality toward Northern civilization we should be able to get instruction into the schools erelong, under the enlightened presidency of Diaz.

Rev. Dr. Cyrus D. Hamlin, founder of Roberts College, Constantinople, was then invited to speak. He said it was sixty-five years since he began to be a teetotaller. He went to Turkey in 1839. He carried with him Sewall's stomach plates, which had been the means of opening the eyes of myriads of people in that country. In early days there were hardly any abstainers, even among the missionaries. He illustrated in a telling manner the value of temperance literature by speaking of having lent a copy of "Sargeant's Temperance Tales" to the son of an English sea captain, who was converted to total abstinence through their perusal, and became captain of a great East India ship, often saying that but for the reading of that book and the resolution that grew out of it, he should never have attained to such a position.

At the close of this very interesting conference, in which there was the utmost unanimity of interest and purpose, the following resolution was offered by our National W. C. T. U. President, which was warmly seconded and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this meeting especially request the World's Missionary Committee, through its chairman, Miss Childs, to consider the practicability of arranging for scientific temperance instruction in the nature and physiological effects of alcohol, opium and other narcotics on the human system, in all missionary and English-speaking schools of missionary lands, also that Mrs. Mary H. Hunt be requested to present the subject to the International Missionary Union that meets annually at Clifton Springs, N. Y.

It will thus be seen that practical results are almost certain to accrue from this temperance missionary conference; and we have published this account in the earnest hope that our temperance sisters among the foreign missionaries, and the officers of the various church societies, will see that this subject is brought up at the annual meetings of their various branches, and secure the passage of resolutions, that scientific and temperance instruction in the various schools where missionaries' labor shall be one of the recognized lines of work to be universally introduced, and upon which reports are to be annually asked for. If by this means we can lay foundations in the knowledge and habits of boys and girls the world over, the temperance movement will become so thoroughly incorporated into the "sober second thought" of humanity, that within three generations we may hope for results that will make those already attained like the first clumsy efforts of the school-boy learning to write when compared with the swift messages of the submarine cables that now belt the world.

"CONCERNING THE COLLECTIONS."

Some of the bright things we have heard on this great theme from men and women who stood between the collection basket and the audience are here enumerated:

"We are now going to do a very womanly thing, namely, ask for money." "Don't clap, except you clap your hand into your pocket." "W. C. T. U. What do those letters mean? They don't mean anything to me," said a man in the rural districts of South Carolina. The speaker then went on to explain the significance of those cabalistic letters. A sweet-faced woman came forward in one of our conventions and said, "I hope they have not this meaning 'We can't take Universalists.'" She was assured that her hope was well-founded.

A minister once said the four letters meant "We come to you;" another, "We come to unite;" another, "We come to upset." One speaker reviewed briefly our leading departments, and at the end of each division said, "But it cannot be conducted without money," Or, "It is a splendid investment. Don't you want to take a little stock?"

Another said, "We have had splendid music to-night, and now comes the chorus, most musical of all in the ears of the white-ribboners; we call it 'silver chimes.' A crowd gathered on a street corner where a poor fellow had met with a terrible accident. They were sympathizing with him when an agile Frenchman came along, looked over the group, and cried out: 'You all sorry? How much you sorry? I sorry one dollar,' and passed his hat around. So we propose to take the cents-us of how much you are sorry for the drunkard's wife."

Again: "You remember the colored brother said, 'We are going to take a conscription.' Well, let us now proceed to conscript, and that with the sure knowledge that our money puts proxies in the field."

Another said, "Mythology tells us that King Midas had a charmed touch that could turn everything into gold. The W. C. T. U. has a similar alchemy; it can turn gold into everything. Give us the gold and we will answer for the magic. It shall be transmuted into temperance literature, temperance songs and voices to help mould and fashion the brain and heart of our nation in accord with God's laws written in our breast and the love of human brotherhood."

A minister said, when the collection was handed in and he looked it over: "I can say with one of old, that Demetrius, the coppersmith, has done me much harm."

HARVARD and Yale have been in high debate on the following question: "Resolved, That immigration to the United States be unrestricted." Some excellent points were made on both sides. In favor of immigration it was claimed that foreigners built our great lines of traffic; opened our mines, felled our forests and have already transformed the West into a granary of nations. We forget that in the hour of need foreign arms were strong and foreign blood was lavish. We must so sift the incoming population as to prevent other countries from violating international courtesy by dumping their paupers upon us, or the admission of the Chinese, who, since they make no permanent homes are not immigrants at all. On the other hand it was urged that the question is one of public expediency, and that statesmanship consists in adapting public policy to the varying circumstances and necessities of the nation; that unrestricted immigration is not good; that conditions have so changed that immigration which once promoted the growth of the country now threatens its destruction; that the character of the immigrants has changed. In olden time an expensive ocean voyage and a journey beset with dangers into the heart of an unknown country required money, energy, and a vigorous physique. To-day many are being sent to this country by charitable institutions because they are unable to support themselves and are injurious to the community in which they live. The earlier immigrants risked their scalps in seeking freedom to worship God, but these later ones have for the present motive of their pilgrimage the worship of the American dollar. Formerly the difficulties of transportation demanded brains, energy and perseverance, and brought to pass by a process of natural selection the incoming of the flower of European people, but to-day every inducement is offered to the immigrant. Emigration agents play upon their stupidity by drawing highly colored pictures of American prosperity, and emigration is possible to persons whose natural ambition has been crushed out by centuries of poverty, misery and oppression. Railroad systems ramify the European market, and steamship companies are draining into this country the stagnant pools of downtrodden Europe. To the able-bodied foreigner, to the worthy poor and oppressed of all nations, to those fleeing from the iron heel of despotism and those offering their honest labor in exchange for a living, the American will extend a hearty welcome, but to those whose character and condition are harmful to the institutions whose shelter they seek, we should present an impregnable barrier of restrictive legislation. We should not have for our watchword "America for Americans," but that nobler motto, "Americans for America."

Special Difficulties.

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including Wine and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

QUESTION.—Can local unions use the proceeds of their entertainments with which to pay their state dues?

ANSWER.—No, the dues must be dues; each woman must pay the amount to the local treasury which is required by the local constitution, and from that the treasurer must pay the amount per capita for which the state calls. It is the express stipulation that to be a member of a local union a woman must pay a certain fixed fee. The dues to the state are a trust fund in the local treasury and must not be used for any other purpose.

ESTHER PUGH.

Q.—Does the pledge of the W. C. T. U. include cider?

A.—It certainly includes cider when there is any intoxicating quality in the cider, and it is the belief of the general officers, and the editors of this paper, that the wiser method is to leave that beverage alone altogether, as it is almost impossible to tell when the intoxicating quality enters, and a clear sweep is safer, especially for children and young people.

Q.—Does the present dress plan include, as a rule, much for health, comfort and convenience, or is it only intended for woody walks at summer resorts?

A.—The plan is for health, comfort and convenience at all times and in all places.

Q.—Is relief under active labor at home an object?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Is the use of the improvement in society anticipated?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Is anything in the line practical and expected to be in use by next summer?

A.—Many practical innovations have been made and are still being made. Some of our ladies have been working for over twenty years, and, together with other women about the country, have brought about such a change that you can now procure manufactured garments of all kinds and varieties, at a minimum price in New York, Boston, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Chicago, and other large cities of the country. By writing to the Dress Improvement Association, 157 Wabash Ave,. Chicago, Ill., you will be sent an illustrated catalogue giving descriptions of the goods.

Q.—Will an exposè of any articles in this line be taken to, or worn at the Columbian Fair?

A.—Doubtless manufacturers all over the country will exhibit at the Fair. The Chicago Society for Physical Culture and Dress Improvement has asked for space in the Woman's Building, and if it is granted they will give a most complete exhibit of what they consider artistic clothing. They will aim to show the correct ideals for women in dress, together with the most complete exhibit of statuary and pictures, showing what they consider artistic and ideal in form.

Q.—Kindly give me information which I desire on the much agitated question of "Dress Reform." Having been brought up to bands and buttons and steels, I know not how to begin the revolution for health's sake. My desire is to begin on myself. M. E. L.

A.—Would advise first the union suit, over that a pair of lisle-thread tights with feet. In winter, a pair of boy's merino socks can be worn inside as the feet of the tights will not be warm enough. Next in order is a lisle-thread vest which makes a complete black suit when one is undressed. In winter, with this suit, you will need the equestrian woolen tights without feet. Line your dresses with alpaca, or silk lining, and if the goods are heavy enough you will not need an extra skirt. With very thin dresses for summer, you will need a silk, cotton, or linen slip, five breadths, gathered and sewed to a short, low-necked, sleeveless waist. Articles of clothing here mentioned are all that any woman needs, and the best of it is, that they can all be purchased, and one does not have to bother with making underclothes.

The Watch-Tower.

A characteristic white ribbon epitaph, simply the words, "Here lies her chrysalis."

***

It may be mentioned, as some have queried whether unmarried women can be addressed as madam, that the princesses of England, whether married or single, are invariably called by that title. Madam simply means lady, a designation which every woman can claim in her own right.

***

The strongest test of the appreciation of a worker is always found in the closest circle of friends. To be loved and trusted by one's comrades and neighbors proves oneself worthy indeed. Such a character was that of Mrs. Jennie F. Holmes, formerly president of Nebraska W. C. T. U. When Mrs. Holmes died a short time ago, her little home town, Tecumseh, was completely in mourning. On the day of her funeral, business was entirely suspended, even to the closing of the three saloons which she had fought so constantly during her life. Said one of the proprietors: "We do not coincide with her temperance views, but we do believe that the world is better for her life."

***

Mrs. Clara Hoffman gave a happy gymnastic drill in taking a collection at the great meeting of the W. C. T. U. in St. Louis recently. She said: "I used to teach calisthenics to my pupils. Suppose you take a lesson suited to the present crisis. I will give it under the heads 1, 2, 3, 4: 1. All hands in pockets; 2. Open your pocketbooks; 3. Take out all you have; 4. Put it in these baskets tied with white ribbon and offered by women who have borne and labored and had patience in this mighty cause."

***

Whisky politics has defenders but no defense.

***

There are only three ways to penetrate a wall; you must either go over it, under it, or through it. Going under is the best, I think, for then you have the weight of the wall to help you as it is apt to fall by its own force.

***

A modern exegete had given a lecture in Boston, in which he set forth that the Apostle Paul, being well versed in the common sayings, proverbs, etc., of the Romans, had, in using the expression, "Let them ask of their husbands at home," simply quoted a saying of Cato the Censor. At the close of this lecture, an honest countrywoman, who had attended in the hope of hearing that she was not obliged to accept a literal rendering of Paul's statement, was heard to speak as follows to her companion: "Wal, I'm glad I come. Caterer the Sensible! He knew what he was talkin' about. I sha'n't worry any more about Paul; he was only quotin' Caterer the Sensible, and he wan't so very full of sense either."

***

One of the most delightful traits of Lady Henry Somerset's character is that she is even more considerate and kind to those dependent upon her than to the wealthy and great. The butler, many a time, has come down from her little dining-room at Eastnor Castle, where she takes her meals alone when she has no guests, and said with tears, "My little lady does not eat." One of her attendants was asked if she, Lady Henry, was well liked by the forty servants who have the castle in charge. He answered with enthusiasm: "Liked! She is adored by every one of them."

***

Two friends were walking on the road when one called attention to a very tall tree saying she had never before noticed its full outline and proportions, for the reason, probably, that we are apt to look only as high as our own altitude, and thus miss any amount of good that we might otherwise gain. This applies to great characters and God-like reforms, as well as to trees.

***

We have taken the elevator and propose it shall carry us to the top of the building. Meanwhile, any one who shall go with us one story we shall be very glad to see; but more pleased with those who will go two stories; the only point being that we must go the same way, else we cannot go at all. In effect, those who are willing to try for prohibition by local option, prohibition by closed ballot, prohibition on Sundays, prohibition on holidays, prohibition in certain wards and districts of the city or town, have all taken the elevator, though they may not have the top story in view, and we are really comrades and fellow workers. But anybody giving the liquor traffic a legal status for a money consideration is not only on the ground floor, but headed toward the basement and we cannot come into fellowship.

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

CUSTOMS IN INDIA.

I have not seen a drunken native in India. They do drink, however, but the native drinks contain such a small per cent of alcohol that intoxication is not so frequent. I spent one morning in a tope of cocoanut trees and saw the "toddy drawing." The man, with great agility, climbs the tree, carrying up an empty vessel, returning with one filled. The tree is tapped in the bloom stalk and the drawing of "toddy" prevents the development of fruit. Every tree is numbered and taxed by the government; so, literally, here the trees of the forest are numbered. I regret to say that most English people, men and women, use liquors here freely. At hotel and private dinners there is scarcely a plate without a bottle near. With its mild and just rule, with its prodigious and excellently equipped railroads, its admirable schools and colleges, it seems inconsistent that civilization should also bring this vice of intemperance to these people.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM.

Calcutta, India.

WORK OF A CHRISTIAN WOMAN.

Rev. Van Burch, from Oberlin, will act as our traveling secretary for a year. I hope he will be successful. Our well-to-do classes make such a thing of their custom of wine-drinking that I believe even if the Lord himself appeared and insisted on their giving it up, they would rather treat Him as once did the Jews than obey the command. Yet inch by inch the people begin to understand who are their real friends, and we have not worked in vain for thirty years. In addition to planning the work of Rev. Van Burch, I have asked that the week, April 17–24, be made a week of thankoffering. I enclose the yearly report of my personal temperance work in the form of a daily paper, calling it "From Backstreets and Slums." Our Miss Mary van der Goes is a splendid Christian worker. She regularly visits 100 saloons in the neighborhood, fifty on Saturday. She has persuaded 300 men to leave the places and come to our mission hall; 250 of these are now members. When she is about to enter a drinking place, the wives outside pray her: "Oh, miss, fetch my husband; he has all the money and will drink till it is almost all gone." Thirty years ago I tried the same, but they would not suffer from a man what they bear from a lady. The people even that are drinking will not suffer her to be ill-treated but they would have helped the ruffians in beating and scoffing me. Christian ladies are the power of our work. When visiting the low boarding houses, Miss van der Goes (pronounced goose) found two young men on the Sunday not in a saloon but loitering near. She invited them to tea at the mission hall and from this beginning there are now sixty-six every Sunday evening at the tea meeting, and they look on her as a mother.

C. S. ADAMA VAN SCHELTEMA.

Arnheim, Holland.

FROM A FAR-AWAY NOOK.

Since the death of our lamented president, Miss Julia Dickinson, we have been carrying on the work in these departments: prison work, work among sailors and soldiers, literature, juvenile instruction, public meetings and mothers' meetings. These islands have, for years, been governed by a legislature in favor of temperance. Local option has been established and an act has been passed lately, restricting, to a great extent, the sale of spirituous liquors. But it seemed as if the majority of the temperance societies have been satisfied with the success partially gained, and they are now all dissolved or struggling to maintain their existence. Intemperance is gaining ground rapidly in our midst, getting its victims from all circles of society. We have but a few total abstainers among the clergy and their work is apparently confined to their own membership. The majority of the population in our islands are, as a rule, moderate drinkers, this social custom being the greatest barrier temperance folk have to stop them. At the time we lost our leader, her influence for good was reaching all classes of society.

A branch union was established at Green Turtle Cay Abaco, one of our most important islands, not long ago, which it was Miss Dickinson's intention to visit.

Our second anniversary was fitly celebrated, and we are all hoping and praying that a measure of success will crown our efforts against the demon, intemperance, in this far-away little nook.

MARY S. DUTY (neé) COX.

Nassau, Bahamas.

A NOTE FROM BULGARIA.

Our unions are doing good work in holding public meetings. The temperance question is coming more to the front in Bulgaria and occasionally the papers print articles of their own accord. While they do not favor drunkenness, most of the people have no objection to going that way moderately. We much rejoice in our temperance paper, One Who Is Temperate, and it is receiving a good patronage, going into hundreds of families where we could not. I hope during my coming visit to America to be present at the temperance congress during the Columbian Fair. ZOE A. M. LOCKE.

Philippoplis, Bulgaria.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

The English barmaid system is as deeply rooted in Melbourne, South Australia, as is the liquor traffic itself. The W. C. T. U. labors unceasingly for the extermination of both.

Resolutions of sympathy and respect on the death of the late Julia A. Ames were passed by the executive committee of the South Australian W. C. T. U., at its recent yearly meeting.

Miss Theresa M. Campbell, of South Africa, one of the delegates to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention, has lately been in Chicago. She sailed for Glasgow, April 23, and will go to South Africa, May 14. Miss Campbell is a canny Scotch woman, and impressed all the delegates at the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Faneuil Hall by her devotion and intelligence.

The president of British Columbia W. C. T. U., Mrs. M. A. Cunningham, commends highly the gospel temperance meetings of "Joe Hess," the converted prize-fighter. Over four hundred people signed the pledge. Mr. Hess will, if possible, enter a law school in the United States and prepare himself, by a study of law and elocution, for the better fulfillment of his temperance duties.

Temperance work in Paris has to be conducted in a vastly different way from ours. "Homeopathic doses" it is termed by a bright Y correspondent in describing a meeting of the "Workmen's Club," under the auspices of the Paris Y's. On the walls of the little missionary restaurant in which the meetings are held is the notice, "Only one glass of wine will be served with each repast," and customers are further requested not to bring their own wine. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump."

News from the Field.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

SPRING NOTES.

It is the spring of the year, house cleaning time too, in our W. C. T. U. work, when things are put in working order for the new year. Our county conventions have come thick and fast this spring, because Mary Allen West was with us, and all the counties wished to have the benefit of her presence during her brief stay. We thought when Miss West came she would remain here six months at least to rest. She has "rested" by lecturing in the evening, talking to Loyal Temperance Legions in the afternoons, presenting the work before women's clubs, and holding schools of methods all round at the county conventions. We were glad to welcome Miss West to Southern California, and we were sorry to say good-bye.

The Los Angeles county convention was held last month at our Temperance Temple in Los Angeles. There were at least seventy-five regular delegates and visitors; enough from the adjoining counties, from other states and from England and Canada to swell the number to one hundred. In the brief words of greeting from Mrs. Robbins, of Colorado, Mrs. Taylor, of Baltimore, Mrs. Steadman, president of the Dominion of Canada, and Mrs. Margaret Parker, of England, we were given outline sketches of the work away from home, and we found that true white-ribboners are the same in spirit from wherever they may come. The report of the secretary of the convention showed increase in numbers of unions and membership, and the reports of the superintendents great activity in department work. Miss West took charge after each department report, turned the convention into a school and the delegates into scholars, while she, as teacher, questioned all round as to the best ways of doing this or that, and why. After getting from the class all it knew on the subject in hand, she then in her own vigorous way gave many practical helps. The profusion of flowers upon the platform, the bountiful lunches in the lunch rooms, the hearty words of welcome from the local president, Mrs. Hutton, all said plainly to the delegates, "We are glad to see you, and mean to make you glad that you have come"; the earnestness and readiness of the women in discussions, the promptness and smoothness with which the business was dispatched showed in a marked manner what the W. C. T. U. has done for women; the devotional services, the sweet Christian spirit manifested all the time, answered affirmatively the question asked me by a member of the convention: "Do you not think our women are growing spiritually?"

Orange county convention came next, being held at Santa Anna. Although the smallest and youngest county in Southern California, with only eight unions, the county treasurer reported that all were "up to time" in payment of state and county dues. Another fact worthy of commendation is, that these eight unions, and the majority of them are small, take eighty-seven copies of THE UNION SIGNAL. Papers were read on "Press Work," by Mrs. Conoway; "Narcotics," by Mrs. Irene Williams; "Franchise," by Mrs. Carrie W. Shelton; "The Social Problem of the Day," by Mrs. S. D. Blockman, and the "New Pledge," prepared by Dr. Ella Whipple, of Pasadena, and read by Mrs. Steadman. Miss West was present the first two days and helped to make the convention interesting and profitable by handling the department work. Judge and Mrs. Steadman also added interest to the meeting by their presence and encouraging words. The music rendered by singers from Orange and Garden Grove and by Mr. J. G. Clark, poet and singer, was exceptionally good. On the first evening a Demorest medal contest was held in which six girls and one boy took part. The class was under the instruction of Mrs. Grace Srock, who deserved great credit for the careful training she had bestowed upon these young people, all doing so well that it was difficult for the judges to decide who should receive the medal. The balloting for officers showed that the delegates were perfectly satisfied, those of the preceding year being unanimously elected.

About fifty delegates were present at San Diego county convention, with Mrs. Ella Whitmore, county president, in the chair. Many excellent papers were read, noticeably "Health and Heredity," by Dr. Charlotte Baker; "Sabbath Observance," by Mrs. Alice French; "Scientific Temperance," by Mrs. Mary T. Hull. A memorial to the county board of education was passed, asking that the necessary reference and text books to properly comply with the state law upon "Effects of Alcohol and Narcotics on the Human System," be placed in the county library list. The plan of work adopted for the coming year by the convention, if carried out by the unions, means great progress for San Diego county in evangelistic work, the keynote to good work in all the other departments. The second evening Miss West talked on "Formation of Character," in which she outlined the departments of work in the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The convention closed with a beautiful selection of music by the Schumann quartette.

Kern county convention I will report by quoting from a letter of Mrs. S. S. Hunter, county president: "Kern county to the front. Our meeting was a success. The attendance during the day, almost three times as large as when we organized in January. Brother Henry, Methodist pastor, said, 'How did you manage to get the women out?' The program was well carried out and though some were absent by reason of sickness, they sent in their papers so that we were not embarrassed by failure; about seventy-five children were present at our children's meeting. Miss West was the life of the day's work. I wish we had more like her. Our mass-meeting was fairly attended and the audience seemed interested, giving us a good collection. Our ladies all took hold with a will. Rosedale came in with a full delegation. Delano sent four delegates. Lunch was served in the church and a sociable time enjoyed. I believe our W. C. T. U. will do what our churches sometimes fail to do—make people acquainted with each other. I believe there is a healthy growth in temperance sentiment in the county. I nearly forgot to say we all had our 'pictures took' and the newspapers asked for full reports."

MARY E. GARBUTT,
State Reporter, Los Angeles.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

The Demorest medal contest at the Baptist Indian university, located near Muscogee, called out a fine audience. The well-rendered arguments for prohibition did not fail to fasten themselves on the attentive listeners. The prize was awarded to Miss Gene Finley, a Cherokee, and member of the class of '92. It was difficult for the judges to agree, all did so well. The audience was further entertained with piano duets by the Misses Mitchell and Bacone.

The L. T. L. of Atoka is in a flourishing condition, and doing helpful work for temperance. A new union has been organized at Ardmore, with Mrs. Josephine Carr for president.

The Territorial convention meets at Tahlequah, May 18 and 19, and a gold medal contest will be given the evening of the 17th. Our W. C. T. U. school in Muscogee has now forty-eight boys enrolled. Professor Crane is a successful teacher and doing good work. Yesterday, at the rhetoricals, a prize was awarded. At the first trial three boys received the same marks, and so a second trial was necessary. We hope the boys will give a medal contest soon. The day for prayer that the Columbian Exposition may be closed on Sunday, was observed.

Our W. C. T. U. gave the milkmaid's convention, and some said we "succeeded in being funny without being silly." We repeated it the next week and realized nearly one hundred dollars. The receipts the first evening went toward our building fund, the second night to the poor fund. Muscogee has the reputation of caring for the poor and so we are flooded with paupers—more come here for the winter than we can care for and many go hungry. I have not heard of a case yet where one had to do without tobacco. Somehow they manage to get that.

More alcohol is drank here now than ever before. The jail is often used to confine drunken men and still we hear of fights almost nightly. The agent told us today that a bill had passed both houses that will make it possible to close these "hop tea joints" as soon as it becomes a law. Oh! for national prohibition.

SARAH FORD CROSBY,
State Reporter, Muscogee.

PENNSYLVANIA.

SUFFRAGE MOVEMENTS AND OTHER NOTES.

Pennsylvania women keep well to the fore in many things, and in the recognition of the importance of woman's ballot they are not behind. A great many unions have franchise superintendents, and there are few women, indeed, who wear the white ribbon who are not firmly grounded in the equal suffrage faith. At most public meetings there is no sentiment which calls forth such spontaneous applause from both men and women as that of political equality.

In Lackawanna county, perhaps, the liveliest suffrage county in the state, notices of suffrage association meetings appear in the W. C. T. U. column of the local papers, and "Prohibition" and "Woman's Ballot" seem generally to go hand in hand. This one fact, however, makes me fearful that the day of our emancipation is not so near as we could wish, for the politicians, most of whom have risen to their present places only by the consent of the whisky interest, are much too keen to commit political suicide by trusting their interests to a class, who, before the echo of the cry, "Give us equality," has died away, will help to swell another and louder chorus, "We demand the abolition of the liquor traffic." In their estimation the ballot is only a means to an end, and that end is not calculated to quiet the proverbial uneasiness of the head that wears a crown! There is nothing for it but to continue as we have begun, making our appeals to women themselves and to the voters, and singing, "No compromise," we can work and wait, and when the victory comes, our thanksgivings will be unmixed with doubts or regrets.

Anticipating the applications annually made to sell intoxicating liquors in Butler county, the Springdale and Butler unions met at the W. C. T. U. headquarters in Springdale and passed a series of strong resolutions against the granting of licenses.

Moscow, Lackawanna county, was treated to a suffrage lecture early in the year. They are active in the distribution of W. T. P. A. literature. A small union of sixteen members in Daleville have earned and received the name bestowed upon them by their president, of "Gideon's Band."

Tunkhannock has a faithful few, working against great odds. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, National superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, was in Butler county at the time of the annual teachers' institute, and the Butler and Springdale unions gave a reception to about three hundred teachers and invited guests, which seems to have been a success in every way. A bountiful supper was partaken of, and this, together with the toasts given and responded to, made a most enjoyable as well as profitable occasion. Butler has a county W. C. T. U. paper, and altogether seems to be very much alive. McKean county's president, Mrs. Harriet E. Chambers, has been sojourning for some months in Florida on account of ill health. She sends word that she has been constantly improving in health and flesh, with which news her co-workers are delighted.

One of New York's W. C. T. U. poets, Miss Harriet Francene Crocker (Mrs. H. E. Le Roy) is now living in Pennsylvania.

The following interesting items are sent by Mrs. Annabel Morris Holvey, state superintendent of press work:

The twin towns of Pittston and West Pittston, Luzerne county, have been blessed with a genuine temperance revival during the past winter. Evangelist P. J. Kane, one of the brightest and wittiest sons of the Emerald Isle, who has consecrated his life to the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom, and who thinks the greatest enemy of God and religion is the legalized saloon, started a series of revival services in the First M. E. church. These meetings created such consternation in the ranks of the enemy that he received several letters decorated with cross-bones and skulls, warning him that if he did not leave the town he would be killed. The only effect they produced, however, was to cause him to redouble his efforts. Rev. Mr. Kane was ably seconded by the Rev. C. A. Benjamin of the West Side M. E. church, who opened in his own church later, a successful series, jointly with Mr. Kane.

The W. C. T. U. also secured the services of D. H. Burwell, of Ohio, for gospel temperance meetings. These meetings were indorsed by nearly all the pastors of Pittston and West Pittston. Those who have not heard Mr. Burwell can have no idea of the deep interest awakened; his fame spread throughout the community until no building could hold the people that crowded to hear him. Over a thousand people signed the pledge, including an unusually large proportion of young men and boys, with whom this genial and gifted young orator was immensely popular.

The Luzerne county mid-year convention was held last month.

The Wilkes Barre Y's have been most successful in carrying on a school for working girls, while the Industrial Night School for boys, under the able and efficient management of Mrs. H. W. Palmer, is one of Wilkes Barre's most popular enterprises.

Miss H. Frances Jones some time ago organized an L. T. L. of an hundred members in the Pittston W. C. T. U. headquarters, and addressed the West Pittston "white ribbon army" in the M. E. church. This is now one of the largest L. T. L's in the state, numbering over 500 young crusaders.

BERTHA W. HOWE,
State Reporter, Bradford.

MICHIGAN.

ETCHINGS.

As I looked out of my window one day this winter I saw dry, leafless trees looking up into a dark, sodden sky, apparently at the lowest ebb of nature—dead. Could they live again? I looked out next day, and God's breath had clothed every limb, every twig with a delicate frost-work like the beauty of June, and, over all, was the clear blue sky of His love. Just so some day there will be the beautiful sight of a world redeemed—the bare lives spoiled and marred by sin will be clothed in a spiritual beauty by our heavenly Father.

Our second district president writes me of her field. I find the work "well in hand" and the women wide awake, brave and true. Lenawee county convention was held at Adrian. They were favored with addresses from three clergymen, all with the true ring of total abstinence. One of the addresses of welcome was by the president of Adrian College. There were several good papers, among them one on "High License;" one by Dr. Greene on "Woman's Place in Business." Among other things, she said, "The more womanly we are, the more we do our work in a womanly way, the more courtesy we receive. No man, or body of men, will ever stand in women's way. Do not allow yourselves to feel that any part of your work is small or obscure." The paper by our state superintendent of narcotics, Mrs. Bradley, surprised us by its appalling statement of facts.

Monroe county convention was one of exceeding interest. Mrs. Hoffman, the speaker, was clear, forcible and logical in her presentation of views and remedies. One discussion was divided into questions with a leader for each. Is temperance work necessary? If so, who shall do it? How shall it be done? At this convention they also had reports from township vice-presidents, and on every line showed a creditable advance.

The third district is just now specially active in flower mission work, under the superintendent, Mrs. Newman. The president of the fourth district has been working up appointments for state president; she will be at our county convention early in May. Mrs. Barrett writes of a medal contest held at St. Joseph with great success. The medal was won by Miss Hattie Spink and a handsome book was presented the other contestants. The newspaper editorial comment was, "This is a move in the right direction. Mould the pure hearts of the young with hands unsullied by the pollution of politics and the decaying walls of corruption will fall as a sequence."

The call for fifth district convention is out and it is to be at Sparta. Special attention is called to the following topic: "Woman's advance. Who most deserves credit?" This will be a conversation of one hour, each speaker limited to three minutes. First, items are to be given in proof of woman's advance, with reasons therefor, and then thoughts suggested in answer to the question.

The call for sixth district convention is also out. North Lansing is to be the place and the following pertinent subjects are to be discussed: "Has the time arrived when it is the duty of the W. C. T. U. to pledge itself against the use of alcohol as a medicine?" "What is the duty of the Christian church with regard to the liquor traffic? Is it discharging that duty? If not, where does the trouble lie?" "What is the relation between lack of industrial training in girls and female vice?" At both these conventions the speaker is Mrs. Lathrap.

At Fenton they have been having a flood of temperance lectures. For many years it has been their custom with the willing, kindly coöperation of the several clergymen to hold monthly union meetings. Rev. J. R. Tewell addressed the last one upon "Right Education of the Young"; then a rare treat was the lecture of Sam Small, whose closing appeal was to the voters in whose hands is the remedy. Flushing is jubilant over electing the best men, and "the W. C. T. U. was so pleased with the result that they bestirred themselves the next day and tendered a reception and supper to the outgoing and incoming officers to show their interest in the effort to elect officers that would try to have law and order enforced for the year."

The Ingham county convention was held at Mason. The decorations were very fine—flowers, flags, Miss Willard's picture, a fine painting, "Throw out the life line," mottoes and banners. The reports showed more work done the past year and money raised, $395.41 in excess of last year. Number of members, 338; honorary, 26. Contributions have been to the World's W. C. T. U., Temperance Temple, National Hospital, lumbermen and miners, state and county fair work, the W. T. P. A. Mrs. Rounds was present all through; led a mothers' meeting and conducted a question-box for nearly an hour giving much needed information. Her address upon social purity was one of the best, and highly complimented by the press.

From one of the letters of our missionary in camp I take the following which speaks for itself: "I left my Bible on the table. The boys sat down to cards after supper, when one taking it up said, 'What is this? a Bible? Let's throw it out, for Bibles and cards don't go together.' 'No,' said another, 'throw out the cards and you read.' And they did. From Lapeer, in the seventh district, comes another call to convention; the present county president is also the newly-elected district president and reports that there are to be two papers, one on "Responsibility of Mothers." New unions have been organized and the secretary writes that there is an encouraging outlook from the president's visiting tour in some of the northern counties.

The ninth district has several very live women. Manistee union recently held a thankoffering meeting for the restoration to health of Mrs. Evelyn Peters, and are filling mite-boxes rapidly for a tablet for her in the Temple. Several unions report that they are "holding the fort." One county has arranged to hold a series of gospel meetings among the camps. Evart is certainly ahead in their village ordinance. This ordinance prohibits parents or guardians of youth under sixteen years from allowing them on the streets after eight o'clock at night unless in charge of some proper person. The village marshal and police are to enforce this law. At the first offense the parent or guardian is warned; at the second there is a fine of not more than $10 and costs; for the third, a fine of not more than $50 and costs, and in default of payment imprisonment for fifteen or thirty days at the discretion of court.

The tenth district has been holding a series of W. C. T. U. institutes in Bay county, taking up department work with much interest and profit to all. At the last this question was discussed: "What is my inspiration to work?" A paper was read, subject "Worry," and the district president, in her happiest mood, gave a reading, entitled, "Political Economy and Lightning Rods."

Mrs. P. J. Howard, of the eleventh, writes, "Rev. H. Barney has done excellent work in our district, one hundred and nine new members were secured."

Mrs. Law, president of the twelfth district, has been visiting old unions and organizing new. One place speaks of a union as taking a year's nap, but now, fully awake, starts off with twenty-five new members. At Menominee a Y was organized; at Escanaba, where there is a population of 8,000 and over one hundred saloons, the union are busy getting ready to build headquarters and a reading-room. They have the money for a lot; lumbermen and hardware men are kindly donating material. Flat Rock, in the first district, also writes of their successful annual meeting. Their L. T. L. numbers seventy; three mothers' meetings were held during the year. Literature has been sent to lumber camps and money to the evangelists. One popular feature of the society is their quarterly tea; at the last one hundred were present. In this village of only four hundred inhabitants, the receipts for the year were $209.18.

Detroit is working by committees from all the unions for the comfort and perfectness of the coming state convention. The citizens, with their usual liberality, are giving freely. Mrs. Hollister was reëlected president of the Central union, and presented a fine photograph, in appreciation of many years' service. My next letter will be entirely devoted to conventions.

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON,
State Reporter, Flint.

ILLINOIS.

BRISK AND BREEZY WORKERS.

It is a comforting thought to a W. C. T. U. historian, when relegated to the rear and destined, for a time at least, to lay down the pen, to know that history is being made, even if it is not being written (by her), and so, as Prairie state reporter, I have looked out upon the ranks of the marching columns with satisfaction, although with scarcely an opportunity to wave even a salutation as they pressed on.

Into my home the death angel has come again and again, and I have watched by the victor awaiting coronation, and have seen the aged pilgrim go down to the "valley of the shadow of death." Even now, hospital walls surround me while I hopefully minister to a dear sufferer, and hence I crave indulgence for any seeming dereliction in duty. Amid the vigils of the sick room, I have rejoiced in the many "good times" that have come to the W. C. T. U. sisterhood, even if I was not in them. The presence of Lady Somerset, so long within our borders, has been a blessed benediction and an inspiration, not circumscribed by locality.

But how shall I now, after this long silence, do justice to the work of the Illinois W. C. T. U.? Perhaps the breeziest time has been during these spring days, as the opportunity was presented to the women of Illinois to vote for school officers. And did any of them do it? Did the good, sensible, true-hearted mothers and sisters so far forget their "sphere" and its "vine-clinging tendrils" as to really drop ballots to be counted as their convictions concerning the educational interests of the children? There did not seem to be much forgetting, but a vast amount of remembering. Indeed, it is said that 1,240 women of Bloomington had this lively sense of remembrance. The reports from all parts of the state would fill the space allotted to this news letter many times, and then the half would not be told. There is no longer doubt about intelligent Illinois women wanting the ballot; for the best and most intelligent classes of women actually voted, and they seem to love their well regulated homes just as much as before. Indeed, this class seemed to be greatly in the majority. No invidious distinctions were made, but ballots were cast for men if they were suitable candidates. Mrs. Orr, our efficient superintendent of franchise, rendered valuable aid by sending throughout the state important information concerning the new school election law. Normal women nominated Miss Adella Hanna for member of the school board. She is eminently fitted for the place, and was elected, as also were many women in various parts of the state. Two hundred and sixty-seven women voted at Moline, and the woman candidate was elected by 250 majority. Mrs. Kepley, of Effingham, is jubilant over the result there, where, perhaps, the most signal victory was won against a predicted impossibility. It is interesting to note the record of so many bordering on ninety years of age, who cast their first ballot at the school election this spring. Possibly, with some, it may also prove to be their last, but that only intensifies the interest that clusters about it. But I must not dwell upon this "new departure."

The ownership of W. C. T. U. headquarters has been quite a specialty in Illinois. The Waukegan union has proved itself to be a band of earnest, tireless workers, the reward of which is a beautiful temple, valued at $10,000. Two-thirds of this is already paid, and the remainder is in notes to be paid by rentals from the basement, large store-room on first floor, and offices and lodging rooms on third floor. The second story has a library and reading-room in front, a large double audience-room, and kitchen and pantry. By invitation, the mayor and city council attended in a body the dedicatory services.

Geneseo union has become incorporated and opened headquarters and coffee-rooms, with a saloon on each side and one across the street. Davis Junction W. C. T. U., always busy as bees, recently moved into its dwelling. It will have a reading-room and restaurant on the first floor, while the upper floor is rented. This union had a "Married People's Oratorical Contest," which proved successful and amusing. Demorest medal contests have held sway; Rockford has had at least six, and is counting on a gold medal contest sometime. There have been George Washington and Lincoln dinners and Martha Washington teas, American jubilees and various "experience meetings," "Milkmaid's Convention" and "The Prohibition Shoe," and so W. C. T. U. treasuries have been replenished.

The "experience meeting" of the Marengo union was an enjoyable affair. A cow had been presented to the W. C. T. U. This was sold, and twenty-five cents given to each woman to invest, so as to bring one dollar within six months. The experiences were varied, but Mrs. Owens, eighty-one years old, stood at the head of the list, having increased her twenty-five cents to two dollars, by making and selling holders. We wonder if there are not some more W. C. T. U. cows, colts or lambs in Illinois.

Swan Creek has a new departure under the head of "linen-loan department." A number of articles, such as sheets, pillow-slips, nightdresses, etc., have been prepared to loan in case of sickness.

The women of the Peoria W. C. T. U. are so mixed up with all the good things in that city that it is hard to report their work. Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, the indefatigable worker, is president of the Christian Home Mission Society, whose "Home of the Friendless" commends itself to all lovers of humanity. Then there is also the "Home of Blessing," an institution for homeless girls between ten and twenty years of age. Mrs. E. G. Hilbben, the honored president of the district and Central W. C. T. U., gave the address on the opening of this institution. The Peoria W. C. T. U. has always been fruitful in good works.

Mrs. Hathaway, in charge of our evangelistic department, has been sowing beside all waters, and many unions are making a specialty of the gospel temperance work. Some have secured union services in the churches once a month or once in two months. Miss Lucy Gaston, superintendent of Loyal Temperance Legion, has accomplished excellent results. The Danville union employed her long enough to allow her to speak in every school in the city. So much interest was awakened that school L. T. L's were organized in most of the buildings, with a popular teacher as superintendent and others as assistants. The Decatur W. C. T. U. and Y became thoroughly aroused, as the result of Miss Gaston's week's work there. She gives much attention to the tobacco habit, and anti-tobacco clubs were organized among the boys with much enthusiasm. From written answers proposed to one school where the average age was but thirteen years, seventeen out of the twenty-seven boys admitted the use of tobacco in some form, while the teacher had suspected but one boy as addicted to the habit. Miss Gaston spoke also in several of the Sunday-schools. I cannot enumerate the points that have been blessed with her presence.

The wise Y's have been active in many quarters and many new societies have been organized. The first report from the Lockport Y, after its organization with twenty members, was of a doubled membership which speaks well for their zeal and activity.

The Bloomington union is still puzzling itself over the question of new headquarters. Its "White Ribbon Inn" is a popular place and has a large and increasing patronage, but more room is greatly needed.

I have only hinted at the work here and there and am aware I have left out of these items Chicago, with its W. T. P. A. headquarters, its Temple, its hospital and its W. C. T. U. missions and the great Exposition that is to be. But let no one envy Illinois, for it is the stronghold of the liquor power. The internal revenue collection for last year was more than double that of any other state, being $38,464,312. The state of New York paid $16,565,322, coming next. It is no wonder that Illinois women want full power to strike this monster down. They are doing much and their influence is felt.

The absence of Miss Hood, our faithful secretary, who has gone abroad for a rest, will be felt throughout the ranks, and as for our dear state president, Mrs. Rounds, who by reason of overwork was forced to "go apart and rest awhile," it is not certain where she may be found. She is in the midst of county conventions now, but the Macedonian cry from all quarters is sounding in her ears. A letter just received from her says: "Blessed work! I am still as eager to serve as if this was my first year in the field."

The things which I have failed to report are to be found in the Illinois W. C. T. U. Watchtower, where our faithful editor "serves up" and presides over a bi-monthly feast, whose "bill of fare" consists of "Gathered Gems," "Official Messages," "Field Views," "Y Corner," "Hints and Helps," and such like appetizing viands. I commend its columns as a necessity for intelligent W. C. T. U. work in Illinois, and what is true in this state is true with reference to other state organs.

MRS. G. H. READ,
State Reporter, Bloomington.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE president of Wilmore, Ky., W. C. T. U., Miss L. M. Stratton, is one of the teachers in Asbury College in which twenty-five out of the thirty older boy pupils, and five of the seven members of the faculty are Prohibitionists.

A DEMOREST silver medal contest was held not long ago at Cohoes, N. Y., under the auspices of the Young People's Prohibition Club of that city. The speaking was very fine and was interspersed with charming instrumental music.

MRS. MARY C. WOODY, president North Carolina W. C. T. U., is in England, in her capacity of member and speaker in the Society of Friends. Mrs. Woody with Miss Helen Hood will represent the National W. C. T. U. admirably at the London conventions.

THE unions in the state of New York are discovering that one of the most successful ways to reach women is by a little note of invitation, bidding them to a "party" where information upon our objects and methods is judiciously interlarded between other good things.

A TEMPERANCE Bible reading by Mrs. Pithlado, a thorough-going temperance worker, and the stirring remarks of Mrs. Mary Livermore during a lecture before the Y. P. S. C. E. at the Ansonia, Conn., Opera House, were the seeds which have since sprouted into a healthy W. C. T. U.

IT was in keeping with her character that the last call made by Lady Henry Somerset before her departure should have been upon a prisoner. She went in Boston to the state prison to see an Englishman from her own county who had written her and sent some ingenious specimens of his handiwork in making miniature ships.

THE superintendent of the L. T. L. in Pennsylvania hopes to follow the example of Wisconsin next year, and have a convention of graduates from the L. T. L. "Good work is being done throughout the state of Pennsylvania," writes the press superintendent, "sixty-four out of sixty-seven counties being organized."

MRS. M. B. REESE, National organizer, has changed her address to Chautauqua, Washington. Mrs. Reese says: "Our state is ringing with the cry, 'Come and help us.' New unions wheel constantly into line, while old ones are doubling their membership. I organized two fine unions in Pacific county; seventy-five signed the pledge at one meeting."

SINCE the Boston meeting, Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper has lectured in Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, Ohio, Georgia and Alabama. With the burning sense of the wrongs inflicted upon her race she writes, "May I not entreat the women of America, for the sake of our common humanity, to protest against a lawlessness, which as sure as God is God must bring its harvest of retribution."

A REMARKABLY good showing for a newly organized district was made at the recent Norfolk, Va., district convention. A gambling bill has passed the Virginia legislature which will curtail the rapidly growing vice in that state. A police matron was secured for the penitentiary and a change is to be made in the mode of punishment for women. All this through the efforts of the W. C. T. U.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The fifth annual convention of the Indian Territory W. C. T. U. will be held at Tahlequah, Cherokee Nation, May 18, 19 and 20. All friends of temperance and right are earnestly invited to be with us.

MRS. L. JANE STAPLER, Pres.
MRS. T. M. FULLER, Cor. Sec.

Official Communications.

AN IMPORTANT CALL.

Our W. C. T. U. missionary at Ellis Island is constantly in the midst of scenes of privation and suffering in this year of unprecedented immigration. There was scarcely a day last month that her journal did not record from 600 to 1,300 arrivals. So many of the poor women and children are in need of garments, that she begs me to ask the women to send her a barrel of cast-off clothing. They will be so acceptable to one who is endeavoring to relieve the dire need of many poor wretches that reach our shores almost as destitute as if they were cast up from the deep. Any one that feels like answering this appeal can address packages or barrels to Miss Anna Lindohe, 27 State street, New York.

S. F. GRUBE, Supt. Foreign Work.

DEPARTMENT OF EVANGELISTIC WORK.

An Appeal to each President of a National, State or County Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

DEAR SISTERS:—Will you permit the Evangelistic Superintendent to call to your attention, as the season approaches for our annual and quarterly conventions, the appeal in her annual report, presented at Boston, in reference to the observance in every National, state and county convention, of the hour from 11 to 12 a. m. each day, for devotion and Bible exposition?

Increasing experience but intensifies the conviction, that where this practice is strictly adhered to, no matter how pressing the crowd of business, delegates have received unusual help and inspiration. Towns and cities in which they gather have been spiritually stirred, and the wheels of our great temperance machine have run without friction. We aim, for this year, 1892, and in all the future, for a general observance of this hour in every World's, National, state and county convention. "They who most honor the Spirit, are those whom the Spirit most honors."

Extract from the report of the National Evangelistic Department given at Boston, November, 1891: Especially do we rejoice that in so many county and state conventions the hour from 11 to 12 a. m. has been set apart daily for Bible Exposition, and that in our National convention this is now an established rule. We urge this practice upon all.

MISS E. W. GREENWOOD, Supt.
151 Remsen St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

SUNDAY CLOSING—THE LAST RESORT.

Our application for a hearing before the new Directory of the Exposition, elected April 2, was answered April 7 by Secretary Butterworth saying that the question of Sunday opening would not be taken up by them, but left for their successors of 1893 to settle. This will keep the question out of the hands of the Commission till too late to prevent opening on the Sabbath.

Our application to the Commissioners brought a late response from Secretary Dickinson that the hearing would be granted, but not till October 6. Let no one imagine the question is then to be settled. A hearing was granted last fall, another is offered for this fall to help Christian people to wait patiently while the web is woven round them of Congresses, exhibitions, hotel or other stock, or engaged accommodations and fixed plans, so that few will withdraw.

The Commission will listen, but cannot act till after the Directory has, and their date is fixed for April, 1893. Our petitions will, however, be catalogued and put on file! In the meantime, gates are open already, and an admittance fee charged on every day of the week, and one hundred and eighty policemen had their hands full last Sabbath in breaking the blockades and managing the surging crowds.

The only hope lies with Congress, and there the skies are brighter. All Sabbath organizations are working hard, and in March alone our petition secretary, Mrs. Catlin, sent in for the W. C. T. U. 186,000 petitions (so reported by the press), among them that of our World's and National Convention and other large bodies. The chairmen of the World's Fair Committees in both Senate and House favor closing and are hopeful, but the liquor traffic is opposing with all its force, notwithstanding their pretense in Chicago that they are on the other side. Let us continue our petitions, prayers and letters till the crisis comes, which must be soon.

Should Congress fail to close the gates there remains another hopeful move. Already the banner of "Sunday closing vs. non-attendance" has been flung to the breeze. Conferences and Presbyteries, societies and religious papers are adopting it, and we believe the W. C. T. U. and other Sabbath organizations will do the same, there being really no other consistent attitude; and if this action is taken in season and generally enough, the money nerve of the Directory will respond, and the gates will swing together. Should Congress fail us, every state convention should take action and report it, and we should all help roll up a million names pledged to conditional non-participation.

The universal agitation of Sunday closing is arousing conscience and opening a way for our educational work. Let us push it. Excursions will soon be in order, circulate 13 and 19, "The Sunday Excursion" and "Why Not Go?" also 15, "Government and the Sabbath," and 5, "The Sunday Newspaper." Keep leaflets by you to use as the way opens. You can get 100 for 15 cts., a packet of 25 each of 8 most popular kinds for 60 cts., postal note or 30 samples for 8 cents. Address,

MRS. J. C. BATEHAM.
26 Charlotte St., Asheville, N. C.

Our Library Table.

LESSONS LEARNED FROM OTHER LIVES, by B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena, is a series of short biographical sketches of famous men, arranged somewhat after the manner of Emerson's "Representative Men." The volume has been prepared especially for young people, and is a valuable addition to studies in literature and history, as well as an interesting book for a leisure hour.

Arena Publishing Co., Boston, Mass.

"GROUND ARMS!" by Bertha Von Suttner, translated from the German by Alice Asbury Abbott, is an exceptionally forcible story. Its author, the daughter of an Austrian general, in her capacity as vice-president of the International Peace Congress at Rome, has had the honor of being the first woman to speak from the rostrum in the far-famed capitol. The book is a heart-rending outcry against war. The simple narrative is simply written but full of profound thought and strong principles. Its success is assured for the reason that it voices the rapidly increasing trend of public sentiment on the side of peace.

Published by A. C. McClurg & Co., 117-121 Wabash avenue, Chicago.

Writers of fiction have need of careful pens and wise judgment when they undertake to place before the public that class of stories which involve certain questions of morality. Many books of this kind have been written and fallen short of the high purpose for which they were designed, either for the reason that the presentation of the wrong the author was so desirous of condemning was so vivid as to make the story almost an alluring picture of that wrong: or else, the style has been too severely didactic for ready entrance into the favor of the reading public. Celia Parker Woolley, in the story of ROGER HUNT has, with marked skill, steered her course in a happy medium between these two extremes, and has been a true artist in that she has been faithful to the details of her work and just in each one of her presentations. Roger Hunt, her hero, is guilty of a grave breach of the moral law. The story may be likened to a critical analysis of the processes by which one false step unrepented of, becomes the precursor of wrongs whose influences are beyond measurement. The reader is forced to draw his own moral, and if he be true in his contemplation of the picture, he cannot fail to draw the right one. It is only to be regretted that the author changes her tense in the last pages, from past to present, as if she were hurrying to write the last words, thereby weakening what is, in every other respect, a story of high merit.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

PETITION OF THE
WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
FOR THE
PROTECTION OF THE HOME
Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

We must have one million names this year. Will not men and women, youths and maidens, boys and girls, who love the great cause of home protection, paste this petition on a nice, white sheet of paper and circulate it to the best of their ability, sending the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Rest Cottage, Evanston, Ill.?

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report.

Publisher's Notes.

A Bit of Comfort.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I forget whether I thanked you for the safe return of my photograph, or not. The Young Crusader for May is here, as pretty and fresh as a spring beauty, and reminds me of my neglect to get it into our Loyal Temperance Legion, but I'll try as soon as house cleaning is over. I consider it a real honor to write for such a breezy little paper, and wonder our ladies don't get it into the hands of every child, but I suppose they are busy with everything else, like myself.

Hastily, M. G. PLANTZ.

Detroit, Mich., April 25.

Nothing cheap, in any sense of that word, has ever entered into the composition of The Young Crusader. Paper, type, illustrations and subject-matter have always been of the best. Its new form is both convenient and attractive, and has just one cheap feature—its price. In this day, when pernicious literature floods the land, would it not be a pity that any child should go without ninety-six pages of bright, wholesome reading, that can be had for the maximum price of fifteen cents and the minimum of twelve cents? Dear W. C. T. U. sisters, every child in your community should have this paper regularly. There are several ways to accomplish this; try one or more of them until you are successful. HELEN G. RICE.

We have made arrangements by which we can add to our clubbing list the Farm, Field and Stockman, General Howard, editor. The price of this paper is $1 per annum; of THE UNION SIGNAL, $1 per annum. We will send both one year for $1.75.

READERS can have PAPERS and MAGAZINES sent them from Publishers all over the country, by sending 25 cts. to the CENTRAL SUPPLY CO Chicago. Mention this paper.

Miss Ella Harrison, of Carthage, Mo., offers a prize of five (5.00) dollars for the best original essay sent to her by June 15th, upon county W. C. T. U. work, from the beginning of a local organization to a finished county convention. Essay to contain not less than 1,000 nor more than 1,500 words. (Prize essay to be published in THE UNION SIGNAL.)

Ask for Van Houten's Cocoa, take no other.

CALIFORNIA.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States. if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad. Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 621 Rialto Building, Chicago, Ill , if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.

Excellent Service.

At 5:45 P. M. The "Fast Train" leaves Chicago via the Wisconsin Central Lines for St Paul, Minneapolis, Ashland, Duluth and the Irontowns, composed of Through Pullman Vestibuled Sleepers to Chippewa Falls and Eau Claire, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Ashland and Duluth, making close connections at Union Depot, St. Paul, with the new train which has just been placed in service via the Northern Pacific Railroad to the Pacific Coast, leaving St. Paul daily at 9:00 A M

At 10:45 P. M. The "Pacific Express" leaves Chicago for the Pacific Coast via the Wisconsin Central and Northern Pacific Lines, composed of Pullman Vestibuled Drawing-Room and Tourist Sleepers, running through to Portland, Ore., and Tacoma, Wash., without change.

For tickets, time-tables, berth reservations, etc., apply to City Ticket Office, 205 South Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., or to JAS. C. POND, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Neely's Great Historical Chart

POLITICAL and UNITED STATES MAP.

A Double Wall Map, 5 feet 6 inches by 3 feet 10 inches, mounted on rollers top and bottom, ready to hang.

Worth $10.

A Complete History of our Government by Administrations, Political Parties and Congress from Washington to Harrison.

On one side the Largest and Latest U. S. Map, showing all States, Counties, Railroads and Towns, (Price alone $5), And on the Other Side, a Diagram, showing all the Political Parties, 11x66. A Diagram Showing all Presidents and Cabinets, 5x66, A Diagram showing Political Complexion of each Congress. A Diagram Showing Creeds of the World, 13x10. A Diagram Showing Standing Armies of each nation, 13x10. A Diagram showing Naval Tonnage of, each Nation, 13x10. A Complete Map of the World, 13x20. A Map of Central America, 10x13. A Map of Alaska, 10x13. A Map of South Africa, 10x13. A Map of Upper Nubia and Habesh or Abyssinia, 10x23. A Map of Persia, Afghanistan, and Beloochistan, 10x13. A Complete Map of Solar System, best ever made, 10x13. The names of all Cabinet Officers, with length of term. Pictures of all the Presidents from Washington to Harrison.

INDORSEMENTS.

BENSON J. LOSSING, L. L. D., Historian: "Like a Concave Mirror it reflects to a single focus an epitome of the essential elements of our national history, showing clearly at a glance the progress of the nation from its infancy to its present period of maturity."

A. R. SPOFFORD, Librarian of Congress: "The work may fairly be termed a breviary of American Politics."

AGENTS' REPORTS.

"Received sample; sold 8 maps first hour."

"Magnificent map; my boy sold 12 the first day."

"I sell 9 each day."

"I sold 6 maps in one hour."

"I have canvassed one-half day; took 18 orders."

The Latest U. S. Map, printed in colors, covers the entire back and is the best published. It alone sells for $5.00. The complete Reversible Map (printed on both sides) is 3 feet 10 inches by 5 feet 6 inches, mounted on rollers top and bottom, with tape on sides. These two maps sell separately for $10.00.

This GREAT DOUBLE MAP is sent by exprdss, prepaid, and safe delivery guaranteed, to any address in the U. S. It can be mailed, but is much safer by express. Name your nearest express office.

The money will be refunded to any one not perfectly satisfied after receiving the map. Understand fully, that all charges are prepaid by express or mail and safe delivery and perfect satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

Our Offer.

We will send a Map to any one sending us four subscribers for one year at $1 each. For $2 we will send a map and THE UNION SIGNAL for one year. In ordering address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,

The new edition of "Thumb-nail Sketches" contains a sketch of Miss Ames, by Miss Willard, also a picture of her, neither of which was in the book sold in the Boston Convention (Miss Ames declining to put herself in the book). "Thumb-nail Sketches" is a beautiful book, an ornament to any parlor table. It is bound in white and tied with our white ribbon (which to us means so much), and every white-ribboner would prize it, and from its pages get value received. In this little book we have the names of all included in the annual leaflet of the W. C. T. U. for 1892, also the names of our distinguished and devoted fraternal delegates from foreign lands, and the leading vice-presidents in the world. Next to the added power of personal acquaintance with those to whom we listen, this book with its pen pictures and its photogravures, will serve that end. Its worth is inestimable to the local worker. I would especially recommend the conventions to send for it and sell to the delegates.—Missouri Home Guard.

Price 30c per copy. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

HAVE YOU ANY USE FOR MONEY?

If so, we have a plan of our own which will put money in your pocket. It practically amounts to just this.

WE TAKE THE RISKS OF BUSINESS

WE FURNISH YOU CAPITAL

YOU TAKE NO RISK

YOU INVEST NO CAPITAL

YOU REAP THE BENEFITS

by becoming our solicitor for "CHILDHOOD; ITS CARE AND CULTURE," or "GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS." With which would you prefer to work?

PLEASE STATE YOUR CHOICE

And we will send terms with full details of the plan. Assuredly, this is an offer which it is to your advantage to investigate. You can make more money in this business, if rightly conducted, than in any other and you can do much good. Send for details at any rate.

IT COSTS BUT A POSTAL CARD.

Address

SUBSCRIPTION BOOK DEPARTMENT,
THE TEMPLE (Rooms 1102–1110),
Corner Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

ONLY $20!

ONLY $20!

ONLY $20!

FOR THIS FINE

UNION SIGNAL SEWING MACHINE

If sent with twenty new names as yearly subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL.

Sent at Receiver's Expense.

FOR $23.00 we will send it, freight prepaid, to any address in the United States, together with a FULL SET OF ATTACHMENTS. This machine is highly commended by all to whom we have shipped it.

Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE (Rooms 1102–1110),
Corner Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DO YOU WANT FACTS?

And do you desire others should know the facts in regard to the liquor traffic? You cannot do better than by securing a copy of that wonderful book,

The Temperance Movement

By Ex-SENATOR BLAIR.

It discusses

Alcohol and Health,
Alcohol and Crime,
Alcohol and Poverty,
License or Prohibition?
Alcohol and Wealth,
Alcohol and Labor,
The Forces Against Alcohol,
Temperance Organizations,
The Church.

It is a very valuable compendium of information. Every thinker and every leader in all causes should read it. It is a book of 583 pages, beautifully illustrated. We offer it, bound in cloth, at the ridiculously low price of $1.25 postpaid.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE (Rooms 1102–1110.)
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago, Ill.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed,

Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Dr. O. P. Brown's GREAT EXTERNAL REMEDY,

HERBAL OINTMENT!

reaches disease through the pores, arouses circulation, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25 and 50 cents. Druggists or mail. J. Gibson Brown, 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

THE

Total Abstinence Life Association OF AMERICA

PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.

It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.

New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.

It will pay you well to write to us.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.

902-904 Royal Insurance Building, CHICAGO, ILL.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF

Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.

We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.

GRAND TERRACE ADDITION

For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR

DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction

By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 remarkable illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 81st thousand. 5,000 more Agents Wanted,—Men and Women, $200 a month. ☞ Experience and capital not necessary, for We Teach All, Give Credit and Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

FREE

Prettiest BOOK ever Printed.

SEEDS ONE cent a PACKET, and upwards according to rarity, scarcity, or cost. Cheapest of any by oz. & lb. 1000 000 extras. Catalogue free. R. H. Shumway Rockford Ill.

For Harness, Buggy Tops, Saddles, Fly Nets Traveling Bags, Military Equipments, Etc.

Gives a beautiful finish which will not peel or crack off, smut or crock by handling. Not a varnish Used by the U. S. Army and is the standard among manufacturers and owners of fine harness in every quarter of the globe.

SOLD BY ALL HARNESS MAKERS.

Publisher's Notes.

Removal.

On May 4, we expect to commence to remove goods from our shipping-room, and any delay in receiving orders for a few days must be overlooked. After the 10th inst. we will agree to furnish prompt service.

F. H. RASTALL,
Business Manager.

Have You Sent For It?

The edition of the Sunday-school Temperance Lesson for May 22 has now reached 93,000 copies, and orders are still coming. This should be doubled, at least. The children who have this placed in their hands will be better helped than those who do not receive it. Do what you can to bring to them a knowledge of the truth. Send without further delay, and avoid disappointment.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

Every local W. C. T. U. should secure and keep on hand a copy of "Thumb-nail Sketches." It contains sketches and pictures of so many of our leading workers that it will be of real value in considering and advertising the merits of our speakers.

Price 30c per copy. Send for it to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

Just a Little Longer.

The business offices of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association have been removed to the Temple, and in a few days will be comfortably settled. At present we are working under difficulties, but will fill orders as fast as possible. A little delay is necessary, as it was impossible for the large force of clerks to work at all one day, and at a disadvantage for another. The shipping room has not been disturbed as yet, and our offer to send back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL and The Young Crusader, etc., at greatly reduced rates will hold good just a little longer, or until May 7. This is what we promised:

Back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL, 50c per 100.

Back numbers of The Young Crusader, 50c per 100.

Wall-pocket packages, 50c.

A fine aquarelle tint picture of Miss Willard, price 50c. and one of the impressive cartoons, "The Mill and the Still," price 10c, both for 50c.

This is a wonderful opportunity to do missionary work. Do not neglect it.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

As Others See It.

There are many things we cannot do. The results we most desire seem farthest from accomplishment, and so we get discouraged and often feel ready to give up the work, but we should give more time and enthusiasm to the things we can do. We certainly desire to increase the temperance sentiment in our communities, and I believe there is no more effectual way of doing that than by securing subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. Of course you each take it, if not you should send for it at once, and then induce others to take it. Do you think any family can read it one year without at least part of the members becoming possessed of very positive convictions as to the use of intoxicants? I do not, and with its low price, and its great merits, I am sure it will not be difficult to get subscribers. I wish that every union would take up the work of canvassing for it systematically, not only among our membership but among outsiders. It will win friends for us and our cause as the spoken word will often fail to do. By all means try to get your ministers' wives to take it, and if you cannot, then raise a fund and send it to them; but remember that in all cases the paper will do far more good to the person who pays for it than if it is sent as a gift. Let your aim be to have this paper in at least the majority of the families in your community.—President Iowa W. C. T. U.

Do You Want a Photograph

of one of the National W. C. T. U. leaders? You can have it. Write to us for information, and we will tell you how.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

BE SURE "GOOD SENSE"

is stamped on your waist, there are many imitations but no equals

SENSIBLE WOMEN

all want FERRIS'

GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAISTS.

Best for Health, Economy and Beauty

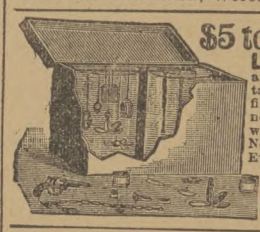
BUTTONS at front instead of CLASPS. Clamp Buckle at hip for Hose supporters. Tape-fastened Buttons—won't pull off. Cord-Edge Button Holes—won't wear out. FIT ALL AGES—Infants to Adults. Short and long waist. Made in FAST BLACK, drab and white. Send for circular.

FERRIS BROS. Manuf'rs and Patentees. 341 Broadway, N. Y. MARSHALL FIELD & CO., Chicago, Wholesale Western Agents.

For Sale by ALL LEADING RETAILERS.

HOW TO MAKE A FORTUNE

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line, or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser—Patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO. No. 184 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.



$5 to $15 per day, at home, selling LIGHTNING PLATER and plating jewelry, watches tableware, &c. Plates the finest of jewelry good as new, on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. No capital. Every house has goods needing plating. Wholesale to agents $5. Write for circulars. H. E. DELNO & Co., Columbus, O.

A complete garment, worn under the corset or flannels, protecting the clothing from perspiration. Cheaper than dress shields 1 pair doing the work of 2. AGENTS WANTED. Misses', bust measure, 28-33, 80c; Ladies', bust measure 34-39, $1; Ladies', bust measure, 40-46, $1.25. M. DEWEY, Manf'r, 1397 West Monroe Street, Chicago. Send money by Post Office Order. Catalogue Free.

EARN BETTER WAGES

By attending, day or night, the INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY, 151 Throop St. Chicago, Ill. Any person taught any study any time by professors. Leading Chicago School, 1,000 students last yesr. Open to both sexes. Admirable arrangements. Low tuition. Installments taken. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send for Catalogue.

PARENTS CANNOT AFFORD

To let their children grow up without the amusement and physical training which the World's Parlor and Lawn Game gives. ELASTIC TIP CO., 152 and 154 Lake Street, Chicago.

DULUTH 7% & 8% First Mortgages

REAL ESTATE AND MINING STOCKS. References Furnished. Correspondence Solicited.

Tvedt, Eckstein & Co., 327 W. Superior Street, DULUTH, MINN.

SAVE $40.00 ON NEW $140.00 BICYCLES

New, Latest Pattern $140 Bicycles for $100. Cheaper grades in proportion; cash or time. Agents wanted. A. W. GUMP & CO., Dayton, Ohio.

BICYCLES, GUNS & TYPEWRITERS taken in exchange.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY or COMMISSION, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g Co. X 213 LaCrosse, Wis.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order. American Desk & Seating Co. 270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

THE BABY will be given a beautiful birthday card if the mother will send baby's name and age to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. This is done to advertise LACTATED FOOD, the food that SAVES BABIES' LIVES.

FOR MANY LADIES THE BALKS

PERFECT COMFORT WITH NO POSSIBLE INJURY TO HIP — NO METAL EYELETS TO PULL OUT OR CUT STRINGS — EASY THE FIRST DAY — NEVER BREAK OR ROLL UP BONES — FIT SUITS BUT NEVER WRINKLE

CORSETS & CORSET WAISTS FOR OTHERS THE

KABO

ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY OF THEM — NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN YOUR CLOTHES — BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL UP — FULLY GUARANTEED BY 21 CHICAGO CORSET CO.

CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT positively cures RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, LIVER, KIDNEY and exhausting chronic diseases of both sexes. Contains 23 to 100 degrees of Electricity. GUARANTEED the latest improved, cheapest, scientific, powerful, durable and effective MEDICAL ELECTRIC BELT in the WORLD. Electric Suspensories free with Male Belts. ELECTRIC TRUSSES FOR RUPTURE. 9,000 cured. Send 4c stamp for pamphlet

DR. W. J. HORNE, REMOVED TO 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO

Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH

Taken internally and used locally with Insufiator. At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured. All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

BEST PAYING THING for Agents is our PHOTOGRAPH FAMILY RECORD PICTURE. We give you liberal terms. Address Dept. C. P. CORY & CO., 51 & 53 Jefferson St., Chicago

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N.Y.

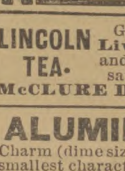
PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists. McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR

Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The FREE St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish. St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.



BUY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE. OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

HOTEL FREDONIA. Washington, D.C. H St., between 13th and 14th. ELEGANT, QUIET, HOMELIKE & STRICTLY TEMPERANCE G. H. La Fetra, Prop.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address, CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

FAT PEOPLE You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by DR. CLARKE'S Home Treatment. Proofs estimonials, Free. F. B. CLARKE, M. D., Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms. St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

☞ See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them. YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

A LADY WANTED in each locality to manage Toilet Parlor at home; write, obtain names, send circulars. $5 to $15 weekly. Our Toilet Art Book Free. Send stamp. SYLVAN TOILET CO., Port Huron, Mich.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free. G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St., Chicago.

10 cents pays for the best ladies' paper published for three months. Ladies' Bazar, Chicago, Ill.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

Kernels.

"There is a time to laugh."—SOLOMON.

Old Man (sternly): "You want to marry my daughter, and yet you say you are not rich." Young Man (bravely): "That's it exactly, sir." Old Man: "Well, you don't expect to support her on wind, do you?" Young Man: "Mostly, sir. I'm captain of a sailing vessel."—Detroit Free Press.

A SOUTH Side man took his little girl, just able to talk nicely, to the lake shore on Sunday afternoon. The waves were gently rippling on the beach, and when her father was not looking the child managed to get one foot wet. She ran to her father with tears in her eyes and sobbed: "Papa, lake step on baby's foot."

IMPORTANT INFORMATION.—A Texas lawyer undertook to cross-examine a colored witness, Jim Webster. "What's your name?" "Jim Webster." "What's your occupation?" "I drive a dray." "Have you got a brother who looks like you and drives a dray?" "He am dead." "What was he before he died?" "Alive."

LADY (meeting little boy who is crying)—What is the matter, little boy?

LITTLE BOY.—My mother whipped me this morning 'cause I didn't keep my temper, and now my teacher just whipped me 'cause I didn't get rid of it, and I don't know what to do. Boo! hoo!

"WHAT happened 400 years ago this year?" asked Freddie's teacher.

"Don't know," answered Freddie. "I'm only seven years old."

A TEACHER asked a boy, "Who was the meekest man?" "Moses, sir," was the answer. "Very well, my boy; and now who was the meekest woman?" "Please, sir, there never was any meekest woman."

WAS ever a comforting thought expressed more delicately than by a cheery girl who said to one who was sad over the falling leaves, "Just think how much more room it gives you to see the beautiful blue sky beyond?" True of other things besides leaves.

"WHO held up Moses' hands while Joshua fought the Philistines?" asked the superintendent. "Hur and Aaron," shouted the good boy. "She and Aaron," softly corrected the new schoolma'am, whose strong point was grammar.

JONES—"What always has its nose in a bottle, never takes a drink, and yet is never straight?" Smith—"Give it up." Jones—"A corkscrew."—Truth.

Mr. Morris Parke—"Are you in this race, Sambo?" Sambo—"Wad race, sah?" Mr. Morris Parke (wittily)—"The human race." Sambo—"Ya-as, sah; I's de dark hoss, sah."—Puck.

"Well, Mr. Bronson," said a dominie, "I hope you derived profit from the services this morning." "Sir," returned Bronson, inclining to be indignant, "I assure you I drop business on Sundays and attend church with no hope of profit."

ERRORS, like straws, upon the surface flow; He who would search for pearls must dive below.—Addison.

A YOUNG lady having read a very long paper at a missionary meeting, showing the triumphs of the Gospel, the minister gave out the hymn beginning, "Hallelujah, 'tis done." He wondered why everybody smiled.

A WRITER says: "Some people would sooner help a stranger than a friend." Yes, and nine times out of ten they will get more thanks for the help.

AN old lady said that she could not tell her mince pies from her apple pies without cutting them, and was advised to mark them. She did so, and complacently remarked: "This I've marked 'T. M.'—'Tis mince—and that 'T. M.'—'Taint mince."

A LITTLE tot who had advanced to words of four letters was told that when spelling words like good, wall, seed, he was not to say o-o or e-e, but double o, double e, and so on. One day in his reading lesson occurred the sentence: "Up! up! Ned, for the sun is up," when the bright little fellow electrified his mamma by reading. "Double up, Ned, for the sun is up."

"A LITTLE bit of patience
Often makes the sunshine come
And a little bit of love
Makes a happy home.

"A little bit of hope
Makes a rainy day look gay,
And a little bit of charity
Makes glad a weary way."

Publisher's Dep't.

The World's Fair.

What do you think about it?

Well, this is what we think. It will be the grandest event of its character ever recorded. No exposition was ever held which was planned on so grand a scale. The area occupied is the largest, the buildings the most extensive and costly, and the exhibits will be the most extensive. It will be the first World's Exposition which provides a place for woman's work and woman's interest. It will be unique, also, in that it is the first exposition which has a moral side, and its reform, educational, philanthropic and religious conferences, planned and carried forward by the leading thinkers of the nation will be a decided innovation. Of course

You Want to be There.

Then you should learn something about it now. We have just the thing to inform you

If you go or if you do not go.

It is the

Columbus Memorial,

a large folio volume, 12x15 inches in size, printed on super-calendered paper, neatly and attractively bound in heavy enameled paper. It contains 44 pages and shows the progress and achievement this country has made in four hundred years. It contains:

Letter press and full page map of discovery, 1492 to 1606, 116 years.

Letter press and full page map of settlement, 1607 to 1673, 66 years.

Letter press and full page map of wars, 1673 to 1773, 100 years.

Letter press and full page map of independence, 1773 to 1789, 16 years.

Letter press and full page map of constitution, 1789 to 1845, 56 years.

Letter press and full page map of dissension, 1845 to 1860, 15 years.

Letter press and full page map of secession, 1860 to 1865, 5 years.

Letter press and full page map of peace, 1865 to 1892, 27 years.

Map of the city of Genoa, Italy, supposed birthplace of Columbus, with biographical sketch of Christopher Columbus.

Three pages, general descriptive matter "World's Columbian Exposition," from its inception to the present time, with a carefully prepared and authentic table of the World's Fairs that have been held at different times throughout the world, from "Crystal Palace" 1851, to the "World's Fair" of 1893.

In all their magnificence are portrayed Machinery Hall, which alone cost $1,200,000; the Manufacturers' Building, the Art Palace, the Administration Building, the Government Building, the Electrical Building, the Horticultural Building, the Agricultural Building, the Transportation Building, the Fish and Fisheries Building, the Woman's Building, designed by a woman; the Mines and Mining Building, the Forestry Building; beautiful illustration of the wonderful lagoon scene; grand bird's-eye view scene of the Exposition buildings; double page map or diagram, showing the relative position of the main buildings, including state buildings and size of each, etc., etc.

We will send this and THE UNION SIGNAL one year, postpaid, for only $1.30, or we will send it to any address postpaid, in return for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1.00 each.

Tell the children to ask their friends to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. If they send five new names and $5 we will send one of the beautiful "Columbus Memorials" postpaid, to any address they may indicate.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE, Rooms 1102-1110,
Cor. Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago.

Coming Fast.

We have already been compelled to order a second edition of the Sunday-school lesson for May 22, as the supply has thus far been inadequate, but we are willing to go to press every day until time for latest shipments if need be. So keep on sending orders—early as possible however, so as to prevent disappointment. Every Sunday-school in your locality should use this lesson and thus receive the benefit of the work done for them. As we have said before, this Lesson is the finest we have ever issued. We cannot do it justice, so do not attempt a further description except to say that Mrs. Helen G. Rice and Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson have developed the best thoughts underlying the lesson.

Let us all unite in an effort to place it in the hands of every teacher and pupil in our Sunday-schools. And "what thou doest do quickly."

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE, Rooms 1102-1110,
Cor. Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago.

There is NO "SURE CURE FOR EVERY CASE OF ASTHMA" or "EVERY CASE OF HAY FEVER," but the worst cases, if uncomplicated by organic disease, can be CURED TO STAY CURED by constitutional treatment, and this at the patient's home.

ASTHMA AND HAY-FEVER

We treat no one without a thorough knowledge of the case.

Incurable Cases Declined.

Examination free by mail.

We want name and address of every sufferer from Asthma or Hay Fever.

P. HAROLD HAYES, M. D., BUFFALO, N. Y.

YPSILANTI Dress Reform UNDERWEAR

SPRING GOODS REDUCED IN PRICE.

Sanitary Balbriggan, Sanitary Lisle Thread, Sanitary MERINO, SILK and Sanitary Balbriggan, Silk and Cashmere mixed.

For SPRING and SUMMER WEAR. The ONLY Sanitary Underwear, and Endorsed by the leading medical profession.

Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Price List. If your dealer cannot supply them, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.

DON'T BE DECEIVED. See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark—"Ypsilanti Health Underwear."

HAY & TODD MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

Metal Tipped. EVER READY DRESS STAY Will Not Cut Through.

See Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay.

Acknowledged the BEST DRESS STAY On the Market

Made with Gutta Percha on both sides of steel and warranted water-proof. All other stays are made differently and will rust. Beware of Imitations. Take none but the "Ever Ready."

Manufactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.

SPECIAL DEPOTS. { MODEL DRESS STEEL CO., 74 Grand St., New York. BROWN & METZNER, 535 Market Street, San Francisco.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR COLD BLAST NO DUST NO QUILLS CHICAGO

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.

MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. To introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS we make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph or any picture of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead, and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish not interfering with likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO., Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to any one sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10cts. to intending agents, F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

School of Expression. Vocal and literary training. Opens October 6. S. S. CURRY, Ph. D., 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass

Harvard University. Summer Courses, Voice & Expression. 5 weeks Jul. 15. Address S. S. CURRY, 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass

Province of Expression. Broadest survey of the whole subject.-Herald. School of Expression, 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

FREE An elegant silver bonbon dish or solid silver souvenir spoon for every 25th subscription sent direct to the Gertrude Quarterly, devoted to Dress Reform. Address GERTRUDE QUARTERLY, Box 1088, Chicago, Ill.

DELSARTE'

Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.

Agents Wanted. Also DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

YOSE & SONS ESTABLISHED IN 1851. PIANOS.

Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Sold on easy terms. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue and full information.

170 Tremont St., Boston. Mass.

The Double Vi Waist

Ladies' Infants' Childrens' Young Ladies'

A Very Satisfactory Garment.

WHY? Because it Supports Stockings and Underclothes from the SHOULDERS, and has no stiff cords; fits with perfect ease and freedom. Elegant, and strictly hygienic. Sold by leading dealers.

LADY CANVASSERS WANTED.

Send for Illustrated Price List.

The FOY, HARMON & CHADWICK CO., Brooklyn, N.Y.

"BEAUTY" ACCOMMODATION WAIST No. 7, WITH TAMPICO DRESS FORM.

Made of finest Sateen, Soft Sateen bust and pockets for Tampico Dress forms. Removable Steels, Adjustable Shoulder Straps. Lace Back, Button Front, curved to figure at back.

PERFECT FORM, EASE AND SUPPORT.

Sizes 18 to 30 in. in White and Black. Sent free by mail, for $1.50. Little Beauty Waists for children, the best. Catalogue free

E. H. HORWOOD & CO., 51 Mercer St., - New York.

Signal Notes.

It is said that last year, in England and Wales, 1,389 babies were suffocated while in bed with their drunken parents.

General Booth, while in India, was presented, by a woman penitent, with the nose ring which she wore. Other penitents gave up their gods.

The total issues from the Bible House by the American Bible Society during the year ending March 31, not including those issued in foreign lands, were 936,578 volumes.

Formerly, in the large hospitals, it was customary to administer wine or spirits in many cases where, to-day, the patient comes and goes without one drop of either being given. Such is the advance made in non-alcoholic medication.

The National Bulletin says: "It is women who must settle the drink question. They are united, they are in earnest, they are ready for the fight with the great enemy of the nations. But they have their hands tied behind their backs, so that they cannot use the only weapon which will ever strike down the foe. That weapon is the pencil which marks the ballot paper in the polling booth."

The Lady Managers, Columbian Exposition, are in communication with Mrs. Aubrey H. Smith, of Philadelphia, who compiled a book of interesting and valuable statistics for the Centennial concerning the charities conducted by women. It is the intention of the woman's board to take up the work begun by Mrs. Smith, and bring it up to date, showing the advancement of women in philanthropy during the last decade.

According to a statement made by a woman compositor in an English publication, only about two hundred women are employed as compositors in London. In printing women can earn far higher wages than in most trades, but the English Factory acts absolutely rule women out of newspaper offices by preventing them from working nights or Sundays. This not only tends to keep the numbers small, but also to keep the wages of women compositors low.

In Germany, the male teachers are in an overwhelming majority, and there is a female teachers' association, formed for the purpose of changing this state of things. This association publishes a bi-monthly organ (Die Lehrerin) and has lately presented a second petition asking that increased facilities be given women to prepare for the profession of teaching. The minister of education in his formal acknowledgment declared the question to be under consideration, and the association is greatly encouraged.

"The Russian peasant is undoubtedly intemperate," said Mr. Kennan in a late interview, "but this evil, too, is due to a considerable degree to the government, and, I may add, to the church also. A large proportion of the government's revenue comes from the tax on spirits. As there is always a greater demand for money than can be supplied, the government has no incentive to encourage temperance; on the contrary, it does what it can to encourage intemperance, for the more vodka consumed the greater the revenue. The church likewise does nothing to promote sobriety. In fact, it assists materially to increase the consumption of spirits. On feast days the priests encourage the peasants to drink, and on such an occasion I have seen a whole village drunk. Is it any wonder that they are intemperate?"

At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the International Sunday-school Convention, and also at the Conference of the Sunday-school Workers held at Chautauqua, New York, in August, 1891, it was unanimously decided to request the Sunday-school workers of America to unite in the erection of a model Sunday-school building, upon the World's Fair grounds, in connection with the "Columbian Exposition," to be held in the city of Chicago, in the year 1893. It is proposed as follows: First, To exhibit a model Sunday-school building as an illustration of the work and as a specimen that may be copied by others. Second, In this building by maps, charts, plats, tables, pictures, books, papers, etc., to show the present condition of Sunday-school work in different parts of the world. Third, To illustrate the growth and progress of Sunday-schools.

False Economy

Is practiced by many people, who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it

THAT GREASE SPOT.

How did it come there? Or, to ask a more important question, "What will remove it?" This very day stop at the grocer's and get a cake of Ivory Soap. Don't be afraid of the cloth! Ivory is different from every other soap manufactured and can be used on any cloth safely.

Now rub well, using flannel and hot water. If it is obstinate, employ a nail brush.

Copyright 1891, by The Procter & Gamble Co.

NOW is the time to invest in HARVEY lots for profit. By writing to THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION you will be given full information about HARVEY, and will be told how you can make an investment that will prove very profitable.

The Harvey Land Association, 819 TO 825 THE ROOKERY
CORNER OF LA SALLE AND ADAMS STREETS CHICAGO, ILL.

TORREY RAZORS
Are sold under a GUARANTEE to shave the hardest beard with ease.

TORREY STROPS
Are recognized as THE BEST for sharpening Razors the world over. If the dealer will not supply you, DON'T take any other, but send for Catalogue—tells how to select, sharpen, and keep a Razor in order.

J. R. TORREY RAZOR CO., P. O. Box 753 WORCESTER, MASS.

SAVED HER LIFE!

TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease. Mrs. G. W. C., of Detroit, Mich., writes: "Tokology treatment, under God, saved my life in childbirth, and gave me a strong, healthy baby girl. I would like to place a copy of your book in the hands of every woman in the land." Price, prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents; exclusive territory.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO. 277 Madison-st. Chicago

$3,000 Job Lot BICYCLES 20 to 50% off.
Lowest prices on all '92 makes & 2d hd Easy payments. We sell everywhere.
'91 Cush'n $85 Juno, balls. $65 | 40 in. $37 Victor Jr. balls. $17
'90 Crescent ('91 make) " $50 | '91 $135 Rambler " $90
'91 $145 Cush'n High Grade $90 And 20 other styles as cheap.
Largest stock & oldest dealers in U. S. Agts. wanted.
Cata. free. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 S. St., Peoria, Ill.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

A Beautiful Bird's-Eye View
OF THE
WORLD'S FAIR GROUNDS
(Size 14x21 inches, two colors, suitable for framing) will be sent by mail to each person who will forward four two-cent stamps and a list (not less than ten names) of CHRISTIAN PEOPLE who are likely to visit the World's Fair. The Bird's-Eye View will not be sent unless the list is forwarded. Address,
COLUMBIAN VISITORS' ASSOCIATION,
811 Bort Building, 17-21 Quincy St., CHICAGO.

To the Cincinnati Convention via the B. & O.

Delegates and others attending the Cincinnati Prohibition Convention in June, are requested, before choosing their route from any point, East, West, North or South, to communicate with any of the following agents of the B. & O., who will cheerfully supply all information relative to the lowest rates obtainable, the most picturesque, quickest and safest route, and who will make special arrangements for the transportation of special parties in special cars. L. S. Allen, the Rookery, Chicago. W. E. Reppent, Columbus; O. P. McCarty, Grand Central Station, Cincinnati; C. P. Craig, 415 Broadway, New York; A. J. Simmons, 411 Washington Street, Boston; C. R. Mackenzie, 833 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. B. F. Bond, Baltimore; S. B. Hege, Washington. Pullman accommodations. Two Vestibuled Limited Express trains daily between Cincinnati and the East. Quickest and best train service to Cincinnati from Columbus. The B. & O. is the most attractive route all the year around between Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati and the East.

A Choice List of Summer Resorts.

In the Lake regions of Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa and the two Dakotas, there are hundreds of charming localities pre-eminently fitted for summer homes. Among the following selected list are names familiar to many of our readers as the perfection of Northern summer resorts. Nearly all of the Wisconsin points of interest are within a short distance from Chicago or Milwaukee, and none of them are so far away from the "busy marts of civilization" that they cannot be reached in a few hours of travel, by frequent trains, over the finest roads in the Northwest—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, and Milwaukee & Northern Railroad.

Oconomowoc, Wis.	Clear Lake, Iowa.
Minocqua, Wis.	Lakes Okoboji, Iowa.
Waukesha, Wis.	Spirit Lake, Iowa.
Palmyra, Wis.	Frontenac, Minn.
Tomahawk Lakes, Wis.	Lake Minnetonka, Minn.
Lakeside, Wis.	Ortonville, Minn.
Kilbourn City, Wis. (Dells of the Wisconsin.)	Prior Lake, Minn.
	White Bear Lake, Minn.
	Beaver Dam, Wis.
Lake Madison, So. Dak.	Madison, Wis.
Delavan, Wis.	Big Stone Lake, So. Dak.
Sparta, Wis.	Pewaukee, Wis.
Elkhart Lake, Wis.	Wausaukee, Wis.
Ontonagon, Mich.	Marquette, Mich.

For detailed information, apply to any coupon ticket agent, or send stamp for a free illustrated tourist folder, to Geo. H. Heafford, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

OUR VALUABLE —TREATISE— HOW TO HAVE GOOD TEETH. MAILED FREE ADDRESS E. W. HOYT & CO. LOWELL, MASS.

My lady is the fairest, the daintiest, the rarest,
Her smile is like the sunshine, and bids the world rejoice.
Her breath perfumes the flowers, and the wild-birds in their bowers.
Entranced, in silence listen to the music of her voice.
The reason she has told me, and I have no cause to doubt it,
She always uses Rubifoam, and wouldn't be without it.

ORIGINAL DRESS REFORM ROOMS.
(Established 1875.)
Complete lines of Equipoise and Delsarte Waists, Jenness-Miller Bodices, Bust Supports, Jersey-fitting combination suits, etc., etc. Send stamp for free Illustrated Catalogue.
MRS. S. W. PIKE,
75 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

THE BERKSHIRE HILLS SANATORIUM.
For the cure of Cancer in all its forms, without the use of the knife. Book with complete information mailed free. Dr W. E. Brown & Son No. Adams, Mass

FREE FOR 100 SUBSCRIBERS ONLY. With the first 100 orders received from this advertisement for Hendryx's Compendium of Book-keeping and Business Forms for Self-Instruction will be given a course of instruction by mail free. This is our regular $15 course. Do not delay, but order a Compendium at once. Price $1.
F. H. HENDRYX, 178, Bath, N. Y.

$7.50 FOR A DAYS' WORK.
GOOD PAY! STEADY WORK IF DESIRED. Address JAMES LEE & CO., 215 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

R YOU Looking for a ROME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

WANTED Women to take Crochet work to do at home. Steady work. Write for particulars. L. WHITE & CO., 209 State St., Chicago, Ill.

AGENT made $71 in four days selling my Electric Corsets and Specialties. 100 PER CENT. profit and Cash Prizes. Sample free. Dr. Bridgman, B'way, New York.

SEND for our list of 19 Catalogs of Music and Musical Instruments.
W. Story, 26 Central St., Boston, Mass

PORTABLE BATHS.
Best ever known. Wholesale and Retail. Agents Wanted Everywhere. Send for Circulars.
E. J. KNOWLTON, Ann Arbor, Mich.

20 Hidden Name, New Emb. Basket, Plush Fringe Cards, 1 complete Fountain Pen 25 Games & Agts. Outfit 10cts. Typewriter and Photo Cameras free to Agts. Clinton Bros. Clintonville, Ct.

YOUR NAME on 25 LOVELY CARDS, 1 RING, 1 LACE PIN, 1 PATENT FOUNTAIN PEN, 1 FORGET-ME-NOT ALBUM, 400 Album Verses &c. with the New and Popular Monthly, WAYSIDE GLEANINGS. THREE MONTHS FOR 10c. LAUREL CARD CO., CLINTONVILLE, CONN.

Mrs. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT
will lecture in this country between May 15 and Sept. 15.
For dates and information address
C. W. H. Strongman,
P. O. Box 7, Boston, Mass.

TOKOLOGY ENCIRCLING THE WORLD.

Dr. Alice B. Stockham, of Chicago, the author of Tokology (a complete ladies' guide in health and disease), is just completing her tour around the world. She is expected to sail from Yokohama, Japan, for San Francisco May 4th. Her book, published by herself, although belonging rather to hygiene than literature, is one of the most remarkable successes among western publishing ventures, it having already reached a circulation of about 200,000 copies. Tokology is now published in English, Swedish, German and Russian, and will soon be translated into Chinese and Japanese. Ere long, womankind the world over will enjoy the rational teachings of Tokology and the physical freedom its philosophy bestows. The book contains nearly 400 pages, illustrated, price, prepaid, $2.75. Best terms to agents. Sample pages sent free if you mention this paper.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & Co., 277 Madison st, Chicago.

THE UNION SIGNAL

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII.—No. 19.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, May 12, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The first meeting of the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. in the new offices of the society, in the Temple, was held May 7, 1892. It was agreed to announce the dates of the next National Convention, to be held in Denver, Col., as October 21 to 26 inclusive. All state presidents please take notice and "clear the way." Our Colorado friends deem it well-nigh vital to the success of the Convention in that latitude that it be held in October.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Bismarck regrets the falling away of Prussians from drink.

Liquors were openly dispensed in all New York saloons last Sunday.

The Chinese Exclusion Bill is opposed by the Omaha Methodist Conference.

The National Federation of Women's Clubs is holding its second biennial meeting in Chicago this week.

An accident on the Santa Fé railroad in Missouri, May 5, killed seven passengers and seriously wounded several others.

General Andrews, of Baltimore, at a club reception, struck ex-Senator Goodwin for omitting champagne from the menu card.

Delegates from all the temperance societies in Great Britain met in Memorial Hall, London, May 3, to welcome home Lady Somerset.

Large territories in Illinois, Kansas and Missouri have been under water during the past week by reason of the floods resulting from the heavy spring rains.

The World's Fair Directors are determined to enforce the sale of liquor by securing a special legislative act giving them entire control of the Exposition grounds.

The Waukesha, Wis., citizens object to the laying of pipes from their famous springs to Chicago, on the ground that it will withdraw patronage from the resort.

The two largest ships in the world, the City of Paris and the City of New York, are admitted to American registry, which permits their use for government purposes.

Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer and Prof. George H. Palmer, her husband, decide not to leave Harvard University in order to accept the offered positions in the Chicago University.

An impressive farewell service was held Sunday evening in old Farwell Hall, Chicago, so long the headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. The work of demolishing the building began on Monday, and as soon as it is finished, the elegant new structure will be reared. This old building is the one in which Moody's early revival meetings were held, and he was preaching in it while the great fire was burning, from the text: "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

THE society for the disestablishment and disendowment of the State Church of England began its triennial conference in London, May 3. For the first time in its history women were admitted as delegates. Success to the disestablishment, the disendowment and the women.

REMEMBER the prison number for JUNE 9, Flower Mission day, and order promptly. There will be a picture of Miss Jennie Casseday with her unique arrangements for desk, devised for a perpetual invalid; sketches, poems, etc., of specia interest. Each bouquet should have its billet in the shape of a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE National offices were removed from Evanston, Ill., into the Temple, Chicago, April 26th. Hereafter all letters and documents intended for the National corresponding secretary and treasurer should be addressed to Room 1115, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle streets, Chicago, Ill.

LET it be noted that white-ribboners can do no better work than to follow New York's example and petition their state legislatures and the National congress to instruct exhibitors to close their exhibits on Sunday. It is an emphatic finger-board that New York has set up for us and must be duplicated, so far as possible, throughout the nation.

WE are sorry not to have a sketch by Lady Henry Somerset in this number. Arrangements were made that we thought would secure the continuation of the series without a break; editorial matter from our English co-editor is in this and every issue, but the sketch has not arrived. This disappointment will hardly occur again, we feel confident. These sketches have been greatly prized, and we expect to bring them out in book form before the holidays.

IN the Massachusetts legislature, April 28, the bill giving to women qualified to vote for members of the school committee, the right to vote on the question of granting licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, was defeated after a lively debate. Eloquent appeals were made for the women; the bill was declared by the Liberals to be "a step in the right direction," and by the Conservatives it was reiterated, "We do not believe that women want what has been asked for." Nevertheless, a viva voce vote showed a good majority for the bill, but when its opponents called for the yeas and nays, the elastic backbone of the legislature contracted suddenly, and the bill was lost by three votes.

MISS MARY ALLEN WEST, one of our ablest experts in white ribbon work, for years president of Illinois W. C. T. U., and editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, was recently chosen superintendent of the World's W. C. T. U. school of methods, and is going to the Sandwich Islands and Japan by special commission of the World's W. C. T. U. to teach and train workers by means of her schools, held a few days in a place and fruitful in converts to and workers in the cause. This trip has long been contemplated and signalizes a notable advance. It is expected that Miss Alice Palmer, of Indiana, for years a successful organizer and speaker in that state, will soon visit South Africa in response to the earnest calls of our comrades in that needed field, and so they go while our prayers follow them.

THE twenty-sixth Quadrennial General Conference of the M. E. church met in the Opera House at Omaha, Neb., May 2, and will continue in session about one month. It is composed of sixteen Bishops, three hundred and five ministerial, and one hundred and eighty-three lay delegates who will represent one hundred and thirty-four annual conferences and missions with a total of nearly fifteen thousand itinerant and over fourteen thousand local preachers, and not less than 3,400,000 lay communicants—two-thirds of them women. But no woman delegate is in all this Quadrennial Host of men's elect. Since the last session when five duly elected women delegates were ruled out, the church has voted on the admission of women to the conference, and of all that voted sixty-two per cent said yes. The ministers have done the same and a majority of them said "yes," but not the technical three-fourths. So stands the case to-day. We hope our brethren will go into it now ab initio and vote to expunge from the discipline all ecclesiastical sex distinction—that is the short, just, do-as-you-would-be-done-by road out of the present wilderness.

A STANDING offer of fifteen hundred dollars per month has been made to the directors of the Temple, for space in the marble corridor of the rotunda, in which an elegant (?) tobacco stand would be established. "Never!" said Mrs. Carse; "not if fifty thousand dollars were offered; we are not poor enough to permit the sale of that vile weed under this roof." Well spoken, Mrs. Carse. We like principles that cost something.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET had a most pleasant voyage. The weather was favorable and the new remedy, "Georgia Water," proved a specific for mal de mer. By request of the passengers our editor spoke on shipboard before a meeting for the benefit of the sailors' orphanage, presided over by Hon. Andrew Carnegie and attended by ex-secretary and Mrs. Whitney, Joseph H. Pulitzer, founder of the New York World, and other notables. "Impressions of America" was the theme they gave her, but temperance and the W. C. T. U. figured largely in what she said.

THE best news we have heard lately is that Attorney Carlisle, whose business it is to give legal opinions to the Board of Directors of the Columbian Exposition, has made the following decision, to wit:

1. The prohibition ordinance of Hyde Park, Chicago's chief suburb on the South Side, makes it illegal to sell alcoholic drinks in the Midway Plaisance, and

2. A state law never yet repealed, but yet well-nigh forgotten, forbids the sale of intoxicants "within two miles of the place where any agricultural, horticultural or mechanical fair is being held," thus ruling out such sale from the entire grounds. Surely light is arisen for us in an unexpected quarter.

DR. D. K. PEARSONS, of Chicago, a Congregationalist, with full purse and wealthy heart, has just offered one hundred thousand dollars to the Chicago Theological Seminary, on condition that on or before May 1, 1894, the sum of $350,000 shall be raised to put with his gift. Our genial neighbor, The Advance, devotes much of its last issue to the Seminary and its outlook, which is worthy of Chicago—and that is saying the final word—in the opinion of Chicagoans! For ourselves we consider the institution remarkably well manned, and would agree to raise $10,000 of the sum asked provided they would let the women in beside their brethren to share on equal terms the "sweetness and light" there furnished forth.

THE Republican party in Wyoming has covered itself with glory. Mrs. Therese A. Jenkins (formerly W. C. T. U. superintendent of franchise) and Mrs. G. W. Carleton have been chosen alternate delegates to the presidential nominating convention soon to be held in Minneapolis. They caucused two hours over the subject and then Colonel Richards made the following fore-gleam of a speech:

"GENTLEMEN—I mean Ladies and Gentlemen: It remained for the Republican party of Wyoming to add luster to a party's record by giving to women the right men have always had at the polls. To-day they are our equals. I believe it proper, just and right that they should participate in our every deliberation. I have here the name of a woman, a stanch, Republican worker, who would do us honor in any position of trust in which she might be placed—Mrs. Therese A. Jenkins. I have great pleasure in nominating her for the position as alternate to the Minneapolis convention."

Great applause followed this deliverance and twenty delegates sprang to their feet to second the nomination. Mrs. Carleton's name went through with a similar rush. The hall of the convention showed a large contingent of women. One plank of the platform felicitates the Republican party on the presence of women in its councils and bids them welcome at all times.

Contributed.

THE TEMPLE.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

Here the Temperance Temple stands
Built by thousands of willing hands;
A noble dream that has all come true,
A dear hope realized through and through;
A prayer full-answered, a gift divine,
Given to last till the end of time.

Here the Temperance Temple stands,
Reared by offerings from far lands,
By the widow's mite and the prince's gold,
By the gifts of hearts in years grown old,
By the touch of baby hands, weak and small—
Our glorious Temple, built by all!

Grander than Solomon's fane of old
With its lavish splendor of gems and gold,
Thou art reared aloft to the bending skies
By the love that beams from woman's eyes,
By the grace that dwells in her noble heart,
And the pity and tenderness sweet, that start
Into active being at woe's sad cry
And the sin of the world, as the years pass by—
Only known to the Friend above—
By tears at midnight and smiles at dawn,
By chastened grief o'er the loved ones gone,
By tender memories, sweet and dear,
By love and friendship and duty clear.
Coins that were lifted from dear, dead eyes
Never to open 'neath earthly skies,
Ever to lie in calm repose
Till the trump of the Resurrection blows,
Precious, dear to the hearts that ache,
Sent for the Temperance Temple's sake.

Pure, true woman-hearts all aglow
With pity and help for the world's sad woe,
Beat in unison strong and grand
"For God and Home and Every Land."
Nothing too precious to give to this—
Nothing so small that it comes amiss.
Blessings on thee, oh, building fair,
Towering heavenward through the air;
Blessings on thee as the years go by
And one by one thy builders lie
With weary hands folded and hearts at rest;—
Stand thou for centuries, Temple blest!

Haymaker, Pa.

THE LATE PROFESSOR E. A. FREEMAN,

Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford.

BY A. HUNGERFOR POLLEN, B. A.

(Written at the request of Lady Henry Somerset.)

As I sit writing here on the deck of the "Teutonic," I find it hard to realize what Oxford will be like without Professor Freeman. His short, burly figure, rolling walk and flowing white beard will be sadly missed by those who are familiar with Oxford features. I have often met him as he went in cap and long silk gown from the college to his home in St. Giles, talking in deep, vibrating tones to whoever was his companion, and the vivacious animation of his intellectual face showing the intense absorption of his mind in the subject in hand. Oxford can ill afford to lose him, for there are few living who have spread farther the luster of her name by his work. I was deploring his loss yesterday to Professor Jebb, of Cambridge, and when he said, "The world will never know what an encyclopedia of knowledge has been lost," I felt how exactly that met the case.

Commonly, when the world mourns a teacher who has seen man's allotment of three score years and ten, the loss is more of a personal bond broken than the hope of great treasure denied. His years of work are past; he has lived on, an honored pensioner on the praise he has won. Not so with Freeman; though advanced in years, his wonderful buoyancy of mind and spirit, and more especially the great works with which he continually surprised the world, forbade one ever to regard him as an aged man. Death overtook him in the midst of his greatest undertaking; to the end he was a fighter, conquering new worlds of knowledge in the forgotten past.

However, to Freeman there was really no such thing as a "past" at all—to him every age and phase of the world's story was one continuous present—all history combined in an essential unity, so much so that his very title was an offense to him. When, as a freshman, I attended his inaugural lecture I saw him for the first time, and shall never forget how caustically he spoke of the folly of those who thought the word "modern" could be any guide in distinguishing epochs in the world's history. "They have made a professor of modern history," he said (or rather roared, for the historian's voice was as emphatic as himself), "but they have not told him what modern history is; they have told him to lecture twelve times a year, but they have not told him what he is to lecture about. I asked a friend when modern history began and he told me at the time of Abraham. I asked another friend when modern history began, and he told me at the French Revolution, and I venture to think between those two dates there was some slight discrepancy." But whatever the significance of his title, a good historian and a great modern he certainly was. In the forty years that elapsed between his first work on architecture and his last—the first installment of the great history of Sicily—which, alas, will never be finished, he got through an amount of work that was truly astonishing. Equally at home with the myths that embodied the early triumphs and struggles of the Aryan races and in the stories of ancient Greece and Rome, with the chronicles of the Goths, Franks and Normans and the more complex annals of Europe in mediæval renaissance and more recent times, he brought to bear on each period which he particularly illumined the whole battery of his acquaintance with its previous and after history. No man, not even the friend whom he succeeded, and who, as bishop of Oxford, survives him, had treated history in so large, so learned, so "actual" a fashion. Just as there was no disputed question in history on which the professor was not ready and anxious to take a side, so, faithful to his doctrine of the oneness of the world's experience, there was no problem in modern politics that he did not attack in the same scientific and pugnacious spirit.

His letters to the Times on the Eastern and Irish questions, church disestablishment, local government, and the thousand and one controversies that the time provoked, were famous for their wealth of analogy and almost desperate vigor. In his views on these subjects he showed himself an advanced democrat, and was always on the side of popular right and national aspirations. Sometimes he carried his historical correlations too far for the ignorance of his audience, but he was never frightened by being called a "pedant," and declared that name was always the chief refuge of the unlettered when faced by more accurate information.

Among Mr. Freeman's more marked characteristics was a certain gruffness of manner that was the frequent cause of pardonable impatience in those who did not know the kind heart and essential good nature that underlay his rough exterior. It seems rather hard to tell tales of his brusque humor so soon after his death; but when the greatness of the world's debt to him comes to be counted, such little discountings as these will seem but a trivial counterpoise. There was a story told of his having gone to lecture in a small provincial town in the west of England. Something in the details of the arrangements by the committee apparently offended him, and in the opening of his lecture he dwelt on the shortcoming with somewhat unnecessary temper. At the conclusion the chairman, in proposing a vote of thanks, alluded to the great interest of the lecture and the privilege it had been, in that remote quarter of the world, to hear so celebrated an author. "It is not often," he continued, "that in this forgotten corner of England, we are so happy as to entertain, or be entertained, by the lions of the day. This evening, however, we can truly congratulate ourselves in having amongst us the king of beasts." The incident cannot have been singular, for another tale tells how once, on a similar occasion, a very reverend archdeacon gave expression to the keen delight of the audience in a "lecture that had brought the times, and more particularly the manners of our ancestors so vividly before them." Unfortunately, on neither occasion was any record made of the professor's acknowledgment of the compliment!

What an intellectual treat those professional lectures at Oxford were! Unfortunately their popularity was never great amongst the men on account of their being held at an hour of the afternoon when the far more important avocations of boating, cricket, football and athletics occupied the valuable time of the undergraduates. His audiences, however, were generally good, for the students from the two women's colleges always attended in almost their full numbers, and it was sometimes thought that if he had been earlier accustomed to so gentle an auditory the somewhat rugged manners of the professor might have been softened.

These were not the only occasions on which the girls—who were denied and still are denied all share in the university privileges and degrees—put their more pampered brothers to shame. During the three years I read history it happened that two or three girls from Lady Margaret Hall were reading the same course and we all—some thirty or forty men and these three girls—attended the same lectures. When the time for the examination came—or as we say at Oxford when we "went in for the schools"—one of these passed most brilliantly and got an excellent first. I well remember attending her viva voce examination by Mr. C. S. Gardiner and having the satisfaction of hearing her convict her judge of a mistake. The question was, "How was Prussian territory affected by the treaty of Aix in 1748?" "First," said the fair examinee, "her possessions beyond the Rhine." "She hadn't got any," said Mr. Gardiner. "Surely there was a part of the Duchy of Cleves," was the reply; and to use a slang phrase, the examiner, getting very red, had to "climb down." It may open a side-light on English manners, when I say, although we were fellow-students for three years and constantly during that time dipped pens in the same ink-pot while taking notes at lectures, we never spoke or knew each other until the paper examination was over, when a chance introduction made us friends. But the point of the whole story lies in this, my lady colleague got a brilliant first and I a second class; but I am a Bachelor of Arts of the famous university of Oxford and no roll or official list of the names of that seat of learning records the splendid achievement of one, who, but for the churlishness of Tory Oxford, might have shared with the less worthy the honor of a degree, and with the more worthy the credit of having done something to maintain and increase the praise of our "kindly mother."

Mr. Freeman was, like Cardinal Newman, an undergraduate of Trinity College; and I think we were always pleased and proud that our college revived its connection with her famous sons by electing them to honorary fellowship. I know how great a pleasure it was to the Cardinal to feel that he was, during the last years of his life, once more identified with the college which he entered in 1816; and in Freeman, too, was strongly exemplified the truth that the personal link between himself and his college was remarkable, even in Oxford where such loyalty is proverbial. The last time I saw Freeman was a year ago at the Trinity College Gaudy, an annual festivity commemorating the beneficence of Sir Thomas Pope, who, in Queen Mary's reign, founded the college, ruined by the dissolution of the monasteries in the time of Henry VIII.

It was a great occasion, being the first after Cardinal Newman's death, and I think we all felt now that the greatest Oxford man of the century was gone, that Freeman was our most celebrated name. Indeed, it is difficult to speak in exaggerated phrase of the world-wide reputation of the author of the "Norman Conquest" and "William Rufus;" had he written nothing else he would have left an indelible mark, as much by the method and spirit of his writings as by the actual achievement. To those who met him personally, there was a rare fascination in the eager, brilliant talker, who always had an ear for the views and difficulties of the humblest, in the slashing controversialist who was, at least, as conspicuous for the generosity with which he forgot an injury as for the vigor with which he would attack and demolish an historical transgressor. The fascination had, of course, behind it the prestige of his record as England's greatest living historian. But to those who, more intimate, had seen the simple happiness of Mr. Freeman's home, and, perhaps, the shaggy "savant" surrounded by a troup of romping children who made him the delighted center of a game—was reserved that last argument on which to found their admiration and affection—that "touch of nature that makes the whole world kin."

REV. L. A. GRIFFIN, in the Unitarian Review, says: "The teacher reflects not 'What shall I have when I am forgotten?' but 'What shall I be when I forget? When all I know has vanished, leaving only its effect on character, what shall I have?' Shall the inner man recall his aliment any more than the outer? In both alike it passes away, for its function is fulfilled; it is not to be stored but assimilated. Men will hereafter boast of what they knew no more than of what they ate. There is naught we know now that we may need to know hereafter, but what we are now in every worthy quality of the spirit that we must needs be, so long as it pleases God to continue us in life."

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S RETURN TO ENGLAND.

BY REV. JAMES JOHNSTON.

After a tour of almost unexampled interest in the United States this distinguished advocate of the temperance cause reached Liverpool by the White Star Liner, the Teutonic, on April 21, and received on the following day a splendid ovation in the city by the Mersey, from standard-bearers and friends of the British temperance reformation. The Association Hall, which was crowded by visitors from all parts of the United Kingdom, was beautifully decorated with palms, evergreens and flowers. This building proved too small for the throng, and at a later stage the honored guest of the evening was obliged to address another assembly of seven hundred persons in an adjoining hall. Of the personnelle of Lady Somerset it is unnecessary to say much to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, after the remarkable trip of her ladyship through the states in promoting the greatest social movement of the age. All Lady Henry's rare gifts of language, polished style, balanced sentences, fine contralto voice and elegant gestures, characterized her Liverpool speech.

Few of those present will forget that eloquent passage in which she declared that the real meaning of human brotherhood was beginning to be understood, and that at last prejudices of race, class and creed were giving way. With what force was the opinion uttered: "It is said that the cradle stands between woman and the franchise; I would that the cradle stood between man and the public house." Around Lady Somerset were a number of eminent lady workers, the chair being occupied by Mr. Alexander Guthrie, the son of Dr. Guthrie of Ragged School fame, who was supported by that veteran in the campaign, the Rev. Charles Garrett and other worthies.

Following the presentation of addresses and speeches of welcome, Lady Henry thanked the representatives who had, she said, much overrated her labors. No joy in life was greater than that of making human lives happier, and no work equaled the cause in which they were engaged. At the present time the feeling which pulsated through humanity for its improvement was especially reflected in the progress of temperance principles. The United States showed the character of the battle they were fighting, and that land presented object lessons of value. Though the Americans after much trying had not found any measure a success, the temperance movement there had many hopeful aspects. Their greatest danger lay in the drinking saloon and the vast political influence which it exercised. This, however, had led to the formation of the Prohibition party, the power of which was daily increasing. Public opinion in America on the question was more advanced than in Great Britain. Whereas rich brewers in England were made peers and perpetual legislators, the American liquor sellers received scanty social consideration.

Lady Somerset was deeply impressed with America's sober womanhood, having on two occasions only, in hotels or elsewhere, seen women touching wine or beer. Willingly would she have given all that she held most dear to be able to say the same of old England. One of the means which her ladyship proposed for resisting drink was the federation of English women's temperance societies with those in America, in order that there should be a world's woman's greatest union against the world's woman's greatest curse.

Temperance work in America was truly magnificent, and from that land Britons had much to learn. The convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Boston was attended by 3,000 delegates, representing a constituency of 300,000, and upwards of forty different nations. They represented various religious creeds, every shade of opinion of those who desired the good of humanity. She had been told that in America prohibition had been a failure, instead of which Lady Somerset found that wherever prohibition existed there was peace and prosperity, and a people free to enjoy the gifts which God had given to a great and happy country. Poverty in the country villages was unknown. Things were moving fast in America, public sentiment was growing, and those who did not oppose the temperance movement, but objected to legislation, were beginning to see the necessity of that policy.

In England they needed to face their drinking customs afresh in order to learn how best this evil was to be dealt with in the future. The entire aspects of politics was changing and, for those who governed, the question was not so much the aggrandizement of nations, as the government of a huge home circle. The time had arrived for Englishmen to have the power of veto, and with that in their possession they would arise, if rightly appealed to, and say, "These things shall not be." Another aid to their progress would be the granting of the suffrage to women

These noble ideas and the language in which they were draped had an electrifying effect upon the spell-bound audience. Her peroration was wonderful in its power. Speaking with all the depth and passion of conviction, Lady Somerset said that the real strength of the temperance movement lay in the fact that it was God-given, and the reformers of to-day would be recognized in the future as those who had seen far ahead that which would bring true glory to mankind.

Truly as the British temperance women esteem the Countess of Carlisle, Mrs. W. S. Caine, and other chivalrous workers, they regard with profound admiration Lady Henry Somerset, the President of the British Women's Temperance Association, who is doing yeoman service to the cause in England, and to-day one of her chief distinctions lies in having united by another strand of loving affection the two mightiest peoples on the face of God's earth.

Bolton, Lancashire, England.

THE FATE OF SOME SUMMER BOARDERS.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

"It's the Percival that does it," said Mr. Benner. "Jenkins one might fight and subdue, but Mrs. Percival Jenkins with the Percival dominant, never!"

"I wouldn't mind," said the youngest of the maiden boarders, "if she'd only confine herself to her own side of the table, but when she takes my dinner in charge as well as her own, and goes off into disquisitions on the unsuitable nature of everything I have on my plate, it plants a sting even in the corn fritters and takes the sugar from the green apple pie. Was she born instructing, and did she expound general law in her little cradle and confound her nurse, and anybody who ventured to interfere with her own views as to how she should be brought up?"

"Why was she brought up at all?" groaned the oldest but most light-minded of the maidens. "Why did not an inscrutable Providence remove her to a spot where, it may be, there is a certain consciousness of personal inadequacies that in this sphere is never likely to dawn upon her?"

"Hush, my dear," said the beautiful old lady who had the foot of the table, and who this very morning had one or more times looked up a little wildly, as the torrent went on. "She is really a very well informed person and very much of a lady."

"On the contrary, you blessed grandmother, she isn't a lady at all. She is an unmitigated prig with a moderately pretty face and so much manner that you think it really must mean something, till you boil it down and find it is impertinence and self-assurance with a forty-woman power of nagging. If I were her child she would have me in a lunatic asylum within a week."

"The preposterousness of it is, that we all submit," said the oldest maiden. "Conversation is dead since she came among us. I look forward to a season of entirely unnecessary indigestion born of her general obnoxiousness. I propose that we strike. We are boarders also. She has not taken the whole house. Why are we dumb before her?"

"Because of the sweet retiringness and submissiveness that mark your daily walk and conversation," said the youngest. "That is where the miracle comes in. Why do we submit? Why?"

"I gave you the reason in the beginning," said Mr. Benner. "It is the Percival that does it. I have resigned all conversation into her hands, and she does it for the whole of us on the same principle as the Tartar praying-mill, you know. I feel that all my debt to society at large is more than fulfilled. But," Mr. Benner concluded, with a dark look, "I'll be hanged if I try another season with her."

"She might be spoken to," said old lady Benner mildly.

"'Speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him,'" said the youngest maiden with scorn; "Shakespeare! I'm going to change my place. Between that unhappy child and the calm superiority and general instructiveness of the mother, I may be said to have been reduced to pulp. We will mass at the foot of the table and converse steadily and without any regard to sense if it is necessary."

"There won't be the slightest difficulty on that score," said Mr. Benner a little wickedly. "I guarantee to live up to the demand and do not doubt you will."

It was at this moment that the landlady slipped in; a small, dark, nervous, overworked woman, whose cooking was a delight, and whose voice—the voice of the whang-doodle, if that classic fowl ever succeeded in producing tones of similar pitch, quality and raspingness unknown outside New England. Nervous, worried, juiceless and no more than a very creaky machine from which the utmost was to be extracted daily, it was a question which type of woman was the strongest obstacle in the way of summer rest.

"Seems as if I should go clean distracted," she began. "I can't afford to turn her away, and I can't afford to have her keep on. He said this morning he had to hold on to his chair to keep from coming in and just headin' her off from tormentin' the whole caboodle of ye; and as for that child, she's worn to a thread just standing her ma an' trying to fight her back. When her husband come and took them three rooms up top for her and the nurse, he says, 'Now, Mis' Hull, you mustn't mind it if my wife has little ways. You will get along, I'm sure,' he says, and I says, 'I haven't never had trouble yet, Mr. Jenkins, and I don't expect it.' But there! She's down in the kitchen and everywheres, and she advises me till I'm fit to drop, with just nothing but pure tiredness at her tongue, and I do believe there ain't a boarder she don't meddle with. To have her eye one before she begins is same as a fit of sickness, and as for the notions about the child's food and that baby! Well, I never see the beat, nor he either, and he's been about considerable."

"Oh, come, Mrs. Hull, never mind," said Mr. Benner, who had looked more and more disturbed as she went on. "She is the only fly in the ointment, and we don't mean to mind."

"No," the youngest maiden broke in, "we don't mean to and you mustn't, either."

Mrs. Hull shook her head. "You're real good-natured to pretend you don't mind," she said, "but I've seen how it made you all feel. It seems as if I really ought to take something off the board to make up for every one of you being so tormented."

"Take everything but the green apple pies," said Mr. Benner. "Leave us them and I'll guarantee to stand Mrs. Percival Jenkins till my time is up, but never take her again."

"There ain't a house in the town big enough to hold her kind," said Mrs. Hull. "I've warned folks all round, and she will be surprised next year when she goes to engage, to find it can't be done. At least 'twon't be done anywheres in this end of the town. Maybe the upper end needs some taking down and she'll be a kind of a missionary to 'em."

Is this a record of final conquest, or even an attempt at conquest? By no means. It recites merely the woes one dominant woman had power to inflict, and which she carried with her into other unsuspecting corners to which the weary flee for summer rest. Luckily, this type does not haunt woods or fields, and it is only three times a day that she must be faced, but as yet, the five who talked together know she is inescapable and wonder what method could subdue or turn aside the torrent of instruction she bears with her.

"Suppression is a mere makeshift. It is extinction that is needed," pronounced the oldest maiden, "and I don't see my way clear to that."

"Get somebody to put her in the papers," suggested the youngest, and somebody has put her in the papers.

Lanesborough, Mass.

SIDE-LIGHTS—FOR WORKERS.

BY E. E. L.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union in one of our busy factory towns was just assembling for its regular afternoon meeting, but as one after another entered the pleasant hall in which they were accustomed to gather it was quite evident from the smile of pleased surprise and approbation on their faces as they glanced around the room that something of unusual interest had happened, or was about to occur. As the clock struck the hour of three, the president, Mrs. Hope, arose and said, "Let us open our service by singing that grand old Crusade hymn,

"'Give to the winds thy fears,
Hope, and be undismayed;
God hears thy sighs and counts thy tears,
He shall lift up thy head.'"

At the close of the hymn Mrs. Hope remarked in a feeling manner, "My sisters, I think before proceeding further with the exercises I ought to give you a brief report of our last gathering, and why it is that to-day some of our hearts are filled to overflowing with love and gratitude for the very marked answer to our prayers which we see in the unusual number here this afternoon, some of whom have not met with us before.

"At our last meeting, two weeks ago, only four persons were present; as time passed our hearts sank within us, for there was not a quorum, and notwithstanding the efforts some of us had made to attend, we should have to go home from a vain endeavor; but the thought of that Friend who had promised to meet with two or three, but whom in our discouragement we had forgotten, made us realize that it was positively wicked to ignore His presence.

"So instead of retracing our steps, we knelt in 'all-around' prayer for the divine blessing and guidance and such answers of peace and happiness came to us as we had never before experienced. As we arose from our knees we sang that precious hymn, 'He leadeth me,' and then we had a social talk as to what we could do for the good of the union.

"Sister Light said she had been thinking lately that perhaps it would be a good plan if we should all unite in a noon-hour petition during the ensuing two weeks, for an increase of numbers at our very next meeting and for the bracing up of our own members. She said she had always liked the idea of the moment of prayer at mid-day but never could remember it at such a busy time, but thought perhaps if we had some definite subject and agreed together in this way she should remember it. We consented that our faith ought to be equal to seeing grand results, especially if we tried to answer our own prayers by inviting all we could to the meeting; accordingly we four women pledged ourselves to this definite action; and I am sure these sisters agree with me that God has fulfilled the promise to us that if we ask anything in His name it shall be given us."

"All for Jesus, all for Jesus,
All my being's ransomed powers,"

rang out in sacred sweetness, and as the closing notes died away the president called on Miss Light to give her experience in carrying out the plan. Miss Light, known throughout the community as a thoroughly consistent Christian and a devoted white-ribboner, readily responded: "I presume I need not inform the most of you that the idea of observing a moment of silent prayer at noon in special petition for our unions, originated in the consecrated mind of Mrs. Frances T. Moores, treasurer of the first W. C. T. U. formed in Newark, N. J. It was my suggestion, but with few exceptions has my agreement occurred to me at precisely the noon hour. Often before and after the appointed time have I raised my heart in prayer to God for His blessing on the union, and especially for this meeting, but it did seem if any person or thing needed particular attention it was sure to be just at that moment. But I have been more successful in carrying out the suggestion that we should try to answer our own prayers. One pleasant afternoon I started out for some calls on several of our members whom I had not seen at our meetings for a long while, and on ladies who had plenty of time at their disposal but preferred to spend it in frivolous amusements, or in making 'silly nothings,' rather than in a temperance or religious meeting. Oh, how I sympathized with the mothers of little children who are just longing to be with us, because of their love and anxiety for these same dear ones, but whose cares seem to forbid. As a result of that and one other afternoon's effort I have the pleasure of seeing here six of the ladies whom I invited, and I know of four new members that have been added to our 'Loyal Legion,' so that I feel encouraged to renew my promise for another two weeks."

"Sister King," a sweet-faced, motherly woman in the prime of life, modestly arose, saying she was sorry she could not point to such large results as Sister Light, but she could say she had conscientiously tried to do her duty and keep her pledge. "Perhaps," said she, "some of you know what it is to have a troop of hungry boys and girls, just let loose from school, coming in with appetites that will brook no delay; if so, you will know how to sympathize with me when I thought I should surely forget my promise at the noon hour; but I am glad to say that my fears were groundless, for every day, no matter how busy I was, as the clock struck twelve the remembrance came to me, and as I worked I inwardly prayed for our union and particularly for this meeting that it might be a great success both in numbers and interest. I had no time for making calls, as I should have liked, and so the callers were sent to me. It seemed as if there never were so many running in as during that week. I had a word of invitation for each and I am so glad that three of my friends accepted it and are here this afternoon. I, too, feel like renewing my pledge for another two weeks." As she took her seat, a lady in the audience, who, it was evident, was a stranger (and whom many of the sisters had been furtively watching, wondering who she was) started in a clear, rich voice the little hymn:

"There's a call for faithful laborers
In the vineyard of the Lord,
Where the ruthless hand of Satan
Has been scattering tares abroad;
'Tis a call that must be answered—
Are you ready to begin,
To spread a glorious gospel
O'er a world now dead in sin?"

As the words were unfamiliar, the lady was obliged to carry the hymn through alone, and Mrs. Hope inwardly thought, "Oh, if she would only join us what a help her voice would be in our meetings." Audibly she said, "Thank you, sister, the words are very appropriate."

"And now, Sister Bessie," she continued, "shall we hear from you?" The lady thus familiarly addressed was the youngest of them all, and evidently, a "new recruit in the white ribbon army." She somewhat diffidently complied with the request, and said, "I have been listening very intently, Madam President, to the ladies who have preceded me to see if their experiences had been anything like mine, and have been rather surprised that they were not, inasmuch as they do not seem to have had any very hard crosses to bear, while I have had so many to take up; but I have somewhere read that

" 'Trials make the promise sweet,
Trials give new life to prayer,
Trials bring me to His feet,
Lay me low, and keep me there.'

These words have proven true in my own case, and so I feel very 'humble this afternoon, yet rejoicing.' My first cross came in this way. I was practicing a duet with my brother, who, some of you know, is just home from college on his vacation, and though my promise had been on my mind all the morning, I had become so interested in our music as to have forgotten it, when suddenly the clock struck the noon hour. In an instant my promise came to me. I immediately stopped, and placing my hands to my face, engaged in silent prayer. Naturally, my brother was alarmed at my sudden action and asked if I was faint, or if he could do anything for me. Of course, then I had to explain; and to my surprise, instead of making fun of me as I feared he would do, he commended me for keeping my promise, and as he seemed in a sober mood, I had just such an opportunity for a free talk with him as I had been longing for ever since his return. He told me some things that set me to thinking, as never before, how much influence a young woman can have over a young man, and how careful she should be to exert it always on the right side.

"On another occasion I was shopping with a friend in the city, and, being tired and hungry, we stepped into a neighboring restaurant for lunch. As we rested ourselves at the table I heard some one exclaim, 'Just twelve o'clock!' and sure enough, glancing at my watch I found the hands on the noon hour. I closed my eyes and kept my promise, not, however, without my friend observing the action and asking, 'Have you the headache?' I said no, and as she seemed very curious as to what I had done I explained all about it. She was not so sympathetic as brother Harry, but her remarks as well as his set me to thinking. 'Why,' said she, 'you are a regular crusader, aren't you? You ought to start a Y right off.' Then I was the one to question her as to what a Y was and all about it, for though I had belonged to the union a number of weeks, I had not happened to hear it mentioned. She told me of a visit she had recently made to a cousin in Amesbury and how wide awake the young women there were; that she had often wondered why the union here hadn't a Y, but she saw now they were waiting for me to form it. I was quite stirred with the idea and told her I would try to do what I could if she would join the union and help me, provided, of course, the union gave me authority. At first she treated the matter lightly but when she saw I was in earnest, she assented. Other crosses came to me much harder to bear than these, but I wish to renew my pledge for two weeks."

As she took her seat Mrs. H. arose. "I confess," she said, "I feel rebuked by a portion of our sister's remarks. I have been backward in trying to interest our young people in our work, but I acknowledge that I was discouraged: they seemed to be so utterly given over to a love of the world that I could not think of one whom I should be at all likely to induce to lead such a movement. When this dear girl was so wonderfully converted and led by the Spirit to unite with us, I thought, 'Now here is just the one for the work;' but the tempter said; 'don't ask her yet, if you do she may be frightened and not dare to come to the meetings for fear some burden will be placed upon her;' but you see I was unnecessarily alarmed and how remarkably she has been led right into the work. Will some one make a motion that Miss Bessie Joy be appointed Superintendent of Y work? And now, last of all, I must relate my experience in trying to keep my pledge. As each one has spoken, there has been something said in which I could particularly sympathize, and yet none of you have had just my experience. When Sister L. spoke of making calls and of the mothers whose home duties prevented their coming to the meetings, I recalled several of that class whom I knew and also others who were laid on beds of sickness who had repeatedly told me that they thought of and prayed for us if they could not be with us; and when Sister K. spoke of the hungry boys and girls coming home at the noon hour, my heart was indeed touched, for some of you remember my own little group that, one by one, has been called to where they hunger no more, but leaving me with an aching void in my heart nothing earthly can ever fill: how many times these lines have come to me in my lonely hours:

" 'A feeling of bitterness fills my soul,
Sometimes when I try to pray—
That the reaper has spared so many flowers
And taken mine away:
And I almost doubt if the Lord can know
That a mother's heart can love them so.'

"A little before twelve, the first day, I had seated myself with my Bible and hymn-book prepared to have a little quiet prayer-meeting all by myself, when my pastor, Rev. Mr. Vance, stood at the door. Of course I invited him in, though I fear not so cordially as I might otherwise have done. Here, indeed, was one of sister Bessie's crosses looming up before me, for though he is a conscientious Christian, he has not shown much sympathy with our work, being of the class that seems to think the church as it is, covers all the ground. I was embarrassed, but told him of our agreement, and asked him to unite with me in prayer. This he did and said he would like to talk with me about our work, but as he felt in a great hurry he should be obliged to wait until a more convenient season for us both, and simply state the object of his call; this was to request me to assist in the arrangements for a fair to be held in the church in aid of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society which he considered of vast importance. Now just here came in another cross. I must, at the risk of being misunderstood and incurring his displeasure, tell him how I felt in relation to church fairs and similar entertainments held in the house of God for the purpose of advancing religious objects. I told him I would help in money, but could not spend time in tending tables or making fancy work when there were so many perishing right at our own doors. It was evident he did not sympathize at all in my views of the subject; but we parted amicably, I, however, sad at heart, and longing for the day to come when people shall be willing to aid a good cause without expecting an equivalent in return, and when ministers will refuse to have anything to do with making the church a place of merchandise.

"On another occasion I was obliged to go out on some errands, and was standing in front of a book-store looking at some volumes, when to my surprise, as I had no idea it was so late, the noon hour struck; I closed my eyes where I stood, when, on the instant a friendly voice laughingly accosted me with, 'Well done, Mrs. Hope! you are fairly going to sleep over this enchanting window, but I've come along just in time to wake you up and give you an invitation as well. Won't you attend at least one of the meetings at our church next week, the week of prayer? There are so few women who ever say a word in public, and it might help some one else if you will come and give them a start.' I replied that I would try to make a special effort to be present at the temperance meeting. 'Temperance meeting!' she exclaimed, 'Why, what do you mean; it is the week of prayer; there is to be no temperance meeting.' 'So I supposed,' I said, 'and therefore was the more ready to promise; but don't you think there should be one evening devoted to that important subject as well as any of the others? My heart was deeply pained as I glanced over the list of topics for the week, that again this weighty matter had been omitted.' 'Well, really, Mrs. Hope, don't you think you are just a little too exacting about this?' she rejoined. 'Of course, the greater includes the less, and temperance is often meant when it is not specially mentioned.' 'Perhaps,' I said, 'but isn't it well that idea is not carried out in every calling of life. For instance, how glad one is who has some particular disease that there are specialists amongst our physicians who know just how to treat the case. I will promise to come provided you will go to the next meeting of our W. C. T. U.;' and as she is here this afternoon, I do not feel that noon prayer was in vain.

"I, with the others, feel like renewing my pledge for the ensuing two weeks. And now let me sum up results. The observance of the noon hour, though we have been unmindful of it heretofore, has proven a delightful success for us. Our attendance this afternoon is more than double its usual number. Four have been added to the L. T. L. and a Y is soon to be formed. Surely, we have great reason to take courage and press on in the work. Are there others of our members who would like to join what we may call our 'prayer league'?" Several ladies arose in response to this invitation and then those present who were not members were invited to join the union. The lady who had so pleased the company by her delightful singing at the opening of the meeting, arose and said, "I have been in this town now about five weeks and during all this time have been trying to ascertain if there was such an organization as the W. C. T. U. Through the efforts of my grocer I at last heard of this meeting. I have belonged to the union in the city where I formerly resided ever since it was first started, and felt very lonesome and homesick without what we call 'the blessed comradeship of the white ribbon army,' so that I am more than glad to unite with you and do all that I can to help on the good work. I have enjoyed the meeting intensely and most heartily will join in the prayer league." The hearty applause which followed showed how cordially she was welcomed by the sisters, while Mrs. Hope arose and said, "Only the old-fashioned doxology can express the sentiments of our heart for this week's meeting."

RAILROAD TIES.

XI.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

Peoria—Easter—Christ Church a wilderness of lilies—exquisite music—short, tender sermon. Then Mr. Fairley, the rector, said, "Ye who do truly and earnestly repent of your sins, and are in love and charity with your neighbors, and intend to lead a new life, following the commandments of God, and walking from henceforth in His holy ways, draw near with faith and take this holy sacrament to your comfort, and make your humble confession to Almighty God, devoutly kneeling."

And, as if afraid that even the sweet, old invitation might seem somewhat formal to some, he added, "You need not be a member of this church or any church. If now, for the first time, you feel like forsaking your sins and giving yourself to Jesus Christ, this is His table, not ours, and we bid you hearty welcome." And my whole soul said "Amen!" . . . . I whispered to my hostess, whom I had known just twelve hours, "Is the wine alcoholic?" And she whispered, "I made it with my own hands." and I said in my heart, "Amen! Wine that your hands made I'll drink to-day," and I did. . . . . And if you had known her twelve hours you'd have known I took no risk. . . . .

By the same token, if to-night were the Cana wedding and I were bidden and the bride should put in my hand a brimming cup and say, "Pledge me in this red wine—Jesus made it"—I would drink and know full well the draught would stir no passion—bring back no memory of wild debauch, kindle no thick-tongued lust . . for I know Jesus. . . . . Yet, I dare say that if, two thousand years hence, the records of Christ Church should be discovered, showing that for the sacrament of Easter Sunday, A. D. 1892, wine was brought by a woman, some scholar-pastor of the "Church of the Holy Distillery" would write an article to prove that her Easter offering was alcoholic. . . . . There would be no way to account for his so writing, except that he had never known Lucie B. Tyng.

New England R. R.

Correspondence.

THE COLUMBIAN ASSOCIATION OF HOUSEKEEPERS AND BUREAU OF INFORMATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Columbian Association of Housekeepers held its last regular meeting on April 27th, at the new Church Temple, Chicago, with a full attendance and most interesting discussion of topics. Mrs. Watson read a report of the last meeting of that department. The Hull House management had offered to the Columbian Association the use of rear cottage at 221 Ewing street, with all furnishings, free of rent. It was suggested that if the mornings were given up to New England Kitchen purposes, the afternoons might be devoted to the Training School for domestic service. It had been moved at this meeting that the Columbian Association guarantee the rent of flats in a tenement house near the Kitchen, furnish, and employ a teacher of cooking, utilizing the Hull House Kitchen for teaching purposes during the afternoons, and maintaining the pupils while teaching them. It had been decided that Mrs. Mary Hinman Abel should be asked to lecture to the Columbian Association. A very interesting letter from Mrs. Helen Starrett was read, giving her ideas as to how the work at the central office might be advanced. Mrs. Starrett thought five thousand names of housekeepers might be secured, with a fee of one or two dollars. This sum would enable the association to open the central office and the School for Applied Household Science. Any girl recommended by her employer, in whose service she had been at least six months, to be enrolled free of charge. It should be made an object, an ambition, for good girls to be placed on the roll of honor. It was suggested that a woman like Maria Parloa, of Boston, at the head, would make a success of this work.

Mrs. Starrett thought this a chance for women to win a more enduring name in the solution of the household problem than the fame of her who discovers new planets. Miss Leavens thought some good plan should be proposed by which the names of housekeepers could be secured. Various suggestions were made by the members, one being that housekeepers be asked to coöperate with us, and furnish names of those in their employ.

Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert spoke of the great need in village communities of coöperation, dwelling particularly upon the needs of women in the new towns of the far west. "Housekeeping she thought one of the most beautiful professions in the world." The stigma of housekeeping should be removed, and then there would be many ways of coöperating. The woman whose daughter longs for piano lessons, might coöperate with her neighbor over the way, who never has any success in preserving fruits, and similar household work, but is a good music teacher. Central reading rooms and central amusement rooms are needed in village communities. Mrs. Harbert expressed firm faith in coöperative housekeeping, "in spite of ignominious failure." Men and women must work together to insure success in this direction. A dozen families might combine to better advantage than a larger number, while coöperative laundries and kitchens will save our homes to us. The word "servant" must be eliminated before this great domestic problem can be properly handled. The plan of work done by the hour was approved.

Mrs. Rohde spoke earnestly of the benefit of Prof. Salmon's lectures on domestic service and said every woman in Chicago ought to have heard them; that women did not work on long lines enough; did not examine a question thoroughly in the beginning, consequently their work was somewhat empirical. The study of sociology was earnestly recommended.

Mrs. Watson then spoke of the Aladdin oven, its economy first being regarded, both in material and as a labor saving device. The best results are often obtained by giving a little attention to the preparation of dishes from odds and ends.

Mrs. Trumbull and Mrs. Brooks, who have had much experience with this oven, kindly gave the benefit of it to the Columbian Association. Mrs. Trumbull was more than satisfied with the results obtained. She was able to prepare her dinner early in the morning, place it in the oven where by the slow process of cooking, she could leave it, go down town shopping, return at half-past twelve to find a delicious dinner ready cooked in the dishes in which it should be served, thus doing away with pots and kettles.

The oven had been thoroughly tested and really did more than Mr. Atkinson claimed for it. Onions, cabbage and turnips had been cooked at the same time with custard and tapioca, with no intermixing of flavors and no odors escaping into the room. Mrs. Trumbull said the dishes prepared in this oven were so thoroughly and scientifically cooked that it was economy of nutrition. The tougher and most nutritive parts of meat being rendered as tender as the choicest cuts cooked in the ordinary method. When asked if any girl in the kitchen could manage one of these ovens, Mrs. Trumbull replied, "Brains accompany the oven, and it is only necessary to follow the directions in the little book Mr. Atkinson sends out."

She thought the oven a great gain in the peace and quiet it brought to the housekeeper, there being no running to the kitchen in fear of too hot a fire, no scorching of faces, and if a member of the family is late, dinner can be delayed and still be in perfect condition. Food cooked in this oven can be kept better and longer than that cooked in the ordinary way. Mrs. Brooks had been very successful in using the oven, but thought all of them required tempering when new, and that any girl who would follow directions could use them. Many questions were asked in regard to the ovens, after which the meeting adjourned until the last Wednesday in May, when all housekeepers are cordially invited to be present.

MRS. JNO. WILKINSON, Pres.
MRS. THOS. F. GANE, Vice-Pres.
MRS. H. S. TAYLOR, Sec.
MRS. FRANCES E. OWENS, Treas.

LETTER FROM INDIA AND CEYLON.

DEAR MISS WEST AND SISTERS OF THE ILLINOIS WOMAN'S PRESS ASSOCIATION:—I cannot tell you how often in this far-away land my thoughts revert to you. This has especially been the case in these days when I know it is about the time for the annual meeting. It seems very strange not having a hand in arranging for the banquet, the election of officers, etc.

Of one thing though, I am glad, and that is that our society is sufficiently strong not to be dependent upon a single member. I wish I knew the results of the election, and if the banquet was as fine as the one of last year. I shall always remember that occasion with a great deal of pleasure. It will be at least six weeks before I get news of the annual meeting.

India is a very wonderful and a very peculiar country; its people are of so many nationalities, its interests are so diversified, its religions so various and its inconsistencies so monstrous that, to study it and the people is like entangling a very much snarled skein of silk. Whenever you get hold of a thread that you think you can unravel no matter what color, size or texture, it is sure to run to one knot in the center and that knot is caste. Caste is the car of Juggernaut that clogs the wheel of progress, and though the railways, the telegraphs, the English schools and the mild but firm English rule have done so much for the people and the country, still the home of the Hindu is scarcely changed from former times, because it, of all things, is ruled by the laws of caste.

Among the women whom I have met is Dr. Emma Brainerd Ryder of New York. She came out here three years ago with Pundita Ramabai, and has ever since been devoting herself to studying the customs of the country and doing what she may for the women here. She organized in Bombay a woman's club, which was named the Sorosis, the first literary club in all India for native women. Motto of Sorosis,—Tell them the world is made for women also.

The members of the club are largely native girls who have graduated from the university and who had no further helps for progress and no outlet for accumulated knowledge. These are mostly Parsi girls and now and then a Hindu, Mohammedan and Eurasian.

The women of the Brahmin or high caste can never remain in school after twelve and seldom after ten years of age, so they can never become graduates, unless they have private instruction after they are married. They must be married before eleven, but usually the marriage is not consummated until maturity, though there is not growth or development for marriage state.

The Sorosis under Dr. Ryder's management has not only been successful and beneficial for the members, but has aided in Bombay in giving women an independent position, and although carried on under many obstacles it is now looked upon with favor. Dr. Ryder has written a book entitled the "Little Wives of India," which is now in the publishers' hands. She sent the manuscript to Jennie June who wrote a review of the book, which you may have seen. Through her profession the doctor has been in the homes of the Hindu, and can testify to what she has seen. Her book will give some conception of the difficulties of educating girls here, or of advancing freedom for women.

I have myself talked with a well educated Brahmin who holds a high position, and can discourse eloquently upon philosophy and religion. He says: "Our women do not need school education. We do educate them to cook, to take care of their houses and children, and to administer to their husbands. But what need has a woman for books? She is better than the chattels and lower than the dogs." I could scarcely have believed this had I not heard it myself. If the hope of India was in the education of the Brahmin (high caste) Hindu women, it would take centuries before we could see progress. Fortunately, though, the lower castes can be reached, so also the Eurasians, who are a mixed race. The Parsees, too, are doing nobly for their girls, but these are few in number, 75,000, in all.

I visited in Bombay an excellent school for Parsi girls, sustained mainly by private friends. A wealthy Hindu gentleman determined to emulate the Parsees and endowed a girls' school. It was opened with speech and parade, but lo, only two girls appeared as students. He then bribed them to come and this succeeded, and he has about 200 girls earning money as pupils! To think, free schools, free books and pay to boot! Would Americans do this to have their girls educated?

In other parts of India I found ideas had advanced so that girls' schools were patronized without the bribe. This is especially the case in the Madras presidency. Here Mrs. Brander is appointed by the English government as inspector of girls' schools. Although this position was created for this lady, she has proved herself wonderfully qualified to fill it. She has five hundred schools under her charge (some of them small) consisting of Hindus, Mohammedans, Eurasians and Christians, which include Catholics. The government supports schools of any or of no religion, but requires standards before this support is awarded. Mrs. Brander's territory covers a larger area than the state of Illinois. She spends eight months of the year in traveling, taking two secretaries and a servant with her. Only a small portion of her schools can be reached by rail, so she must use tongas (stages), bullock carts, or what offers, to reach them. Most of the journeys must be made at night to avoid the heat. Mrs. Brander has a normal training school in Madras. I saw many of the examination papers and was pleased to note that high standards are required. Many of the teachers take kindergarten training, which, considering the difficulties in the way, is better than one would expect. She, herself, had kindergarten training in England.

On the Malabar coast, Southwest India, we found strange mixtures. Among these we were interested in was the Syrian Catholic church, said to have been founded by St. Thomas. At all events it was very old and seemed as much to belong to the people and the people to it, as the Hindu religion. It includes about one-third of the population; another third are Naiars; these are high caste Brahmins—said to be very high, but the peculiarity is that the women are free—even freer than our women. They choose their husbands, own the property, are not married young, can ship a husband if they choose, and the property is entailed through a sister, or not having a sister through a brother. As one man explained it, the family is founded on the idea of the mother being at the head, the one to have and to hold. At all events we found these Naiar women handsome, intelligent, and living in much better homes than other natives. One of them, a blind woman, taught music in a native girls' school. The music was harsh and monotonous, but we recognized in it an effort for self-evolution, which is always good.

In this district they have good native schools, supported by the native Rajah, without help from missionaries or the English government. We made the acquaintance of the principal of a high school, also of a normal school. Both of these men were intelligent, educated natives, fully imbued with the spirit of educational progress. The principal of the normal school had supplied himself with kindergarten books and materials, and was patiently endeavoring to fit himself to train his teachers in kindergarten methods. These schools were not for girls, but there were girls' schools also. The principal of the normal school, P. Subramima Iyer, said we were the first European ladies he had ever spoken to, and he should have our names put up on the walls of his school as the women who befriended native education and wore the peculiar dress. Miss Muller and Dr. Ryder were with me at Trichor.

That the native schools in this district were more advanced, more progressive and more independent, we attributed to the fact of the freedom of the Naiar women. The hope of any country is in its education, but that is especially true of India, whose people so long having lived as a conquered race, are mostly noted for indolence, apathy, unpunctuality, and a dreamy (to us), mystic philosophy among the learned.

. . . . . .

Dear friends, I cannot close this long letter without telling you of the Sangamitta girls' school at Colombo, Ceylon. I now write from the large veranda of this school, in the shade of palms and a beautiful nutmeg tree. Ceylon is more advanced in what is called civilization, and its native religion being Buddhistic, they are not so bound by the Gordian knot of caste as the Hindus. So one is not so surprised to find among the natives an educational society for the especial purpose of establishing girls' schools. These have been started in many parts of the island.

This special school has formerly been conducted and managed by natives, but a notice was put in the Path by Colonel Olcott saying that an educated American woman of experience, who had missionary zeal, was needed to take charge of the school and the work here. This notice was answered by Mrs. M. Moreans Higgins who held a good position in the post-office department at Washington. This position she gave up and here she is full of energy and enthusiasm. She is a German by birth and has taught school both in Germany and America, besides having various other life experiences. Although here but a short time she has created order out of chaos. She has nearly one hundred pupils and the attendance is on the increase; a few of the pupils are boarders. The school now is hampered for want of funds and one who wishes to assist in laying the foundation for progress in Ceylon, can do no better than contribute to its support. Like our free public schools it teaches no religion, or at least does not in any way interfere with preconceived religious opinions. Many Americans, like myself, have declined supporting missionaries in foreign lands, because they come here with their religion hampered by creed and dogma, but I should be glad to further a movement of this kind, and feel that I had an interest in this wonderful land and a kinship with its people.

I know there is plenty of missionary work at home, but may it not after all be true that we cannot, as Americans, climb very high on the ladder of progress, if any nation or people are far behind us? The world is small and all emanate from one source. The difference in fundamental principles of religion even are not as great as many suppose, while most life interests are common. I am sure no one would ever regret aiding the Sangamitta Girls' School of Colombo, Ceylon.

And now, dear friends, I leave you reluctantly, for more is unsaid than I have written. Others can tell you of the mountains, the rivers, the temples, the marvelous vegetation of India, but I simply testify of what I have seen.

I have had a rare opportunity of knowing personally native men and women, and feel that the little I have written may be of special interest. I trust to be with you at the June meeting; until then I remember you all with kindness and affection. Yours,

ALICE B. STOCKHAM.

Ceylon.

The above entertaining letter was written for the annual meeting of the Illinois Woman's Press Association, but arriving too late, THE UNION SIGNAL takes pleasure in giving it to the public at large.

President's Column.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.

AMERICAN—Chicago, Ill., The Temple, La Salle St.
ENGLISH—London, 57 Gordon Square, N. W.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. OFFICERS.

President—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large—LADY HENRY SOMERSET, 13 Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London, E. C., Eng.
Secretary—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, O.
Assistant Secretary—ANNA A. GORDON, Evanston, Ill.
Treasurer—MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS, 36 Chomedy St., Montreal, Can.

"The best that any mortal hath is that which every mortal shares."—Lucy Larcom.

N. B.—When one is president of two societies whose official organ is edited by their president, it becomes a somewhat difficult question as to how much shall be in the said official organ relative to the said president. After due consideration, it has been decided that the constituency is entitled to know where its president is and what she is doing, but that complimentary allusions to that officer are not in good taste. Hence if they are seen in THE UNION SIGNAL it will be without the knowledge or consent of the editor-in-chief. The same applies to another editor greatly beloved and honored by us all—the President of the British Women's Temperance Association. "All and singular" will please observe this announcement, and pass it on to critics in general and particular.

***

The news comes to us from Monroe, Louisiana, that those two brilliant speakers and writers, Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, of Mississippi (of the Presbyterian Church South), and Miss Frances E. Griffin, of Alabama (of the Baptist Church), have joined the Methodist Church at a meeting now in progress. The small elbow room vouchsafed to women's work in the denominations that these ladies have left, explains their action.

***

MY DEAR MISS WILLARD:—You are wont to speak in my honor that I have reared three generations. I write to tell you that I am a great-grandmother. My granddaughter, Mrs. Zella L. Groves, gave birth to a precious little daughter on the 28th of April, so you see I shall have to assist in the rearing of the fourth generation. I hope to live to aid and abet her mother in developing her into a grand and noble woman who shall swell the ranks and add another to the number of workers for God and humanity. Your sincere friend,

ZERELDA G. WALLACE.

Indianapolis, Ind., April 30, 1892.

***

Miller's Hotel, 39 West 26th street, New York, is, and has been for more than a quarter of a century, a well-conditioned, homelike place for temperance people. Here we "set up our rest" when passing through the city en route home from Boston last week. Dr. and Mrs. E. P. Miller are well-known writers on reform topics; Mrs. Miller's brother, Mr. Charles Haynes, is the present proprietor. Many of our people will be glad to know these facts.

***

"If you want knowledge you must toil for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it. Toil is the law! Pleasure comes by toil and not by self-indulgence and indolence. When one gets to love his work his life is a happy one".—Ruskin.

***

PETITION OF THE

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

FOR THE

PROTECTION OF THE HOME

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends

NAMES. | RESIDENCES

We must have one million names this year. Will not men and women, youths and maidens, boys and girls, who love the great cause of home protection, paste this petition on a nice, white sheet of paper and circulate it to the best of their ability, sending the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Rest Cottage, Evanston, Ill.?

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass, he shall have whatsoever he saith.—Mark 11. 23.

The completion of the Temple so that tenants could occupy it the beginning of this month has brought out a great deal of comment by the daily press. The Chicago Inter-Ocean, under the heading, "Palaces Dedicated," has this to say of "Our House Beautiful:" "The Temple, well termed the most beautiful of the Columbian city's commercial palaces, will be ready for occupancy May 1. It was of the Temple surely the bard sung, 'I dreamt I dwelt in marble halls.' The vision rises in full-orbed beauty immediately beyond the great arch of entrance; nobly sculptured in conventional oak leaves, to the topmost corridor the white marble luster of the grand central rotunda penetrates. Like the beauty and fragrance of clustered roses, the east facade and skyward foliation suggest the charm and geniality of John Root's presence, and are a living memorial of the artist architect. The Temple's roof climaxes the beautiful building, just as the head of the Venus de Milo completes the statue's symmetry of proportion, that subtile presence which in architecture, as in sculpture and painting, distinguishes fine art. Not the Bishop of London's new crosier has richer crotchets, nor the 'frozen music' of Milan cathedral more crystalline harmonies. In clusters of graceful gothic, the roof windows and red pinnacles aspire in sumptuous foliation to the topmost height."

***

The sale of silver models of the Temple is greatly on the increase, and we only hear words of admiration in regard to them. Mrs. L. S. Mount, state president, Mississippi W. C. T. U., writes: "The beautiful silver Temple with its two ink wells I exhibited with much pride to our local union this morning. It excited great admiration, and my next door neighbor has already decided her husband shall present her with one like it on her next birthday." Mrs. M. J. Borden, state president, New Mexico, writes: "This 'House Beautiful' received; it really seems too beautiful to be made an ink receptacle." Mrs. Esther T. Housh, state president, Vermont, writes: "The beautiful silver Temple came all right. 'Immense!' Frank says, 'Too good for ink,' so it graces our parlor." Mrs. Mary A. Babcock, state president, Rhode Island, exclaims: "The Temple inkstand received. It is a very pretty and unique ornament and especially prized because it will be a constant reminder of the great work before us, as we must gain control of the magnificent structure." Every person who purchases one of the Temple models will add so much to our building fund and help us the sooner to secure full ownership of the building. Price of inkstand and jewel case each $2.25; Temple bank, $1.75. Address Mrs. Carse for models.

***

We wish again to call the attention of our friends to the fact that the photographic group with autographs attached, consisting of Lady Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, will not be sent to any person unless they comply with the terms on which the picture has been promised—viz,—It will be sent to all persons who send for a mite-box and fill it between April, 1892, and April, 1893. It will not be sent for boxes which have been filled during the past year, or on behalf of any other gift to the Temple. Our friends must understand it is given for the purpose of stimulating persons to send for mite-boxes, and we cannot break through the rule. If we do so with one we have to do it with all, and so would defeat the object for which we give the prize. Send a two cent stamp to Mrs. Carse, get a mite-box and by filling it by or before April you will secure the picture.

***

"It is with great pleasure that I forward to you the enclosed draft of $100 for a tablet in Willard Hall, from the unions of Warren county, Pennsylvania." writes Mrs. A. B. Miller, and adds, "Some have thought we needed the money most for the work at home, but we have decided with united love and self-denial to 'lend a hand' in the building of that Temple which will stand for God and humanity long after our work here is ended." Sixty-seven dollars and seventy-six cents is the amount that has been paid by the Lawrence, Kan., W. C. T. U. on a pledge of a hundred. This money has been raised largely through the self-sacrificing efforts of Mrs. N. A. Peers. We are glad to see the Kansas unions are waking up to the importance of furthering their own interests as well as that of the temperance cause in sending money to the building fund of the Temple. Their record in the past in this respect has been far behind their sister states of the west. However, their present, wide-awake and broad-minded president, Mrs. Grubb, will soon bring up the honor of the state in this respect, as she is in hearty accord with the great Temple enterprise, and is doing all she can to arouse the white-ribboners of her state to a like spirit. Mrs. D. D. Mitchell, Bellefonte, Pa., sends $100, the gift of the white-ribboners of Center county, Pa., to have the name of their county president, Mrs. John P. Harriss, inscribed in Willard Hall.

Mrs. V. H. Danforth sends $40 toward the Chautauqua Memorial Fountain from the W. C. T. U., of Jamestown, N. Y.; this makes $205 which has been paid towards the fountain from Chautauqua county. This fountain is going to be one of the most beautiful features of the magnificent marble corridors which lead to Willard Hall.

***

The following personal gifts have been received: Mrs. L. H. Dewey, Mazon, Ill., sends $103.65; C. A. Hawley, Medina, Ohio, sends $50; Mrs. A. M. Huntley, San Francisco, Cal., $100; Mrs. S. Baldwin, Baltimore, Md., $25; Mrs. Mary N. Morrison, La Porte, Ind., $50 on a pledge of one hundred; Mrs. Emma N. Clements, Philadelphia, Pa., $50 on a hundred dollar pledge.

All communications about the Temple should be sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago.

The Household.

WHEN I HAVE TIME.

When I have time, so many things I'll do
To make life happier and more fair
For those whose lives are crowded now with care;
I'll help to lift them from their low despair—
When I have time!

When I have time, kind words and loving smiles
I'll give to those whose pathway runs through tears,
Who see no joy in all the coming years;
In many ways their weary lives I'll cheer—
When I have time.

When I have time, the friend I love so well
Shall know no more those weary, toiling days;
I'll lead her feet in pleasant paths always,
And cheer her heart with words of sweetest praise—
When I have time.

When you have time! The friend you hold so dear
May be beyond the reach of all your sweet intent;
May never know that you so kindly meant
To fill her life with sweet content—
When you had time.

Now is the time! Ah, friend, no longer wait
To scatter loving smiles and words of cheer
To those around whose lives are now so dear—
They may not need you in the coming year—
Now is the time. —Anon.

"I KNOW SOMETHING NICE OF YOU."

BY M.

"Aunt Esther, won't you tell me how to climb over the misty mountains cousin Prudence is always placing across my way? She compares me to THE UNION SIGNAL, and says I'm too effusive, that I say too many pleasant things to people. I must be less demonstrative; always say good things of people behind their backs, so to speak, but never, never to their faces. She calls all my try-to-be-gentle speeches 'flattery' and says that my friends will think me insincere and that it is sure to make people ego-ish to hear nice things of themselves."

"You poor dear; come over on this cozy couch while I tell you a story of years—yes, years and years ago."

"But, Aunt Esther, you are not so awful old as that, are you? You seem so nice and youthful to me! What nice soft pillows these are—where did they come from?"

"From Alaska—filled with the soft white down of the mountain goat."

"How nice of the goat to be so downy!" said Amy.

"Now, child, first tell me how you come to use that word nice so often?"

"Why, Aunt Esther, that's your very own word; you always use it so charmingly. The happiest voice of my childhood was yours as you whispered, 'I know something nice of you,' and I felt a foot taller all that day, for I knew I had your approbation."

The tears filled Aunt Esther's brown eyes as she said, "It is nice of you to remember that, but that's another story; I will tell you of long ago when my 'fairy canoe rode like foam o'er the wave.' I was a careless, happy girl; I liked everybody and thought everybody liked me; I was not selfish, but I never thought to go out of my way to be thoughtful or generous; anything for fun; anything to have a good time! I was sent to a boarding school. The building was a great gloomy bastilish kind of a place. The energetic professor had been sent by President Lincoln as minister to China. The steward seemed to think it was war times, prices high, and he must stint and scrimp in every way to keep his exchequer on the top wave till the 'master should come back o'er the mighty deep.' The girls were often hungry and ill at ease; wood was not cut as it ought to have been, and the rooms were always cold. My little room-mate, Mollie Brackett, was a sweet-faced, lovable girl, whose dear, generous ways have never faded from my memory. That old steward seemed to buy cheap, illuminating fluid, not odorless, however, for the butter was always impregnated with the oil which was lacking in the halls! No lamps were allowed to be lighted between tea-time and devotions, so there was a half-hour or more after tea, before cheap lamplight, when the younger girls were out in search of fun.

"One night, after a tealess 'tea,' Mollie and I wandered up and down in hope some thrifty senior, who had laid in a store of wood, might ask us to spend a while with her; but seniors were not good to little girls and we hoped in vain. The fifth story of this mansion was reputed to be haunted. We dared each the other to creep to the top of the narrow stairway and listen for the 'shwish' of ghostly garments. We mounted, courage freezing in our veins; we ran down, forgetting Lady McFarland's blue paper, 'Rule No. 35, No young lady allowed in the fifth story.'

"A door opened as we landed at the bottom of the stairs. A teacher, pale, fair, youthful, with auburn hair and a clear brow that seemed crowned with a halo to us, as she said, not sternly as we deserved: 'Well, comrades, what seek you?'

"Her pleasant voice inspired confidence and we instantly told her, 'We are hungry and cold and so lonesome that there is nothing to live for; we have been up to get the ghost to scare us to death.'

"She said, 'Come into my room.' Dear heart, if she had known how afraid we were to go in. For teachers always invited us in to tell us some unpleasant thing 'for our good' and we didn't care to discuss those subjects; we entered gingerly. Oh, that fire! I can see the glimmer all across the years. A stove like an old-fashioned 'deestrick meetin' school-house,' long, narrow—but, oh, such a wealth of red-hot coals! She excused herself a moment telling us to make ourselves 'nice' and comfortable.

"She returned with half a loaf of bread, some deodorized butter from the teachers' table, one knife and three forks; opening the stove door she gave us each a fork, and cut the bread thin. We sat on the floor and toasted it, burned our hands and warmed our souls with happy laughter. Not a word of rebuke for that lost chemistry lesson, not a whisper of mental or moral philosophy. And this was a teacher whom we had been afraid of! The bell for prayers sounded—she took her little Bible and read the verses she would have us repeat in devotions, 'He leadeth me beside still waters, He restoreth my soul.' How those verses always bring back her loving voice.

"She whispered: 'Come to-morrow evening. I know something nice of you.'

"The next twilight found us at her door.

"Thus began a little class that widened in numbers, whose motto was, 'I know something nice of somebody, and I must surely tell her; she will be encouraged.' If a girl were wearied she wandered into this dear room for this teacher's helpful 'something.' If our rooms were unusually 'nice,' we were sure to be told of it. It was like wearing a school medal of the older days. Each tried to be kind and generous to the other and to deserve praise.

"In all the passing years I have never seen a gentle deed, a self-forgetful act, but I have felt that I would like to whisper, 'I know something nice of you.'"

"Who was that fair-faced teacher, Aunt Esther? Did she keep the promise of her youth?"

"Aye, more, Amy; who was that fair-faced girl-teacher? A woman to-day more widely known for the good that has grown by her influence than any other woman in the world. The halo that shone for us has lighted many a foreign shore, for everybody knows something 'nice' of Frances E. Willard, the best loved woman in the world!

"Don't save all your flowers for me till I am dead! Give me a few daisies each day. When I land on the other shore—if I have been faithful—I should like to have Miss Willard's 'sister Mary' meet me on the bank and say, 'I know something nice of you that my sister Frank taught you in dear old Evanston.'"

WHAT SYSTEM OR METHOD SHOULD BE USED IN PHYSICAL EDUCATION?

BY FRANCES W. LEITER.

This is a question that has been asked many times during the past few months, and frequently is coupled with it, Do you believe in "Delsarte"?

It is not surprising that these questions have arisen, considering the fact that some specialists claim to be the originators of systems that stand alone, each in its superiority over all others.

The physiological laws upon which the development of tissue depends are called the "foundation principles" of physical education. The application of these foundation principles in different countries, or through individuals in the same country, has given rise to varying methods. The ideas prevailing in the minds of those applying these principles determine the characteristics of special methods. The main point of difference concerns the use of apparatus—one faction relying upon it, and the opposing faction regarding it unnecessary. One method discards music entirely, while no one regards it applicable in all exercises. One specialist places marked stress upon periodical measurement prescribing exercises based upon the results of these measurements, while another fails to appreciate its importance. One regards a well devised system of pulleys and chest weights as comprehensive and effective in results, while another, seemingly as successful, vigorously opposes them. One seeks strength and health; another adds precision of movement with promptness in execution. All plans promote the end sought, while none can yet claim perfection.

The principal methods are the German, the Ling (or Swedish), and the American.

Graduates from these various schools hold responsible positions over the country, and are realizing satisfactory results. The unsettled problem that is agitating prominent apostles of this new education concerns the adaptation of these methods to our system of graded schools, as all recognize that sooner or later this instruction will be incorporated therein.

No feature of physical education has been more readily accepted among women in particular, than what is known as "Delsarte"; and yet, no part has been so generally misunderstood. It involves not merely what the pose and movement of the body may suggest. In its highest, completest sense it becomes the expression of the soul and mind to the world, through its only existing medium —the physical being. Enthusiasts claim that "Delsarte" includes all; and so has originated what is termed the "Delsarte System of Physical Culture." We may as fittingly declare in favor of a method of mental education, based upon the principles of natural philosophy or psychology, because we must submit to a certain kind and amount of tuition before we can master these advanced studies.

Francois Delsarte was born in France, and died in 1871 at the age of sixty. He possessed a wonderful voice in song. After four years of successful work upon the lyric stage, his voice utterly failed. His time was then devoted to perfecting a system that would give solid foundation to the art of expression. This is based upon scientific knowledge of anatomy and physiology. He studied conscientiously the uses and capabilities of the muscles. Those naturally sought his instruction whose life was devoted to the stage, or whose profession called them within the domain of oratory, as well as those who desired greater personal attractions in social life. He invented the series of mechanical exercises called the freeing process, or movements. These aim to destroy the rigid, unyielding muscular condition that prevails so largely. They aid materially in correcting faults of personal habit, rather than physical conditions—yet which may lead to serious results in health if left unchecked. The freeing process is of great value as a restful measure to the tired, worn out nerves of the American people. Unskilled, indiscreet advocates have done much to drag the work of a great man into disrepute.

This cultivated power of expression is the higher round in the ladder of physical education. Its most successful accomplishment depends upon the fullest possible body development, bringing the body under control of the will. Two reasons exist why Delsarte has not been given its proper place in the curriculum of physical education: First, prominent specialists have been slow to admit its value; so it has not been recognized. Second: As a rule, women and girls have been unwilling to submit to thorough and systematic physical drill for the development of the body in its parts, and as a whole. With society intent, they ask just enough training to secure reasonable grace in movement, with some power of expression, just as the bulk of those inclined strive for sufficient competency at the piano to entertain friends with a few musical selections. These facts compel intelligent, conscientious exponents of this work to institute a limited system of gymnastics as preparatory drill. Madam Géralde, the daughter of Delsarte, stated while in this country, however, that her father did not aim to teach gymnastics.

Delsarte, then, is a system of expression based upon principles laid down by the man whose name it bears. The most intelligent advocates, aiming to follow closely the intent of this eminent artist claim only this for it. It involves education of the body, but of an æsthetic order. It cultivates grace in movement and pose, but cannot, strictly speaking, be called a method of physical education, at least in the tissue-making sense. Dr. Seaver, of Yale College, has said: "The conservation of force is the foundation of the Delsarte system; but only profound ignorance of the physiologic laws of growth and development could excuse the building upon such a principle."

It has been called society gymnastics. This is misleading, as its benefits are more seriously needed by individuals combining robust health and angularity, than the limp society woman who suffers from lack of strength rather than grace. This should, at the proper time, become a part of the physical education of every child.

The American system, as it has been known in the past, is rapidly becoming eclectic, utilizing some features found in both the Swedish and German methods, and including Delsarte principles of expression.

Specialists who have successfully demonstrated the feasibility of this plan in connection with the public schools, as well as in "popular classes," stand, to-day, in the forerank of physical educators. In this present stage of the work in this country, the competency of the instructor should be the supreme concern. The future will determine the preferences and judgments of the people regarding systems.

UNION SIGNAL

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD,
LADY HENRY SOMERSET,
MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH,
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President Board of Directors.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

O, let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.—Ps. 67: 4.

WHITE RIBBON LEGISLATION.

The power of the human mind to resist knowledge is amply illustrated in the supposition still entertained by myriads of intelligent men and women that the W. C. T. U. "has a hobby." The fact is, it has a whole stable full of them, so that it has no need to ride any single one to its detriment or theirs. As we have frequently had occasion to reiterate for the information of strangers, our departments of work are between forty and fifty, with a constantly rising barometer. One great subdivision of these is the legal department, and we will illustrate its method by giving some account of what has been done in the state of New York during the session of the legislature just ended.

Early last autumn it came to our knowledge that barmaids were being imported from England to serve the saloon of "Colonel" Hayward, on Broadway. We at onoe began an agitation against this movement which extended through the reputable press of the United States. Lady Henry Somerset lent her eloquent voice to swell the rising tide of public sentiment against the innovation. Petitions were prepared and Mrs. Mary T. Burt, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, and other leaders in the state of New York sent them to every town and village, and gathering all together at last, they went to the legislature with these protests. The anti-barmaid bill was presented early in March, Hon. Alfred R. Conkling (nephew of Roscoe Conkling and member of the Senate from New York state) introducing it in an admirable speech, and carefully guarding its interests until its passage by that body by a vote of eighty-four to four. The bill then came to a standstill in the Senate, for when reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, objection was made that it was unconstitutional and it was rendered back to that committee. Mrs. Burt, president of the state union, went immediately to Albany, conferred with the chairman and the senator who had made the objection, whereupon the said objection was withdrawn, and on the afternoon of the 6th of April, after a spirited debate of nearly an hour, the Senate passed the bill by a vote of twenty-four to four. During this debate senators from all parts of the state referred in terms of high commendation to the work of the white-ribboners. On the 21st of April, Governor Flower affixed his signature and the bill became a law. This marks an epoch of good and a receding wave of sin. The saloon-keeper who introduced barmaids now says the American people are not "educated up to the idea." Happily it looks as if the present law will put a stop to all "education" of that sort in the great state of New York. It reads as follows:

AN ACT FORBIDDING THE HIRING OF BARMAIDS.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

No female shall be hired as barmaid, or to compound, or dispense intoxicating beverages in any place where the same are sold, or offered for sale.

Doubtless there were ten thousand excellent women who bemoaned themselves when they saw in the papers last autumn that women had begun to deal out drink over the saloon counters in Gotham, but among them all only the W. C. T. U. suited the bemoaning word to the vigorous action, combined their aggregate self-respect and wrought it into petitions, pleas, prayers and victory.

Next the W. C. T. U. worked valiantly to secure the Sunday closing of the state exhibit of New York at the World's Fair. Its effort was crowned with complete success, although others claimed the credit. The facts are that our petition was out early in January, and, so far as can be learned, no other was circulated. A concurrent resolution for Sunday closing was offered in the form of an amendment to the World's Fair Bill. Governor Flower has signed this, and New York is wheeled into line for Sunday closing.

Next comes the infamous Excise Bill, of which we have frequently written during the last few months. The protest of the W. C. T. U. and the agitation against the liquor dealers, while they did not result in the defeat of the bill, were instrumental in securing an almost entire change of its text. The Excise Bill, as it passed the legislature, practically repealed the Civil Damage Act, but just prior to the adjournment of the legislature a supplementary bill, called the Civil Damage Act, was introduced and passed both the Senate and Assembly. This has been signed by the Governor.

The cyclone of wrath and indignation roused against the infamous bill for the licensing of vice prevented its introduction into the legislature. The W. C. T. U. issued the first protest against it and supplied churches, other organizations and individuals with its form, and also agitated the religious and secular press as to the iniquity of the proposed measure.

The woman suffrage bill, by which women would have had a right to vote upon all questions submitted to the vote of the people except that of Presidential electors, passed the Assembly by a very large majority. It was introduced into the Senate and referred to the committee on judiciary, but as this was immediately previous to the adjournment of the legislature, there was not time for its consideration. The passage of the bill by the Assembly is a wonderful step in advance of anything that has ever been done in this country. It is the belief of white ribbon leaders there that women will have the full right to vote in the state of New York within the next five years. It should be said to the credit of the labor organizations that through their efforts the bill was introduced and its original provision was to give "all self-supporting women" the right to vote, but this was afterwards changed to "all women."

In the face of such results as we have chronicled, achieved in one of the most difficult states in the Union, we should take heart of hope. If we could write the story of every state W. C. T. U. during the past winter, its heroism, devotion and intelligence, the results would furnish most inspiring reading. We have chosen New York because there is not a commonwealth in all the forty-four states in which our people have a more general interest. All honor to Mrs. Burt, the president, Mrs. Frances Graham, the secretary, who, as we are informed, has been instant in season and out of season, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, the leader of the Y's, and all the other officers, and that indefatigable "rank and file" who have thus helped humanity by placing their hands upon the levers of power in the great machine shop of government.

PUNDITA RAMABAI.

Some one has said that America never welcomed a more unique, significant, or pathetic figure than Pundita Ramabai. This rare character is recognized in her own country as the greatest Hindu woman that has lived, and by endowment, acquirement, spirituality and devotion she merits this distinction. Her presence at our convention at Nashville in 1887 was the feature of that beautiful and happy gathering. We are earnestly hoping that she may be with us again at the World's W. C. T. U. next June, although this hope is based only on our own earnest desire to see her.

It is well understood by white-ribboners that the school for child widows established by the Pundita has passed beyond the period of experiment and is a recognized institution known and read of all men in India and looked to with longing eyes by throngs of women. The report for 1892 has recently been published, and was brought to us in Boston by Mrs. J. W. Andrews, chairman of the executive committee, and the soul of the enterprise in this country. We may justly say this, although that man of great heart and ever-widening work, Dr. Edward Everett Hale is president, Bishop Phillips Brooks, Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, Mrs. Mary Hemenway (the chief woman philanthropist of Boston), and others are vice-presidents, and Hon. A. H. Rice, chairman of the board of directors. Next to Mrs. Andrews, Miss A. P. Granger, of Canandaigua, N. Y., the corresponding secretary, should be mentioned as indefatigable in her devotion. There is also an advisory board in Poona, the present seat of the school, which now owns the commodious building in which all its work is done.

It is something to think about that a gentle young woman, weighing but ninety pounds, came to this country, went among us, quietly speaking, chiefly to women, telling them that she would like to help child widows of her own nation, of whom she had been one; and that as the result of her presentation of the subject the total receipts have already been $52,516, the total expenditure, $34,998, the balance on hand, $17,517. This amount has been raised by the subscriptions of what are called the "Pundita Ramabai Circles," now formed in every part of the United States.

We shall not dwell upon the difficulties that the Pundita has encountered, for she is one of the most patient women in the world, and has the same motto as the famous sun dial in Naples, "I count only the hours that are serene;" but did we deem it important to depict the selvage of the beautiful cloth of gold that she is weaving, she would be more admired than ever. For many persons in this country, as well as her own, she is far too religious; for others, not religious enough, and so she abides on the ragged edge, in their opinion, while growing constantly more anchored and trustful by means of the very discipline that she survives. She opened her school in March, 1889, with two pupils. In the same month of 1890, she had twenty-five; in 1891, she had twenty-nine; in 1892, forty-three pupils, and in a home that they can truly call their own.

A visitor from England writes of this school: "For four days we were the fortunate guests of Ramabai in her widows' school at Poona. She is looking just the same sweet, grave woman, with the clear, childlike eyes, that she was when first I knew her. We asked to live in Hindu fashion, as she and her little children live; and so we did as regards food. We were shown into Ramabai's dining-room, and she, with teachers and friends, joined us. It was a large, airy room, without a carpet. The floor was of hard mud, and there was not a single piece of furniture in the room. We squatted down in a row on a long rug. Each person had a flat slab of wood without legs in front of her, which served as a table. On the slab were a large brass platter, and a brass bowl for water, also a little heap of fruit—pomegranates, oranges and plantains. Ramabai's widows are of various ages. It was lovely to see their affection for her, and her ever gentle, sweet manner with them. They are, indeed, a happy family; their soft, happy laughter, their delight and industry over their lessons were all very good to see."

Pundita says in her report: "We began our last year by asking the blessing of God on our work, and by celebrating the birthday of our little school. 'We are utterly defenseless and almost friendless in this beloved land of ours. But our very weakness is a strong appeal to God, and we feel that He is on our side. We hear Him say, 'My grace is sufficient for thee,' and realize that 'He giveth power to the faint.' We have trusted in Him, and we know that He is able to protect and save His own.

"The year has seen us happy possessors of a home of our own. This great event in our short history is second to none except the establishment of the Sharada Sadana. Your great kindness and unparalleled generosity has made it possible for us to get a place where we can lay our heads; and we thank you from the bottom of our hearts for giving a house to our school. The Sharada Sadana, which only three years ago was looked upon as nothing but a castle built in the air by crack-brains, may now be counted among many living realities resting upon a good foundation. All of us are very happy over it.

"We have added a new department to our school since last October. A kindergarten training class has been started, which is making good progress. Fourteen pupils and two teachers have joined the class. We may now hope to see a real Froebel kindergarten in connection with the Sharada Sadana, in which the pupils who are being trained will have ample opportunity to practice what they have learned. We did not have many visitors last year. His Highness, the Maharaja of Mysore and suite visited our school early in March of 1891. His Highness donated 500 rupees to the school.

"The kind-hearted president and other officers of our association have been very, very good to me. They have shown their interest in this school, and been more patient with me than ever. I cannot find words expressive enough to thank them for what they have done and are doing for India's poor widowed daughters, and for me. May He who is the rewarder of all good and kind people bless them abundantly, and be glorified by their good deeds."

As Dr. Edward Everett Hale said in his annual address a few weeks since at the meeting to which we have referred:

"It has pleased God to rear up a very remarkable person, with gifts for this work such as no person would have ventured to ask for. It would have seemed like madness had any one six years ago stood up in America and painted the portrait of a person like Ramabai, and proposed to seek for such a one to undertake this enterprise. Suddenly there appears a medical student in Philadelphia. She proves to be a lady of great intelligence, of remarkable business ability, with the most delicate conscience, consecrated to Christianity in the most devout and eager way. She proves to have dedicated herself to this work in India, as Luther dedicated himself to the reformation of the church; so that she will stand out in history as one of the remarkable, consecrated persons taking in hand a particular work. She went up and down through this country, and raised a very large amount of money. She did not take this money herself, though she had an entire right to it. She said, 'Not a cent of this money shall pass through my hands, except as I am authorized by a board of competent trustees.' And she was so fortunate, with that remarkable magnetism which she had, that she was able to obtain the services of a board of trustees here who were willing to devote themselves to the business of holding this money and remitting as she needed it.

"Then she goes back to her country. It might well have happened that a person, with all her gifts, might have been absolutely unfit for the purpose of 'keeping school,' and the whole thing might then have gone to pieces. Instead of which, this 'little brown mouse,' as somebody called her, develops into an extraordinary woman of business, writes a good business letter, knows how to deal with fools on the one side and knaves on the other, has extraordinary power of knowing what men are, and what women are as well. She meets with every sort of difficulty—difficulties which we cannot even understand; she handles them all as you would handle a lot of babies in a nursery or of children in a kindergarten. I need not say that of course she runs against obstacles there. Read the dirty press of India, and you would say that here was a little fiend. She does not care much whether she is vilified; she knows that her Saviour, in whom she trusts, was vilified before. She pulls through, she moves into that house or this house, and at the end of this year we are able to report that we have now that marvelous thing called real estate. We have got our foot down; we have no rents to pay. And, if it is observed that the cash on hand is eleven thousand dollars less than it was a year ago, I hope it may be observed at the same time that we have remitted, for the building which was needed, the amount of twelve thousand dollars or more which was required for the purchase and for the repairs which are necessary."

We hope white-ribboners in every country of the world will form groups named for this indomitable Christian woman and will send results of their efforts in collecting the membership fee of a dollar a year to Mrs. J. W. Andrews, Rutland Square, Boston, Mass., U. S. A.

This can be done without making an outside organization, except to ask good men and women to permit their names to be enrolled as members of the great general circle by the payment of a dollar a year. Surely each one of us should be glad to take as much stock as that in a bank certain to pay so large an interest on the investment. We must remember that Pundita is a thoroughgoing white-ribboner and lecturer for the World's W. C. T. U. in India, so that in helping her and hers we are simply strengthening the cords and lengthening the stakes of that great white tent that bears the talismanic motto, "For God and Home and Every Land."

We print as of especial current interest, the following extract from Lady Henry Somerset's annual address of May 3, before the British Women's Temperance Association. Cablegrams of May 6 and 7 notify us of a most successful and fraternal meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association, and also of the World's Convention, the greeting from the latter being Luke 1:45.

One of the most unique experiences that came to me in America was the meeting held in Washington on the closing evening of the great Ecumenical Council of the Methodist church. After a session of many days, this remarkable body, representing twenty million Methodists, adjourned in the afternoon that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union might occupy the Metropolitan church that afternoon; and so great was the interest in the white ribbon gathering that an overflow meeting was addressed by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith. I regard it as the crowning opportunity of my life thus far to have spoken to these faithful pastors from every quarter of the globe. Their council had been remarkable, by reason of the liberality of its sentiment towards women's work; and we have reason to be proud of the British delegation whose members were perhaps the most progressive of all in their enlightened recognition of the great truth that in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female.

The question of admitting women to its highest ecclesiastical council—which meets once in four years, and is made up of ministers and laymen—now agitates the Methodist Church of America from center to circumference. A public vote has been called for, and sixty-two per cent of all who voted cast their ballots for the equality of women in the legislative council of the church; of whose membership, as in every other, women form two-thirds. The ministers voted by themselves in their conferences, and have given a majority in favor of this progressive step. Unfortunately the church requires a three-fourths vote of the ministry before any change can be made in its constitution. The whole question will come before the General Council this month at Omaha, Neb., and all thoughtful Christians must await the verdict with prayerful eagerness. Perhaps the high-water mark of opinion on the great reform by which woman shall be recognized in the church, not only as a postulant, but as a power, is the rumored action of General Booth in designating his eldest daughter, the Marechale Clibborn-Booth, as the one upon whom he looks as his successor. Every one knows that the gigantic progress of the Salvation Army, in all lands, is due to nothing so much as to that large comprehension inspired, as I believe, by the Spirit of God, which led General and Mrs. Booth (the mother of the army) to put woman, from the beginning, in her right-ful place as the equal companion of man, in the holy war for the enthronement of Christ's gospel in the earth.

No group of Christians has done so much to advance the gospel idea of women as equal partners with men in the work of evangelizing the world as the Society of Friends. To their everlasting honor be it said that in this particular they were a hundred years ahead of their time and generation, and leavened the world's thought by proving by their placid faces, sweet voices and gentle bearing that when the wife and mother takes her equal place beside the father and the husband in the walks of life, she still remains "pure, womanly."

The following letter is in reply to the one published in last week's Union Signal from the World's W. C. T. U.

133 East Thirty-Fifth St., New York,
April 22, 1892.

Dear Miss Willard:—This will acknowledge with very cordial gratitude the receipt from you, as President of the World's W. C. T. U., of your representative letter, expressing the feelings entertained toward me and my work by the members of the union. Your own experience will enable you to appreciate the pleasure which is afforded me by words of approval and sympathy coming from such a source. You are aware how diversified have been the sentiments which have been expressed both as to what I have attempted to do and the means by which I have attempted to do it. I am sure you will be pleased to know that the tide of opinion seems now to be setting quite strongly in my favor, and by the time that I leave the country, some five or six weeks hence, I do really believe that I shall be generally regarded as a fairly respectable man. I do not write this with the least unkind feeling. The disquieted condition of the general mind was something that I fully anticipated, and one can bear almost anything to which they have previously thoroughly made up their mind.

Thanking you and Lady Somerset for your cordial and strengthening words, I am,

Yours very sincerely, C. H. Parkhurst.

To the British Women's Temperance Association, in session May 3 to 5, we sent the following cablegram from Whittier's poems:

"Be ours
"'The bridal time of Law and Love,
The gladness of the world's release
When, war-sick, at the feet of Peace
The hawk shall nestle with the dove.'
"Be ours
"'The golden age of brotherhood
Unknown to other rivalries
Than of the mild humanities
And gracious interchange of good,
When closer strand shall lean to strand,
Till meet, beneath saluting flags,
The Eagle of our mountain crags
The Lion of our motherland.'"

To the World's Conference, May 6, the following:

"Galatians 3:28: 'There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, but ye are all one in Christ Jesus.'"

The British Women's Temperance Association sent this cablegram to the World's W. C. T. U. President:

"London, May 5, 1892.

"First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is proclaimed throughout the whole world."

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association has $125,000 of capital stock, of which less than $20,000 worth remains unsold. This is in constant demand in small amounts. Perhaps the most attractive and significant feature of our finances is the "small holdings" of stock, thus showing the large number of women personally interested in the enterprise. This means power. We do not want large blocks of stock in any single person's hands. We are proud of the fact that we have 560 stockholders. No one has reached the limit permitted in our by-laws which forbid the holding of more than $6,000 by any individual, while the majority hold one share apiece, that is $25 worth. The investment is good. We therefore call attention to it in these days of multiplying business speculations. Mrs. F. H. Rastall, our business manager, The Temple, Chicago, will gladly correspond with any who desire to purchase. For two years we have paid six per cent on all investments.

Poor Michael Walsh, a Chicago teamster, came home the other night and found his wife murdered, her body marked by one hundred and fifteen gashes from a pair of long scissors, and longitudinally transfixed by a broomstick. Four hours later the dead woman's nephew was arrested and acknowledged his crime saying, "We had been drinking beer; I made a wrong proposal to my aunt, she slapped my face; I became crazy with rage and killed and mutilated her." Science knows that beer lets loose the animal in man. That is why sensible women are determined that beer shall be shut up.

The Watch-Tower.

God's method of changing chaos into order is to shine away darkness with light.

***

Cardinal Manning had long been a zealous advocate of total abstinence and prohibition. On remarking to a tipsy Irishman, whom he wanted to sign the pledge, that he himself had done so, the witty Hibernian replied, "Ah, yes, your riverence, but maybe ye had need of it." The Cardinal hated snuff-taking. A good story is told of him in this connection, and here it is. One of the clergy, knowing that the Cardinal took St. Charles Borromeo, Bishop of Milan, for his model and exemplar, asked the great man if he was aware that St. Charles took snuff. "Yes," said the Cardinal, "and I am also aware that his body lies buried at Milan in a perfect state of preservation except the nose, which is gone.'

***

An educated Hindu was lately asked what was the particular department of missionary effort which made him fear most for the stability of his own religion. He is said to have replied: "We do not greatly fear your schools; we need not send our children. We do not fear your books, for we need not read them. We do not much fear your preaching; we need not listen. But we dread your women, and we dread your doctors; for your doctors are winning our hearts, and your women are winning our homes, and when our hearts and our homes are won, what is there left us?"

***

Lady Henry Somerset tells an amusing anecdote of the coachman of Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, who was a believer in the literal and immediate second coming; and he said, speaking of their "unsaved" footman, that he had "trained one against the coming"; so that if he, the coachman, were carried away in the air, this unsaved footman could drive the horses still, and take his noble master and mistress to their residence. It did not seem to occur to the coachman that Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, who were saints of the earth, might also be saints of heaven, thus entitling them to be "carried away" themselves when they would not need a good driver!

***

Perhaps they builded better than they knew, who gave us the word "Commonwealth." Who knows but that it prophesies the coming day of brotherhood, when all wealth shall be common.

***

Anna Gordon says: "When we were at the National Convention in Nashville, in 1887, Pundita Ramabai was a fellow guest with us in the home of Judge and Mrs. East. One day I brought a glass of water to Miss Willard, who came home from the convention very much fatigued, and after she had tasted it, Pundita, with a very earnest look in her expressive eyes, took up the glass and quaffed it vigorously, then said to our National President, 'For you I have broken my caste for the first time in respect to drinking. You know it is unpardonable in my country to drink after another person.' It was a touching little incident, and showed the sense of affection and loyalty which is possessed by this most intellectual of Brahmin women."

***

There is a large amount of material for reflection in this remark made by the superintendent of a brewery in New York City when high license was discussed. He asked "Who is going to be hurt when the brewer has only to deliver to fifty saloons the same amount of beer he used to send to one hundred." This is the meaning of high licenee, pure and simple.

***

A gentleman lately visited the great cigar manufactory in Cuba. On entering the spacious factory room where a large company of men were employed in rolling the tobacco, he was astonished to hear the tones of one who in a loud, clear voice addressed the audience. On making further investigation, he found that on a raised chair sat a reader who was employed by the men themselves, each paying his share of the expense, in order that during the enforced confinement and monotony of their life they might have the possibility of improving their minds and keeping pace with the questions of the day. This is the first good idea we ever got from a tobacco establishment and we gladly pass it along. In many workshops, such as tailors' or shoemakers', where the labor is noiseless, such a provision would be of incalculable benefit to men the monotony of whose life is its severest trial.

On Duty.

Queen's Gardens.

NIRVANA.

BY EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH.

I have been reading Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia," and my heart has been touched by the beautiful story. A noble-hearted man, born in the house of a king, went out into the world and saw death and misery everywhere. His gentle heart vibrated with the anguish of sympathy and he determined to sacrifice himself and all he had to devote his life to solve the problem of human happiness. Noble, indeed, was his aim and with deepest admiration for his character we follow the story of his wanderings.

Guided by no light of revelation he renounced his kingdom, left his beautiful palace with loved wife and babe, and donning the garb of a beggar went to the distant forest where he spent six years in solitude. He studied all the lore of the priests and books of the temples, he questioned pilgrims and those whom he found doing penance in the woods, but no satisfactory solution to his problem came to him. Then he was assailed by fierce temptations which he resisted after a long and terrible contest. Having made an absolute surrender of all earthly desires, in that hour of weakness which always follows a fierce mental struggle, a beautiful vision came to him which he believed gave him the secret for which he was seeking.

Through it he recognized and accepted the, to him, great and beautiful doctrine of Karma, which is that an inexorable law of perfect justice runs through all creation; that every wrong action will be punished, and that every right action will be rewarded exactly according to its merit. That this law knows neither wrath nor pardon, but always exacts perfect obedience from all. Another doctrine which came to him in the vision was that of reincarnation, through whose processes humanity was to be purified until at last it reached 'Nirvana,' a state of perfect peace and rest and final absence of consciousness. Believing that he had grasped the greatest truths of life, Buddha, for he then received that name, arose, refreshed, and went out into the world to preach his new doctrines. Bewildered humanity in that heathen age and enervating clime caught eagerly at any doctrine that promised relief from responsibility and welcomed the beggar's garb which released them from working for their daily bread, hence the new religion attracted a large following. And, indeed, there was a tenderness in the preaching that could but win the harassed and troubled ones of earth.

Looking with gentle pity on turbulent, striving, sinning humanity, this great teacher said:

"Cease to desire and you will cease to strive; cease to love and you will have no more jealousies or heartburnings; cease to love life and you will be indifferent to death, pain or woe; practice virtue and your life shall be shortened, and at last you shall enter 'Nirvana,' a place of perfect peace, where you shall be soothed into an eternal sleep."

After forty-five years of preaching Buddha died, tranquilly looking forward to Nirvana. His life was blameless and his aim high, and we may hope that at last he has found the true rest. Since then his followers have been numbered by millions, and probably to-day there are more people believing in the leading doctrines of Buddhism than in any other religion. Buddhism has something in common with the Christian religion. It teaches purity of life, perfect self-mastery and the brotherhood of man.

Six hundred years after Buddha, lived Jesus Christ, the founder of the Christian religion. He, too, renounced a kingdom and became a wanderer on the face of the earth with not where to lay His head, that He might teach humanity how to be happy. He, too, struggled with temptation and conquered the evil powers that assailed Him, and to Him was sent a vision to comfort and angels to minister unto Him in His hour of weakness. He also requires of His followers pure living and perfect self-mastery, and promises peace as a reward to those who follow His precepts. But, oh, wonder of wonders! He is the only great teacher who ever came to earth, who offers to furnish His followers with the power with which to accomplish pure living and self-mastery. Humanity is so weak, so entangled in the meshes of heredity and environment, how can any one individual stem the tide of downward tendencies that are around him? He cannot, save through strength given him by Christ, in answer to prayer. And then pardon for sin for which no penance can atone. What a blessing to mankind! But best of all is the heaven which Christ offers, a place of perfect peace, not because love is conquered, but because it is satisfied; not rest from work, but rest in work. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee," sings the Psalmist. The Christian need not wait for death to bring him his Nirvana, but in the midst of wildest storms of life, though the tempests of criticism and opposition rage round him on every side he may have perfect inward peace.

Rest in work. That is the Christian's Nirvana; to find peace in the midst of all life's cares and burdens. It is worry, not work, that wears out the human frame and keeps humanity in a constant state of unrest. But if we realize that God loves us and is always with us, that He will give us all that we need, and that even the little crosses brought upon us by others are allowed for some good purpose, we shall cease to worry when things do not go right.

The Christian need have no fear of death, for to him it is only a sleep from which he will awake in the presence of One whom he loves.

And always when his strength fails or faith gives out, there is the power of the Holy Spirit to be given at the request of the weakest. The Christian's peace begins in this world, goes with him wherever he goes, stays by him night and day, and soothes him in the midst of all the bustle and confusion of a work-a-day life.

That is the true Nirvana.

News from the Field.

INDIANA WORK.

"Do burdens press sorely? Just ask Him for grace;
He'll give it, and help thee 'keep sweet';
Let sunshine and gladness illumine thy face,
'Twill help some one else to 'keep sweet.'
Do troubles oppress thee? Let God be thy stay;
'Tis easy to sigh, but 'tis better to pray;
Thy sunshine will come in His own blessed way;
So trustingly try to 'keep sweet.'"

The political pressure is already here, and on. We will not try, but WILL "keep sweet."

The annual series of schools of methods began March 29th and will close June 3d. Mrs. Nichols, our state president, expects to attend each meeting.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE REVIVALS.

The Osgood W. C. T. U. have enjoyed a temperance revival in their town. Under the efforts of W. J. Murphy 900 have signed the pledge and much enthusiasm prevails. The W. C. T. U. worked heroically to accomplish this, and now enjoy the temperance sentiment they labored so hard to arouse.

North Manchester union have had excellent work done for them by Dr. N. W. Tracy, the noble Christian evangelist, who votes as he prays. Dr. Tracy worked for twelve days, and laid a foundation sure and deep for the ousting of the saloon. His lectures were finely illustrated by stereopticon views. He gave afternoon Bible Readings of great merit and won the hearts and brains of the people by the force and power of his logic. This union cheerfully recommends Dr. Tracy to any union desiring his services. Indiana stands firm and true to the principle of prohibition. Our brethren are busy, indeed, waging their peaceful war by means of the ballot. M. V. Bennett and M. J. Fanning have made most successful tours of the state. Mary Balch has one of the strongest speeches of the campaign entitled, "What is the saloon, and what will you do with it?" In this speech she shows the voter, and most conclusively, too, that he should decide what he will do with the saloon on the first Tuesday in November. That to vote any ticket save that of the Prohibition party will be to vote to perpetuate the saloon.

Mrs. Balch organized a union of eighteen members at Clay City, Clay county. She is now in Parke county where sits our brave-hearted Mary Hadley under the shadow of a great sorrow. Her mother, Rhoda Hadley of Bloomingdale, aged eighty-seven, went home to her long rest March 8, 1892.

Mother Hadley was born in North Carolina, May 30, 1805. Her maiden name was Coffin. In 1822 she was married to Alfred Hadley, of Guilford county, N. C. In 1831 they moved with their children to central Indiana, and a few years later to western Indiana. They were among the pioneer settlers of Parke county. Of their family of nine children five are still living, the youngest of whom is our Mary Hadley. "My home child," the dear old mother often exclaimed. While on her bed, one morning, the seventieth of her marriage, as Mary tied on the snow-white cap and pinned the white neckerchief across the loving, loyal breast, Mary said, "Mother, seventy years ago this morning thee was waiting for the bridegroom." "Yes, my child, and to-day I am waiting for the bridegroom of my soul." Throughout the day she spoke like this: "Your faces are all beautiful and I am happy. Soon I go to join the loved ones gone before and meet my groom of seventy years ago, to have eternal life with these and with the bridegroom of my soul." Words of cheer like these she spoke to each member of her household, children and grandchildren. Of Mary and to her she said, "And this, my youngest child, daughter with me in the home, through all the years of my widowhood, a boon of sweet companionship in household joys and labor for the Master, I now resign in fullest trust to be the loving Saviour's ward, to finish the work which I cannot complete—to mitigate the suffering of unfortunate humanity. She will be greatly blessed and happy in her work of turning many to righteousness and God himself will make the way." What a benediction! A child with such a blessing resting upon her cannot fail to accomplish the work left for her to do.

It has been the blessed privilege of your correspondent to sit at Mother Hadley's feet and learn lessons blessed and true. She told me that when a little child one day on her way home from school, she met a gang of slaves chained together and being driven to the auction block. She said her soul was so filled with the awful injustice of man to man, that she turned aside from the roadway and beneath the shade of a tree she laid her face in the dust, pleading for justice. She arose, baptized with zeal and courage for the warfare, and was a true reformer from that time forth. Her home near Bloomingdale was a depot of the "underground railroad." Mother Hadley fed and nursed the poor black fugitives, while her husband, at the risk of life and property, conveyed them to the next station. One day the slave hunters appeared at her house, and she was alone, excepting the poor negroes secreted in the cellar. They demanded the privilege of searching the house, but Mother Hadley said "no." Although heavily armed, and making much display and threatening her, she stood unflinchingly before the cellarway repeating, "No, you cannot search my house,"

"But, madam, are you not afraid?"

"No," said Mother Hadley, "the strength of the Lord is mine," and the slave hunters went their way.

Upon the temperance reform she was one of the advanced thinkers. An Abolitionist, she became naturally a Prohibitionist, just as unflinching, just as uncompromising, but, oh, so gentle. If she had been stoned as Stephen, like Stephen she would have said, "Father, lay not this to their charge." As clerk and head of her church, she spent long years of faithful service. Loved, honored and revered she has passed on before. The quiet influence of her life on other lives, those of children, grandchildren and hosts of friends, was incalculable. The writer owes much to her acquaintance with this blessed mother in Israel.

Mother Hadley's funeral was conducted at the Friends' Church and was largely attended. Friends and neighbors gathered from far and near to pay the last tribute of respect. The W. C. T. U. of which she was a member brought fitting floral offerings for the bier of their best beloved. Thus passed on a life most blessed to its eternal rest. Through our tears we exclaim, "We will follow on; mother, friend, philanthropist, and true reformer, farewell for a little while."

Our sister Henrietta Strickland, of the New Marion union, mourns the loss of her sister, Mrs. Laura Dean; sister Fannie Reed, president of the Terre Haute west side union, her son Frank; Mother Reeves, of the Versailles union, seventy-eight years old, honored and beloved, and Lizzie Byrket, of the Greensboro union, are "lost awhile"; Miss Jennie Coan, of the Xenia union, with our sister Mattie Ludlum, has gone to her long reward; sister Mary Delman, of the Wanatah W. C. T. U., mourns the death of her mother, Mrs. Harriet Fisher. Sister Caroline Kenley, of the Terre Haute west side union, has parted with her son Charles; Huntingburg mourns the death of Miss Lizzie Beeler; brother Joseph Cadwalladar, of New Albany, our stanch friend and brother, has gone home.

"Say not their work is done;
No deed of love or goodness ever dies,
But in the lives of others multiplies.
Say it is just begun."

LOCAL UNION NOTES.

Warsaw rejoices in the good work of Dr. N. W. Tracy and the defeat of three applications to sell liquor. Dr. Tracy has been with them two weeks doing great good. Williamsport was much strengthened by Mrs. Balch's visit to them. The visit of Mrs. Nichols to Lebanon resulted in the organization of a union of fifty-one members. Shelbyville union has lately been having refreshing seasons.

Miss Dickson organized a Y of seventeen members. Miss Palmer organized unions at Fairland and Waldron. Miss Pugh, National treasurer, visited the rooms of the local union and gave them a good talk. Otterbein union is a strong one. Their membership consists of forty-three women and eleven honoraries. They have a hall for which they pay a rental of twenty-one dollars per month and it is too small to accommodate their audiences. Mr. H. H. Moore, an honorary member, at one of their recent meetings presented them with five dollars. Another brother-in-law, A. J. Bryan, gave a beautifully framed portrait of Miss Willard. Mrs. Balch visited them and had a good meeting.

Fulton county held a very successful mid-year convention this spring at Akron. Miss Margaret Dickson made the address of the evening. Mrs. Cowan reports quite a busy tour through the northern part of the state. Johnson county held an excellent convention March 16 and 17 at Mount Auburn. Mrs. Nichols gave the address. Edwardsport union rejoices in the possession of a home. The township trustees have given them an unoccupied room in the public school building. Mrs. Deney is conducting another series of meetings at Hillsdale and Dana, in Vermillion county. Adams and Steuben counties have also held their mid-year convention. The Frances Willard union, Terre Haute, has been holding a series of very successful mothers' meetings. Its room will soon be too small for the work. Mulberry union writes notes of cheer, as does Seymour. Miss Farley's and Mrs. Nichols' journeyings throughout the state are full of work and interest. Bloomington, Clayton and Evansville have recently enjoyed a visit from Mrs. Addie N. Fields. Hope union has just celebrated its anniversary. Valparaiso writes of the good work done in their midst by our state president. Fulton reports regular, steady effort along all the lines. North Manchester union has been enjoying visits from Miss Farley and Mrs. Cowan. Miss Dickson is quite busy throughout the state. Mrs. Loftin, state superintendent of narcotics, addressed the Indianapolis Y recently. A Y of thirty-five members and five honoraries was the result of Dr. Tracy's work at Warsaw. Lady Henry Y, at Greencastle, gave Mary Frazee, ex-superintendent of Y work, a reception. Miss Dickson lately organized a Y of seventeen members at Shelbyville. Our state is so full of work it is impossible to tell all.

SADIE B. WHISTLER.
State Reporter, Terre Haute.

NORTH CAROLINA.

INTERESTING NOTES.

In a recent letter from our National corresponding secretary, we find the question, "How do you all get on without Mrs. Woody?" We do "get on" somehow by following the plans marked out for us before our president's departure for London.

Two new unions have been organized by our vice-president, Mrs. Tomlinson, one in Walnut Cove, the other in Troy, but our work has been mostly "sentiment making," a work greatly needed in our state. Personal letters have been sent out to two hundred temperance men in different sections of the state, asking for coöperation, and especially urging that petitions against the granting of licenses be sent to county commissioners.

Following this step, two hundred and eighty-six personal letters were sent to the commissioners in license counties, petitioning for their refusal of license, and enclosing from our superintendent of literature a copy of the proceedings in the Robeson county test case, so well known in our state. To both sets of letters our state president has received courteous and sympathetic replies, and many earnest offers of help, which are pleasant, indeed, to read and hear.

Our new superintendent of Temple work has been doing all in her power for the "House Beautiful." Mite-boxes have been placed in our homes, and her loving and ready reminder would never let us forget, if we could, the building which means so much to the temperance women of America. The beautiful Temple inkstand sent by Mrs. Carse awaits our president's return from Europe. Our superintendent of narcotics has had no difficulty in enlisting ready sympathy and coöperation in the cigarette petition, and we hope that many of them reached Mrs. Ingalls promptly, as she requested. Several successful entertainments have been recently given, notably "The Business Men's Carnival," by the Greensboro Y's, with a profit of $145, $50 of which was given to the state treasury.

The annual meetings of our local unions are being held at this season, and the reports are often very interesting. One union recently combined the reports of W's and Y's with that of a flourishing Loyal Temperance Legion in an afternoon program of two hours. Honorary members from the different organizations were invited, and a white-ribbon tea appropriately closed the exercises. We hope that Mrs. Woody will come back to us in July. Her absence for even that length of time causes our state convention to be postponed to the autumn, instead of being held in the summer, as heretofore, but our unions are only glad if by postponing they may be sure of her presence.

Our most important state work is, above all else, scientific temperance instruction. In July, the North Carolina Teachers' Assembly will be in session, and will have a W. C. T. U. day upon their program. In order to arouse an interest our superintendent has sent a circular letter to five hundred influential teachers, containing the scientific temperance instruction law as passed by our legislature, and inclosing literature to each.

In Y work we are trying a plan which is of great practical value to us. A kind of circulating monthly letter called the "Y Round Robin" is conducted in this wise: Long, wide, heavy strips of paper are prepared at the printing office, having an appropriate heading and motto at the top of each sheet which shall serve as the beginning of a monthly letter. Under each printed heading comes a space for the greeting of the Y superintendent and the rest of the letter (with us, two sheets, both sides covered) is divided into spaces by the printer, each space large enough to enclose two closely written pages of notepaper. This letter goes its rounds each month, being preceded by directed envelopes of an especially large size sent out from headquarters so that there shall be no delay about the next place to which it goes. The route is changed every month so that no union may read the same number of preceding letters or have the same place on the program.

In these letters the Y's write of their work and their plans and exchange greetings in an informal way, often answering some question in a preceding letter or asking for a solution of some new problem. Sometimes it is copied entire by the secretary or president for her whole union, and one Y (in a college) calls its entire membership together when the letters arrive to read about the "other girls." At the close of the four weeks the "Round Robin" is returned to the corresponding secretary at headquarters containing a complete, delightful and informal report of the month, and the girls really enjoy it.

B. D. CALDWELL,
State Reporter. Greensboro.

OHIO.

PLUCK AND PUSH.

Oh, no! our school suffrage bill is not lost. It is in the hands of the committee on elections, and will come up again next legislative session. Mrs Sarah C. Shrader, state superintendent of legislative work, urges immediate, ceaseless effort on the part of our women in the interests of this bill. We expect it will "pass" next time. Our women are moving in many directions. At the mid-year meeting our state officers were instructed to memorialize the President of the United States, the postmaster-general, the commissioner of patents and the attorney-general, concerning the construction of section 3.893, chapter III, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to evil matter in the mails, also concerning the revoking of Bloch Bros.' tobacco trade-mark. Our workers are asked to write to the proper authorities at Washington in behalf of bill H. R. 5,067, to prevent dime and paper novels being mailed at one cent per pound and Bibles and books at eight cents per pound. Also in behalf of bill H. R. 120, to amend section 3.893 Revised Statutes, declaring all obscene and indecent publications, pictures, books that are bad, medical notices for vile purposes, Police Gazette, in fact, all bad matter, unmailable.

Let every union in every state push hard and steadily —reforms are moving.

APRIL W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The semi-annual meeting of Van Wert county was held in Scott, Mrs. L. Davis, district president, in the chair, in place of Mrs. L. O. F. Austin, county president, absent for the first time since the organization of the county, on account of serious illness in her family. Mrs. J. Aiken gave the address of welcome, happily touching vital issues. The response by Rev. Mr. Dague, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Paulding, was fine. Revs. W. Barker and J. Houghtby, resident pastors, with Rev. Mr. Dague, assisted greatly in making the afternoon session one of power, entering into the discussions with the loyal temperance spirit, which, if all men possessed, would hasten the coming victory. Other gentlemen also declared in unequivocal terms their attitude towards "the accursed thing"—the saloon. Any who saw the L. T. L. proudly marching with their banners to the train to meet Mrs. Strother and others, and in the evening heard and witnessed their part on the program, must say: "This is the oncoming army that will win." "A Woman's Work," was the theme of a rare paper presented by Mrs. Dr. Renner, of Scott.

The evening address of Mrs. S. A. Strother, state organizer, delighted her large audience, while her beautiful thoughts so earnestly expressed called forth frequent "amens." A select choir of young people furnished good music. The parting song, "God be with you," and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Barker, closed one of the best conventions ever held in Van Wert county.

The fifth annual convention of Miami county was held in Cumberland Presbyterian church, Covington, April 14, Mrs. K. M. Judy presiding. Mrs. Saylor opened the morning session with appropriate devotional services. Mrs. Neth gave the address of welcome, and Mrs. Northcutt, of Troy, the response. The hearty words of cheer by Rev. Mr. Silveus, and Mrs. Judy's admirable annual address, were much appreciated. All the unions of the county were represented, and steady progress reported. Mrs. Robb, of Sidney, president of the nineteenth district, conducted the afternoon devotional service. Mrs. Mary Deweese, president of Shelby county, Miss Frances Ensign, assistant state superintendent of Y's, Rev. Mr. Hill, M. E. Church, Rev. Mr. Warbington, Christian Church, and Mr. Sloan, Pleasant Hill, were introduced to the convention. Mrs. Louise Fee Hedges was chosen president for the ensuing year, Mrs. Dora Zahlinger, secretary, and Mrs. Eugenia Shurman, treasurer. The first mentioned ladies reside at Piqua, the last at Covington. Strong resolutions were adopted; I regret want of space to give them in full. They speak out on Sabbath observance, and for closing the Columbian Exposition gates on the Sabbath. Mrs. Monroe's presence and words were inspiring, her evening address excellent. Helpful thoughts were presented by Miss Ensign. The Miriam Quartette discoursed charming music. The benediction was by Rev. Mr. Hill.

Cuyahoga county held its annual meeting in Miles Avenue Christian Church, April 20, Mrs. H. E. Hammond, presiding. The convention was entertained by Hammond union, recently organized with twenty-three members and named in honor of the organizer, but which now numbers 103 wide-awake members! The president, Mrs. M. E. Davey, cordially greeted the visiting unions and friends. The response was one of Mrs. Gilmour's happy extempore speeches. "I see before me," she said, "the representatives of Bible women—many of us are daughters of New England mothers who taught their little girls to work, to be practical. The somewhat severe discipline of early years has resulted in making us systematic, efficient white-ribbon women. We were never allowed pleasure-taking at the expense of duty, yet we had occasional recreation days." Social purity was ably discussed in the afternoon by Mrs. Webb, of Cleveland, and was also the subject of Mrs. Ramock's earnest address of the evening. Rev. S. E. Stevens, the noble young pastor of the church so freely opened for the occasion, gave brotherly greeting. Mrs. D. W. Gage was elected county president, the other officers and most of the superintendents were reëlected. The first meeting of the enlarged district, comprising the counties Summit, Cuyahoga and Medina will be held in Cleveland, per invitation of Cleveland Central union.

The Salvation Army has opened a Rescue Home for unfortunate women, which is enlisting the sympathies of Cleveland white-ribboners, who are furnishing rooms in the Home, and assisting those who need its shelter to find their way thither. The Central W's and Y's, Westside union and Willard Y's are already enlisted in the work, the latter organization recently donating $23 in supplies. Bissell's W. C. T. U., Geauga county, held a Demorest gold medal contest the evening of April 23d. The church was beautifully decorated. The large audience listened attentively to the telling speeches against the liquor traffic. Stirring music was furnished by the quartet. The medal was awarded to Miss Zila Burnett.

BUCKEYE BITS.

Ohio has 30,000 L. T. L. children.

The Ohio Senate declared in favor of Sunday closing.

Dr. Kate Mitchell has been doing effective work in the state.

During the past year the Midget has raised $60 toward the Mrs. Trego tablet fund.

The legislature has passed a bill prohibiting saloons within one mile of the Dayton Soldiers' Home. (Why one mile?)

The twenty-fourth district is contributing money towards securing for its president's name a place in Willard Hall.

Mrs. S. M. Perkins, district president of the O. W. S. A., has held three suffrage conventions in Cuyahoga county during the year. The cause is rapidly gaining ground.

HANNA A. FOSTER.
State Reporter, Berea.

SAN MARCO, San Diego, county, Cal., is a temperance town in a fertile valley only fifteen miles from the coast. The soil can be tilled without irrigation and this fact, combined with its equable climate and anti-liquor law, makes it a most desirable place of residence.

CONNECTICUT.

FROM ALL SIDES.

Meriden recently held a very successful freewill offering meeting, at which a large audience greeted the state president, Mrs. Forbes, who spoke on the work of the organization, and the great power for good that it has become along the lines of its various departments. Rev. Mr. Husted, pastor of the Main Street Baptist church, gave a stirring address on the general aspects of the temperance work. Two little girls gave recitations, and Miss Maud Kelsey sang "The Good Shepherd." An article from THE UNION SIGNAL was read by Mrs. W. H. Catlin. The former president of the union, Mrs. Ekmark, was greeted with much pleasure, as she was present for the first time since her long illness. Fully thirty dollars was realized from the envelopes which had been given out, in addition to the collection.

Putnam's freewill offering meeting was a financial success, the gratifying amount of twenty-five dollars being received. Dr. Pogson, of New Brunswick, N. J., recently addressed the temperance workers, in his remarks exhorting them to put away all differences of opinion and unite in one band to battle against the liquor traffic.

Plantsville has had for a speaker that well-known woman, Mary A. Livermore. Demorest contests and "Ye Hatchet Partie" have been given by the young people.

Hockanum held its freewill service in the M. E. church and the exercises consisted of an address upon Sabbath observance by the pastor, Rev. J. B. Ackley, a reading and recitation by two young ladies and good music. The collection amounted to $5.70.

Portland still perseveres in union, Y and Loyal Temperance Legion work, and is "growing in grace." Mrs. Fitz Gerald has recently addressed the people, and was warmly received, as she is well known in the village, having spoken there many times.

Norwich has just held a parlor temperance meeting, subject, "Duty of Parents to Children." The parlors of a member were filled, many ladies being interested in the subject who are not members of the society. The Y's furnished music which added not a little to the pleasure of the occasion. The president gave a short address and other mothers gave expression to thoughts on the subject. One mother testified to the good influence of the Legions and expressed a hope that their number might be multiplied.

Goshen has a live Legion that conducts meetings and carries on business in most methodical ways. Their leader is energetic and earnest and infuses into the members her own enthusiasm. Durham, lately organized, is a union from which much is hoped, as they are zealous workers, full of plans.

Thomaston has some excellent items to report. The school board has decided to place the graded system of temperance text books in the schools. The editor of the local paper has given the space of one quarter of a column to the W. C. T. U. free of charge, and it is filled every week by the press superintendent with temperance items.

The Loyal Temperance Legion at Thomaston is wide awake and has been devising ways and means for earning money for its library. Last spring one of the teachers gave each of her class two cents which they were to invest, and the results devoted to the library fund. One little fellow carefully tended a tomato plant which his two cents procured, and from the sale of the fruit proudly added $1.15 to the fund. Another bought an egg which developed into a fine chanticleer, with which his owner gladly parted for the seventy-five cents which is to buy some good book for that library to be. Another purchased tissue paper and made it into dainty ornaments with which he has started into trade. A tenderly pathetic incident is that on the anniversary of the first death among the temperance boys, the parents of the boy sent to the Legion a little package with the request that the money which it contained, and which was found in his pocket after his death, might be added to the fund. The library was named for him by unanimous consent, "The Charles H. Welton Memorial." Another bright little soldier, Gussie Kaufman, has passed beyond, but leaves behind him a blessed memory. His cherished hope was that he might grow up a temperance man and be able to take care of his mother.

Sherman has just celebrated its eighth annual meeting with unusual interest. The exercises occupied a part of the day, and were varied and instructive. The yearly reports of the officers showed financial and numerical prosperity. The reports from the eleven superintendents were encouraging. The Loyal Temperance Legion exercises which commenced the afternoon meeting, would have repaid one for attending the session had he heard nothing else.

Middlefield had a series of services conducted by Mrs. Fitz Gerald, consisting of an address to the children of the Legion, Co. M, Saturday afternoon, a Bible reading in the afternoon of the following day, and an address in the Methodist church, Sabbath evening, at which time the freewill offering collection was taken.

North Woodbury has a Legion company recently organized, which now numbers fifty members. A free singing school is one of their first ventures. May the little army sing many a temperance truth into the hearts of the listeners. Company D, of Abington, is increasing in numbers, and much interest is being manifested among the little folks.

Willimantic has this year taken up almshouse work, holding once in two months a prayer and praise service on Sabbath afternoon, hiring a conveyance to take the singers from the churches in turn. At Christmas time fruit, books and cards were distributed to the inmates, and accompanied by some word of comfort and cheer to each one.

The president of New Haven county held a pleasant workers' conference in her county, to which were invited the presidents, secretaries, treasurers and superintendents of the locals, for a mutual help conference. The exercises were varied, and teeming with interesting points; opportunity was given for questions, discussion and conversation on many subjects.

East Haven has been holding gospel temperance meetings, addressed by different speakers and presided over by members of the union in turn. The meetings have been well attended.

Again we record with sympathy for the bereaved ones, the death of a white-ribboner, the mother of our state treasurer, Mrs. S. K. Luce. She had long been a member of the W. C. T. U., and was the first life member of the state union.

A W. C. T. U. has been organized in Ansonia by Mrs. Effie Pitblado, wife of the pastor of the Methodist church. Not long since she gave a temperance Bible reading in the church at which all the lady members who were willing to work for the cause were requested to give their names. Mrs. Holmes, county president, was present at a later meeting, and addressed the ladies, completing the organization. Temperance sentiment is at low ebb in Ansonia and progress may be slow at first, but the ladies hope by circulating literature, and by other means to create a sentiment in favor of closing the saloons.

M. BELLE SMITH,
State Reporter, Rockfall.

NORTH DAKOTA.

"PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, OH, GOD IN ZION."

I have so much glad news this month that I hardly know where to begin. Encouraging news comes from all parts of the state and a special impetus seems to have been given to the workers for purity.

The "Home" authorized by the state convention last fall is now ready. From Minto, Hillsboro and other unions come announcements of purity meetings and calls for the state lecturer in that department. The field is large, the hearts of the people receptive, but "the laborers are few." The state president, Miss Kinnear, recently returned from a lecturing and organizing tour, is now in the western part of the state. Very gratifying reports of her work, while here, come to us.

The state evangelist has been conducting services at several points with excellent results. Many letters have been written to our Congressman Johnson, urging his efforts on behalf of "House Bill, 120." He replies, assuring us of his approval of said bill. The election of Emerson H. Smith, as mayor of Fargo, was a victory for municipal reform and a cause of rejoicing to all honest citizens.

The union at Lisbon has thirty members. They hold business meetings every two weeks and a union temperance meeting every month in one of the churches. The attendance at these meetings is so great as to tax the capacity of the building. They also give an occasional entertainment, consisting of songs, recitations, and so on, which are very helpful both to the union and to the public.

Drayton W.—This union has been circulating White Cross and Sabbath observance leaflets, also petitions for Sabbath closing of Columbian Exposition and exclusion of liquors from the same. Six hundred names to this petition were sent from Pembina county. Funds have been raised for the Temperance Temple, and they are now securing funds for a temperance hospital. The Loyal Temperance Legion, of nearly fifty members, meets twice a month in charge of the W's assisted by the Y's. Special prayer meetings and sermons for Sabbath closing and exclusion of liquors at the World's Fair are being held. During the stay of the threshing crews in the state gospel temperance meetings were held in the depot and were well attended.

Drayton Y.—There are thirty active and fifty triple pledge honorary members in this society. "When any of these honoraries are away at college or elsewhere we keep them supplied with badges and send them invitations to our meetings and receptions," writes the Y secretary. "We have had a 'dollar' meeting and recently gave a reception to honorary members. The girls are quite enthusiastic and always ready for the next thing. We realize the importance of thorough consecration for the work. We believe the Lord wants us first, then our work. To be influential, we must be pure in heart."

Dickinson.—Gospel temperance meetings have been and are to be held every two weeks during this year. Five cases for violation of the prohibitory law are being tried. The union is in constant attendance at the trials. The work for the entire year has been planned and we may expect to hear more from this systematic union.

Let all the sisters pray for our young and earnest state. Greetings and remembrance to all North Dakota white-ribboners, especially "my girls."

EMMA F. BATES,
State Reporter, Valley City.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE tenth anniversary of the Chambersburg, Pa., W. C. T. U. was celebrated April 6.

A SUCCESSFUL and profitable convention was that held by Van Buren county, Mich., W. C. T. U., last month.

THE Leon, N. Y., W. C. T. U. mourns the recent death of its beloved treasurer, Miss Eva L. Cook, in tenderly worded resolutions of respect.

THE address of Mrs. Julia A. Bidwell, assistant secretary National department, Sunday-school work, is changed to Deposit, Broome Co., N. Y.

PLAN of work leaflets and general information in connection with the physical culture department can be obtained by sending ten cents to Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, Mansfield, Ohio.

MRS. ELLA M. ORR, of Pittsfield, Ill., state superintendent of franchise, will gladly tell all bewildered women in her state concerning the new laws for woman's ballot in school elections.

THAT nearly all the lines of work recommended by the National W. C. T. U. are successfully carried on by the local unions in Otoe county, Neb., was shown at the recent interesting county convention held at Unadilla.

THE second district of Michigan W. C. T. U. held its sixteenth annual convention at Ypsilanti not long ago. The papers and reports were all of a high order, the attendance good, and enthusiasm at a high-water mark.

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE during her recent Colorado tour spoke at Trinidad, to the prisoners of the state penitentiary at Canon City, and to large audiences at Denver, where she says admirable arrangements are being made for the National Convention.

THE Plymouth, Pa., W. C. T. U. writes concerning the good work of Dr. C. N. Whitney, of Washington, D. C., an eloquent speaker who has been holding gospel temperance services in that vicinity with marked success, saloon-keepers often attending the meetings.

THE third conference of the third district Illinois W. C. T. U. was held in the Wicker Park M. E. church, Chicago, recently. Papers on pertinent topics filled up the one day session, and the conference closed with an able address by Mrs. Helen Barker, in the evening.

MRS. E. A. HILL, president Florida W. C. T. U., which has just been incorporated, has opened a suite of rooms at her residence for the benefit of the local W. C. T. U. and Prohibition club meetings. The latter club was organized the evening the rooms were dedicated. Mrs. Hill is also establishing a school of methods at Lake Helen, Fla.

THE work of Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York City, National superintendent of the Y's, is constantly increasing, and realizing her need of larger desk accommodations, some good "Friends" (members of her own church society and Y's) successfully carried out a plan of surprising her by a new one on the occasion of her birthday last month.

MAJOR AND MRS. E. T. SCOTT, of Ocean Grove, N. J., have been in California since early last November. Thus far a dozen counties have been thoroughly canvassed. Large audiences have greeted them. New unions, additions to old ones, scores of converts to the principles of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the cause of prohibition have everywhere been the result of their work.

GARFIELD BLOCK, the boy orator, is highly commended by a correspondent who says, "Garfield is a pleasant, manly boy, and is particularly pleasing in his impersonations." If any society of W. C. T. U. wish to give the public a pleasing and profitable entertainment, and at the same time replenish their own treasury, they would do well to address him at 1329 Twenty-sixth street, Des Moines, Iowa.

"A DR. PARKHURST for Chicago" is the desire of the Columbus, O., Central W. C. T. U., who in a recent meeting for prayer and conference expressed the earnest opinion that the good work done in New York could be also accomplished in Chicago, desiring that petitions and letters be sent to the proper authorities asking that all saloons be closed in the Electric City on the Sabbath day. The petition for Sunday closing of the Columbian Exposition was fervently indorsed.

ON TUESDAY, April 12, by courtesy of the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. in Philadelphia, the W. C. T. U. entertained the "railroad boys" all day. The large rooms were gaily decorated, a choice luncheon was served, and a number of good speakers were present to take part in the meetings. Prominent among these was Miss Jennie Smith, National railroad evangelist, to whom the railway company had granted the use of their dining-rooms for the first time. The attendance was large and deeply interested.

THE pastor and some of the leading members of the Methodist church of Mandan, North Dakota, have made active endeavors to have the excellent state prohibition law enforced in the town. In retaliation the saloon element set fire to the church building—a dastardly act—by which the society is placed in great extremity, having no money with which to rebuild their place of worship, the insurance being entirely swallowed by the indebtedness. They are thus compelled to make a public appeal for contributions to be sent to S. D. King, Mandan, N. D.

MISS HOOD has shown remarkable loyalty and zeal in bringing out the life of her friend, Miss Ames, for the laboring oar was in her hands from first to last in that enterprise. A beautiful book is the result, of which Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard are proud to be known as the compilers, and to have borne a hand. Miss Hood is one of the warmest and most capable friends of THE UNION SIGNAL. She has a year of blessed work in the white harvest fields of England before her and a trip around the world is a future possibility which would be to the great advantage of the white ribbon work in all zones.

ONE of the most interesting Demorest medal contests ever held in Chicago will occur at the Jefferson Park Presbyterian church, corner Throop and Adams streets, Thursday evening, May 19. The Northwestern University Glee Club has been engaged to furnish the music, and a fine program has been prepared. Eight speakers will take part, and every person who attends will be well repaid. As Jefferson Park church is one of the most conservative in the city it is of great importance that all opponents of the licensed liquor traffic should turn out and give this contest their support. If this one is a success the church can be secured for future contests.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

Kind words of encouragement are coming to us from many who are interested in the work of the hospital. These are encouraging at headquarters and we know they will be of interest to those who are watching and praying for the success of the work.

Miss Anna T. Bailey, known on the lecture platform, writes that she is much interested in the work of the hospital, and hopes to aid, financially, some of the departments of its work.

Another friend says: "I wish the hospital and its needs and results might be presented more frequently in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. I am an admiring reader of this paper, but I seldom see anything in regard to the hospital. I think our white-ribboners would do more in this line, possibly, if they knew more about it."

I think every white-ribboner will read the following with interest:

"Enclosed you will find an order for $5 for the new building of the National Temperance Hospital. This is given in memory of my mother, Mrs. Rebecca J. Wilson, who has recently gone home. She was a strong advocate of non-alcoholic medication and during her last sickness would not use it in any way. She was a great sufferer for a long time and would often say, 'I wish every one could be as well cared for as I am when they are sick,' and was always wanting to divide her delicacies and luxuries with those who were less fortunate. So it seems to me that this should be given to the hospital, and with it my prayers will go, that it may accomplish much good. I only wish it were $5,000 instead of $5. Praying that God's blessing may be upon your work I am, yours in the cause, ADA E. WILSON."

Mrs. E. N. Reynolds, of Portland, Me., sends the following words of cheer: "I read with great interest all items of news in regard to the hospital as they appear in THE UNION SIGNAL and my prayers are for the continued success of the noble work in which you are engaged."

At a meeting of the Evanston W. C. T. U., May 4, Mrs. M. E. Kline, president of the board of trustees, presented the work that the hospital is doing and what it hoped to do when it became settled in the larger and better adapted building for its needs, which has been selected. This union evidently appreciated the work of the hospital, as a resolution was passed to the effect that it would furnish one of the rooms in the new building. A committee was appointed to select the furnishings.

The faith that somehow the needs of the hour will be met and the cause promoted, is being proven true, for the unions are coming forward with offers to help.

Any one wishing jars to fill with fruit which it is desired to send to the hospital, can have the same by informing Mrs. Hornby of the number desired.

The following contributions were received in December 1891: Unknown, books and papers; Avon, N. Y., W. C. T. U., thirty-two cans of fruit, five glasses of jelly, one-half peck dried fruit, ten sheets, four towels, old cotton; Dalton City, Ill., W. C. T. U., eleven cans fruit, twelve glasses of jelly; West Plains, Mo., W. C. T. U., eleven cans fruit, twenty glasses of jelly; unknown friend, five glasses jelly, six cans fruit, old cotton; fourteen cans fruit, six glasses jelly; old cotton, books, papers and dried fruit, twelve cans fruit; another, nine cans fruit, twenty-four glasses jelly; unknown, seventeen cans fruit; unknown, thirteen cans fruit, twelve glasses jelly; Varrick, N. Y., Y's, six cans grape juice, twelve jars jelly, six cans fruit, one silver teaspoon for Y room.

ELLEN SNYDER, Sec.

NOTICE.

The convention of Michigan W. C. T. U. will be held in Plymouth Congregational Church, corner of Trumbull avenue and Baker street, Detroit, May 24 to 27. Names of delegates should be sent immediately to Mrs. L. E. Eldred, 326 Twentieth street, Detroit, to secure entertainment. Visitors wishing reduced rates at hotels and boarding-houses should write to Mrs. Jessie A. Foster, 16 Elizabeth street, west. Miss Frances E. Willard, Miss Anna Gordon and the Silver Lake Quartette will be with us. The only reduced railroad rates we have been able to secure is to parties of ten at two cents per mile, and parties of fifty at one and one-half cents per mile.

EMMA A. WHEELER, Cor. Sec.

Official Communications.

Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, corresponding secretary of Massachusetts W. C. T. U., has been made associate superintendent of purity work in the National union, vice Dr. Julia M. Plummer, whose health is not sufficient for the exigent duties of her profession with our work added. Mrs. Stevenson is a graduate of Boston University, a fine writer and speaker, and a woman of beautiful spirit. We hope our state superintendents will correspond with her. Address 171 Tremont St., Boston.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, Supt.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest U. S. Government Food Report.

The Best Thing I Ever Offered!

Of Utmost Importance To W. C. T. U. Workers!

Indorsed by President of Nebraska W. C. T. U. as Meaning Blessed Hope For Drunkards Benevolence and Profit

To all who become interested.

Full particulars sent on receipt of postal card request. Address GEO. C. HALL, 280 Broadway, New York City.

To Exchange Harvey Property

FREE WE SEND FREE A MAP OF HARVEY with printed matter giving full information of this wonderful temperance town, that promises in the near future to surpass all others in this country for the thrift, intelligence and prosperity of its citizens, and of the wonderful advances in real estate. Harvey is situated only twenty minutes from the World's Fair grounds, and will be headquarters for Christian and temperance people during the Fair.

We will exchange lots or houses in M. M. Brown's Addition at cash prices for any clear property, taking half the value in trade, and giving time on balance. Our ground is thickly covered with home owners, many of whom are employed in the factories, being only five minutes' walk.

Write for plats and full information. Prices will soon be advanced.

NOW IS THE TIME TO BUY.

M. M. BROWN,
Room 1111 Chamber of Commerce,
CHICAGO.

SYLPH CYCLES RUN EASY

Perfection of cycle manufacture; no need now to ride springless cycles or depend on tires alone for comfort. SYLPH SPRING FRAME destroys vibrat'n. Light, simple, strong. Cata. free

Hollow Tires.

Rouse, Duryea Cy. Co.
77 G St., Peoria, Ill. Agts. Wanted

EYES tested free by mail. New method. Send stamp for test card. KEENE OPT. CO., 1301 Washington-st. Boston, Mass

FREE an elegant silver Bonbon Dish or solid silver souvenir spoon for every 25th subscription sent direct to the Gertrude Quarterly, devoted to Dress Reform. 15c a copy, 50c per year. Agents wanted. Address GERTRUDE QUARTERLY, Box 1088, Chicago, Ill.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.

NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

HAPPY HOMES

By using the BEVERIDGE COOKER. Latest and simplest cooking utensil. No odor. Food can't burn. Saves labor and fuel. Cooks on oil, gas or coal stove. Agents wanted, either sex. Big pay. A lady sold 1730 in one town. Address, for terms, W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

Sensible Mothers BUY THE "GOOD SENSE" corset Waists for themselves and their growing Children.

Publisher's Notes.

For Flower Mission Day.

THE UNION SIGNAL, of June 2d, will be a special edition for use of the W. C. T. U. on Flower Mission day. Its contents will be specially prepared for the purpose. The tens of thousands of "shut-ins," who will be remembered by the unions on June 9th, and receive from members of the organization a bouquet and a card containing a text, etc., would value the gift of a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL. To many it might carry hope not known for years; inspiration which might lift the sinner to a purer life and the saint nearer to God. Let every inmate of jail or hospital, every sufferer in mind or body confined as a result of physical or moral infirmities, have one opportunity to read THE UNION SIGNAL.

To enable you to carry out this plan, we have determined to offer extra copies, if ordered, before June 1st, so that proper provision for filling orders can be made, at the exceedingly low rate of

One Dollar per 100.

This offer is made as the contribution of the W. T. P. A. to the interest of Flower Mission Day.

Remember to send your orders by June 1st, if you desire these rates. Address
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

A Public Document.

In an article entitled "Where Shall Polly go to School?" by Edward Everett Hale, in the May Cosmopolitan, he says: "I like to say that Miss Willard's report to the annual Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a public document to be named by the side of the President's message, and that no one is fitly informed on such subjects as interest us truly if he have not read it carefully."

Now many have not yet secured this, our President's message—a message far more important to us than can be written by any state official. We can still supply a few copies, and all who have not studied that which such scholars as Edward Everett Hale recognize as "a public document" of value, should send orders for themselves and their friends without delay. Price:

1 copy	$ .02
10 copies	.15
25 copies	.40
50 copies	.75
100 copies	1.75

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

The Wonder of the World.

The coming World's Exposition in Chicago will outdo anything in modern history. The partially completed buildings are exciting the greatest admiration, and thousands of people are feeling well repaid for spending a few hours—which should be at least a day—and twenty-five cents for admission to the grounds, by the privilege of seeing for themselves the wonderful structures not yet complete.

You are too far away to enjoy this privilege. But we offer you the next best thing—the opportunity to see all the buildings pictured; complete. Forty-four pages, 12x15 inches in size, devoted to World's Fair interests, and giving much information that could not be secured on the grounds. For full description see page 15 of this paper. You will learn there, too, that you can have a copy of this handsome book if you send five new subscribers, at $1 each, to THE UNION SIGNAL, or in connection with your own subscription, both THE UNION SIGNAL one year and the Columbus Memorial for $1.30.

You want it! You will enjoy it! Your children will learn much from it!

Send for it!

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

WANTED.—Good Christian homes for the following children. All are healthy, bright and attractive: Boy, four years old; boy, six years old; boy, two and one-half years; four baby boys, four to seven months old. Apply to Children's Aid Society, 510, 167 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

IN THE

URIC ACID DIATHESIS!

NOTE relative to the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, by WM. A. HAMMOND, M. D., Surgeon-General U. S. Army (retired), formerly professor of Diseases of the Mind and Nervous System, University of New York.

Dr. H., in cases of Excess of Uric Acid, has obtained from Buffalo Lithia Water astonishing results, where the Carbonate of Lithia, the Phosphate of Ammonia and other so-called solvents of Uric Acid had failed. This would indicate, evidently, that Buffalo Lithia Water has some extraordinary virtue apart from and independent of that ascribed to Lithia. The especial value of this water in Nervous Prostration and other Nervous diseases dependent upon a Lithræmic condition.

DR. HAMMOND IN AN ARTICLE WIDELY COPIED INTO THE LEADING MEDICAL JOURNALS OF THE COUNTRY

Says:

"There is a point in relation to the therapeutical efficacy of the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER which has not as yet, I think, received sufficient attention. It is well known that many cases of diseases of the Nervous System are complicated with Lithemia, and that unless this condition is removed a cure is very often retarded, and not infrequently entirely prevented. It is quite commonly the case that in Cerebral Congestion producing Insomnia, Nervous Prostration, resulting from over-mental work or much emotional disturbance, and in epilepsy (to say nothing of many cases of insanity), an excess of Uric Acid in the blood is often observed. This state appears to be altogether independent of the character of the food, for no matter how careful the physician may be in regard to the diet of his patient, the Lithemic condition continues. I have tried to overcome this persistence by the use of phosphate of ammonia and other so-called solvents for uric acid, but without notable effect.

"Several years ago, however, I began to treat such cases with BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, with a result that was as astonishing to me as it was beneficial to the patient, so that now in all cases of nervous diseases under my charge in which there is an excess of Uric Acid in the blood I use the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in large quantities. By this I mean that I do not have the patient drink merely a tumbler or two in the course of the day, but that I flood him, so to speak, with the water, making him drink a gallon, or even more, in the twenty-four hours. By this course the urine, after a few days, ceases to deposit uric acid crystals on standing, the morbid irritability disappears, the tongue becomes clean, the wandering pains in the head are abolished, and the system is rendered much more amenable to the special treatment which may be necessary for the cure of the disease from which the patient suffers.

"I have tried Carbonate of Lithia dissolved in water in various proportions, but it certainly does not, in cases to which I refer, have the same effect as BUFFALO LITHIA WATER."

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 25, 1892.

GOUT, RHEUMATIC GOUT, RHEUMATISM, STONE OF THE BLADDER, RENAL CALCULI, BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS, NEURALGIAS, NERVOUS PROSTRATION, VARIOUS FORMS OF DYSPEPSIA, &c., &c., have their origin in an excess of Uric Acid in the blood It goes, then, without saying, that BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is a Powerful Remedial Agent in these maladies.

SPRINGS OPEN FOR GUESTS JUNE 1st.

Water in Cases of 1 Dozen Half-Gallon Bottles, $5, f. o. b. Here

Descriptive Pamphlets Sent Free.

THOMAS F. GOODE,
BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, VA.
ROBERT STEVENSON & Co., Agts., 92 & 94 Lake St., Chicago.

Our Children.

CHILDREN.

Come to me, O ye children!
For I hear your voices at play,
And the questions that perplexed me
Have vanished quite away.

Ye open the eastern windows,
That look towards the sun,
Where thoughts are singing swallows
And the brooks of morning run.

In your hearts are the birds and sunshine,
In your thoughts the brooklet's flow,
But in mine is the wind of Autumn
And the first fall of the snow.

Ah! what would the world be to us
If the children were no more?
We should dread the desert behind us
Worse than the dark before.

What the leaves are to the forest,
With light and air for food,
Ere their sweet and tender juices
Have been hardened into wood,—

That to the world are children;
Through them it feels the glow
Of a brighter and sunnier climate,
Than reaches the trunks below.

Come to me, O ye children!
And whisper in my ear
What the birds and the winds are singing
In your merry atmosphere.

For what are all our contrivings,
And the wisdom of our books,
When compared with your caresses,
And the gladness of your looks?

Ye are better than all the ballads
That ever were sung or said;
For ye are the living poems,
And all the rest are dead.

—Longfellow.

DOT'S MISSION ROOM.

BY MABEL S. MERRILL.

"Dick, let's open a mission room."

The speaker was a diminutive girl with a tin pailful of seaweed and clams, a big iron spoon, and a sunbonnet that nearly eclipsed her and made it difficult to retain her hold on things terrestrial whenever a gust of wind came sweeping along.

"All right!" cheerfully responded another atom of the human race, wearing a blue sailor's suit and a hat patriotically decorated with the stars and stripes. "Anything you say. Hello, hold on a bit! There! I say, I thought you were done for, Dot."

These varied remarks were uttered as Dick gallantly rescued his sister from the clutches of the sunbonnet which had suddenly started skyward.

"Oh, no," said Dot energetically, emerging from her headgear altogether, "I was going to tell you something. You know papa's poor sailors will go up to that horrid grogshop of Dunn's when they're ashore and then they'll come home and do dreadful things and the poor little children won't have anything to eat for ever so long."

Dick nodded gravely. Papa was a sea captain, and they had heard much of the trouble Dunn's grogshop made for him when he came ashore with his men.

"Well," said Dot with a business-like air as she saw her brother was attentive, "I am going to start a rival establishment." She tripped over the long word but righted herself and looked triumphantly at Dick.

"My goodness," said Dick, opening his eyes wide, "you open a grogshop, Sis Palmer!"

"My name is Dorothy," said Dot with great dignity, "and I never said I was going to do any such thing. There's an old store right next to Dunn's and I'm going to fix it up with chairs and things, and something to eat, and call in the men when I see them go by to Dunn's, and sing to 'em, and speak my piece about the poor little girl that got killed by the cars 'cause her father was 'toxicated, and you'll play your harmonica and help me sing, and they'll like it, and stay, and the poor children will have custards for supper, perhaps, instead of cold potatoes."

This logical conclusion seemed to impress Dick. "Well," he said thoughtfully, "we'll try and maybe they won't laugh at you 'cause you're little, and they'd be polite enough not to laugh at a lady, anyway. Let's go home and see about it."

The next day the Merry Bells made port after a short but prosperous voyage, and Captain Palmer, even while the children were clinging about him in rapture, cast an anxious glance towards Dunn's to see if the curse of the place still threatened his men. He did not know what loyal little heads and hands were at work in behalf of his poor sailors, for the twins kept their secret from all but their mother.

The tide towards Dunn's set in steady and strong after a few hours on shore. Poor Jack Varney, who was deep in the toils of the poison serpent lying in wait for him, was the first.

"Jack, Jack," called a sweet little voice as he passed the old store; "come in and see my playhouse, and tell me some stories 'bout what you saw in Cuba."

Dot was a special playfellow of Jack's, and he went at once.

"My eyes!" he said, looking around; "what's this here?"

The old store was turned into a cozy sitting-room with some odd pieces of furniture from the Palmer house. Flowers and vines wreathed everything, and a delicious odor of coffee was wafted from a corner where a little oil stove burned on a sideboard, and Kitty, the housemaid, sat behind a curtain, for Mrs. Palmer had willingly lent her aid to the enthusiastic children.

"Put me down, Jack, and I'll show you," said Dot, from her perch on his shoulder, and, slipping from his arms, she ran across the room and came back with a cup of coffee and a hot roll, which she presented with a funny little courtesy. Then, taking their places in the window, the two children began to sing.

The sweet child voices floated through the open window, and the music and the pleasant odors attracted the attention of the men who were passing. Those who came first beckoned to the others, and the room was soon pretty well filled.

Kitty served coffee and rolls untiringly and the two children sang on, song after song. Perhaps some older head and heart had arranged the program, for the selections led artfully from one touching theme to another till at last when the bird-like voices glided suddenly into "Home, Sweet Home," more than one rough face softened strangely and Jack Varney's cheek was wet with something warmer than the sea spray that drifted through the open window as he thought of the "sweet home," a wreck now because of him.

"Now, I'll speak my piece," said Dot naively, and standing in the midst of the strangely attentive group she recited the sad, beautiful story her mother had taught her of the little child who died in trying to save the life of her drunken father.

Poor Jack Varney was sobbing outright as she finished, and two or three were winking away tears, as they looked at the rosebud child before them and thought of their own little ones. But no one spoke, for as the child ended, from somewhere behind the flowers, a woman's voice floated out clear, strong and sweet in a tide of melody.

All the sailors knew the wonderful voice of the "Cap'n's wife" but if an angel had spoken they could not have been more reverently attentive as she sang to her own music the sweet, sad verses, "I've drunk my last glass, boys."

I will not stop to tell you of the hour that followed, the pledges taken and kept nor the triumph of the temperance workers when their cause was won at last by means of the tide of enthusiasm that suddenly swept over the little town.

Only, if you go through Seabury now, you will find the old store turned into a pretty reading room and literally "not one stone left upon another" at the corner where Dunn's old grogshop used to stand.

Lewiston, Me.

RULES FOR USING BOOKS.

Never hold a book near the fire.
Never drop a book upon the floor.
Never turn leaves with the thumb.
Never lean or rest upon an open book.
Never turn down the corners of leaves.
Never touch a book with damp or soiled hands.
Always keep your place with a thin bookmark.
Always place a large book on the table before opening it.
Always turn leaves from the top with the middle or forefinger.
Never pull a book from a shelf by the binding at the top, but by the back.
Never touch a book with a damp cloth, nor with a sponge in any form.
Never place another book or anything else upon the leaves of an open book.
Never rub dust from books, but brush it off with a soft, dry cloth or duster.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—The "merry month of May" is a month of changes and among other things our Cozy Corner has moved. Moved? To where? are the questions I hear you ask. To answer them I will invite you to come with me into the thick of Chicago's streets. There among its most magnificent business structures, we will enter the one which has pleased you most by its beautiful shape, surpassing all others. On the solid granite corner-stone, you spell out the words, "The Temple, Erected 1890," and see the well-known letters, W. C. T. U. On either side of the beautifully carved granite arch, which forms the entrance, you read the inscription, "The W. C. T. U. Temple." "Why!" you all exclaim, "this must be the great Temperance Temple, which we have heard so much about. How beautiful it is!" You admire the glistening marble walls and ceilings, the mosaic floors and handsome decorations, and are delighted by the swift-flying elevators which carry you to the highest stories in a trice. From the windows of THE UNION SIGNAL and Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner you see the city, with its church-spires and towers, its thousands of roofs, its chimneys pouring out smoke continually, spread out before you. Beyond these are the waters of blue Lake Michigan shining in the sunlight. When you think of the purpose for which this building was erected—to make the world better and happier—you are glad that it is so fine and beautiful. If you have given your mite to help in paying for it you rejoice that you have "stock" in it; if not, you make up your mind that you will do something right away and write to Mrs. Carse for a Temple mite-box.

Are you not all pleased to hear that our Cozy Corner has moved?

Yours, for our Temple home,

Aunt Jane

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

40.

DECAPITATION.

Behead to halt, and leave the upper part.
Behead a kind of fruit, and leave singly.
Behead a kind of musical instrument, and leave a kind of liquor.
Behead a girl's name, and leave to run.
Behead an interrogative word, and leave in this place.

A. E.

41.

WORD SQUARE.

* * * *
* * * *
* * * *
* * * *

1, a part of the face; 2, to comply; 3, withered; 4, the home of birds of prey.

ROYAL J. DAVIS.

42.

CHARADE.

My primal means without much flesh,
Or often without wealth;
While second is a home for you,
For comfort and for health.

Beware of whisky, gin and beer;
Tobacco to smoke or chew,
Or surely whole will be, I fear,
The place, at last, for you.

SOLON.

Answers in three weeks. Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED APRIL 21.

31.

W
C A T
W A T E R
R E D
R

32. Church.

33. Total abstainer.

The answer to Enigma, No. 23, published March 31, should have been Temperance.

Correct answers: Laura B. Gates; Lena and Maggie McConnell; Ada M. Burt; Fred E. Tier; Charles Wood; Fred C. De Puy; Flora Carson; Florence Nelson; Mabel Lola Moore; Verna Pease; Rena Bisbee; A. E.; Rebecca

Kernels.

"There is a time to laugh."—SOLOMON.

LITTLE girl: "Mamma, why doesn't the sea run over, if all the water flows into it?" "Nonsense, child. Don't you know it's full of sponges?"

SOME Americans are too proud to beg and too honest to steal, so they get trusted.

IGNORANCE is no excuse for accepting results from another without taking the trouble of examining them. . . . Doing duty makes character, and individual character becomes the underlying structure of nationality.

A JAPANESE proverb says: "A woman's tongue three inches long can kill a man six feet high."

A DARLING little two and one-half year old was taken to visit a kindergarten school. The question was being asked: "To what kingdom do you belong?" It was put to this little innocent. She promptly and sweetly and confidently replied, "I belong to the kingdom of heaven." The teachers wept; the whole school was moved. "Suffer the little children to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

To have what we want is riches; but to be able to do without it is power.

PATERFAMILIAS: "My hair was always oily until I went into the army." Whole family in chorus: "Apply for a pension."

AND, that no day of life may lack romance,
The spiritual stars rise nightly, shedding down
A private beam into each several heart.
—Emerson.

SOME years ago a well-known Presbyterian divine was spending his summer vacation with his family in the Adirondacks. One Sunday he accepted an invitation to preach. In the congregation was a man who apparently was very deaf, for he came to the service armed and equipped with an immense brass ear-trumpet, and as soon as the sermon began went forward and took his seat well up on the pulpit stairs. The clergyman's little daughter was among the auditors. She had never seen an ear-trumpet, and the spectacle of the form on the pulpit stairs steadily holding that instrument against his head filled her with awe and wonder. On her way home from church the first thing she said to her father when they were alone was, "Papa, was that an archangel by you?"

THE knife of simplicity is often improved by the grindstone of experience.

ARE you in favor of enlarging the curriculum?" asked a school director of a farmer. "Enlarge nothing," replied the husbandman, "the building's big enough; what we want is to teach the scholars more things."

"ARE you feeling better, Mr. Featherly?" asked Bobby at the dinner table. "Feeling better? I haven't been sick, Bobby." "I didn't know," said Bobby, indifferently, "Ma an' pa were talking about your genealogy last night, and ma said it couldn't be much worse. I supposed you were sick."

HE that is afraid of solemn things has probably solemn reason to be afraid of them.

"ART thou weary, tender heart?
Be glad of pain!
In sorrow sweetest things will grow,
As flowers in rain.
God watches, and thou wilt have sun
When clouds their perfect work have done."

MY friend Lewis of Detroit, says a peddlar called out to a slouchy old woman:

"Say! Can I see the lady of the house?"

"Well, yes, you can if you ain't blind!" snapped the woman who had answered the bell.

"Oh, beg pardon, madam! You are the lady of the house, then?"

"Yes, I am! What d'yer take me for? Did yer think I was the gentleman of the house, or the next-door neighbor, or one of the farm-hands, or the cat, or the ice-chest?"

"I didn't know, madam, but you might be the youngest daughter."

"Oh, did yer? Well, that was nat'ral, too," replied the lady of the house. "What d'yer want, sir?"

Then the peddler displayed his wares, and when he left that door-step half an hour later, his face full of pleasure and his pockets were full of money. He understood human nature and had made a good sale.

Publisher's Notes.

Neely's Great Historical Chart

POLITICAL and UNITED STATES MAP.

A Double Wall Map, 5 feet 6 inches by 3 feet 10 inches, mounted on rollers top and bottom, ready to hang.

Worth $10.

A Complete History of our Government by Administrations, Political Parties and Congress from Washington to Harrison.

On one side the Largest and Latest U. S. Map, showing all States, Counties, Railroads and Towns, (Price alone $5), And on the Other Side, a Diagram, showing all the Political Parties, 11x66. A Diagram Showing all Presidents and Cabinets, 5x66, A Diagram showing Political Complexion of each Congress. A Diagram Showing Creeds of the World, 13x10. A Diagram Showing Standing Armies of each nation, 13x10. A Diagram showing Naval Tonnage of, each Nation, 13x10. A Complete Map of the World, 13x20. A Map of Central America, 10x13. A Map of Alaska, 10x13. A Map of South Africa, 10x13. A Map of Upper Nubia and Habesh or Abyssinia, 10x23. A Map of Persia, Afghanistan, and Beloochistan, 10x13. A Complete Map of Solar System, best ever made, 10x13. The names of all Cabinet Officers, with length of term. Pictures of all the Presidents from Washington to Harrison.

INDORSEMENTS.

BENSON J. LOSSING, L. L. D., Historian: "Like a Concave Mirror it reflects to a single focus an epitome of the essential elements of our national history, showing clearly at a glance the progress of the nation from its infancy to its present period of maturity."

A. R. SPOFFORD, Librarian of Congress: "The work may fairly be termed a breviary of American Politics."

AGENTS' REPORTS.

"Received sample; sold 8 maps first hour."

"Magnificent map; my boy sold 12 the first day."

"I sell 9 each day."

"I sold 6 maps in one hour."

"I have canvassed one-half day; took 18 orders."

The Latest U. S. Map, printed in colors, covers the entire back and is the best published. It alone sells for $5.00. The complete Reversible Map (printed on both sides) is 3 feet 10 inches by 5 feet 6 inches, mounted on rollers top and bottom, with tape on sides. These two maps sell separately for $10.00.

This GREAT DOUBLE MAP is sent by exprdss, prepaid, and safe delivery guaranteed, to any address in the U. S. It can be mailed, but is much safer by express. Name your nearest express office.

The money will be refunded to any one not perfectly satisfied after receiving the map. Understand fully that all charges are prepaid by express or mail and safe delivery and perfect satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

Our Offer.

We will send a Map to any one sending us four subscribers for one year at $1 each. For $2 we will send a map and THE UNION SIGNAL for one year. In ordering address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want a Photograph

of one of the National W. C. T. U. leaders? You can have it. Write to us for information, and we will tell you how.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

We have made arrangements by which we can add to our clubbing list the Farm, Field and Stockman, General Howard, editor. The price of this paper is $1 per annum; of THE UNION SIGNAL, $1 per annum. We will send both one year for $1.75.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE.
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

TIRED OUT HOUSECLEANERS

Playing at house cleaning is tiresome, but real house cleaning is more so.

Gold Dust Washing Powder

does the work so well, and makes it so much easier, that half the terrors of house cleaning are removed by its use. 4 lb. package 25 cents. At your grocers. Try it.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR — COLD BLAST — NO DUST — CHICAGO — NO QUILLS

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

FREE For 30 Days. To introduce our CRAYON PORTRAITS we make this Special Offer: Send us a Cabinet Picture, Photograph or any picture of yourself or any member of your family, living or dead, and we will make you a CRAYON PORTRAIT FREE OF CHARGE, provided you exhibit it to your friends as a sample of our work and use your influence in securing us future orders. Place name and address on back of picture and it will be returned in perfect order. We make any change in picture you wish not interfering with likeness. Refer to any bank in Chicago. Address THE CRESCENT CRAYON CO., Opposite New German Theatre, CHICAGO, ILL. P. S.—We will forfeit $100 to any one sending us photo and not receiving crayon picture FREE as per this offer. This offer is bonafide.

PERFECTION FLOUR BIN AND SIEVE

KEEPS FLOUR PERFECTLY DRY AND FREE FROM DIRT VERMIN ETC.

COMBINES BIN SIFTER PAN & SCOOP. AERATES AND PRESERVES FLOUR FROM MOLD

Avoids the great inconvenience of reaching into a barrel or sack. No scattering. Saves time and waste. Once tried you would not be without it for many times its cost. Send for circular.

Prices to hold { 25 lbs. $2.50 / 50 lbs. $3.00 / 100 lbs. $4.00 }

Your dealer sells them or ought to. If he does not please write to us.

SHERMAN & BUTLER, Manufacturers, 26-28 W. Lake Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

A Sample Cake of Soap and 128 page Book on Dermatology and Beauty: Illustrated; on Skin, Scalp, Nervous and Blood diseases sent sealed for 10c.; also Disfigurements like Birth Marks, Moles, Warts, India Ink and Powder marks, Scars, Pittings, Rednessof Nose Superfluous Hair, Pimples, etc. JOHN H. WOODBURY, DERMATOLOGIST, 125 West 42d Street, New York City. Consultation free, at office or by letter

3 Cakes for $1.00.

DIAMOND DYES give the fastest, brightest, handsomest colors, and make the old clothes look like new. They are the original and only reliable package dyes. Sample card free. WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

BAKER'S COCOA
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used

VOSE & SONS PIANOS
EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

"Ring out the words, Wild Bells! Sound the good news, Sweet Bells!

Dr. O. P. Brown's
ACACIAN BALSAM

healed my throat, cured my lungs, stopped my cough, restored my voice!" This old, tried, Herbal Remedy loosens, heals, strengthens. Cures coughs, colds. 50 cts. and $1.

J. GIBSON BROWN, 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES have cured 10,000 Ruptures in 15 years. The only Electric Truss in the world. 60-page book free.
DR. HORNE, INVENTOR, 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO

Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH

Taken internally and used locally with Insufiator. At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured
All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N. Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

RYOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
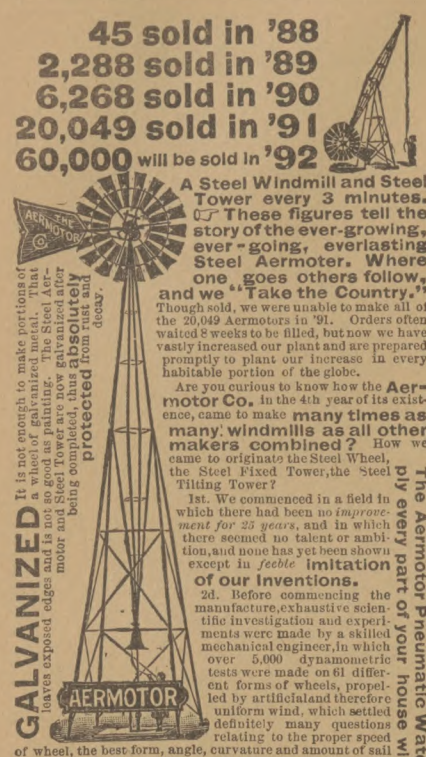
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

45 sold in '88
2,288 sold in '89
6,268 sold in '90
20,049 sold in '91
60,000 will be sold in '92



A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes.
☞ These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever-going, everlasting Steel Aermoter. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country."
Though sold, we were unable to make all of the 20,049 Aermotors in '91. Orders often waited 8 weeks to be filled, but now we have vastly increased our plant and are prepared promptly to plant our increase in every habitable portion of the globe.

Are you curious to know how the Aermotor Co. in the 4th year of its existence, came to make many times as many windmills as all other makers combined? How we came to originate the Steel Wheel, the Steel Fixed Tower, the Steel Tilting Tower?

1st. We commenced in a field in which there had been no improvement for 25 years, and in which there seemed no talent or ambition, and none has yet been shown except in feeble imitation of our inventions.

2d. Before commencing the manufacture, exhaustive scientific investigation and experiments were made by a skilled mechanical engineer, in which over 5,000 dynamometric tests were made on 61 different forms of wheels, propelled by artificial and therefore uniform wind, which settled definitely many questions relating to the proper speed of wheel, the best form, angle, curvature and amount of sail surface, the resistance of air to rotation, obstructions in the wheel, such as heavy wooden arms, obstructions before the wheel, as in the vaneless mill, and many other more abstruse, though not less important questions. These investigations proved that the power of the best wind wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates it has been done.

3d. To the liberal policy of the Aermotor Co., that guarantees its goods satisfactory or pays freight both ways, and to the enormous output of its factory which enables it to furnish the best article at less than the poorest is sold for. For '92 we furnish the most perfect bearings ever put in a windmill, and have made an exhaustive revision of the Aermotor and Towers.

If you want a strong, stiff, Steel Fixed Tower—or if you want the tower you don't have to climb (the Steel Tilting Tower) and the Wheel that runs when all others stand still, that costs you less than wood and lasts ten times as long (The Steel Aermotor) or if you want a Geared Aermotor to churn, grind, cut feed, pump water, turn grindstone and saw wood, that does the work of 4 horses at the cost of one ($100), write for copiously illustrated printed matter, showing every conceivable phase of windmill construction and work, to the AERMOTOR CO. 12th and Rockwell Sts., Chicago, or 27 and 29 Beale St., San Francisco.

GALVANIZED It is not enough to make portions of a wheel of galvanized metal. That leaves exposed edges and is not so good as painting. The Steel Aermotor and Steel Tower are now galvanized after being completed, and absolutely protected from rust and decay.

The Aermotor Pneumatic Water Supply System enables you to supply every part of your house with water without an Elevated Tank.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA
PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.

It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.

New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.

It will pay you well to write to us.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.
902-904 Royal Insurance Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF
Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.

We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.

GRAND TERRACE ADDITION

For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR
DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE
A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction
By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.
A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 remarkable illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 81st thousand. 5,000 more Agents Wanted.—Men and Women. $200 a month. ☞ Experience and capital not necessary; for We Teach All, Give Credit and Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Send to 319 W. 45th St., N.Y., for Samples of GARFIELD TEA Overcomes results of bad eating; cures Sick Headache; restores Complexion; cures Constipation.

WANTED Women to take Crochet work to do at home. Steady work. Write for particulars. L. WHITE & CO., 209 State St., Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Dep't.

The World's Fair.

What do you think about it?

Well, this is what we think. It will be the grandest event of its character ever recorded. No exposition was ever held which was planned on so grand a scale. The area occupied is the largest, the buildings the most extensive and costly, and the exhibits will be the most extensive. It will be the first World's Exposition which provides a place for woman's work and woman's interest. It will be unique, also, in that it is the first exposition which has a moral side, and its reform, educational, philanthropic and religious conferences, planned and carried forward by the leading thinkers of the nation will be a decided innovation. Of course

You Want to be There.

Then you should learn something about it now. We have just the thing to inform you

If you go or if you do not go.

It is the

Columbus Memorial,

a large folio volume, 12x15 inches in size, printed on saper-calendered paper, neatly and attractively bound in heavy enameled paper. It contains 44 pages and shows the drogress and achievement this country has made in four hundred years. It contains:

Letter press and full page map of discovery, 1492 to 1606, 116 years.

Letter press and full page map of settlement, 1607 to 1673, 66 years.

Letter press and full page map of wars, 1673 to 1773, 100 years.

Letter press and full page map of independence, 1773 to 1789, 16 years.

Letter press and full page map of constitution, 1789 to 1845, 56 years.

Letter press and full page map of dissension, 1845 to 1860, 15 years.

Letter press and full page map of secession, 1860 to 1865, 5 years.

Letter press and full page map of peace, 1865 to 1892, 27 years.

Map of the city of Genoa, Italy, supposed birthplace of Columbus, with biographical sketch of Christopher Columbus.

Three pages, general descriptive matter "World's Columbian Exposition," from its inception to the present time, with a carefully prepared and authentic table of the World's Fairs that have been held at different times throughout the world, from "Crystal Palace," 1851, to the "World's Fair" of 1893.

In all their magnificence are portrayed Machinery Hall, which alone cost $1,200,000; the Manufacturers' Building, the Art Palace, the Administration Building, the Government Building, the Electrical Building, the Horticultural Building, the Agricultural Building, the Transportation Building, the Fish and Fisheries Building, the Woman's Building, designed by a woman; the Mines and Mining Building, the Forestry Building; beautiful illustration of the wonderful lagoon scene; grand bird's-eye view scene of the Exposition buildings; double page map or diagram, showing the relative position of the main buildings, including state buildings and size of each, etc., etc.

We will send this and THE UNION SIGNAL one year, postpaid, for only $1.30, or we will send it to any address postpaid, in return for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1.00 each.

Tell the children to ask their friends to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. If they send five new names and $5 we will send one of the beautiful "Columbus Memorials" postpaid, to any address they may indicate.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE, Rooms 1102–1110,
Cor. Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago.

Still Going.

That is, our Sunday-school Lessons for May 22. Orders for fifteen thousand in one day were reported filled in our shipping-room. The third edition was soon exhausted, but we are ready to print more.

So keep on sending orders—early as possible, however, so as to prevent disappointment. Every Sunday-school in your locality should use this Lesson and thus receive the benefit of the work done for them. As we have said before, this Lesson is the finest we have ever issued. We cannot do it justice, so do not attempt a further description except to say that Mrs. Helen G. Rice and Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson have developed the best thoughts underlying the Lesson.

Let us all unite in an effort to place it in the hands of every teacher and pupil in our Sunday-schools. And "what thou doest do quickly."

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

There is NO "SURE CURE FOR EVERY CASE OF ASTHMA" or "EVERY CASE OF HAY FEVER," but the worst cases, if uncomplicated by organic disease, can be CURED TO STAY CURED
by constitutional treatment, and this at the patient's home.

ASTHMA AND HAY-FEVER

We treat no one without a thorough knowledge of the case.

Incurable Cases Declined.

Examination free by mail.

We want name and address of every sufferer from Asthma or Hay Fever.
P. HAROLD HAYES, M. D., BUFFALO, N. Y.

Odell Double-Case Typewriter.

ONLY $20.00.

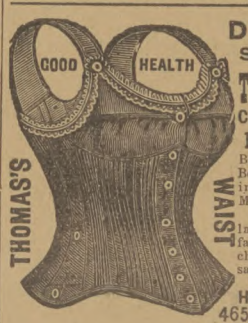
50,000 IN USE.

NO TYPEWRITER will equal the work of our Double-Case for clean impression, perfect alignment, and number of copies of manifold at one impression.

Our new machine has 78 characters, and is the only one where a capital or small letter can be obtained without changing the position of the hand.

To any subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL we will send the Typewriter upon receipt of Five Dollars. The balance to be paid in installments of $5 each, 30 days apart. The machine can be returned if it does not do just as we say it will.

ODELL TYPEWRITER CO.,
CHICAGO, ILL.



DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.
Thomas' Good Health Corset Waists BY MAIL.
Ladies $1.50
Misses 1.25
Children, 60
Best for Economy, Health and Beauty. Buttoned or to clasp in front. Long or short waist. Material the very best.
Thousands mailed in the last year, with entire satisfaction to Patrons. Money cheerfully refunded if not satisfactory.
Agents wanted everywhere.
H. A. Thomas & Co., Mant's
465 W. Van Buren St. Chicago.

MISS BEACH'S
Curling Fluid
Keeps the hair in curl for days Innocent as cologne. A toilet necessity. Not sent on trial.
30,000 Ladies have Endorsed It
At druggists or prepaid 50c.
LADY AGENTS wanted.
DENISON CHEMICAL CO.,
56 (H) LaSalle St., Chicago.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory.
Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York.
Also 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

SAVE $40.00 ON NEW $140.00
BICYCLES
New, Latest Pattern $140 Bicycles for $100. Cheaper grades in proportion; cash or time. Agents wanted.
A. W. GUMP & CO., Dayton, Ohio.
BICYCLES, GUNS & TYPEWRITERS taken in exchange.

SAVED HER LIFE!
TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease. Mrs. G. W. C., of Detroit, Mich., writes: "Tokology treatment, under God, saved my life in childbirth, and gave me a strong, healthy baby girl. I would like to place a copy of your book in the hands of every woman in the land." Price, prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents; exclusive territory.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO. 277 Madison-st. Chicago

School of Expression. Vocal and literary training. Opens October 6. S. S. CURRY, Ph. D., 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

Harvard University. Summer Courses, Voice & Expression. 5 weeks. Jul. 15. Address S. S. CURRY, 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

Province of Expression. Broadest survey of the whole subject.—Herald. School of Expression, 15½ Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS
CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.
Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.
N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,
163-165 DEARBORN ST. - CHICAGO, ILL.
New York. Boston.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.
TAKE A COURSE IN THE
SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW. (Incorporated.)
Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to
J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y,
DETROIT, MICH.
525 WHITNEY BLOCK.

PURE GUM RUBBER GOODS
Of Every Description; also,
Mackintosh Clothing;
also, Japanese Tissue,
For Mending Without Needle or Thread,
ELASTIC TIP CO.,
Headquarters 152-154 Lake St., Chicago

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR
Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The FREE St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish.
St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

FREE FOR 100 SUBSCRIBERS ONLY. With the first 100 orders received from this advertisement for HENDRYX'S COMPENDIUM OF BOOK-KEEPING AND BUSINESS FORMS FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION will be given a course of instruction by mail free. This is our regular $15 course. Do not delay, but order a Compendium at once. Price $1.
F. H. HENDRYX, 178, Bath, N. Y.

BABY CARRIAGES
Shipped anywhere to any one at WHOLESALE PRICES.
Latest Styles.
A $5.50 carriage for $2.95
A $12.50 " " $6.95
A $18.50 " " $9.75
Send for 40-page illustrated catalogue free.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 362 Dearborn St., B 27 Chicago, Ill.

BABY CARRIAGES
We manufacture to sell direct to private parties at factory prices, and deliver free of charge to all points in United States. Our new Catalogue free. Address
C. T. WALKER & CO., 199 E. North Ave., Chicago, Ill.

For Eight Cents
We will send you a hundred samples of really artistic wall papers. The prices are from 5 to 50c, a roll.
A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St., Phila.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

DRUNKENNESS cured by using BOSTON DRUG. Absolute secrecy guaranteed or money refunded. Price $1. All druggists, or by mail
W. R. BROWN & CO.,
105 Chauncey St., Boston.

BORSCH-OPTICIAN
103 E. ADAMS ST.
CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT
SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

FAT PEOPLE You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by DR. CLARKE'S Home Treatment. Proofs, Testimonials, Free. F. B. CLARKE, M. D., Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths.
Address, CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

A LADY WANTED
in each locality to manage Toilet Parlor at home; write, obtain names, send circulars. $5 to $15 weekly. Our Toilet Art Book Free. Send stamp. SYLVAN TOILET CO., Port Huron, Mich.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free.
G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St., Chicago.

10 cents pays for the best ladies' paper published for three months. Ladies' Bazar, Chicago, Ill.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

Vol. XVIII.—No. 20.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, May 19, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Ursula Dietrick 2419 19th St 9292

A GRAND SUCCESS!!

THE NATIONAL BICHLORIDE OF GOLD INSTITUTE

was opened only five weeks ago, and the beautiful new building which we thought would be amply large enough for months to come, is filled to overflowing and another large building, two doors from the Institute, has been secured for the accommodation of patients. It is now apparent that it will be necessary to provide a large building near one of Chicago's beautiful parks, where hundreds of patients can be accommodated, and to secure the money necessary to this end, we are now offering a limited number of shares of our stock at $25 per share, payable, if desired, in monthly instalments of $5 on each share. The money derived from the sale of this stock will be invested in ground and a building adequate to our needs. This building will be to all intents and purposes a beautiful, commodious, well-furnished hotel for the accommodation of our patients. We believe in giving them cheerful, homelike surroundings.

As soon as this new building is completed, our present Institute building will be devoted to the treatment of women, as there exists a great need in this direction.

PATIENTS ARE COMING from distant points, while scores from Chicago alone are applying for treatment. All applicants are being provided for except Saloon Keepers. If they forsake their devilish work of ruining men, they, too, will be treated if they make application. Some have applied and have been informed that if they intend to continue in the Saloon business they must go elsewhere for treatment. We sincerely wish that every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL could visit our Institute and see the grand work which is being done. These poor fellows come to us trembling with the palsy of the rum curse, and go away cured and cleansed, many of them with their feet upon "The Rock." One of them who left us to go to his home last Sunday a week ago, in the course of his farewell talk to the other patients, said:

"I came to this pleasant home a common drunkard; not a day for years passed over my head but what I was more or less under the influence of liquor. I got so that I cared for neither home nor friends—all I wanted was whisky. But to-day I go from here a steady, sober man. Oh, the pleasure of it! Only those who have been in the terrible toils, and have felt this deliverance, can appreciate it.

"And another thing, boys. I have gone 'Over the line,' and in the future, as long as God spares me, I want to raise my voice upon the right side, and that is the side our dear Saviour is on. I want to thank God and Dr. Thompson for this deliverance."

It is to extend this GRAND WORK, the grandest in many respects of the present day, that we are now taking subscriptions to our stock. People who visit the Institute are convinced that we are on a solid basis.

A QUARTERLY DIVIDEND OF 3 %

The following resolution adopted by our Board of Directors speaks for itself:

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of THE NATIONAL BICHLORIDE OF GOLD CO., held at their general offices, Nos. 17 to 21 Quincy St., April 16, it was decided to declare dividends quarterly on all full paid Stock. The first dividend will be paid July 1st of this year, and we are glad to say that so quickly have we stepped into popular favor, that the number of patients already under treatment at our Institute is sufficient to warrant us in saying that the FIRST DIVIDEND for the quarter will not be less than THREE PER CENT. There is not an unoccupied bed in the Institute, and we are seeking accommodations (until we can build larger) in near by residences. By order of the Board of Directors. MARK M. THOMPSON, President, WALTER THOS. MILLS, Secretary.

Negotiations are now pending for the establishing of branch Institutes at various points, and as these will pay a good liberal sum on each patient treated, our income from this source will be great. This, coupled with the income from the treatment of patients at the home Institute, enables us to assure purchasers of our Stock that OUR DIVIDENDS WILL BE LARGE, and as they begin at once on all full paid stock, it will only be a short time, we believe, when our Stock will sell for many times its face value. We do not want to sell it in large blocks. We want stockholders in every part of our land working for us. It certainly is a pleasant thought that one is engaged in such a noble work, and it does not make it less pleasant to be well paid (in money) for assisting in the work. We have made our shares small ($25) purposely, so that people of limited means may invest. As a rule they are the workers. We do not want capitalists. We could sell every dollar of our Stock to them if we wanted to. We prefer to do otherwise for the reason stated.

Our Stock is selling rapidly, and those who want shares must APPLY AT ONCE, as all we have for sale will soon be taken. Do you want a part in the work?

Pamphlet giving price of treatment, testimonials and full information. If you wish stock, send a small amount to secure shares until you can investigate. Address

THE NATIONAL BICHLORIDE OF GOLD CO., 17 TO 21 QUINCY STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

HARVEY AS AN INVESTMENT

To prosper yourself, cast your lot in a prosperous place.

PAST.

Eighteen months ago a vacant prairie, 2½ miles from the Chicago city line, undeveloped, undervalued.

Bought by the Harvey Land Association with the view to establishing an industrial town on temperance principles; the generous bonus offered to manufacturers being coupled with the condition that the employed should, by preference, be residents of the town; and all deeds prohibiting the sale of liquor, forever.

PRESENT.

Thirteen great industrial establishments.

Four thousand population.

Six hundred buildings.

Paved streets, parks and boulevards.

Perfect drainage.

Sixteen thousand shade trees.

Ten schools and churches.

Pure water from artesian wells.

Two and one-half miles of electric railroad.

Five railroads; sixty daily passenger trains.

A $14,000 Illinois Central depot.

A thriving, happy community, blessed with plenty of work, and forever freed from the curse of Rum.

FUTURE.

Room for 100 industrial concerns.

Room for 25,000 inhabitants.

Employment of vastly varied kinds practically insured to all residents.

Close proximity to the World's Fair (25 minutes) with all the advantages the fact implies.

The cottage built to-day will pay for itself in rental and increased value before the Fair is over.

The growth of the mushroom; the endurance of the oak.

And, never, so long as the town shall stand will there be a saloon in Harvey.

You can buy lots to-day at original prices, but make no mistake. The foregoing conditions and conclusions apply only to the property deeded by the

HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION,
825 Rookery Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

Their literature to be had for the asking.

WHAT?

Why, the beautiful

Souvenir Spoon

which we have been preparing for our workers and all making a collection of spoons. Could it be more complete in design? It shows the beginning of the Great Reform in the bowl, where is pictured the little Crusade Church in Hillsboro, whence it sprang.

The culmination is emblemized in the World, belted with the White Ribbon at the extreme end, while the Medallion of the President of the National and the World's W. C. T. U. is embowered in the National Floral Emblem, the trailing arbutus.

On the reverse side are the World's Floral Emblem, the water lily, as also are the initials of the great Official Publishing House, which secured the production of the spoon.

Of course, every one will want one or more of these spoons—want them for personal use and as gifts. And we have decided to reduce the profits on the same to the lowest point of safety, so as to enable more to buy them.

NOTICE.—They are offered at a lower price than any sterling silver spoon on the market. Here are our rates for the different styles, all made of Solid Sterling Silver:

TEA SPOONS.

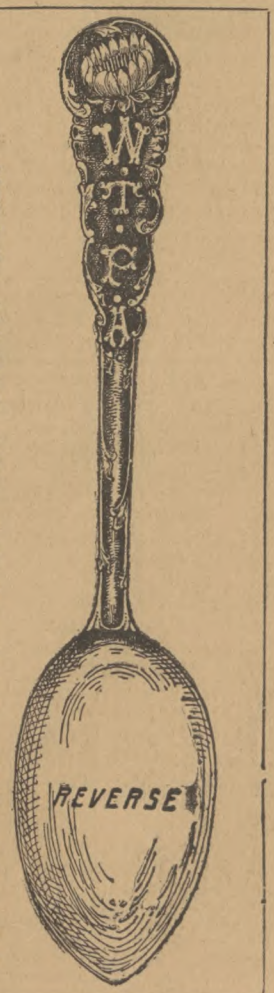
For single spoon,	$ 2.25
Per set of 6, - -	12.50
With bowl gilded,	2.75
All gilded, - - - -	3.25

ORANGE SPOONS.

For single spoon, -	2.50
With bowl gilded,	3.00
All gilded, - - - -	3.50

AFTER DINNER COFFEE SPOONS.

For single spoon, -	1.50
With bowl gilded,	1.75
All gilded,- - - -	2.00



CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
- The Larger Hope 8
- The Land of Manners and Ideas 8
- Injustice to Henry W. Blair 8

THE TEMPLE QUESTION-BOX 9

THE WATCH-TOWER 9

CONTRIBUTED:
- Poem, The Inner Calm, Selected 2
- Extracts from the Annual Address of Lady Henry Somerset 2
- An Exodus Northward, by Edward Everett Hale 2
- The Dram-Shop an Outlaw at the World's Fair. By B. V. Cushman, M. D. 3
- New York Woman's Health Protective Association. By Mrs. Margaret A. Ravenhill 3
- Extempore Address before the Federation of Women's Clubs, Chicago. By Frances E. Willard. 4

CORRESPONDENCE:
- An Open Letter to the Chicago Advance and Other Religious Papers 5
- Progress in Kansas 6
- Good Things in Colorado, The Hope of the Next Convention 6
- Temperance Temple Items 6

THE HOUSEHOLD:
- Poem, A True Marriage 7
- "Please Invite Tom, Dick and Harry" 7
- Saloons Decorated on Palm Sunday 7

NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
- Oregon—Tennessee—Alabama—California News Letter—Colorado's Work—Georgia—Michigan—News in a Nutshell—Call for State Convention 10, 11, 12

OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
- Word from Jennie Casseday 12
- Department of Work Among Miners 12
- The Opportune Time 12

PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 13, 15, 16

OUR CHILDREN:
- Poem, Pippin Hill—A Dialogue 14
- A Little Heroine 14
- Lend a Hand 14
- Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner—Soft-Shelled Nuts 14

KERNELS 15

Our Library Table.

To fight successfully any opponent, that opponent must be thoroughly understood. Understanding is not a simple reading of present conditions and actions, but in addition to this a perception of causes, past and present, direct and indirect. That stalwart enemy of Christian civilization, inebriety, is not a giant who has won his way by simple bulk and obstinacy, but a creature whose enormous proportions are backed by a thousand secret and elusive forces, playing into each other's hands, striking now here and now there, and assuming new phases, the monster using for the field of its activities the intricate human system of bone and muscle and nerve. T. D. Crothers, M. D., of Hartford, Conn., is the able editor of THE QUARTERLY JOURNAL OF INEBRIETY, a magazine whose intrinsic value as a vehicle of practical and needed information should recommend it to every man and woman who professes to an active hatred of the drink curse. The JOURNAL presents articles from men of science who look keenly and calmly upon these questions, as well as contributions from those whose daily work is for and among the victims of drink. It gives the ever forcible arguments of statistics, since figures are honest and facts not to be set aside. It is in touch with the work of reform at home and abroad, adding to its premises the strength of reliable testimonies. The JOURNAL is published under the auspices of The American Association for the Study and Cure of Inebriates. Price per year, $2.

"Cave-Dwellings of Men," is the subject of a copiously illustrated article by Mr. W. H. Larrabee, which appears in the May POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. It relates not only to the ancient cave-dwellings of America and the Old World, but describes also the way in which modern troglodytes are living in several parts of Europe to-day. In an article on "Evolution in Folk-Lore." Mr. David Dwight Wells gives two versions of a negro legend nearly a century apart in time, which show the alterations produced in the tale by the change from free life in Africa to slave life in America. Both admirers and critics of Spencer will be interested in the paper on "Herbert Spencer and the Synthetic Philosophy." The writer, Mr. William H. Hudson, was formerly private secretary to Mr. Spencer, and gives an insight into the process by which his philosophic thought unfolded. The paper contains also a true statement of the relation between the work of Darwin and that of Spencer. Prof. Frederick Starr contributes "Notes upon Anthropological Work in Europe," telling what museums and other facilities for the study of anthropology exist abroad. The article is illustrated with twelve portraits of leading European anthropologists.

THE PREACHER'S MAGAZINE is, without a doubt, a periodical of no little value to those who preach the Word. The May number opens with the first chapter on "Moses: His Life and its Lessons," a series of articles by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, which if they fulfill the promise of this initial article will be rich in thought and suggestion. Another most excellent paper is on "How Men get their Sermons," by Rev. John Edwards. The subject of this sketch, or rather the person from whom its practical remarks are taken is Dr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, the successful pastor of a large church, a profound, evangelical, and liberal-minded theologian, and one of the ablest of the "Yale Lecturers on Preaching."

Wilbur B. Ketcham, publisher, 2 Cooper Union, New York. $1.50 per year.

THE CHARITIES REVIEW for May has for its frontispiece a picture of John McDonogh, that sturdy, exemplary Scotch-Irish philanthropist so well known in New Orleans. A sketch of his life and work by Charles D. Lanier, is that of a man who lived no common life, died leaving an estate "valued at from two to three millions of dollars—forty-two years ago a monstrous fortune," nearly all of which was devoted by a carefully wrought will, to charitable purposes, public and private. A very suggestive article is "Some Words on Burial Reform," by Samuel Macauley Jackson, and the subject is one of speedily growing concern, especially to those who inhabit the more densely settled territories. The REVIEW is of deep interest from cover to cover and should be found in the library of those whose hearts are wide open to philanthropy at home and abroad.

Published by The Critic Company, 52 and 54. Lafayette Place, New York City.

In the opening editorial department of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS for May, Mr. Shaw, the editor, dwells upon the importance of the silver question in its relation to the strength of parties this year. He regards the situation as a favorable opportunity for the Farmers' Alliance and the so-called People's party to enter the field with considerable vigor and prestige. Fine portraits of three eminent leaders of the People's party appear in this number, namely, Mr. Polk, president of the Farmers' Alliance, Hon. Ignatius Donnelly, of Minnesota, and Hon. James B. Weaver, of Iowa.

All things considered, the greatest and the most interesting man who now lives on this planet is William E. Gladstone, and it is within bounds to declare that by far the most interesting sketch of Mr. Gladstone's personality, character, career, and methods of work that has ever been written is the brilliant article which is published as the leading feature of this May number.

In its large collection of timely portraits, the REVIEW OF REVIEWS has strikingly good pictures of three men who just now are of conspicuous prominence in the theological discussions of the English-speaking world, namely, Dr. Lyman Abbott, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, and editor of the Christian Union; Professor Charles S. Briggs, of Union Theological Seminary, and Principal Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, Oxford, who has just returned home from a visit to the United States.

Albert Shaw, editor, 13 Astor Place, New York City.

The Young Woman's Christian Association, which has taken such a firm and noble stand beside its older brother, The Young Men's Christian Association, has for its organ, "THE EVANGEL," a very complete little periodical deserving of hearty indorsement by all who are members or friends of this band of Christian workers. For a twenty page paper, the table of contents covers a wide range, and seekers are sure to find aid respecting whatever department of the work they have embraced. 1301-2 Venetian Building, 34 Washington St., Chicago.

W. C. T. U. AND Y. W. C. T. U. STATIONERY.

PRINTED.

Whiting's White Wove, superfine, printed Monogram. In box, 40 sheets note-size paper and 40 envelopes to match.

1 box for ..... $ .50
3 boxes for 1.25

500 Note heads.
Price $1.75

500 Letter heads.
Price $2.50

500 Envelopes.
Price $2.00

1,000 Note heads.
Price $2.75

1,000 Letter heads.
Price $4.50

1,000 Envelopes.
Price $3.25

This stationery can be had by sending to the WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N., THE TEMPLE, cor. Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago.

ONLY $20!

ONLY $20!

ONLY $20!

FOR THIS FINE

UNION SIGNAL SEWING MACHINE

If sent with twenty new names as yearly subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL.

Sent at Receiver's Expense.

FOR $23.00 we will send it, freight prepaid, to any address in the United States, together with a FULL SET OF ATTACHMENTS. This machine is highly commended by all to whom we have shipped it.

Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION, THE TEMPLE (Rooms 1102–1110), Corner Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

THE UNION SIGNAL AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION — FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Vol. XVIII.—No. 20.] CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, May 19, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

COMMITTEE ON RAILROAD RATES.

Miss Mollie Hay, of Indianapolis, has been chosen by the National general officers to secure the railroad rates for the National Convention, to be held in Denver, October 21st to the 26th inclusive. Miss Hay takes the place of Miss Hood who is in Europe. In due time state presidents will hear from her either by circular or through these columns, regarding routes and rates.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Italy's new cabinet is announced.

Central New Zealand is swept by a hurricane.

Rain has ceased falling in the northwest and floods are abated.

The Mississippi river at St. Louis passed the "danger line" May 13, doing infinite damage.

Fifteen houses were scattered into kindling wood by a Kansas cyclone at Augusta last Friday.

The national editorial excursion reaches California after a pleasant journey across the continent.

The Childs-Drexel Home for printers at Colorado Springs, Col., was formally dedicated May 12.

Florida decides to raise $200,000 by popular subscription to make an appropriate exhibit at the World's Fair.

At Pesth, Hungary, scores of coal miners met their death in the mines, flooded by an immense waterspout, May 13.

Over twenty thousand New England granite workers are idle on account of the great lockout which commenced Monday.

A frightful wreck occurred on the "Big Four" road near Cleves, Ohio, May 15, by which many persons lost their lives.

A number of the delegates to the biennial meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs occupied Chicago pulpits last Sunday.

Jonathan Blanchard, editor of the Christian Cynosure, and formerly president of Knox college, a prominent educator and church worker, died at his home in Wheaton, Ill., May 14.

The delegates to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, numbering six hundred, spent Sunday in Salt Lake City, en route to Portland, Ore., where the sessions open May 20.

The plan for a special issue of twenty million fifty cent pieces for use at the Columbian Exposition, bearing designs appropriate to the occasion, is approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Mint.

The indictments against officials of the whisky trust were quashed last Friday by the United States district court in Massachusetts. The defendants will be rearrested under a new indictment which is supposed to cover all technicalities.

On Friday, May 13, at the Omaha Methodist conference, a memorial service was held. The memoir of Gen. Clinton B. Fisk was read by Dr. J. M. Buckley, of New York, who reviewed the whole career of the deceased—his private life, his army record, his work for the church, the temperance cause and his success as an educator.

WE reiterate our belief that Anna Dickinson, the most remarkable orator that America has produced in half a century, has never been insane. The papers of New York again inform us of her illness and impecunious condition. If she had been a man the government would never have permitted such a statement to be made, for its own honor's sake. We fervently wish Miss Dickinson might regain her health and join the ranks of the reformers in these days of mighty deeds and heavenly hopes.

REV. DR. WALDRON told the Congregational pastors of Boston, recently, that of the 26,000 persons for whom their denomination furnishes church sittings in its forty-two places of worship, 8,550 were present in the morning and 7,269 in the evening.

IT is a curious commentary on human inconsistency—the fact that pending our continent-wide discussion on the subject, the World's Fair grounds are open on Sundays, and thousands flock there on the sacred day at twenty-five cents per head.

WE hope for helpful accounts of "self-denial week." The Salvation Army has made a pronounced success of this observance, having raised $100,000 from this source last year, America contributing $6,000 of that amount. We wonder if white-ribboners will do as well.

THE generosity of the American people to the Russians in these days of need, is extolled from the Czar to the peasant. No other country has as yet sent help save ours, and the first money given here was the $200 collection at the National Convention, Boston, November, 1891.

TO THE attention of those who say "the church does nothing practical" the following item is commended: "Dr. Huntington of Grace (Episcopal) Church, New York, told his people on a recent Sunday that the poor in a certain quarter needed temporary help and care in a home which he asked them to build, and that he knew a lady who would go there to live and conduct the home without charge. The vestry at once offered the use of three lots near by, owned by the parish. Three men came forward voluntarily with $36,000 to build three homes—one for old men, one for old women and one for little children." This was done then and there, suiting the action to the word.

MISS MARY ALLEN WEST has learned that but little work can be done in Japan during the summer months, hence deems it wise not to go there until September. We have just received a letter to this effect. Her present plan is to remain in California, continuing the work she has been engaged in there, until after the Pacific Grove school of methods which she will conduct. The last of July or first of August she will go to the Sandwich Islands, in response to the invitation of Mrs. Whitney, president of the Hawaiian W. C. T. U. and spend a month or six weeks in school of methods work. She will then go to Japan to give our friends there all the assistance in her power. During the past six weeks she conducted six county schools of methods, including the tri-county school just closed at Santa Cruz.

MRS. REBECCA COLLINS, an orthodox Friend, and the president of New York City W. C. T. U., and honorary president of that society for many years, passed onward April 30, 1892, aged eighty-eight. This saint of God was all her life prominently associated with every gospel movement, and at her funeral men and women spoke from widely varied circles—among them Mrs. Buchanan, of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Prindle, of Florence Midnight Mission, Miss Hills, of the Broadway Tabernacle women's meeting, a lady from the Bible and Fruit Mission, also a Jewish Rabbi, a Universalist minister and a Hicksite Friend. Our own Frances J. Barnes brought the messages of the Y's, and Mrs. Palmer-Langston gave a blessed exhortation. The great, glowing heart of Rebecca Collins had shone out with the impartial ardor of the sun in heaven, and here were the harvest tokens on which, perhaps, her white soul looked down from the sweet Land of Peace. Her comrades had placed lilies of the valley in the faithful, withered hands, and white roses, tied by our memorial ribbon. Upon her face was said to be the look of one who could not longer be detained from angelhood.

IN the debate at Omaha as to whether the Bishops or the General Conference should appoint the judiciary committee, Dr. Pullman, of New York, made the following remarkable statements: "Our church is too much under the influence of a very few. We are often accused of being under the government of a hierarchy, or aristocracy, and we must do something to disabuse the public mind of such accusations. The church, instead of ruling herself, is ruled by a board of officers. Of the 113 members of the Episcopal board, there are but twenty-one pastors and four laymen, and the others draw salaries as officers of the church. These eighty-eight consist of presiding elders, book agents and other non-presiding officers, or over ninety per cent of the entire board."

THE Advance of a recent date—western organ of Congregationalism—has a generous editorial on "Woman and Reform," the following paragraph of which attracts us specially as setting forth our own theory of that great subject: "Woman, as a reformer, rather draws than drives. We cannot shovel the darkness out of the world; we must shine it out. Woman shines; her virtues, her gentleness, love and faith are light. . . . She has entered the field of reform not to displace and distance man but to supplement his efforts, supplying both what he lacks and what an advancing civilization specially requires." Now, genial editors of The Advance, will you not advocate the sending of at least a sprinkling of women delegates to the approaching national council of your church and the putting of a few names of your chief women who labor in the gospel on the program for that high occasion?

A MOST timely suggestion comes from Mrs. Jackson, of Garden City, Kan., who writes as follows: "It seems to me that the local unions should be requested to appoint some one to gather up incidents of our work, as one by one our old Crusaders and evangelists pass to the better country. We are reminded that unless this work is soon done, it will not be done at all. A most interesting volume could be compiled from the reports of our heroic local white-ribboners, who have labored and borne and had patience in those difficult days. I have been forcibly impressed to write this letter by the accounts of the deaths of so many of our old workers the last winter. Let us, by preserving the records of these items, stimulate those who shall come after us to nobler work for the Master and for humanity—not only the work done in the heroic Crusade of 1873 and 1874, but the greater crusade that has been going on ever since."

MISS ELIZABETH W. GREENWOOD has recently issued an appeal to each president of a national, state and county W. C. T. U. the world over. Miss Greenwood has an undoubted right to do this as she is the world's superintendent of evangelistic work, and has had eighteen years of practical and most successful experience. What she asks is simply this: That the hour from eleven to twelve o'clock, each day of our conventions, shall be scrupulously set apart for devotion and Bible readings, and that this shall become a universal custom in all our work. Miss Greenwood justly says that when the hour for Bible readings comes either in the morning or afternoon, it is practically a failure, confusion abounds, reverential service is impossible, officers and committees are seldom present, citizens cannot attend, and the impression is given that this service is of less importance than the routine business. The eleven o'clock hour, closing with noon-tide prayer, is a strong center of force in the convention, tides it over difficult places, and keys the thought and purpose of all to those scriptural verities without which our lives are but a sort of mechanical jugglery. We cannot too strongly enforce the motto given by Miss Greenwood: They who most honor the Spirit are they whom the Spirit most honors.

Contributed.

THE INNER CALM.

Calm me, my God, and keep me calm;
Let thine outstretchéd wing
Be like the shade of Elim's palm,
Beside her desert spring.

Yes, keep me calm, though loud and rude
The sounds my ear that greet
Calm in the closet's solitude,
Calm in the bustling street,

Calm in the hour of buoyant health,
Calm in the hour of pain,
Calm in my poverty or wealth,
Calm in my loss or gain,

Calm in the sufferance of wrong
Like Him who bore my shame,
Calm 'mid the threatening, taunting throng
Who hate Thy holy name.,

Calm me, my God, and keep me calm,
Soft resting on Thy breast;
Soothe me with holy hymn and psalm
And bid my spirit rest.

—Selected.

EXTRACTS FROM THE ANNUAL ADDRESS OF LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

[The British Women's Temperance Association met in London on May 3. Miss Helen Hood was present as a fraternal delegate from the National W. C. T. U. Advance sheets of Lady Henry Somerset's annual address at this meeting have reached us and we give them instead of the usual sketch by our English editor. EDS.]

As the mighty throb of steam bears us across the huge Atlantic billows at the rate of twenty miles an hour, the swift rush of the express hurries us over the iron road, and the message whispered in the Old World speeds beneath the unfathomed depths of the great ocean to be echoed instantaneously in the new, it has come to me that these wonders of the nineteenth century are the voices crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," for they are the heralds of the time when we shall breathe an atmosphere of truer freedom and higher spirituality—when we shall realize the true meaning of universal brotherhood, and see the human family unbroken by divisions, national, social or religious. The reason for the hope that is in us lies in this, that whether we labor for the freedom of our race from the slavery of drink, the uplifting of woman to her true place in the economy of God, or for the better lot of those whom daily hunger drives to labor and whose acceptance of their wage is based on the free choice to toil or starve—whatever be the work that makes our life, we find in every land and speaking every tongue a thousand comrades whose hopes go hand in hand with ours.

It has been my lot in life to visit many countries and to revel in the beauties that art has accumulated and the treasures stored by centuries, to stand in places built by the great dead, to linger on the spot where Charlemagne knelt and Virgil sang. But when I crossed the ocean last October and landed on the shores of the New World, whose portals are kept by the figure of that Liberty she holds so dear, I felt within me that which made me say: "The living, the living shall praise Thee, O God." The whole of that great world pulsates with the larger hope and an optimistic spirit seems breathed into its philanthropy, for the air is filled with the presence of regeneration and reform. There are times in our lives when great momentum is given to our convictions; when a sight of what has been accomplished teaches us what can be done; when the power which has enabled others to triumph is specifically promised to ourselves afresh. My visit to America has meant all this for me; nay, it has meant more. It is impossible to hold the hands and look into the faces of those women who in the strength of the Spirit were led into a great crusade, and not receive a fresh baptism of power. The eighteenth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was the living testimony of the results accomplished during eighteen years of tireless toil. Miss Willard has been characterized by one of the first literary women of her country as "an educator of women in the wider sense, an emancipator from conventionalities, prejudice and narrowness, and a representative on the spiritual plane of the new age upon which we are entering." She takes her place with the foremost women of our times. She has, perhaps, unconsciously described herself best when she said: "In all this wondrous battle let our motto be, womanliness first and afterward what you will."

The temperance movement has laboriously proceeded from effect to cause; the drunkard in the gutter was the most obvious fact and, therefore, he was the one to be earliest considered. For generations the question has been: What can we do for him? Hearts taught by the Spirit have said: "I will make my habits such as he can safely imitate, and total abstinence for others shall become the heart cry of the movement." Science is the handmaid of reform as well as of religion. The greatest fact of our era is that we have learned to look upon scientific investigation as a friend of Christianity rather than its enemy. Most of the nations have now become students of natural law; its ritual is their school-book, and the temple of God is known by them to have a decalogue as binding as any given to man. "The laws written in our members" are known to be the mode of action of our Heavenly Father, the beneficent rule of equipoised, well-ordered life. These laws, ascertained, studied and obeyed, mean health, and health means physical holiness. What wonder, then, that most of the nations, in proportion to their intelligence and thoughtfulness, should desire and purpose that the basis of their children's education, from its inception onward, should be such a knowledge of physical science, as well as law, built up in their tempted boys and girls, as will fix the determination to keep themselves free from the habits which must defeat the purpose of God in their creation. We want our generation trained to know that alcoholics are the enemy of clear brains, and that happy lives mean a wineless dinner-table, the sacramental altar free from temptation, the polling booth dedicated to temperance, the publican placed under the ban of the law.

Much as we hear about the advantages of organization and mighty as have been its benefits, we believe they would have been impossible except for the coöperation of the press. No influence is, at present, so persuasive as printer's ink. Whoever fails to rate the press at its true value has but grasped the fragments of the problem of reform. He is working with his left hand when he should have used his right, for thought is the world's king, whose scepter is the pen, whose throne is the printing press and whose empire is public opinion. The organization that earliest perceives this truth and follows it most steadily will win the largest victories.

There is no better test of the feeling of the nation than the measures adopted by the leaders of political parties, whose object is to take the public pulse, and to legislate according to the consensus of opinion. Of this truth we have never had so clear a demonstration as in the fixing of two dates within a month of each other, on which the conservative and liberal members agreed to bring forward bills conferring the parliamentary franchise on women, and their anticipations were fully justified by the small majority by which the second reading of the bill was opposed on April 27. We have hardly realized the correlation of this great question to the temperance cause; but the results that have been obtained by the women's ballot in municipal elections have placed the argument beyond dispute.

Nothing helps forward a great movement so much as some definite point in the future, toward which our effort can be directed. One year from this month there will be grouped on the lake shore in Chicago such an illustration of the world's progress as has not yet been witnessed. Four thousand men are daily at work erecting the magnificent buildings that are to house the Columbian Exposition. Three hundred acres of land were requisite for the Paris building; in Chicago six hundred are required. As one of the British board of lady managers it is my duty, as it would in any event be my pleasure, to urge upon our association throughout the United Kingdom to do their utmost to advance the interests of this great object lesson of women's work.

"Life is neither a pleasure nor a pain. It is a serious business, to be entered upon with courage and in a spirit of self-sacrifice." These were De Tocqueville's leave-taking words to Charles Sumner when he was going home to be the great central figure in the fight for the abolition of slavery. For fifty years temperance reform has held its head above the surging waves of politics, making but little way against the billows of opposition, but holding on with a relentless purpose. To-day the strong lifeboat of reform is fairly launched, and the cry goes forth, "Who shall man the boat?" Across the shining beach, in the black darkness of the night, Grace Darling stepped forth in her intrepid purpose to rescue life. Are there not ten thousand women ready to respond to-day when the call goes forth to take an oar? Will not the mothers of our sons and the sisters of humanity, come to the rescue in this hour of need? The voices will be silenced that tell us that woman's sphere is her fireside only; and they will learn the great discovery which we have made, that the world is our home in the sense that John Wesley has said it was his parish. The past has not condemned the public work of women in the theater and music hall, but only in the church and in the government of those larger home circles that men call nations. If politics are not a fit subject for woman's thought and action, it is because God and the golden rule have also been kept out? To her shall yet perhaps be given the task of setting the house in order and of cleansing the temple of government upon whose altars the dust of centuries has settled. "Any custom, traffic or party upon which a Christian woman cannot look with favor is irrevocably doomed. Its welcome of her presence and her power is to be the final test of its fitness to survive."

AN EXODUS NORTHWARD.

BY EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The people are dying who remember the incidents of the civil war, and I think a new generation may be amused and interested by the following story.

When Abraham Lincoln was in trouble, he used, very wisely, to appoint a fast day. All the loyal ministers thought it their duty to call their congregations together and address them on the needs of the nation. In August, 1864, there came round such a fast day. Our Boston churches were rather languidly attended, and a good many of them were shut up. But we never disobeyed Abraham Lincoln nor the governor of Massachusetts, in the South Congregational Church, and we had a fast day service with all the honors. By this I mean that every officer of the church recognized the importance of the occasion; our admirable choir, the best in New England, was in its place, though some of the members had to come from great distances, I think, to meet the appointment; and the preacher, of course, was in his place too.

Just as I stood up to preach the sermon,—let me say, in passing, to a large congregation, for people were interested in such things, although it was in summer—I saw Mr. Sargent, the sexton, come in with a yellow covered telegram in his hand. I waited for a moment and the congregation saw him lay it on the pulpit. But I said to myself quickly, "This is bad news or it is good news. If it is bad news I had rather not read it till after I have preached. If it is good news it can wait and I will then announce it to the congregation." So, after the sermon I opened the telegram to find that it was from my friend Colonel Kinsman, on General Butler's staff. I had made his acquaintance on a visit to the army in the preceding spring. Colonel Kinsman had the charge of what were then called "contrabands," the refugee slaves; and he had asked my advice as to sending on a number of the women for whom they had no employment to find occupation in New England. I had consulted the directors of the Freedmen's Aid Society, of which I was president, and they had unanimously begged that no such course might be taken. They thought that these black people belonged at the South, and that withdrawing them from the South was contrary to the regular course of emigration, and that the results, on every account, would be bad. I had accordingly written to Colonel Kinsman in this view and supposed that it was shared by him and his commander. So, indeed, it was at the time; but as the summer came on they had some sickness at Hampton, and this telegram was to announce to me that on Sunday afternoon he would arrive in Boston in a steamer with fifty colored women, for whom he wanted homes in New England. I did not think it necessary to read it to the congregation, though I did read them in those days many matters of such practical import. I went downstairs to find my loyal friend, Mrs. Cabot of the Freedmen's Aid Society, who had received a duplicate of this dispatch.

Every director of the Freedmen's Aid Society was at that moment living in the country, taking the ordinary vacation outing to which Boston people are accustomed. Even the secretary of the society was away, and we knew he was. And, as I have said, the society had, without the least hesitation, determined that it was better not to have these people brought on. But here they were; and on conference with Mrs. Cabot, I called a meeting of the directors the next morning at the office. This was Friday morning. When they came, they were, on the whole, I think, the crossest set of people I ever saw. It was hot and sultry, their advice had been spurned, they were organized to aid freedmen at the South, they had never meant to aid them to come to the North, and they were utterly inexperienced in the duty in hand. At the same time, many people of the kind who anticipate evil thought that there would be a great popular outcry if we introduced fifty negroes into the town as competitors with the laboring people we had. All this, however, had nothing to do with the business. We had got these people to take care of. I sent at once to the office of the Evening Transcript, which is the paper of Boston that goes into every civilized house, this advertisement:

"Two colored women, who wish places together in a family, will arrive on the steamer at Central Wharf Sunday afternoon. Any lady who would like to engage them will apply at the office of the Freedmen's Aid on Saturday."

We sent the same information to the secretaries of all our societies in the towns within twenty miles of Boston. We did not dare say fifty people would arrive, because we knew womankind well enough to know that people who wanted help would wait till Monday if they thought fifty were coming; but if they thought two were coming we knew they would apply for them at once; and so it proved.

I then sent for my excellent friend, Mr. Grimes, the pastor of the largest church of colored people in Boston. I told him what had happened, and told him that he and his people must be ready to entertain these strangers. I begged him to have a lunch and other physical entertainment in the vestry of his church on Sunday, and we arranged for the expense of this entertainment. I told him that if we could take them all there, and they could feel at home on Sunday, by Sunday night we would try to have homes for them. To this he very cordially assented, and the entertainment was prepared. I then gave Mr. Grimes a circular letter to every large hotel-keeper in Boston, telling what the exigency was. From that day to this, I have rated those houses in my mind according as they agreed to take two, four or six of our colored emigrants. I have never forgotten Mr. Parker's answer to it· "Tell Mr. Hale I will take six of the women, and should be glad to take sixty." I then sent for my own assistant, Rev. Mr. Torricelli, told him what had been done, and meanly and basely retired to my own country home. Observe, I did not have to preach on Sunday, because the church was closed for the summer vacation; practically, there was not a member of my parish in town.

With the general feeling that all had been done which could be done, I left this business to the officers of the society, and heard no more about it till the next Tuesday. When I made my inquiry then as to what had become of Colonel Kinsman and his colored women, I learned that he had stopped in Philadelphia and New York on his way up, and that there the friends of the negro had met him in such numbers that he had, in fact, only brought thirty-five women to Boston. They had been delayed, and did not arrive till late on Sunday afternoon. The report made to me said that, at the time, Central Wharf was blocked with the elegant carriages of the suburban residents who had come from different homes around Boston. Each carriage contained a lady who was determined to have two of those exiles. They rushed into the cabin of the steamboat, made such terms as they could with Colonel Kinsman and his women, took the women physically into their carriages and carried them to their respective homes. There were not women enough for the demand, nor nearly enough. The Freedmen's Aid office was open all day, and no black woman ever appeared there. Dr. Grimes' collation was ready all day, and no black woman from Hampton ate sandwich or drank coffee there. Nor did one of them, as I believe, appear at any hotel.

What is more interesting to me, as a sort of high private in the business of philanthropic organization is this: from that hour to this no one of those colored women has ever been, so far as I have heard, an applicant for charity in any form, or was ever heard of before any court or tribunal, or in any hospital or poorhouse. They fell upon the empty homes of New England as a benediction from the South, and they are only known to this hour by their fruits. It was a little shower of beneficent emigration which fell upon a dry soil, and probably no one excepting myself and Judge Kinsman,—for he is a judge now,—has thought of the detail for the last ten years.

THE DRAM-SHOP AN OUTLAW AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

In the judgment of Mr. W. K. Carlisle, attorney for the World's Fair, the dram-shop on the Exposition grounds will be a free-booter, not present by law—unless the law shall have been changed—but by consent.

It appears that during the winter, concessions to sell liquor have been granted to several companies, purposing to locate in that section of the grounds known as "Midway Plaisance." This is located in the prohibition district of Hyde Park, a thrifty village of 75,000, which consented to enter Chicago's big family only upon condition that her "dry" districts should be forever protected from marauding rumsellers. Lawyer Carlisle, of Kentucky origin, after most careful review of all the laws bearing upon the case, has given his opinion that, "No license can be obtained for a dram-shop to be kept in the Midway Plaisance, so long as the prohibition ordinances above mentioned are in force." Mr. John P. Wilson, an acknowledged legal authority of this city, agrees with Mr. Carlisle.

It is a matter for rejoicing that there will be one clean spot, of so respectable size as the tract in question—or apparently taken out of question by the concurrent verdict of these eminent lawyers. It is said that some of the directors tried to shake the position taken by Mr. Carlisle, quoting two men, familiar with the geography of Hyde Park, as saying that Midway Plaisance is not in the prohibited districts. "Well, I hold to my opinion in spite of what they say," was the answer. Others appealed to Mr. Wilson to know if there is not some way of dodging the statute, to which he replied: "I have never made a study of the evasion of laws."

Attorney Carlisle advises the directors to abandon the idea of allowing the sale of liquor in that part of the grounds. "The only other recourse," said he, "is to have the law repealed at the next session of the legislature, which does not meet until January. Maybe it would not be done. We cannot afford to be put in the position of violating the laws."

The temperance people of Illinois will do well to see that the protecting statute is not repealed. To guard the law we already have, is practical prohibition, and in the line of getting more. "He that is faithful in a few things, shall be made ruler over many."

Further, Mr. Carlisle reminds the directory that before any concessions had been made to liquor venders, he called their attention to the fact that there is a law on the statute books of Illinois, "forbidding any one to expose for sale, sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of any spirituous liquors within two miles of the place where any agricultural, horticultural or mechanical fair is being held." He goes on to say that the law is provided with adequate penalties, and adds: "I stated my opinion to be that this law, if enforced, would prevent the sale of liquor in Jackson Park as well as in Midway Plaisance. I am still of this opinion." It need not be inferred that the attorney of the World's Fair is a Prohibitionist. He is simply an honest man interpreting the statutes of the state.

It is woman's way to plead rather than command, and I would not counsel any threat, upon our part, of resort to the courts; but a petition, bearing the names of mothers, might be more influential with the directorate, if it were understood that back of it are temperance fathers, with the law on their side. We cannot overestimate the encouragement that will be given to social drinking and the table use of liquors throughout this country, if young people find them in the menu of the dining palaces of the Exposition. It is a matter to enlist the interest of every mother. In my judgment there should be a "division of the question" and the petition for exclusion of intoxicants from Exposition eating houses should be separated entirely from the Sabbath-closing issue, to which the Sabbath Union is giving gallant attention, and whose petition every one of us can sign in individual capacity. It is well known that many who are opposed to liquor are favorable to open gates on the first day of the week. An illustration in point is the action of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union, of Illinois, which in annual convention last week adopted this resolution:

WHEREAS, Sound policy does not seem to sanction the sale of liquor at the World's Fair; and,

WHEREAS, The open saloon on the Lord's Day serves as an evil and powerful attraction, especially to the working men: therefore,

Resolved, That we, as an organized body in convention assembled, call upon the directors and managers of the World's Columbian Exposition to throw open the exhibition on Sundays after the expiration of the generally recognized time for divine service, so that the honest toiling masses may have an opportunity of being benefited by the elevating influence of the world's thoughts, arts and study.

We may not indorse their argument for opening the Exposition gates on Sunday, but we want them to indorse our petition for temperance tables inside the gates.

The specific concern of the W. C. T. U. is temperance, and we must not weaken our power for that, to conserve any other interest, however sacred.

Let the mothers who have discarded wine at their own tables, be heard in the full strength of their numbers, and I believe the honorable men composing the World's Fair Directory will heed. Meanwhile let the total abstaining voters of Illinois keep a composite eye on the next legislature, which might be tempted beyond that it is able to bear, and repeal the laws that can be made to serve as flaming swords at the Exposition gates, turning every way to keep out the temptation that has so largely been excluded from American homes.

In creating the Board of Lady Managers Congress committed to them the "general charge and management of all interests of women in connection with the Exposition." In pursuance of its duty, the president, a short time ago, called a meeting of all members resident in Chicago, to consider what could be done for the benefit of the great army of wage-earning women who will desire to visit Chicago during the Fair. The limits of this article forbid my outlining the happy scheme adopted, with Mrs. Matilda B. Carse in charge. Later I shall hope to give it in full to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, as developed up to date.

Women have a faculty—I almost said a deplorable faculty—of "getting something for nothing," especially out of their own sex. Natural bargain-hunters are they. In the line of this talent, it is announced that "the lady managers have recently solved the perplexing question of an original musical composition of sufficient excellence to be rendered at the dedication of the Woman's Building in October. It was supposed that to secure something worthy of the occasion would require a large outlay of money, etc." But lo! Mrs. Palmer finds Mrs. Amy Beech, the pride of Boston composers, ready at her request to furnish without money or price, an original work to be called the "Festival Jubilate." Theodore Thomas, the pride of Chicago musical circles, will conduct the representation of Mrs. Beech's production, with an orchestra of about eighty-four pieces. Professor Tomlins consents to prepare the chorus, numbering four hundred. The Jubilate will jubilee October 13. There is nothing left in the way of music for the gentlemen managers, the ladies having the choice of American musicians. One plan of the Lady Managers is to catalogue all organizations, conducted by women, for the promotion of charitable, intellectual, philanthropic, sanitary, hygienic, industrial, or social and moral reform movements. They desire to make this Encyclopedia the most complete record of women's effort ever compiled, and their blank of questions sent out to be filled by secretaries declares that "No band of women is too large or too small to find place in this historic record." Societies noticing this, and failing to receive a blank, should send at once to World's Fair Headquarters in this city. It is to be a roll of honor from which no one can afford to be omitted. Our Mrs. Helen M. Barker is the special sponsor of this line of work, which will commend it to all my readers. Letters concerning enrollment should be sent in her care.

A dampening paragraph has gone the rounds stating that the W. C. T. U. is denied space on the grounds. The fact is that both wings of women's temperance work, the W. C. T. U., and the Non-partisans, are to exhibit in the Woman's building, where only the rarest of feminine achievements will be displayed.

NEW YORK WOMAN'S HEALTH PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

BY MRS. MARGARET A. RAVENHILL.
A vice-president of Sorosis.

The early work of the "Woman's Health Protective Association" was an act of self-defense. Some of the prettiest homes in this city are on Beekman Place. There live Mrs. Ralph Trautman, the New York vice-president of woman's department of the World's Fair, Mrs. Thomas Harland, one of the early members of Sorosis, and many other women who have been mainly instrumental in reform work in New York City. They organized as a society, November 21, 1884. The following day they started out on a tour of inspection to trace the odors that had rendered their homes so uncomfortable. They found a gigantic manure heap, a small mountain, in fact, at the foot of East Forty-sixth street; this was owned and kept up by Michael Kane and through political influence, he having hurled defiance at the numberless complaints that had been made to him. The man had been indicted by the grand jury; only a New Yorker knows how easily their act is set aside by the wire pullers who disgrace our city.

These women brought the matter again before the grand jury, had him tried and convicted, and for a time Mr. Kane's manure heap was suppressed. But Mr. Kane had a brother-in-law in the legislature, Senator Pullen, and through him endeavored to get a bill through the legislature asking the board of health to establish a permanent dumping ground between Ninety-fifth and Ninety-seventh street, East River. A delegation of the W. H. P. A. went to Albany with a protest from a large body of women to the legislature, and the bill was withdrawn. This was a politician's trick. In a short time the bill passed the Senate. A telegram was sent, asking the legislature to hear the women on the question, and five of them went the next morning to Albany. They had an interview with Governor Hill, and he said he would hear their arguments before signing the bill if it passed the Assembly. The bill was defeated the day after the women left Albany. The following year the same bill was again brought forward. The women again rallied for its defeat and forced its withdrawal.

A crying evil at this time was the filthy slaughter-house-nuisance, whose horrid work was witnessed daily by large numbers of children, and doubtless many a young murderer got his first lesson in cruelty from these shambles. They importuned the Board of Health and the legislature in vain, and then turned their efforts to personal appeal to the butchers themselves, and two of the prominent firms under the pressure brought to bear upon them, built new abattoirs, with every sanitary and humane appliance; these buildings to-day would delight the soul of an artist, so symmetrical in every detail, and the women are given by these firms entire credit for the whole work.

The odors from the gas houses had been under discussion for some time; it is the most difficult work that has been undertaken by them. Again and again was the matter brought before the Board of Health, and at last they were forced to see the daily defiance of law; several of the wealthy superintendents of these vast organizations were arrested and fined. It was a thunder-clap; these millionaires felt themselves almost omnipotent, but the end is not yet. They still hope to drive the women from the city. I cannot in this article tell of the difficult work of clearing out a small Italian colony that had taken possession of lots near Central Park. They had burrowed under the docks in some instances, and cooked, ate and slept on, and in the midst of piles of festering filth. Here the women had to call the police as escorts, as these manufactured citizens and voters threatened to mob them. The Board of Health was actually ignorant of this menace to life in our midst.

It was not until 1887 that they took up the matter of the streets—their success in these other reforms had been a surprise to themselves. They had made the street-cleaning problem a subject of thorough investigation, both in foreign cities and at home, and gave their plans for the bettering of the system to Mr. Coleman, the commissioner of streets. They had interested most of the leading medical men in their plans, who pronounced them of inestimable value, and the physicians of the city have sanctioned every one of their efforts in this cause. The mayor of the city, Mr. Hewitt, approved their ideas, and told Mr. Coleman he could not do better than act upon them; he did so, and the streets for a time were the best arguments for their practical work. The present mayor has shown no disposition to keep up the good work, but temporizes with promises. The society, after patient and laborious investigation, has come to the conclusion that the only wise disposition to be made of the garbage of a large city like this is to cremate it. The women empowered Gen. Egbert L. Viele to look into the merits of the Inerz crematory at Buffalo, and with Sanitary Engineer Napier, who was at one time on the Board of Health, he has made an inspection of every sort and kind of crematory here and abroad. This manner of burning the garbage does not destroy its usefulness as a fertilizer, but the contrary. The stables have been induced, through the efforts of the women by the Board of Health, to bale their manure. Many new school-houses have been built, and many evils in the schools abolished. Every school in the city is now under surveillance of the members of the association. Their work has been a very thankless and difficult one. They have often met with abuse from the very people whom they were striving to benefit, but the reform they have effected is a living testimony to the value of woman's organized work. The authorities of the city accord them courteous recognition, and the membership, originally eighteen, is now over two hundred.

EXTEMPORE ADDRESS BEFORE THE FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS, CHICAGO.

Made by request of Mrs Potter Palmer, representing the Lady Commissioners of the World's Columbian Exposition, May 12, 1892.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

(Reported by Jerome H Raymond, stenographer.)

Mrs. Barker has just spoken of the children's palace and you all are smiling. You see how grand a thing is the childlike mind. Just as soon as we got to talking about the children everybody was good-natured, and we felt like one big family. So that was a good thing for me, because every bit of the stiffness is gone; and I thought to myself as I came forward, "I wish I could have so much of the childlike mind as to put everybody at ease wherever I might happen to be." I am here without a bonnet, and I want to say that it is because a bonnet is an extinguisher to me; and though I have no tag on, my bonnet is in the proper pigeon-hole. (Reference to Mrs. Barker's pleasantry about labeling the babies and their clothes.) The last time I stood before a club to make a speech was in Tremont Temple, Boston. A thousand working-girls were gathered up from the clubs of the good old Bay State, and the average wages of those girls were $5 a week. One of them, eighteen years old, supported five younger ones, they all being left without father or mother. I was glad to hear in Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson's witty and deep-hearted address of welcome her warm words about the working-girls, and I was glad to hear our president, Mrs. Emerson-Brown, say that you desired the working-girls to be with you in this grand federation. I felt that you were not going to reach to them the down-gliding palm of condescension, you were not going to reach to anybody the up-gliding palm of sycophancy, but the straight out sisterly hand of help and good-will, for we believe that "all women are created free and equal; that they are endowed with certain inalienable rights, and that among these rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." (If they want to pursue happiness in the year '93 they will make a bee-line for the Columbian Exposition!)

As I stand here I wish I were not here, but that in my place stood that noble woman who invited me to speak to-day, who has aroused so much enthusiasm in her brief, brilliant career—long may it be extended—that woman who stands poised between alertness and repose, whose stately figure, clear-cut features and level head might well serve as an emblem of the best in Chicago. If ever our city has a symbolic, civic statue of herself, I would say let Mrs. Potter Palmer sit for it—a woman of whom you are going to hear more, one of those foregleams of the twentieth century, of which tokens are multiplying now. I am a woman who always had a little notion in my head that I would not seek the rich, and I have hardly ever entered the home of anybody that had "no end of money." Therefore, knowing that Mrs. Potter Palmer was one to whom the world had given all it had to give, I wondered when I heard that she stood forth for great humanitarian ideas; and I stand reproved and reproached to find among the women of wealth and fashion in Chicago as great-hearted philanthropy as I have ever found on the face of the earth. You have seen some of them to-day. They are noble women, true and great-hearted in life and word and deed. But she is not here, this Mrs. Palmer of ours;—she's over hobnobbing with the Pope, if it please you. The morning papers said she was to have audience, or had had it. I know if she does it will be a good thing for the Pope. And yesterday the dispatches told us that she was in counsel with Princess Metternich of Austria and with Madame Carnot, of France; and we know that wherever she goes she will be equally at home with prince and peasant. I like to think if she stood there so winsome as she is in every way, beside her it would be fitting for us to place one of the brotherhood, for no picture is complete where the two do not stand side by side; and I am glad that Mr. Palmer is so thorough-going in his delight at what Mrs. Palmer is doing, and just helps her along with his name and his purse and everything he can do.

I did not intend, however, on this occasion to stand him up in your mind's eye, Horatio and Horatia, beside Mrs. Palmer; but I was going to put another man there, and a figure that we ought to think about. I refer to Congressman William Springer, of Illinois. As I differ with him in politics it is an especial pleasure to bring him forward here, and, indeed, I feel that it is but a just thing for us to do so, for it was in his mind that the thought was conceived to stand up in Congress and ask that there should be a woman's commission, and he got it for us. So let it evermore be remembered that we owe all this to him, with nobody's suggestion so far as I know, except that I know he has a wonderfully bright wife who has written a book by the same token! Now, then, we have the first commission appointed by Congress, and I think we ought to remember that. Just here I wish to speak a word on behalf of men in general. I notice that the dominant half of the great integer of humanity is conspicuous by its absence from this service, though there are a few of our brothers here, just to keep us in countenance, I suppose. If it had not been for men there would have been no commission of women. Let us remember as we sit here enjoying these opportunities that if men had not voted for women to enter the public schools away down in Massachusetts, if men had not voted to open the college doors to us, and the professions, and every other good place, we would not have got in. I suppose they did it, first, because they knew they were abundantly able to take care of their own interests, and secondly, because they knew we would take a great deal better care of their interests than they could themselves. Let us, then, give them their meed of praise.

Different ladies here this afternoon have given mottoes for their respective departments of the Fair. That factory girl who was born a poet, and whom the world knows nowadays, Lucy Larcom, gave what it seems to me would be a good motto for the entire Exposition, and I would like to see it span the whole in an electric arch:

"The best that any mortal hath is that which every mortal shares."

To teach that truth is why the women are so hard at work; and I rejoice to know that it has come to their mind and heart that it is a broad, great humanitarian effort in which we are all engaged. Now in respect to that wonderful four miles from the city that we call the Exposition, of which so much has been so ably said by my white ribbon sister, Mrs. Barker, by Mrs. Henrotin, vice-president of the Women's Congresses, and others, may I try to set forth a few of the points which I know Mrs. Palmer especially desired to have mentioned? First, in this exposition there is to be no separate show for women. You know when we all went to the "Centennial," as we called it, in '76, that noble descendant of Benjamin Franklin, Mrs. Gillespie, set out to get a women's building, and the women had to beg the money for it all over the country, and they had their show; and some of us did not go away walking on air as we left it. We most wished we hadn't come, especially as we saw the great procession of crazy quilts and the like of that. Ben John—, no, not Ben, but Samuel Johnson, said that the wonder was not that women should talk well; the wonder was they could talk at all, or that they could write at all. Now we have passed the day when it is a wonder that we can do any good thing. It was well enough to have our little exposition in '76, but we have traveled the whole circumference of the solar system in advancement since then, and there are now over four thousand vocations and avocations for women. So we are going to take our places beside men. There is to be no separate exhibit for women. Two weeks ago I was in the studio of that great sculptor, Anne Whitney, whose statues are Boston's pride. With a sparkle of her keen, dark eye she said, "I do not want anything I have done put forward on the basis of its being the work of a woman. I want nothing of mine to go to Chicago except in the general exposition." "But," I said, "although there is no separate exposition for women's work, there is a special building where a few of the chef d'œvres are to be, where the very best of the cream on the pan, the yellowest and richest, that has risen the longest, is going to be set forth. In this special gallery of honor we should be wonderfully glad to see your Samuel Adams with his erect figure, his silver buckles, graceful knee-breeches and queue—that elegant costume that I wish men wore yet, and that I think they will some day wear again—I live in hopes." Then Miss Whitney replied, but with reluctance all the same, that if they wanted that for the special exhibit, with the understanding that most of her work was to go in the general exhibit, she should not object. It is desired especially by the women of the commission that it should not be felt that any woman whose work is not admitted to the special exhibit is in any way slighted; let it go into the general exhibit, for that, after all, is the great one.

Nothing yet secured in the Exposition by the ladies equals the right to name a proportion of the jurors in all committees where women's work is to be passed upon. You know we like especially to find that we get the better of some men in an intellectual tilt; and so Mrs. Potter Palmer, although she is very friendly to men, and they very friendly to her, said to me: "I tell you this: I went to one of the general commission and said to him, 'Are you willing that we, in proportion to the amount of work that women have done, should have a proportion of women jurors?' 'Oh, yes, wherever women have put anything into an exhibit I am willing you should appoint all the jurors.'" She said he did not know that by such an arrangement we should have had the appointment of every last juror in that place, unless the exhibit related to paving stones, railroads or the forests of pine in the great northwest, because there is nothing else but that women are in it! So, not wishing to get the better of him, you know, she asked if we might not appoint a proportion; and he said half, where women were exhibitors, or where women had done part of the work in all the wonderful extent of the Exposition, a due proportion; and you know that women who are on those juries are going to have some money for it, I think a thousand dollars, so you would better be thinking of that and ask for a place! Probably you have been thinking. If you have not, some of the men have, and wish they had not let the women in so largely.

Remember that when women send their wares for exhibition, the first and great duty of the women commissioners will be to see them well placed and guarded, and to give to exhibitors and the public all the help in their power towards a mutual understanding.

A most elegant and beautiful building has been erected for the special exhibit. I hope you will do yourselves the pleasure of going over to the South Side to behold that palace of beauty and art. A woman designed it— a Boston woman, please take notice. It is of creamy white, four hundred feet long and cost two hundred thousand dollars. The Paris Exposition covered three hundred acres; ours requires six hundred and we are now spreading out over the circumjacent prairies. The Parisian Exposition required six thousand horse power to make it hum. The Chicago Exposition will require sixteen thousand horse power to make it go and do likewise. The great building of manufactures and liberal arts covers thirty acres. Think of an item of thirty acres in one building! And so I might go on, giving the figures and the facts about the five thousand men that are down there steadily at work and the one hundred and eighty acres already roofed in, but I forbear.

Speaking about special exhibits, some facts are about to be unearthed that were not generally known to us. For these keen-brained women commissioners have set themselves at work and have discovered that woman has never had her deserts as an inventor. While man went out in the chase to get food, woman built the home: woman put together, after curing them, the skins of animals and wrought them into rude garments. She then invented the needle and used as thread the fibrous tissues of plants. Later on she invented the shuttle; then she became a potter, and the beautiful adornments of every variety of pottery were from the skill and delicate touch of woman. She, too, invented vegetable dyes to color raiment and utensils and so on ad infinitum; and until all these different lines of industry became paying affairs, men never touched them; but when there was money in them they captured the whole business and carried it off! Then, coming on from those times to mediæval history, women were the workers in laces. They have given the world wonderful art riches in the line of laces, tapestries and fabrics of all kinds. I learned a thing from these commissioners that they have dug out from some place or other. I knew about William the Conqueror, how he came over to England and conquered at the battle of Hastings: but I did not know that his wife, Matilda of Flanders, preserved a record of his victories in the tapestries that she and her workers wrought, showing the accouterments, methods and manners of soldiers in that day, a mine of information to the historian and military student. I expect those tapestries will be here, for Mrs. Palmer stops at nothing. Then I learned another thing. Sabrina von Steinbach, whose father built Strasburg Cathedral, designed a wonderful door there, and put into its ornamentation soft and graceful lines quite different from the rest. You will see that door (or "the likes of it"), if you will but bear it in mind when you come to the Exposition. Then there was a woman physician at Bologna, not the Cathedral but the University, and she wrought out a manikin of the human frame in wax, with the utmost nicety, precision and delicacy; and I suspect we shall have those wax works or some imitation of them.

Then you will see how woman has progressed as a writer. You know she was not much cried up when she first took the pen. But some generous, large-hearted men said: "Nonsense! If a woman can write a book worth reading we are the very fellows that will read it, and buy it, and encourage her so that she will go ahead and write some more." When those men thus set the key of opinion and declared that women should come forth and display their mental wares, then we had Elizabeth Barrett Browning, with "the cry of the human" so tender in her voice; then we had Julia Ward Howe and her "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and we are going to have all the products of woman's brain displayed in the libraries of the Beautiful Building. Besides, we are to have the exhibit of the greatest woman sculptor living. Her name is Madame Bertaux, of Paris. She has asked for space. The daughter of the famous Jules Breton, the great painter of France, is to have her pictures on exhibition. And the Women's Society of Artists, with Candace Wheeler, the greatest of original women decorators, at its head, is to execute a beautiful frieze, the designs being by Dora Greenway Keith. We are also to have ceramics of every variety from the hands of women. We are to have from the Cincinnati women their work in wood-carving. We are to have women who do stove-moulding,—for they have gone into that; and the women who make barrels (not bar'ls, please take notice), we are to have their work in the Women's Building as a novelty; and some women dentists are going to set up a gleaming array of ivories there, and the woman's hospital is to have an exhibition of its pharmaceutic skill. A woman seventy years of age, who deals in American flags, has written for a very special opportunity in the building; and a woman of that age would be the proper person to hold up the flag at the Exposition—a sort of Barbara Freitchie of this age. I should not wonder if that woman steamboat captain down on the Mississippi should come with a model of her steamboat in her hand and explain how rivers if not fields are won. Then there is the woman bridge-tender. Our city fathers are bad men, we sometimes think, but I verily believe they are the ones that when a woman who had a family on her hands, and whose husband was the bridge-tender, lost her natural protector, said, "She used to help him, and she did it just as well as he did," and she's a bridge-tender to-day, on one of our sixty-six Chicago bridges. We have sixty-six bridges, mind you, and so you might go astray if you should go to look this woman up.

Let it be remembered that this Columbian Exposition is to be made up of every creature's best, that it is the woman with a lamp in her hand; coming forth even as Diogenes did to search for an honest man, so she searches for a woman that did some new thing that was good and gracious, and no matter how small. For above all things it is the desire of the women commissioners to develop the talents of women and let them see what women have done, and to let young women coming there see that which will cause them to say: "I, too, could work in these various arts handicrafts;" then, besides all this, to show them to what place they had better go to learn any particular line of work. Mrs. Palmer says we want to know whether all the schools are open to women, and whether, when they have taken the course of study they are allowed to have their diploma—for sometimes they are not. We want to know whether they have equal wages for equal work. We want in every way to build up, and elevate, and help the woman who is her own bread-winner, so that her weapon may be held the firmer in her brave little hand. God bless these true-hearted sisters of ours who are making their brains work like a Corliss engine over the problem of how to extend the outlook of women all over the world, not in our own country only. Emerson says that we are so egotistical that when we turn our backs on Niagara we think it has ceased to flow; and we are just so egotistical that we did not dream that the women in Bohemia had formed clubs! I did not know that down in Ecuador they have an exposition—and they're going to send the women's part to our World's Fair. I did not know that in Finland they had a women's council. I did not know that in Italy, Russia and Sweden they are among the very best experts in lace work; and one of the hopes of our women here is that, through the Exposition, women who are working and not getting adequate pay for their lace-work may find an enlarged sale for their wares. All honor to the Countess of Aberdeen, who has formed a contract with the women of Ireland, that she will bring their laces into the market more and more in England and America. There never was given such a send off to women as is going to come in the very nick of time in the Columbian Exposition; and let us remember that we can each stand in our lot and place, and spread the good news until every little item we hear is scattered abroad, and thus help to bring into this storehouse of the common good, the wonderful pageant of the ages. This is to be the world's school of methods. This is to be the kindergarten of the world, its encyclopedia, its object-lesson, its gleaming picture gallery, its whispering gallery, where every whisper shall be heard the world around.

"So many worlds, so much to do;
So little done, such things to be."

So spoke the laureate in "In Memoriam." On a prairie farm, long ago, I read the words:

"So many worlds, so much to do;
So little done, such things to be."

Little I dreamed how the amplitude of woman's outlook should increase and spread and beautify. Little I dreamed how, like the genii of Arabian story, she would escape from her kettle-bondage and "expand her pinions in nebulous bars." Coming West in 1846, urging our way in a white-winged emigrant wagon, settling ten miles from any railroad, waiting ten years for a market, I remember how my father, as we passed through Chicago, said to his six-year-old girl, "See there, Frankie, can you read that sign? No bottom here? " That was the sign on the principal streets, to keep out of what we called, in those days, the slew, better known in these days as slough. But look about you! We don't have sloughs any more, least of all any sloughs of despond, in the streets or in a woman's outlook either. We have Chicago elevated out of the marsh, Chicago standing on firm foundations, with its magnificent buildings, with its beautiful welcome for women, with the women of money and the women who haven't money, hand in hand, heart to heart, understanding each other better than we ever did before, the reformer finding she can learn any amount from the woman of fashion, and the woman of fashion learning any amount from the reformer; and all of us more intent on building up the Republic, that has been the kind mother of thrice happy daughters, than on any meaner aim. So may God help and bless us all, as we work on, remembering, as Sarah Hackett Stevenson so nobly said, that "The brotherhood of man shall begin by the sisterhood of woman."

Correspondence.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CHICAGO ADVANCE AND OTHER RELIGIOUS PAPERS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Advance in recent issues has had some stirring editorials against Sunday opening of the World's Fair, and the sale of liquors on the grounds. The position taken by the Advance on these questions is almost identical with that taken by most church papers, and in writing to one we write to all.

The Advance quotes Joseph Cook's censure of the government for thus stultifying the teaching of the public schools. It condemns Secretary Butterworth's statement, that the Fair must be the broadest and most liberal exhibition of the "manners and customs of other nations," as "flimsy," and inconsequential, and flings an indignant dart at the "indifference, but little removed from contempt," with which all remonstrances against the sale of liquors have been received by the Local Board. We need not go far to find the cause of this "indifference but little removed from contempt."

During the quarter of a century wherein the temperance agitation has equaled and rivaled the old anti-slavery conflict, our national capital has been the arena for the exhibition of our "manners and customs to other nations." Restriction of the sale and use of liquor there has been mostly an unknown quantity. Bacchus has lorded and strutted through the streets, the legislative halls, the palaces of fashion, and the White House. Once only during all that time has our American Mecca—the White House—shut its doors against this "sum of all villainies," and no administration has been so unpopular with his party as that of Rutherford B. Hayes.

The Advance asks: "Shall the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds of our Columbian World's Fair be sanctioned by the national government?"

Well! Why not? What ground has the Advance and its compeers for thinking that the national government will not sanction it? Why shall our government refuse to sanction for a day, a month, or a year at the World's Fair, what it sanctions all the time in its own headquarters and across its wide domain?

Is not the government the senior partner in this thing, which the Advance declares too evil to be admitted, for one moment, to the World's Fair? Does not the government refuse to withdraw its hand from collecting its blood revenue in states that have outlawed the liquor traffic? Why is the World's Fair more important than Iowa and Kansas?

"The national government has the right to say, with final authority, whether the Fair shall go into the retail liquor business or not."

Assuredly! But what right has the government in the World's Fair that it has not in the District of Columbia? When did the Advance and its religious compeers ever make a righteous, indignant, determined, persistent, continued assault upon government to the end that our capital might be cleansed from reproach and be an example to "other nations"?

Was it done after the last inauguration when Washington ruled, for days, in debauchery? Was it done when our rich vice-president went into the "retail liquor business"? Was it when our chief executive made the Pacific tour with car well stocked with finest wines, including "Mumm's Extra Dry"? It was then the Advance talked about "our good, wise president." Are men good when their example is bad?

"The duty of the national government to use its authority in the interest of good morals and the public welfare is manifest." Does that duty begin and end with the World's Fair? If there, why not in our capital, wholly under jurisdiction of Congress?

But there is immediate peril.

Indeed! When has the peril been any less immediate? Has the Advance been in a Rip Van Winkle sleep, that it just begins to discern this "peril"? Has it walked the streets of Chicago, yet discovered no "immediate peril"? Perhaps the Advance did not get to the meeting of Congregational ministers a year or two ago in Chicago, when they recognized the "peril," and talked of a thousand dollar license as a remedy.

"Seldom in history has there been a time when the moral sentiment of the people needed more unmistakably to make its voice heard."

One of the chief avenues through which the moral sentiment of the people may be heard against this liquor crime in high places as well as low places, is the religious press. Has it been heard through the Advance to any startling extent? If so, when?

"The political leaders on either side are not likely to take the initiative unless the people of the country are known to demand it." How thoroughly we can indorse that statement. But how are the people to be heard? The political and secular press is controlled by these same "leaders on either side," while the religious press is practically dumb on this burning question. It sometimes bewails the evil—it seldom or never shows the only remedy—righteous political action.

How long would this infamy disgrace our capitol, our Congress and the White House, if the church and religious press made united assault against it with pen and voice and vote? Why wail and whine about it at the World's Fair, when, by suffrage of Christian, equally with unbeliever, it sits enthroned in every place of power, and wields a rod of empire more potent than Cæsar's?

"The local directory has no right to commit the country to a policy opening the World's Fair premises to the grog-shop business. It ought not to be allowed to do so."

Indeed!! Does not the Advance know that our country is already politically committed to the "grog-shop business"? That our Republico-Democrato policy fosters and cherishes this "great industry"? Why curse the local directory? Why complain when your belated protests are treated with "contempt"?

The local directory and the commissioners know you do not mean it—that it is only a little sanctimonious parade. They know that you and your compeers will still continue to support the policy that makes our government partner and patron in the liquor business— which in its turn has given us, more than all other agencies combined, our despised and defiled Sabbath.

Out upon such inconsistency! How can the local board of directors—how can the commissioners have other than "contempt" for it?

CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

En route in Minnesota.

GOOD THINGS IN COLORADO—THE HOPE OF THE NEXT NATIONAL CONVENTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Just at home. I hasten to write you of delightful Colorado!—delightful in many ways generally, in two ways particularly.

First, in its W. C. T. U. with youth, vitality and enthusiasm, steadily increasing in number of organizations, in membership and in fitness for every good work.

The Denver central union is a model and the model of many another. Its dignified president, Mrs. Mary E. Brazee, will, I doubt not, be as attractive to the great host of women who gather at the National W. C. T. U. convention in the fall, as to myself, when I sat at the regular weekly meeting at their headquarters and rejoiced in a leader who could impart the very spirit of gentleness, yet of parliamentary completeness, to the entire proceedings; who was my delightful hostess and the charm (as is Mrs. Russell at Minneapolis) of the Woman's Exchange, which, though unlike in name, is a W. C. T. U. restaurant and will, I hope, have place in the historical series of such institutions now in course of publication in THE UNION SIGNAL.

The superintendent of parliamentary work was also at the union meeting. By the by, she is an evangelist, an ordained minister and the city missionary, a counterpart of our other "Leonard," though alphabetically farther on than "A. B." even with D. D. added to his name; a most happy example of the perfect unity of the law and the gospel, the latter ever kept superior, as in correction of her flock, she reminded one of Robert Browning's words to Miss Thackeray, "The only sort of pain that any sort of criticism could give me, would be by the reflection of any particle of pain it managed to give you."

Mrs. Cassell, the able president of Arapahoe county, is chairman of all chairmen of committees for the entertainment of the National Convention, and no delegate need fear that ample accommodation and hearty welcome will not be her portion upon arrival.

Lest modesty prevent, and for the benefit of those who may extend a welcome to the convention in years to come, let me tell you of some of the ways by which these women are neither anxious nor uneasy, but resting in happy assurance that the people are equal to the undertaking and are rejoicing in their privilege.

Somewhat after the order of the Detroit entertainment, which we remember with gratitude, and in the face of our non-sectarian constitution, we are to partake of Presbyterian pie one day, Methodist pudding another, Baptist cake a third and so on, day after day, even through the post-convention meetings, for the churches of each denomination unite in furnishing one day's supply of food. They wish us, for that time at least, to live not by faith ("the evidence of things not seen"), but by sight, and will, I doubt not, look to us for the quickening of their faith to effective work, when we have left, for the overthrow of the death traffic, which alas! abounds in their midst as elsewhere. Every minister of the state has been invited to take one collection in his church, for the convention, before its gathering and you never knew a company of men so "happy to comply with a request." The unions, also, have part—the wee ones giving $5 each, while ciphers on the right side, though nothing in themselves, are much in their connection, indicating pro rata increased membership and interest. While each convention host has extended hospitality, par excellence, one must almost pity any that may follow Denver, where there is determination to reach perfection in every particular.

During much of my journey I was favored with the society of Mrs. Higgins, state W. C. T. U. president, who was everywhere welcomed by her admiring constituency, and who is also favored in having able coadjutors, all of whom I met; Miss Spaulding, corresponding secretary, who adds to her labors the superintendence of young woman's work, in which she wins the hearts, and is moulding into beauty the lives of many; Mrs. Gittings, recording secretary, who is among the literati of the state, and Mrs. Shapleigh, most honorable as a treasurer, a woman and a Christian.

I wish Mrs. Hortense Miller, admirable among reporters as among friends, would give the readers of the SIGNAL report of the work of Mrs. Likens, the police matron of Denver, as well as of her added service with Mrs. Sprague in the Cottage Home (for unfortunate women) which is supported by the unions of the state.

As David and Jonathan, are Mrs. Likens of Denver, and Mrs. Sperry of Pueblo, each fitted for her difficult work, in which they both wonderfully achieve. Mrs. Sperry entertains royally on the anniversary of the opening of her institution. Thus the élite women of the city, grand reformers and humanitarians, were gathered at the Grand Hotel of Pueblo, on April 19, where after a feast of soul there was other feasting followed by addresses in which the W. C. T. U. had part, and music that—

"Came o'er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing and giving sweetest odor."

Leading educators of the state are in perfect harmony with the union. The superintendent of the Denver schools, Professor Gordon, brother of our Anna and Bessie, principal of the Seminary at Trinidad; Professor Search, superintendent of the Pueblo schools, as high in scholarly attainments as in stature, six feet six! an Ohio product—a true son of a crusader, Mrs. Matilda B. Search, Marion, Crusade state! Can another be found with brain so high?

Among pleasures by the way, was meeting my compagnon de voyage of last year, Prof. Eloise Wickard, occupying the chair of English literature and history in Colorado College, who, as her charming sisters, Misses Lida and Laura, is an educational power and for whom the faculty of an Ohio college reaches longing desire. Lydia Howells, too, formerly the worker among young women at Poughkeepsie and through New York, now Mrs. Albert A. Reed, of Boulder, whose little Margaret evidences training by one who has controlled her own spirit, while helping others, leads our thought to the future, when an innumerable host of such women will have control of a generation.

I have hardly begun to tell you of number one of Colorado's delights, yet have reached the limits of a SIGNAL letter. To finish even this would not be allowed, and number two being the Rockies, I cannot condense, therefore, shall be obliged to serial-ize, which is assurance of "more to follow." MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

PROGRESS IN KANSAS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Having been "afield" lately I find this to be the result of my observations. The day has arrived when the cumulative power of Woman's Christian Temperance Union is being felt. The law of compensation has wrought here as in all other domains; and the very antagonisms of an association which had for its object and practical demonstration the good of humanity, have resulted in a wider and deeper interest in temperance and prohibition than has ever been felt before, especially so in the particular lines presented by the W. C. T. U. Never has so deep an interest been manifested by church-members and professing Christians as now. An element that appears to prefer the ceremonials of the dead past and its issues to the living present, seems even to be concluding they are dead enough to be self-interred, and are turning their sleepy eyes now-ward. Conviction is striking to the heart of men, as to their personal responsibility concerning this great curse of the home, and there is a finer respect for the organization that has so steadily and faithfully stood by the right in society, church and state.

An occurrence in one of our Kansas towns recently illustrates our gain in power and influence. Nearly two years ago a young man was convicted under the law protecting girls, and sentenced to five years in the penitentiary. About three months after his incarceration his friends petitioned for his pardon. Our governor is celebrated for his pardoning proclivities, and is never known to refuse his signature where it can release offenders against the prohibitory law, especially. We expected the usual clemency; but as this was one of the first cases under the new law for the protection of girls, the W. C. T. U. felt that the sentence ought not to be set aside. A protest was accordingly drawn up, signed by sixteen women, and forwarded to the governor, and the man remained in prison.

About a month ago another petition for his release was circulated. In the meantime, the prisoner's father had died, his young wife and babe were totally dependent, and he, himself, was developing, it was feared, hereditary consumption. This time, twenty-two hundred citizens signed the petition for pardon. The friends came to the members of the W. C. T. U. and begged them not to protest, and were assured that we would not. Still, it was impossible to get the Board of Pardons to grant the petition. Finally, a prominent attorney waited on the officers and assured them that although the judge who sentenced the young man, had sent his opinion that he ought to be pardoned in view of the facts in the case, the state Board of Pardons had said they would never order his release, while the names of sixteen women stood in protest. He asked that we should hold a meeting and resolve, officially, that we had no objection to his pardon. This lawyer said, "I think you ought to feel very much complimented that the names of sixteen women have more power than twenty-two hundred citizens. But it is because 'you stood for the right' at that time." At our next regular meeting the resolution was passed and the young man was liberated.

The political outlook in Kansas is very uncertain. Our "dominant" party is between his satanic majesty and the briny deep. If they come out boldly and stand for prohibition, they antagonize the national high license party, and are out of harmony at a time of great importance, a presidential election. If they ignore or oppose it, they alienate the very best and staunchest citizens of all classes, in the commonwealth, who have the good sense to see that all the powers of earth and hell, combined, cannot keep this question from being an issue. Banquo's ghost will not down, slumber songs cannot satisfy nor appease the unhappy apparition.

Since the "Original Package" speech the prohibitory law has been much harder to enforce. Those who have the spirit of discernment know that this is because the national liquor power is leaving no stone unturned to make the law ineffectual, hoping for its final overthrow. As the battle for human freedom was fought out on our fair plain before it became a national issue, so history will repeat it, and here is to be the great issue of the home against the saloon. God grant us strength and wisdom for the conflict! S. F. GRUBB.

Lawrence, Kan.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

His disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord, save us: we perish. And he saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm.—Matt. 8. 25, 26.

The Temple is all completed with the exception of Willard Hall, which is now full of workmen. It gives promise of being the gem of the whole building. Work upon the corridor has been going forward for several days, and some of the beautiful panels have been put in place. The pilasters throughout the hall are of exquisite beauty of tint. The colored marble comes from France, known as Burgundy marble, and is of great beauty and variety of hue. The ceiling in the corridor will be of white Italian marble, as also the panels upon which names are intended to be carved. It will probably be the middle of July before Willard Hall is completed.

The formal dedication of the hall and building will probably not take place until the assembly of the World's W. C. T. U. in June, 1893, during the World's Columbian Exposition. This gives us an opportunity to secure the ownership of the entire capital stock before the dedication. We should accomplish this; there is now over a year to do it in. IT CAN BE DONE. Will you do it, and go about it at once?

Let every union that has thirty members send for a large picture of the Temple with all the documents in regard to it and thirty mite-boxes—the whole outfit will cost only 45 cents—this amount is the tax for transportation of the boxes. However poor the woman who takes a mite-box if she has the will she can secure nickels enough from her acquaintances to put 365 cents into it during the year. If all the thirty members do this over a hundred dollars will be the result. If all unions of the above size, and over, undertake it the entire capital stock will be owned by us at the end of a year.

And you, oh, ye rich women, why do so many of you hold back sending in your gifts? There can be no longer an excuse for your withholding for fear that we cannot own it. That danger, if it ever existed (which we do not admit) has passed by. Surely, our beautiful Temple means more for women than any building that was ever erected. Next year it will be the cynosure of the eyes of the world. No person that visits Chicago will leave without going to see the most beautiful building in the city. The sight of it, and the purpose for which it was erected, will act as a more potent temperance lecture than the most eloquent appeal ever uttered by John B. Gough, or any of the great speakers that have followed him. And you, dear white-ribboners, that have but a mite to give, won't you send for a mite-box, and gather up your "littles" and that of your friends, so that the "House Beautiful," may be paid for?

***

Our sainted poet, John G. Whittier, has written a verse to be inscribed in Willard Hall. Miss Willard is going to have it placed on a memorial tablet in his honor. The lovely words read:

"Freighted with love our temperance ship,
Around the world shall sail,
Take heart and hope, dear mariners,
God's errands never fail."

Adaliza B. Colwell, Appleton, Wis., has the honor of being the first person to send a gift to the Whittier memorial—she has sent $2.25. Let there be a hearty response in gifts from others. Miss Anne Whitney, of Boston, has completed, in clay, a most satisfactory bust of Miss Willard for the Temple—it is about to be sent to Italy, for copying into marble; it is necessary that all who subscribed to the bust fund at the Boston Convention, should forward, at once, the money pledged to Miss Esther Pugh, The Temple, La Salle St., Chicago. It will be remembered that Lady Somerset subscribed $250 towards it, which she has paid. Many others have paid their subscriptions, but there is much still unpaid.

***

Mrs. Mahala Patterson, Hunter's Cave, Pa., sends $100 in memoriam for her beloved son, John Patterson, a forcible assurance of her interest and faith for the Temple. Miss Eliza B. Swan, Mountain Lake Park, Md., sends $25 as a first installment on $100, in memory of her mother, Mrs. V. A. Swan. She writes: "My mother was especially interested in the temperance question, and how sweetly sacred the name of Crusader is to me. How she must rejoice in her heavenly home at the wonderful spread of that first uprising into this grand national, yes, world-wide movement for 'God and Home and Every Land.'" One dollar comes from the savings of a dear little boy, Harold Harris, the son of Mrs. John P. Harris, Bellefonte, Pa. He was taken home to heaven last winter. Mrs. A. C. Rosenbury, Argus, Ind., writes: "This is my dear boy's birthday. He died several years ago, when eight years old. He had a penny safe in which we found $5. When asked what he would do with the money he was saving, he would invariably say, 'I'm going to buy a horse with it so mamma can ride.' I now send it to the Temple and pray that every penny may go as a swift wheel in doing good for the Master and His cause."

***

Mrs. Evelyn Graham, who has done so much for the Temple, and who now resides in Newark, Ohio, writes: "Just now the express package came containing the lovely Temple jewel case. I cannot tell you how beautiful I think it is—such a fine representation of our dear Temple that I am so anxious shall soon become the W. C. T. U.'s own 'House Beautiful.'" No more graceful present can be given a lady than the Temple jewel case, price $2.25. Send for these and also for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the building to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle St., Chicago. All money orders should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh.

The Household.

A TRUE MARRIAGE.

BY WARNER SNOAD.

A poem set to a sweet old tune,
A handful of roses snatched from June,
Full of soft melodies, deep and true,
Fresh with the fragrance of morning dew.

What if the worries which vex us all
Like jarring notes mid the music fall?
'Tis but a change to a minor key;
Differing chords make up harmony.

What if sharp troubles, fierce thunder showers
Burst in a storm on the drooping flowers?
Strengthened, refreshed, they will rise again—
Blossoms are sweetest when wet with rain.

Trial and sickness? their fingers chill
The stoutest heart and the strongest will;
Yet in their beauty the roses bloom
Freshest and best in the dull sick room.

Weariness born of each well-known face?
The dreary round of the commonplace?
These cannot muffle the golden strings
Which angels sweep with their guardian wings.

Discord and anger? The care and strife
Which tear asunder united life—
They cannot touch us, they have no part
In songs sung softly from heart to heart.

For God in His infinite grace has given
One grand key-note from the courts above,
One sunbeam flashed from the gates of heaven
And through all trials our peace and love.

"PLEASE INVITE TOM AND DICK AND HARRY."

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

The secretary of the Fresh Air Fund seated herself before the pile of letters on her desk, took up the little pointed paper cutter lying beside them and began to open and read, reading aloud the portions she wished her assistant to copy.

"Grassley; Mrs. Farland, two girls; June 16." "Grassley; Mrs. A. L. Morse, girl and mother, June 20." "Brierton; Miss Janet Adams, infant and attendant, July 1;" and so on letter after letter. The secretary grew hoarse, the amanuensis had the cramp in her hand, and still there were more letters to be read.

Oh, what a host of kind-hearted folks still live in this world! All these people inviting the poor children for a two weeks' visit to their pleasant homes! They had only to be reminded that hundreds of little children and feeble mothers and hard-worked bread-winners were suffocating in the heart of the city and could not get out for even a breath of fresh air or a glimpse of the glad, beautiful world, and the invitations just poured in.

But there was something peculiarly one-sided about these invitations of which the secretary and her assistant were painfully conscious, and of which the crowd of boys in the waiting room below the office were painfully conscious a little later.

The waiting room was literally packed with boys, all eagerly stretching their necks to catch the first glimpse of the kind face of Mr. Smythe, who would come every half hour to report the result of the letter reading. Many of these boys were bare-footed, many in tatters, many in whole but very poor and shabby suits, and some, not a few, were neatly, decently dressed. Two-thirds of them were brave little bread-winners, not only for their own mouths, but for others dependent on them.

There was a bright expectancy in their old-young faces, and they elbowed each other with nod and smile and good-natured jest, all the time keeping one eye on the door. It opened, Mr. Smythe entered and gravely regarded the eager, upturned faces. "Brave little men!" he thought; "brave little workers, if they could only see you!" Then he tried to be brave and made his voice hopeful as he said:

"Keep up good heart, boys; the invitations will come by and by; summer has only just begun, you know." A little pause. "I am sorry to be able to report only two invitations for boys to-day."

There was a sudden wilting of the sea of heads, the expectant light died out of the old-young faces and left a tired look of patient endurance. Soberly and slowly they filed out of the room into the hot, dusty street.

"That is the way it is every time," said one dejectedly. "All for the girls. I say 'taint fair." Under their feet burned the dust of the street; over their heads burned the dust of the air, the pall of smoke that perpetually hangs over the city. The heat poured up and down and out from the dingy, smoked walls of the buildings. Slowly the boys made their way to the dark alleys and narrow streets that held all they knew of home. To them summer meant stifling heat, noxious vapors and gases, disease, weakness. They had heard of the country summer from children who had been taken there by the Fresh Air Fund Society. They were wild to go. It was like a dream of heaven to them. But day after day the report was brought in, "All the invitations are for the girls, to-day;" and they wondered why they were shut out of this paradise.

On this day three little fellows walked away more slowly than the rest. They looked tired and discouraged. The smallest one, not more than seven years old, hugged a few papers under his arm. It was enough to give one the heart-ache to see this baby, with his patient little face and weary eyes, trudging beside his companions. It seemed as if, already, he had found the fight for life too hard.

"Do you think, Dick," questioned the little fellow of the tallest of the three, "do you think we shall ever go there?"

Dick, who had been shuffling along with heavy feet and drooping head, started up at the sound of the plaintive voice and tried to assume a cheerful air.

"Certain; everybody can't go at once: there's hundreds and hundreds of us. Our turn will come, as Mr. Smythe says, by and by."

"But," spoke up the middle-sized boy, "there's hundreds of us boys and they haven't begun on us yet. I wonder why country folks hate boys so."

"Dick," came the wistful voice again, "do you wish you was a girl?"

"I wish I was a man," replied Dick, with great energy, "and owned a big farm. I'd invite all the boys in Chicago."

"Do you s'pose, Dick,"—the voice came weaker this time—"do you s'pose it really is all blue up high and all green under your feet, like the girls told us?"

Dick turned uneasily; Harry's pitiful little face and plaintive voice made him most uncomfortable. He turned just in time to see him fall, a little heap of brown in the brown dust.

"Oh, he's dead! he's dead!" cried Dick, in an agonized voice, snatching up the tiny heap and looking wildly into the poor, pinched face.

"It's the heat," said Tom. "He'll come out of it; "I've seen him so before; he loses his breath like. He made me promise not to let on to you."

"Poor baby!" said Dick, "poor baby! If we could only give you a little fresh air to breathe!"

They bathed his face with water and fanned him with one of his newspapers, and, by and by, the heavy eyes opened, the white lips trembled, and Harry looked up at Dick, with his old patient smile, "I thought I had gone," he said, but I couldn't find you, so I came back. We'll be sure to go, sometime, won't we, Dick?"

"Certain," answered Dick, in a choking voice.

"Dick," said Harry, very low; "I almost wish I was a girl."

"Poor baby!" muttered Dick, "poor baby!"

Harry did not go out to sell papers the next day, or to the office of the Fresh Air Fund, but Tom and Dick went the next day and the next, and still it was the same story. Not one, in a dozen of the hosts of invitations, was for boys. Still they crowded eagerly into the office, and slowly filed out again until the officers were heartsick at sight of them.

"Dick," said Tom, one night, as they climbed the rickety stairs that led to their attic, "I know what the matter is. I heard that man, with the big whiskers, tell Mr. Smythe that the folks told him they had as soon have a lot of Satan's imps as a parcel of city hoodlums cutting up on their premises. It's my 'pinion we won't get no invite at all."

"But we wouldn't cut up, Tom."

"Lots of us wouldn't; then, again, some of us would. We'd feel so wild and glad we couldn't act enough. How be they going to know which of us wouldn't?"

The following day, Dick went into the office with the usual procession. He stepped up to the big-whiskered man and asked for a private word with Mr. Smythe.

There was just one invitation for a boy that day and Dick got it. He hurried home and ran up the stairs, two steps at a time, making his way to the dark corner where little Harry was "resting" on a quilt spread as neatly as possible on the floor.

"Hurrah for the country," shouted Dick. "Guess what I've got in my pocket, Harry."

"An invite," came a feeble voice from the corner.

"Yes, an invite for you. There was just one and you got it;" and Dick laid the ticket on the quilt triumphantly.

"Good Dick," said Harry, leaning back into the dark as he saw the solitary ticket; "dear Dick, I know you did it."

"You'll go to-morrow, Harry, just think!"

"Didn't you know I couldn't go without you and Tom! I couldn't be the only one and all the other boys wanting to go as bad as me."

"But you need to—to get rested so you can work again you know. We are strong."

Harry smiled all to himself in his dark corner: "I just couldn't, Dick."

All their arguing was without avail. Later in the evening Harry called Tom and Dick to him; they had left him thinking he was asleep, but he was only planning.

"I've thought of something," he announced. "You must write me a letter, Dick."

Dick produced a scrap of candle, fastened it in a wooden wedge, fished a stub of a pencil from his pocket, smoothed out a piece of brown paper, and the dictator began:

"Will somebody who takes little girls to visit in the country, an' won't take boys 'cause they cuts up, please send an invite to Tom an' Dick an' Harry? cause they won't cut up a bit, nor bother anybody, nor hurt anything.

"Please do. We never seed the country; we never seed the kind of sky that's blue; it's only just brown always here. We never seed green ground to walk on, nor flowers growin', nor heard any birds sing. It's just brown all around here, an' terruble hot, an' nothin' to breathe, an' it keeps growin' hotter. An' breathin's no good anyway 'cause there's so many things that smell an' they make you feel dyin' sick.

"Please to remember to send for Tom an' Dick an' Harry. An' if you couldn't possibly have boys around couldn't you send along a barrel full of breath?

"Yours truly, TOM AN' DICK AN' HARRY."

It took a long time to write this lengthy epistle. The address, "To Somebody in the Country that takes Children," covered the envelope that Dick bought and stamped, greatly to Harry's delight.

The next day the letter was taken to Mr. Smythe who promised to send it. He wrote the name of a certain town on it, and sent it on its mission, the prayers of all the officers of the Fresh Air Fund going with it. They, with Tom, Dick and Harry, are waiting for the answer.

Abington, Mass.

SALOONS DECORATED ON PALM SUNDAY.

BY MARY WOOLLEY.

Boston does show "culture" even in its saloons—high license does make the saloons finer, fewer and more respectable. Christian men who advocate this educational method of treating them, ought to be gratified to observe that they begin to "keep" the church days. Riding out on an H street car the day after Palm Sunday, early in the morning, I saw a sight, which I dare say, would have pleased a high license Christian. A large, handsome saloon, lavishly decorated with palms, just as the churches were! I felt that at last the Christian voter had educated the saloon very far toward perfection, and I wondered if Easter lilies would bloom in the same place the next Sunday! In my poor mind—not being "quite up" to such sublime sentiment—it seemed more appropriate for them to keep an everlasting Good Friday, with each door and window and the bar hung with heavy crape, our dear Lord suffering death again in every glass that brings not life everlasting, but death to all who touch it.

To live by rule is an ogre. A little license is a piquant element in the monotony of ordinary life. Some of the best people often keep a little spice of foolishness about them to relieve the heavy atmosphere of consistent behavior and learn to utter platitudes which are, at best, illusions of their own creation, as excuses for their elegant little follies.—Mary A. Ward Poole.

Now, positively, I will give you the latest utterance of science from one of its most famous American representatives, and I think I should be paid for putting in your grasp that which boils down the results of generations of study; namely, the seat of vitality is protoplasm; nerve tissue is the seat of sensation; ganglionic tissue is the seat of precipitancy; and the seat of volitioncy is the grouping of ganglia in the encephalon.

THERE is no chance and no anarchy in the universe. All is system and gradation. Every god is there, sitting in his sphere. The young mortal enters the hall of the firmament; there is he with them alone, they pouring on him benedictions and gifts and beckoning him up to their thrones. On the instant and incessantly fall snow-storms of illusions. He fancies himself in a vast crowd which sways this way and that, and whose movements and doings he must obey; he fancies himself poor, orphaned, insignificant. The mad crowd drives hither and thither, now furiously commanding this thing to be done, now that. What is he that he should resist their will, and think or act for himself? Every moment new changes and new showers of deceptions to baffle and distract him. And when, by and by, for an instant, the air clears and the cloud lifts a little, there are the gods sitting around him on their thrones,—they alone with him alone.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

UNION SIGNAL
WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President Board of Directors.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

W. C. T. U. COURSE OF STUDY—JUNE READINGS

Bible.—Boys of the Bible. Mrs. J. H. McMinn.
Responsive.—The Nation's Gatekeepers. Mrs. S. F. Grubb.
Topical.—Leaflets prepared under the direction of the Department of Work Among Foreigners. Send to Mrs. S. F. Grubb, Lawrence, Kansas.

Lay hold upon the hope set before us; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast.—Hebrews 6: 18, 19.

THE LARGER HOPE.

It is the home for which we should legislate, but in these abnormal days we legislate in reply to these two questions: 1. How will it affect our business? 2. How will it affect our party?

The women and the home must be represented in the government, or it cannot endure. Women and home made our government possible.

Christ exalted the individual—He may be almost said to have discovered the individual. Women rejoiced in this. It prophesied the confession of their own individuality. They followed Him as women never followed prince or rabbi since the world began. In the great British struggle of the eighteenth century (1741) women went to Parliament and were admitted with their huge petition. They acted for that day as the W. C. T. U. does for ours, and listen! they based all their plea on the fact that Christ had exalted them by paying for them as great a price in His death and passion as He ever did for men.

Across the sea came just that sort of men and women in that same century, and they founded homes that were ideal. Here the wife was side by side with her husband in all the daily duties. Consider the mother of General Washington, and how she conducted her own business, and when her illustrious son asked her to come and have her home with him, she said, "I prefer to live in my own house, and carry on my own affairs." The grandfather of one of our leaders lived on General Washington's farm, and always took his money home and gave it to his wife. She knew what he had, but he did not.

Out of the magnifying of the home life came our form of government. John Adams said to Josiah Quincy: "It is a disputed point who originated the idea of independence. Neither Franklin, Jefferson nor I deserve the credit of that idea. It came from the hearts of the people. When I was a teacher at Worcester I obtained from the farmers where I visited and boarded the idea of independence, and I felt then it was sure to come, because the homes of the colonies demanded it."

When the Revolutionary struggle culminated in war, women were at the fore. Six hundred women of Boston, five years before our fathers threw over the tea, put their names to a pledge not to use the hated beverage. General Putnam said to a British officer, "Before your soldiers get half way through this country, even if we men did not oppose you, the women will beat your brains out with their broomsticks and their butter ladles." A rich woman entertained the British officers so ingeniously that General Putnam and all his troops escaped them unobserved.

Now, why don't women vote after all that? They did for ninety years in Massachusetts and they voted in many other states, but Roman law (Pagan) held women back and Roman law, through the English on which we based ours, overrode the Christian idea. But there has been a steady progress in civil rights, a getting ready for the full liberation of women. The Pilgrims were tolerant and had the essential ideas of Christianity, but the stronger Puritan influence overbore the Pilgrims with Roman-English ideas. The free spirit of the home is echoed in the Declaration of Independence. The statement of principles therein embodied covers all that women can ever crave, contend for, or receive. Peter at Pentecost declared a broad gospel, but seven years later God performed a miracle to bring Peter to do what the Spirit there gave him to utter!

The progress of the nation depends on women. They gave without stint to found colleges from which their daughters were excluded, but now eighty-two per cent of our teachers are women. Twenty-three states give the school ballot, Kansas the municipal, Wyoming the full ballot.

That the nations may go on women must have the franchise. The line of Providence is laid down, it will take us there. Bismarck says: "I put myself in the line of Providence and then I am certain to win."

Women have been preserved from many evils. Liquor and tobacco count very few victims among them. Like the Israelites of old, they are a peculiar people. We have here, at the close of the nineteenth century, a development of womanhood such as the world has never seen. All public reforms center around the home. Then think of the motto, "For God and Home and Native Land"! It has come just in the nick of time. God saved this land in 1860 by the young men. This time it will be by women. The figures show the awful fact that more young men are, or have been, in prison than have been or are, in churches. God, in His wonderful mercy, is developing the girls. One or two young men graduate from each High School annually—the rest are women. Look at the W. C. T. U. and the Christian Endeavor Societies; look, indeed, at the situation generally; it all points toward woman as our deliverer. Democrats and Republicans have enacted and repealed prohibition in fifteen states. A few years ago it looked as if we were to go right on—but no, we have setbacks and must put in a new element. Take Iowa; we have studied it carefully. If the women do not get the ballot in Iowa we may well tremble for its future. God will defeat us until we give women the ballot—we must put that movement first one of these years.

A minister has said, "We should learn the lesson that we cannot depend on men in moral interests. The press said the Crusade was a failure, Mother Stewart said, 'The Crusade is not a failure but the men are.' Men are the unstable sex. We must have the woman force, the stable sex. If you are legislating for success, turn to the women, and do it soon. We call our Prohibition party meetings and convocations, and who come? The women. How can you reach the men when they don't come?" Republicans gave the ballot to the slaves from selfish motives. There never was a "God and morality party" of men, and never will be. A liquor man said "the colored women of the South could be depended on." A colored woman in Leavenworth went in her calico dress, but in a splendid carriage that was sent after her, and voted against the rummies who had brought her, saying, "Dey buys me and I sells dem!" If twelve million women can be enfranchised we can be saved. These women will represent the home. A government originating in the home will be perpetuated by the home. Congress shall yet legislate for the cottages.

We can much more easily convert the mass of men to woman's ballot as a general measure of protection to the country and as an act of justice, than we can convert them to vote prohibition. Nearly all the labor societies have declared for woman's ballot and almost none for prohibition. We must never submit the question of woman's vote to the Tom, Dick and Harry population, but secure it by National constitutional amendment ratified in the state legislatures. When this is done in America, Great Britain, Canada and Australia alike, we, who fight for temperance and purity, shall have recruited our army and can go into the battle of progress versus paganism, and go in to win.

THE LAND OF MANNERS AND IDEAS.

Sir Edwin Arnold has been giving us delightful impressions of Japan in which we feel an unusual interest since we have a devoted band of white-ribboners in that earthly paradise. He says that it is impossible to tell how strong is the feeling of devotion and duty to parents in Japan. It is even carried to a grievous and pitiful extreme, when young women are ready, under that impulse, to give all that they value highest if only they may save their parents from the burden of debt.

This is Confucianism doubly distilled, and incalculably degrades woman; notwithstanding the natural beauty and social charm of the country, the great evil of Japan to-day is the degradation of woman. But in spite of this, the women of Japan are, as a class, the sweetest, the most gentle, the most virtuous and most ladylike women in the world. One never hears a Japanese woman say anything bad, anything offensive, anything in the most remote way approaching coarseness; indeed, if one should try to speak that way it would be vain, for there is no such language that one could use. The Japanese tongue is the most courteous in the world. People say, not "Where have you been," but "Where did you graciously condescend to appear?" When you rap on the door, they do not say "Come in," but, "Pray, condescend to enter." They have no oaths or rough expressions or idioms. It is true that perhaps not every gracious word uttered is really meant, for we know that gracious manners do not always imply sincerity; but the beauty of it all is that the Japanese are sincere, and to bre[ak] ... y is to lead a r[ight] ... the their air and to live in their countr[y] ... uct in Japan t[o] ... lew life; indeed, there seems to be a compa[ct] ... vest it of q[ue]stions to make life as pleasant as possible and to d[ie] ... when this ... barrels. There are no serious contentions, for ... rs the ... comes about somebody is made to die, which clea[rs] ... by a ... air and brings in great peace! Japan is populated ... 25. race with the manners of well-bred children.

As everybody knows, ... the Japanese are a people of infinite receptivity. They ... have all our practical inventions. One may telephone there a[s] ... and travel about on railways as we do in the United States. ... They have a modern navy, and one might almost say that they are in search of a religion. There is no hostile fe[e]ling towards Christianity. As white-ribboners we know ... that the temperance reform has a foothold in Japan, but it[s] best days are yet to come. The work of Mrs. Leavitt in ope[n]ing the world of ideas, education, industry and philanthropy to the women in that land is the greatest single impulse that has ever come to them, and will be broadened and deepened by the approaching visit of our Mary Allen West.

INJUSTICE TO HENRY W. BLAIR.

The following correspondence explains itself:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 6, 1892.

MY DEAR MISS WILLARD:—You suggested that I write to you once in awhile for THE UNION SIGNAL. Here is a letter received by me to-day, which is ... postmarked Seattle, and sent to me at Concord, N. H. Possibly in time people will better understand the forces which, by false representations, really procured my rejection as Minister to China, and also prevented any effort being made to secure the withdrawal of those objectionable by presentation of the truth by our government to that of the Chinese Empire.

Sincerely and respectfully yours,

HENRY W. BLAIR.

April 20, 1892.

Hon. H. W. Blair, N. H.:

DEAR SIR:—I see occasionally by the paper that you do not know why you were not sent to China to represent this great nation as minister. I can tell you: it is because you are a —— crank. You did not do anything but gabble about your sixteenth amendment on prohibition when you were in the United States Senate. We have got rid of you there, and some of your friends thought to send you to China, but we don't want any man of your stamp abroad in a good capacity who would be likely to interfere with our business or expectation. We expect to open up a remunerative trade with China, as we have done and are doing in the South American republics through our good ministers to those countries. And we think the sooner you get out of the party that has so faithfully protected our business for the past twenty-four years, the better. However, we have got rid of you for a time, and hope you may join the woman's crusade and work for moral reforms on right lines. You are unfit to represent a free and liberty-loving people. Our business (brewing) is based on principles that are eternal, because right. It is a grand industry, supported by our best people inside and out of the churches. The late Howard Crosby, than whom no better or more respected Christian minister ever lived, expressed himself as favoring the opening of saloons on Sunday for two hours, say from twelve to two o'clock, so people could get their beer for lunch. Nothing hidebound about that. I hate a crank and meddler with other folks' business, but I thought best to let you know why you were not sent to China that you might know what a fool you had made of yourself.

ONE OF MANY.

[It is our deliberate opinion that the anonymous minion of the liquor despotism has, in the above brutal lines, revealed the true inwardness of ex-Senator Blair's failure to go to China. Never was mortal man worse thanked by party leaders for noble services.—ED.]

OUR readers will please take notice that an unusually interesting number of THE UNION SIGNAL is to be issued for use on flower mission day, June 9, the birthday of Miss Jennie Casseday, of Louisville, Ky., superintendent of that department. We think that white-ribboners in this and other countries will be glad to circulate the paper on that day in all institutions set apart to the defective, dependent and delinquent classes. It will be, we hope, a wholesome visitation, and one productive of great good to humanity. We began far enough in advance to make this special edition memorable for its unique and attractive features, applicable especially for the use mentioned. We shall have articles from the great lights of that full yet sorrowful world of philanthropy and reform which is daily growing larger. Our own Mrs. Barney, who has no equal in recounting the lives, the sorrows, and the victories wrought out in police stations and in jails; Mrs. Littell, the well-known police matron, who pioneered that great work in Chicago, and others will write for the special number. We shall have a picture and sketch of Miss Casseday, reclining on the little bed which she has not left for more than a quarter of a century, also a view of her new Rest Cottage; we have asked Mary T. Lathrap and Mary Lowe Dickinson for poems. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore will write of the woman's prison in Massachusetts. Dr. Henry Bannister, an expert in the treatment of the insane, will send us an article. There will be Bible readings for prisoners; helpful stories, showing the power of God in the overthrowing of physical, mental and moral disabilities. Indeed, a "feast of fat things," good for all to taste, and especially encouraging and helpful to those in whose interest this number will be prepared. We hope that the local unions will soon send in their orders, as this number is to be distinguished by an immensely large edition. We call upon every member in every village, town and city of the United States to think of those who are shut in, lonely and sorrowful, and then determine upon a canvass of your community, and there enthrone the influence of the light-bringing and light-giving UNION SIGNAL in tens of thousands of new hearts. Even though you are not able to circulate this special number on the day mentioned, will you not make up your minds that every hospital, asylum, home for the friendless, and most particularly of all, every prison shall have this number dated June 2?

THE General Federation of Women's Clubs was in session three days in Central Music Hall, Chicago, May 11-13, with three hundred delegates from well-nigh two hundred clubs, representing thirty-three states. Mrs. Charlotte Emerson Brown, of New Jersey, is president; Mrs. May Wright Sewall, of Indiana, vice-president; Mrs. J. C. Croly (Jenny June), corresponding secretary. The papers read were uniformly excellent and the attendance large. Miss Susan B. Anthony was present and received what Americans call "an ovation." She richly deserved it and these progressive women honored themselves in honoring her. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and Mrs. Ednah Cheney, of Boston, read classic papers and Mrs. Dr. Lozier, of Sorosis, made a bright speech. A witty speech of welcome was made by Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson. Our National president addressed the Convention on the Columbian Exposition, by request of Mrs. Potter Palmer, who is abroad in its interest. Mrs. H. M. Barker made a rousing speech on the dormitory for wage-working women. Mrs. Charles Henrotin read a paper, noble in thought and feeling, on her great department of World's Women's Congresses. Mrs. George Dunlap explained the children's palace, where the little folks are to have every creature's best put at their call, and Mrs. Gould described the part that the state managers must fill in these great enterprises. The club women will speak so that all can hear, will be more alert in parliamentary usage, and will leave their bonnets off as they gain more experience. But their movement is grand, and must make all women proud and glad that they have "come into the kingdom for such a time as this."

SOME of our correspondents are troubled because we have stood by the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst in his efforts to secure the enforcement of the Excise law in New York City. We did not indorse every detail of his method, but we believe that his intention was so excellent and the results are so suggestive of good, that we should give our help and sympathy to him, as a Christian man, and urge ministers everywhere to go and do likewise as to the general features of his plan. Personally, we should never think of adopting certain particulars of the methods followed in the recent crusade upon the New York saloons; but no amount of criticism will move us from standing by this Presbyterian police pursuer, even as we defended and indorsed W. T. Stead, when the saloon press of Great Britain denounced him as it is now denouncing Dr. Parkhurst. We did not approve everything done by Mr. Stead, but we did and do most strongly indorse the general trend of the movement he began, and which resulted within three weeks in so changing the laws of Great Britain that the protection of girls and women now accorded in that country is greater than is vouchsafed in any other land under the sun. Do not, dear friends, let us strain at a gnat and swallow a camel, but let us dare to defend the man whom saloon-keepers denounce, recreant policemen fear, and Gotham's political ringsters persecute and hate.

"THE Young Woman Journalist," the life of Julia Ames, is so unique in its plan and varied in its point of view, that we desire to devote an editorial to its consideration, at the earliest possible moment. Meanwhile, we doubt if any young woman can read a book that will do her more good, or make her more effective in the great ranks of the world's work and workers.

THE life of Mrs. Sarah J. C. Downs, long known as the "Andrew Jackson of the executive committee," in our National society, has been sent us by her daughter, Mrs. Quigley. It is edited by that temperance Boanerges, Rev. Dr. Graw. The book is full of her own brave, blithe spirit, and we have had no clearer bugle blast from any quarter. We hope to give the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL some extracts, and we also hope that very many will send to the Gazette Printing and Publishing House, 131 Federal street, Camden, N. J., for copies of the book. The clear-cut photogravure of Mrs. Downs, which forms the frontispiece, is in itself worth the price of the volume.

THE recent passage, by the Ohio legislature, of the first compulsory physical education law, backed up by that state's chief teachers, marks an epoch in history. It means that girls, just as thoroughly as boys, shall be trained in the development of their physical best. It means natural waists and feet, natural ways of walking, a knowledge by the wives and mothers of the future, of what is best in diet, dress, ventilation and exercise. Happy the woman whose keen brain, undaunted will and unwearied perseverance were the prime factors in securing the enactment of that law. She has fired the first gun; it will be "heard around the world." Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent of the department of physical culture in the W. C. T. U., THE UNION SIGNAL sends you its congratulations. You did well to work, first of all, in your own great state of Ohio, and we who know you risk nothing in predicting that before ten years you will win the same enactment in every state in the Republic. Meanwhile, we urge this line of work upon white-ribboners in the Dominion of Canada, Great Britain and the whole world around.

Through that great leader, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, we have well-nigh won the battle for scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, but we must follow that by physical culture for all the "rising generation," and between the two, alcoholics, tobacco and "narves" will be heavily discounted by the rising generation of the twentieth century.

THE Woman's National Council executive committee was in session at the Palmer House, May 9. It did so many good things that we reserve an account of them for a next week's editorial. The Council is a great and growing power for that "brotherhood of man," which as Dr. Stevenson happily says, "must begin in the sisterhood of woman."

The Temple Question Box.

QUESTION.—On what terms can a union have a tablet in Willard Hall, and what is the amount necessary to be paid at once to secure it?

ANSWER.—Any union that pays $100 any time before the building is entirely paid for can have its name on a tablet, as room will be left to inscribe the names of all persons and unions that send a gift of $100 previous to the time above mentioned. Money can be sent in instalments just as it is convenient for the unions to send it.

Q.—What denomination are the Temple Trust Bonds, and what interest do they pay? If a tablet is purchased is a bond given for the amount paid for the tablet?

A.—The Temple Trust bonds are of the denominations of $100 and $500 each. They pay six per cent interest annually, payable semi-annually. Those paying $100 for having the name, either of a union or an individual, get no bond for it. This amount goes to pay for the building, and we honor the union or individual giving it by inscribing their name on a tablet in beautiful Willard Hall. The money thus received goes to purchase Temple stock in order that the National W. C. T. U. may become sole owner of the building. As we have stated before, all unions will reap a benefit from their gifts through their state executives, as one-half of the income from the building, when fully paid for, will go to the National society, and the other half to the states pro rata the amount each state has paid toward the building.

Q.—Is the inscription over the door of the Temple "The Woman's Temperance Temple," or is it simply "The Temple"? If the latter, why was it made so?

A.—There is no inscription over the main or business entrance to the Temple, but on the granite on each side of the entrance there is a large, richly carved panel in the center of which are the words, "The Temple."

The change was made in order to give a short, concise name for the building, as for business purposes this is absolutely necessary—besides, we want it fully understood that this is the Temple of Temples, as, without doubt, there is no other building of the kind approaching it in beauty of architecture. In order to emphasize that it belongs to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the W. C. T. U. has been added so that no mistake can be made. The same inscription is twice repeated on the corner-stone.

On the Monroe street entrance this fact is again emphasized by an inscription engraved over the door of Willard Hall, and above this the beautiful seal, in bronze, of our society, with the National monogram above it, and the motto, "For God and Home and Every Land."

Q.—What length of time can we have to get up a Baby Band in order to have it placed in the cap-stone?

A.—The cap-stone was placed months ago, and the building on the outside is fully completed with the exception of the flèche. In order to continue the good work of raising Baby Bands, for we consider there is none better, we have placed a strong iron box in one of the turrets of the Temple, where all Baby Band lists will be kept. We hope to continue the work of raising these Bands until the building is entirely paid for.

The Watch-Tower.

A white-ribboner has thus summed up on a large scale the purpose of all good people. She says, "However we may differ as to methods, you and I are building and working for the same end—a clean universe, according to our light."

***

A Welsh miner, on being told that Lady Henry Somerset desired to speak to the miners and steel workers in Pittsburg, said: "We cannot talk to her; how can she talk to us? What does she know about us?" But he put in an appearance at her lecture, and on the way out was heard to say with enthusiasm, "After all, she hit it exactly."

***

Mrs. Franklin U. Fisk, chairman woman's committee of the World's Congress Auxiliary on Christian missions, has, in combination with other leading women, issued a preliminary address. In it, all missionary organizations of whatever denomination are requested to join in the work of preparing for the great congress of missions; to compare methods, report progresses, correct errors, and by suggestions and discussions to encourage each other, and to devise plans that by mutual understanding and endeavor shall advance the work of evangelizing the world. Lady Henry Somerset is a member of the advisory committee, and has promised to speak at the Congress on her return to America in 1893. The purposes of this Woman's Congress to be held in connection with the United States are set forth in the following noble sentiments: To elevate and improve the condition of women throughout the world; to promote justice, virtue and domestic peace; to show that the elevation of woman is the true progress of the world.

***

The countess of Aberdeen is vice-president of the Woman's Franchise League of Great Britain, the object of which is to extend to women, whether unmarried, married or widowed, the privilege to vote in parliamentary, municipal or local elections on the same conditions which qualify men; to establish for all women equal, civil and political rights, similar to those of men; the basis of the society being, that since the two sexes have equal responsibilities, they should live under the same laws, enjoy the same privileges, and in all respects so far as equal possibilities are concerned, they should have the same facilities and privileges granted to them. This should be the case, for while woman is upon the school board and as guardian of the poor, yet her position may be contested on the sole ground that she is a wife. The last person whose vote should be refused on the question of the education of her children is surely that of the mother. And it will not be long before men will see that it is far from being to their interest thus to handicap those who share their lives and homes.

***

When Disraeli was a young man he was celebrated for being unskilled in athletic sports. In a racket court of the college in which he was a student, a ball was served to him which he could not return; turning to a young guardsman by his side he coolly begged him to make the stroke for him. In after years, commenting upon this he said, "If a man is to govern, he must always excel, or else he must show a profound contempt for those pursuits in which he does not." The speech was extremely characteristic of the man.

***

A chemist was recently speaking of the difference between what we know about fats and what we know about albuminoids in the economy of the human body. He said, "We know about the fats as a boy knows about the stick he is whittling. He sees it from end to end and from side to side and understands its composition; but we know about albuminoids so little that we might justly liken our ignorance to that of a man who walks around on the outside of what he believes to be a gorgeous palace, which, if he could but enter it, is full of precious stones, frescoes, stained glass windows, and everything that can delight the eye and understanding. But we have not yet learned our way in. One of our specialists has been working all winter on what you might call a brick out of the albuminoid palace. He hoped it might prove that he had begun to find an entrance by taking out this brick. He finds as a reward of his winter's work that he had mistaken the way in; but when asked if he did not regret the time and study and expense invested, he said, 'No; it is just as important to find out what you can't do as what you can, and I shall publish the result of my investigation in the scientific journals, so that other students of the same questions may not make the same futile attempt.'" There is matter for reflection in this reply, and reformers will do well to ponder it.

ON DUTY.

News from the Field.

OREGON.

SPRING GROWTH.

When you have read our report, you will surely think that we have made some good spring growth. We hope with regard to temperance work we may be ever vernal. The poet of the Sierras, Joaquin Miller, styles Oregon,

"The ever emerald state,
Eternal verdure
Eternal youth,
Eternal beauty, it is hers,
The clouds and rains have said it."

The cloud of witnessing women, the dropping rain of their words and work, will surely in time bring the sunshine of temperance to light up our emerald state!

Our dear state president is much encouraged over her public work; it entails many arduous journeyings, but keeping herself in constant practice in the school of methods, her plans mature and simplify in the carrying out. Mrs. Shipley (now a resident of Corvallis) our state superintendent of work at fairs, went over to Philomath with your correspondent where she held a school of methods. Two days' session with an address each evening at a public meeting were what she accomplished single-handed. The last afternoon the subjects were "Mercy" and "Mothers' Meetings," both very much in our line.

Mrs. Riggs shows a wise example when she is entertained by getting her hosts to display their hospitality in allowing her to retire to her room and rest whenever she can. The origin of the word hospitable and its connection with similar ones, such as "hospital," seems to imply a necessity for such care on the part of every host! I should like to dwell on some of the points brought out that afternoon, but that is impossible. A practical result was the organization of a Y with twelve members.

Multnomah county held its quarterly meeting at the Portland union headquarters this spring. This being our little "hub" and easily reached, it was possible for six state superintendents to be present, besides our state president, and many earnest words were spoken on behalf of their various departments. The masterpiece was an address by Mrs. Hartley, of Newberg, on "Sabbath Observance." The subject of the Sunday closing of the Columbian Exposition was forcibly presented.

Not long ago Lane county held her annual convention at Junction, where a union was organized last November by Mrs. Delle Cox. Our state president and treasurer were both present and the time was pleasant and profitable.

Mrs. Riggs was at Independence soon after for another county convention. This is, probably, the banner county for the L. T. L. In time, Mrs. Ada Unruh will get all our counties organized up to the same point as is her own, where Mrs. Whittaker laid such solid foundations. In Forest Grove, the teachers of the public school came in after their hard day's work to help with the children. Hope, solid hope, for the place, where "the children are afield!"

At the close of this gathering Mrs. Riggs went to Corvallis, this time making an address at an "At Home" to about seventy invited guests of one of our members. She stood at an angle where she could command three rooms and spoke pleasantly of some of the chief workers from all over the world at the great Boston Convention and of what we are trying to do here in Oregon. The account of the mission and ministry of the Refuge Home, and the great need of a new building interested all present. The result has been a public social given by our newly waked-up "Y's," when they took in $20—a nice little sum for a small and overdone place.

Between the two visits to Benton county Mrs. Riggs had been "over the mountains and far away," speaking and rousing the work at Dufur and Weston. As the latter place determined to keep "roused," they engaged Mrs. Delle Cox, our state organizer, with whom we are all so well pleased, for a lecture. Mrs. Riggs is indefatigable in carrying the "World's Petition" around with her; unlike the "rolling stone" she gathers "moss"! We hope she may roll up hosts of names. The Oswego union, that lost Mrs. Shipley, when Corvallis gained her, also had addresses from Mrs. Riggs and Mrs. Foster, which were very profitable to them.

The Demorest contests have been held with good success at Philomath, McMinnville and La Grande. Yam Hill county has now eight silver medals, and it expects a golden competition at the approaching county convention. The Amity people seem in good earnest, for Mrs. Cox has filled four lecture engagements in that little place since our last report. Result, eleven fresh recruits and several drinking men reclaimed.

The reorganization and live work of the Prohibition party is wholesome to the old parties, and makes the liquor dealers stand to their arms. They have been holding meetings in Portland. The chief of police there enforces the city ordinance that the saloons should be closed empty at one o'clock a. m.

The little country town of Monroe is having stirring times. The rum party has been discovered to have forged signatures on their petition, and forced others to sign by intimidating threats of rough usage. They announce their intention of putting an end to the new minister, because he has stirred up all this temperance ferment. The other side are no less in earnest. They knocked the last liquor seller, who tried to introduce a saloon, out of court last December. It was the same minister who telegraphed for Mrs. Delle Cox to come and give an address after the Thanksgiving dinner and then to organize a W. C. T. U. There is one man there who stands in danger of falling between two stools. He is a church member, and his name stands on the saloon petition, but he vows he has never placed it there. If he did, he is to forfeit his church membership, and if he has it stricken off the whisky party declare they will make him pay for it with his life.

La Grande has had four evenings with Captain Vanneten, the "Dakota cyclone," with the results that one saloon-keeper has gone out of the business and a temperance man is elected mayor.

Newberg has once more attracted a No. 1 woman to its little "sisternity," in the person of Mrs. Helen Harford, late of Missouri, who, they tell us, is a good lecturer.

Our state convention, the bugle call of which is already sounding in our ears, is to be carried east of our mountains this year, to give our sisters on the other side a chance. It is a long journey for many of us, but we hope for a good "gathering of the clans."

Our little sheet, the Oregon White Ribbon, doubles itself this month. Our unions are finding out the use of a state organ, for thirteen have voiced themselves in it besides the conventions, etc., that are reported.

The Yam Hill county convention at Carlton was a very successful one. And no wonder, because Newberg is in the county. Mrs. Edwards, our dear Friend minister, presided. Among the department subjects taken up that against impure literature seems to have commanded a great deal of interest. In answer to our request to Senator Dolph, that he should vote for the house bill that deals with that subject, he replied that he would be happy to present the bill in the Senate if not already introduced. This is the same senator who presented the Alaskan License bill, which has received a great deal of opposition from his temperance constituents in Oregon. The county reported nine unions, with a membership of three hundred, and the representation at the convention was very full and very eager. At the public evening meeting, Mrs. Harford's and Mrs. Unruh's addresses were able and telling, and the singing by the children and young people was most inspiring. The amount of the collection was encouraging and I am proud to say that the press reporter had good columns in four different papers.

L. A. NASH,
State Reporter, Corvallis.

TENNESSEE

ITEMS OF LOCAL WORK.

Knoxville union reports that it is in a flourishing condition. Their meetings are well attended and are composed of live members. Their president attended the Boston Convention, and received such an inspiration from that great meeting that all were blessed on her return, and inspired to do better work than ever before. Their superintendent of Sabbath observance, Mrs. Dosser, did good work in that department, securing three thousand names to the petition for closing the Columbian Exposition on the Lord's Day. Mrs. Lathrap was with them recently and spoke twice to large audiences. Some new members were added. One daily paper commented on it in part as follows: "She is said to be one of the most forcible and logical temperance lecturers in the field. She possesses the faculty, not common with lecturers, of presenting her subject as clearly, concisely and logically as would a noted barrister in the presence of the Supreme Court."

Dixon reports the organization of a Y. W. C. T. U., and we hope to have a good report from them later.

Harriman started out this year with renewed life and energy; their membership has steadily increased from the first. They have now, including honorary members, a list of about eighty, and meet regularly every Wednesday with a good attendance. They have had four lectures from George W. Bain, two by Mrs. Lide Meriwether, one by Rev. McGlantlin and one by Rev. F. L. Thompson. One successful medal contest has been held and they are preparing for another. The superintendent of prison work reports an interesting meeting in prison, when seven members expressed a desire to lead a better life. The superintendent of press work has prepared nineteen columns of matter, mostly original, which were accepted and printed by the local papers. The superintendent of literature has distributed in the railroad depot, at the boarding houses, and at public meetings, 421 leaflets, 215 UNION SIGNALS, and many other good papers; she has paid the W. C. T. U. $20.40, and obtained six subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. The superintendent of juvenile work, with her L. T. L., is doing a grand work. The membership is ninety-two. Christmas eve they gave an entertainment, "Mother Goose and Santa Claus," clearing one hundred dollars. They are wide awake and enthusiastic in the work. A mothers' petition was circulated and signed by four hundred mothers and presented to the city council asking them to refuse to license poolrooms. Steps have been taken to stop, if possible, the sale of cigarettes to minors. There is besides much good work done in many ways by women who are better workers than reporters. The W. C. T. U. temple at Harriman has been dedicated, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap gracing the occasion with one of her matchless addresses. On that occasion the debt of $2,000 on the temple was raised, and the women made happy by the munificent liberality of the audience. It is said to be the most beautiful building of the kind in the South, and outside of Chicago, to have no equal in the whole country.

The central Nashville union is reported on rising ground. A letter from its president, Mrs. Ida T. East, reports twenty-one additions since November. They are doing work in seven departments: Social purity, evangelistic, hospital, jail and penitentiary, parlor meetings, mothers' meetings, Sabbath observance and kindergarten. Some of the departments have only begun work. Of the work accomplished, they are justly proud. Their kindergarten, composed of twenty-five little street Arabs, can now compare favorably with any other children in the city. Their evangelistic meetings are well attended and much good is being done. In five weeks last winter the union distributed eight hundred bushels of coal and coke, much clothing, and fifty-two dollars in money for rent and provisions. They are now trying to establish what they call a training school for girls. They find so many girls in hospitals, diseased and sick in soul and body, who, they think perhaps had their opportunities been better, would have led better lives. The idea in establishing a training school is to take girls from the age of twelve to twenty, teach them to cook, wash, iron, sew and everything pertaining to make home comfortable and instill into them the idea that all honest work is ennobling. Most of the preachers in Nashville have preached or will preach on Sabbath observance. Rev. Dr. Steel, pastor of McKendree church, Nashville, never preaches or lectures, but he denounces the saloons and is doing much good work.

Throughout the state the temperance forces are moving and we hope to make the present year one of the best in its history.

Before closing, I would like to say a word, personally, to our unions. My bi-monthly letters to THE UNION SIGNAL are due the 20th of the month, though delayed this time hoping to get more reports. The next letter is due the 20th of June. I hope every union in the state will send me a good report by that time and every alternate month thereafter. That is in August, October, December and so on. There are some new unions from whom I desire especially to hear. Do not fear getting reports to me too long, as I can condense for THE UNION SIGNAL, and desire to know everything going on. Any items of temperance work, though outside the W. C. T. U., will be gratefully received. Please report regularly, for that adds life to our work and serves as inspiration for others.

MRS. T. P. HOLMAN,
State Reporter, Fayetteville.

ALABAMA.

ACCOUNT OF THE STATE CONVENTION.

The Alabama W. C. T. U. convention was held at Attalla, Etowah county, April 19–21. The Methodist church was our meeting place and a hearty welcome was extended by the good citizens. The Attalla union is one of the best in the state, and to their indefatigable labors is to be attributed much of the success of the convention. Thirty-three delegates were in attendance. Among the visitors was Mrs. M. L. Wells, of Tennessee, who presented the claims of the Southern Assembly at Waynesville, N. C., with such power that shares were taken by several Attalla men. An interesting feature of the convention was a Demorest medal contest, in which the gold medal was won by Miss Lalla Blakenship, of Attalla. The Loyal Temperance Legion also took part in the exercises. The report of the corresponding secretary showed that over $700 had been expended in the work during the past year. There were sixteen unions represented in the report, with one hundred and ninety paying members. The following officers were elected: president, Mrs. Mattie L. Spencer, Birmingham; vice-president, Mrs. Annie T. Brooks, Birmingham; recording secretary, Mrs. Sallie M. Eskew, Selma; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Julia H. McBryde, Mobile; treasurer, Mrs. Mary G. Moore, Hartselle.

By vote of the convention, the time of our annual meeting was changed to November "immediately after the National," so that our president returning can impart the news of that event to the state delegates, and plan out a winter campaign, as most of our work is done in that season. Our next convention will be held in Selma, November, 1893.

MRS. JULIA H. MCBRYDE.

CALIFORNIA NEWS LETTER.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE Y'S.

The third annual conference of the California Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held April 28, 29 and 30 at San Rafael. The trip over the San Francisco and North Pacific Railway was delightful and the scenery especially beautiful, because the hills are clothed in their springtime robes of green. The Y. W. C. T. U. hall was handsomely decorated with the star spangled banner, temperance banners and beautiful flowers with Miss Willard's picture as an inspiration to all. Especially beautiful was the dainty white satin banner of the Hanford Y. W. C. T. U.

The convention was opened by fervent devotions conducted by Miss Annie Meserole, of San Francisco. Miss Etta Shaver, of San Rafael, rendered well a vocal solo Greeting most hearty was given by Mrs. A. A. Gates, of San Rafael, and pleasantly responded to by Miss Nellie Morse, of Berkeley. Miss Winnie Morris, state superintendent of young woman's work, presided at all sessions with grace and dignity. She read a letter of tender greeting from Mrs. Frances Barnes, the World's and National superintendent of young woman's work. Miss Sadie Eastwood, of San Jose, and Miss Virna Woods, of Sacramento, acted as secretaries.

The beautiful songs from the Y song book by Miss Anna Gordon enlivened all the meetings and showed the wondrous power of music. Miss Helen Burns, of San Rafael, read a progressive paper on "Physical Culture and Hygienic Dress." The discussion which followed shows the deep thought the Y's are giving to this important subject and many are discarding the deadly corset.

Friday evening the reports of the Y's showed that they are indeed Y's in choosing methods of work against the saloon, the deadliest enemy of the home. The San Jose Y. W. C. T. U., reported by Mrs. Jessie Nevins, has fifty-six active and forty honorary members. Socials and entertainments have brought in many honorary members and much money for the work. Loyal Temperance Legions have been conducted; flowers and literature have been distributed in the county infirmary.

The Oakland Y's reported twenty-five active and twelve honorary members, and with the aid of the W. C. T. U. sustain a free reading room and are interesting Christian Endeavor societies in temperance work. The North Oakland Y's told of their union of fifty members which does much work for kindergartens and sends delegations of visitors to the hospitals. The Rosamond union of Oakland give their musical services freely at entertainments and gospel temperance meetings. They are collecting magazines for the Florence Crittenton Home for erring girls at 808 Twenty-fourth street, San Francisco. They also published the Christmas number of their paper, the White and Blue. The society numbers about thirty members and was christened the Rosamond in honor of the former president of California W. C. T. U., Mrs. Rosamond R. Johnston.

The Berkeley union numbers nearly one hundred members and specially devotes its energies to entertainments. Many of their honorary members were students at the State University, and so true to their colors were they that last year when even President Harrison took wine at a banquet given by one of the fraternities in his honor, these brave young fellows turned their glasses "upside down." For a long time the Berkeley Y. W. C. T. U. also supported a free reading-room.

The Columbia Y of Tuolumne county makes a specialty of distributing temperance literature. Miss Meserole, superintendent of San Francisco county Y work, reported the Mission Y. W. C. T. U. as doing good work in coöperation with the Christian Endeavor societies, holding evangelistic meetings in the hospital. Hanford union reported thirty members, interesting programs at the meetings. Loyal Temperance Legion and social purity work. Fresno sent cheering news of work "all along the line." The state Prohibition convention meets in Fresno, May 24 and 25, and all the unions will no doubt receive a special impetus for work. Reduced railroad rates have been secured, and a convention six hundred and fifty strong is expected to "take the town," for a few days at least.

Ione Y. W. C. T. U. pays special attention to juvenile work. Selma union has had twenty-five business meetings, kept up a gospel temperance meeting and has raised over $100 for the work. San Rafael Y's socials and flourishing Loyal Temperance Legion prove their devotion to the cause. Sacramento has sixty-four members; has raised quite a sum of money for temperance work by entertainments and has actively engaged in flower mission work. The Santa Clara Y has raised $40 by the "District Skule" and is progressing well. Several of the unions which are doing good work were not represented.

Miss Cora Maxwell, of Fresno, sent a good paper on "Our Social Influence," portraying the great result from womanly principle, staunchly upheld. It was read by Miss Biddle, and Miss Kittie Kimberlin, of Santa Clara, rendered a vocal solo. "Cigarettes" was the subject of a radical paper by Miss Edith Leach, of the San Jose normal school, proving the disastrous effect of tobacco. "Evangelistic Work" was presented by Miss Emma Sutherland, of Oakland, who pleaded that all might more fully consecrate themselves to Christ.

Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm urged the claims of THE UNION SIGNAL and state paper. Miss Stafford discussed the wonderful power of "Our Music;" Miss Harrie Borland sang a charming selection; Miss Lilla Fales gave a practical essay, "Our Nation's Hope—the Children," full of good plans for Loyal Temperance Legions. Miss Sadie Eastwood, of San Jose, also urged "Juvenile Work" as the most important department of the Y. W. C. T. U.

The San Rafael Loyal Temperance Legion sang Miss Willard's inspiring song, "The Saloons Must Go." Mrs. Jessie Nevins rendered several beautiful instrumental solos. Miss Eastwood read a paper on "Heredity," written by Miss Harriet M. Smith, of the San Jose normal school. Miss Winnie Morris pleaded with deep earnestness for more love to God and to each other. Mrs. Stratton, of San Rafael, spoke well on "Woman's Influence," and prophesied woman's political equality with her brother, and that thus prohibition will come. Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm gave a bird's-eye view of the National and World's convention at Boston, told of the great success of the Demorest medal contests, and urged every Y. W. C. T. U. to conduct them. She also described the Florence Crittenton Mission in San Francisco, where thousands of erring girls have been redeemed, and presented the loving greetings of Mrs. S. G. Chamberlain, of Oakland, the mother of the Y's.

Miss Virna Woods, of Sacramento, read an original poem, "The Three Kings." Misses Grace McDonald, Maud Rodden and Etta Shaver sang charmingly a pretty trio and were encored. Miss Winnie Morris, in her president's address, touched every heart as she pleaded with all young women to demand purity, sobriety and honor in their young men friends. Dr. M. M. Cronemiller, of Sacramento, sent a good paper on "Why should Young Women Study Hygiene?" The committee on plans of work and resolutions brought in good reports, of which space forbids extended mention, and after the delegates softly singing "God be With You Till we Meet Again," the Y. W. C. T. U. conference adjourned till 1893.

The usual number of county conventions have been held, and to give only programs without reportorial comment would more than fill the space allowed the California news letter. Several speakers of national fame have wakened up many out of their apathetic sleep. Hon. A. G. Wolfenbarger, with his eloquence—logical, witty, pathetic, brilliant—and Prof. A. B. Huckins, with his sweet songs so full of rollicking humor, strong argument and pathos, have captured the state for the National Prohibition committee, much to Chairman Dickie's delight. Mr. Lou Beauchamp is doing valiant service in Southern California, and Francis Murphy, through whose persuasions millions of men have been rescued from the thralldom of drink, is stirring the North. Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, National organizer, has spoken with great enthusiasm at the Murphy meetings, and during May will be working in Nevada.

The Prohibition campaign is waxing warm in the state. The California Voice is enthusiastically "booming" the presidential ticket, "Demorest and Bidwell," while the Prohibitionist names John Bidwell for the first place on the ticket. No man is more loved in all California than this staunch Prohibitionist, who, with his genial wife, keeps open house in their lovely home for all temperance folk. A large delegation will attend the National Prohibition convention at Cincinnati.

California, north and south, has welcomed Miss Mary Allen West. Dr. Mary Wood Allen, lecturer of the National W. C. T. U., has given many addresses on health.

The Pacific coast woman's press association suffered an irreparable loss in the death of its founder and corresponding secretary, Mrs. Emily Tracy Y. Parkhurst. Though only twenty-nine years of age, she has accomplished the work of a lifetime and, in the organization of this association, left a memorial more enduring than bronze or granite. The Oakland union has sent $100 for the marble tablet in Willard Hall of the Temperance Temple. Grass Valley union has also secured the same recognition.

The next great event in California annals is the annual "School of Methods" at that charming resort, Pacific Grove, beside the sea where thousands spend their vacation. Mrs. B. Sturtevant-Peet, our energetic president, has prepared a fine program which, with reduced railroad rates, will induce even larger crowds to this temperance banquet at this prohibition resort.

M. G. C. EDHOLM,
State Reporter, Oakland.

COLORADO'S WORK.

Our county conventions are not the least part of our state work. Every month comes the news of some work done under the auspices of county organization. On April 14, the third annual convention of Arapahoe county was held in the Twenty-third Avenue Presbyterian church in Denver, the attendance being large and the exercises interesting and instructive throughout. Mrs. Woodbridge was present the entire day, and gave timely hints for work. Arapahoe county has twelve unions, five of which were organized by the county president, Mrs. Cassell, during the past year. There are also six Y. W. C. T. unions and ten active L. T. L.'s in the county. Five of the last having been organized during the year.

Mrs. Frances Belford, state superintendent of legislative work, presented a compilation of the laws of Colorado as related to W. C. T. U. work, copies of which may be had for a small sum by writing to Mrs. Belford at 1325 Evans street, Denver.

The report from the Cottage Home mentions the first death which has occurred in the Home since it was opened over five years ago. The addition to the building is about completed which will give six new rooms that are very much needed, and to furnish which a call for help is made. The Longmont Y's are furnishing one room and are not forgetting the pretty things as well as the necessary.

Our state president recently organized a union at Fort Morgan which is certainly a novel town. One of the oldest citizens said to Mrs. Higgins, "We know there is liquor drunk here, but I have never seen a drunken man on the streets of the town." The deeds to the lots allow no liquor to be sold for ten years from the time they were deeded, which extends two years from this time. A sentiment was growing toward high license, and the women thought best to anticipate the needed work. How much more effectual than to wait till the evil is established.

The northern district convention was held at Loveland on April 6 and 7. The delegates and visitors in attendance numbered eighty. Papers on the following subjects were read and discussed: "Social Purity," "Temperance Lessons in Sunday School," "Our Paper," "Mothers' Meetings," "A Neglected Duty of the Women of Colorado," "Cottage Home," and "Our Temperance Temple." The church was filled during the first session on Wednesday afternoon, and the Opera House filled to overflowing at the evening sessions. Mrs. Woodbridge's lecture on Thursday evening was highly appreciated. So many Y delegates were present that an impromptu conference of the Y's was held the first afternoon, and after Miss Spaulding's address on the work of the Y's in the evening, the result was a Y organization in Loveland.

Mrs. Higgins presented the work of preparing for the National Convention to be held in Denver during the coming fall. Denver is sending out her enthusiasm through the state. Mrs. Thompson conducted the question-box briefly and pointedly. Mrs. T. M. Wallace, who served both as president and corresponding secretary in providing for this convention, deserves the full appreciation of the district as she retires from part of her W. C. T. U. work for a much needed rest.

At our last annual convention a new district was formed in the western part of the state, and Mrs. S. B. Pickett was appointed president. The first convention of the district will be held at Montrose on May 13 to 15. The use of the Opera House has been granted free for the whole session. Fraternal delegates are invited from churches, Sunday-schools and temperance organizations in the fifteen counties included in the district. The W. C. T. U. of Colorado has such a broad extent of territory to cover that it seems to need double the amount of money and workers to accomplish the same results as in the eastern states.

ELSIE W. CHAMBERS,
Press Reporter, Colorado Springs.

GEORGIA.

"EXPERIENCE SOCIALS," AND OTHER GOOD NEWS.

"The W. C. T. U. of Demorest, the new prohibition city of northeast Georgia, sends greetings to the great army of W. C. T. U. workers. The account given in THE UNION SIGNAL of the experience social ('dollar' meeting) held in Evanston, enthused our union, and we determined to have one. Each member pledged herself to try to raise one dollar, by her own effort, to finish paying for our new hall. Such a meeting was held a few weeks since. It was one of the most interesting socials we have ever had. As the secretary called the roll of members, one after the other arose and related how she had earned the dollar she laid on the altar for the work so near and dear to her heart. Many of the experiences were amusing—all interesting. One lady had sold 'gingerbread horses,' and could not make enough to supply the demand. Another sold cakes. Many performed work they had usually hired done, and so earned a dollar. Some earned it by sewing; others by charging for little services usually done by the mother and wife as a free gift. One busy 'Martha' among our number was paid one dollar by her sister to lay aside all household duties and 'do nothing' for one day. She says it was really the hardest day's work she ever did. We interspersed our experiences with music. The evening passed too quickly. We raised thirty dollars, and derived much benefit in many ways. We have since received several donations toward our work from parties interested on that occasion. Why not have some more 'experience socials?'" thus writes Mrs. Safford, of Demorest.

The foregoing speaks for itself, and shows something of the spirit that actuates the women of Demorest, the new town founded on the same prohibition basis as Harvey, Harriman and others. From Augusta Mrs. W. C. Sibley writes: "We have tried the 'How I made my dollar' plan, and raised forty dollars. It is a good and pleasant way." Mrs. Sibley also writes, "Sam Jones has stirred us all up on the prohibition question. He did marvelous good here. One large liquor store gave up selling liquor; a saloon-keeper was converted, and there were many other remarkable results. Thousands heard him, and hundreds turned away from the meetings unable to get in."

At Tallapoosa, a beautiful new town in the western part of the state, there is a W. C. T. U. full of energy, and doing great good through its various departments of press work, flower mission, post-office crusade, wall-pockets for distribution of literature, and work among colored women. Connected with the latter is a Loyal Temperance Legion and a sewing society.

A few days ago there came to me from Summerville, a letter from the corresponding secretary, Mrs. V. A. Rush, filled with such news as gives us an idea of the meaning of those wondrous words, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." Besides the Loyal Temperance Legion of eighty members, whose meetings attract many visitors, the Summerville union is making a wholesome public sentiment through its press department, and its new work among the colored people. But individual effort is not neglected, and it is the reformatory work these good women are doing that brings happy tears as I read of it, and suggests to my own heart, 'Go and do likewise.'"

Just here, I want to say to our own Georgia women that many persons seem to labor under the misapprehension that the sole object of the W. C. T. U. is to "speak in public on the stage," or "to vote," or "to preach." Such persons, either wilfully or ignorantly, lose sight of the beautiful work, done so silently and unostentatiously, that even the nearest neighbors know little or nothing of it. Under this head comes much of the work in the departments of prison and jail visiting, flower mission, social purity, efforts for drinking men and their families, etc.

In looking over the reports that have recently been received by me, in my capacity of corresponding secretary, I am glad to be able to say there is a gratifying advance all along the line of the local unions, especially as to the work for children, and the press and literature departments. The educational centers are being looked after. Of these more will be said in the future.

Not long since, at Milledgeville, a protracted meeting was in progress in one of the churches. At these revival services the W. C. T. U. daily obtained signatures to the total abstinence pledge. A committee of eight of the ladies visited all the bar-rooms in the town, and prayed in each of them, asking the proprietors to close them up and attend church.

MISSOURI H. STOKES,
State Reporter, Decatur.

MICHIGAN.

ETCHINGS.

From Detroit comes the eighteenth report of the annual meeting of the Central union. Their membership is three hundred and thirty-three, with an L. T. L. of eighty members; public meetings have been held in fourteen churches with kindly help of the pastors. They have been indefatigable on many lines and feel their year's work not in vain, although their efforts proved fruitless to prohibit sale of beer on Belle Isle. The Woolfenden W. C. T. U., of Detroit, gave a Temperance Temple program; it was their first entertainment and was very successful. The Eastern W. C. T. U. keep their wall pockets filled with literature; they have two active L. T. L.'s under their care. The several unions are alert, planning wisely and well for the state convention, May 24–27.

The practical Y's, of Grand Rapids, held a social, gaining eight new members.

The president of the fourth district writes of county conventions and sends the very interesting program of a Demorest medal contest, held on the last evening of the Van Buren county convention, Cora Bassett taking the medal. The Fair Grove W. C. T. U. held an Old Folks' silver medal contest, eight ladies and one gentleman, all over forty years of age, took part. The gentleman took the prize, a medal provided by the contestants.

The Kalamazoo county convention was held at Climax, and was visited by a delegation of Y's from an adjoining town accompanied by five of their honorary members. During the discussion of franchise it was argued that no good women would vote. Mrs. Hodgman replied that she was enrolling clerk in Kansas senate at the time the bill for municipal suffrage for women was passed; it was her privilege to record that bill, and she was also witness to the fact that many of the best women, able, cultured leaders in every good work, registered and voted.

Mrs. Bradley, of Hudson, our alert state superintendent of narcotics, reports good work in her department.

The May Michigan Union is out with a detailed plan of the state convention. Mrs. Wheeler, our beloved corresponding secretary, lays down the work for awhile on account of removal from the state. Grand Rapids, her home, through their unions did her honor in a social gathering. Resolutions of appreciation of her rounded life, as editor, corresponding secretary of the state W. C. T. U., and president of the woman's home and hospital, were passed.

The sixth district convention met at North Lansing, called by Lathrap union. The Methodist church was the place. Loving and tasteful hands made the platform a bower of beauty; pictures of Miss Willard and the Temple, banners of the district, the local unions, and the banner of Dewitt daughters of temperance, first flung to the breeze in 1852, were all displayed. All of the general officers and county presidents were present. The papers were all good. Mrs. Lathrap led the memorial service and Miss Griswold recited an original poem. Preceding the election of officers, all of whom were re-elected, Mrs. D. M. Garner gave her annual address in her usual strong, terse, logical style. The press report by Mrs. H. N. Jennings was very fine.

The evening programs were excellent. Addresses of welcome were responded to by Mrs. Knapp, of Howell, with grace and ability. A paper by Mrs. Curtis, on the W. C. T. U. as an educator for women was especially fine. On the second evening Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap spoke upon the political situation. The most exquisite music was rendered by the boys of the reform school, closing with a recitation, "The Vagabond," by Mr. D. M. Garner. The third evening called forth music by the blind school orchestra, an original poem by the secretary, a very studied paper on "The present status of the temperance reform," by Mrs. Richmond, of Lansing, closing with one of Rollo Kirk Bryan's magical chalk talks. This convention was held in the banner county of the district, which sent seventeen delegates.

The fifth district convention was held at Sparta. There were reports of new unions which gave evidence not only of enduring vitality but of the desire of many others to embark in this warfare against a common enemy. Bountiful provision was made for physical wants, delightful music for the moral and esthetic, evening lectures for the community in the interests of temperance, Mary T. Lathrap speaking the last evening upon gospel politics, an excellent paper by Mrs. Coon, subject, "The Mothers of to-day," also others upon kindergarten, department of mercy, our foreign citizens, awakened both thought and discussion. THE UNION SIGNAL was boomed as usual; Temple stock went up also under the stirring talk of the president. Our state paper received a score of new subscribers.

Barry county convention is reported as full of interest; they are fortunate in having a president, Mrs. R. A. Bailey, who is a platform speaker, so that as Mrs. Baxter missed the train the audience was not without a speaker for the evening.

The seventh annual meeting of Willard union, Detroit, was held in Fraternity Hall, with musical and literary program, and the evening's receipts were $125.40. The report of the year's work was most satisfactory. Their membership is 242. There is also a Willard union at Saginaw, just entering its second year. Its members are mostly young, full of courage and temperance sentiment, and expect great things for the year to come. I close my letter with a verse on Kalamazoo county program.

In spite of slander and mistrust,
Or burdens great, and hard to bear,
To that alone that's right and just
Put thou thy hand and keep it there.

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON,
State Reporter, Flint.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A NEW union of eighteen members has been organized at Clay City, Ind.

MRS. EMMA PRESTON, 40 Linden avenue, Youngstown, Ohio, has been appointed temporary treasurer of second district Ohio W. C. T. U.

THE beautiful little city of Sparta, Wis., has again carried "no-license," a fact which causes the hearts of the good white-ribboners there to rejoice.

MRS. LOUISE B. KNOX is a good W. C. T. U. worker, who has removed from her home in Grand Rapids, Mich., to Georgetown, S. C. Good news for the Palmetto state.

THE annual convention of Champaign county, Ill., W. C. T. U. meets May 19 and 20 at Pesotum. Mrs. L. S. Rounds, state president, delivers the address upon the opening night.

HOWARD, Minn., W. C. T. U., in response to the suggestion in THE UNION SIGNAL, arranged for a public meeting in behalf of the starving Russians, securing a contribution of twenty-nine dollars.

THE members of the W. C. T. U. of Gouverneur, N. Y., held an enjoyable parlor meeting not long ago, at which the young ladies gave such valuable aid that the question was asked, "Can we not have a Y. W. C. T. U.?"

MR. AXEL GUSTAFSON, the well-known writer, desires to return thanks to the various secretaries of the W. C. T. U. who have most kindly supplied him with information regarding the liquor legislation in their respective states.

A PEOPLE'S Prohibition church is to be erected at Newburgh, N. Y. Every prohibition voter, club and earnest W. C. T. U. woman is invited to place a brick in this structure, by sending a contribution to the pastor, Rev. Edward A. Tucker.

MRS. EMILY PITT STEVENS has entered upon a month's work in Nevada, speaking at Reno, May 8-13; Carson, 15-18; Gold Hill, 19, 20; Virginia City, 22-24; Mason Valley, 25, 26; Sheridan, 27; Genoa, 27-30; Winnemucca, June, 1-3; Elko, 5-7.

THE second district, Missouri W. C. T. U. deeply regrets the removal of Mrs. Ida B. Cole to Dwight, Ill., whither her husband goes to take charge of a Congregational church. Mrs. M. L. Williams, of Chillicothe, has been appointed president in her place.

MRS. KATHERINE L. STEVENSON, corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. of Massachusetts, has been added to the special list of lecturers on purity. Mrs. Stevenson has a rare and delicate touch with pen and voice and can influence every audience that she addresses.

MRS. M. G. C. EDHOLM, of Oakland, Cal., press superintendent for the W. C. T. U. of that state, and THE UNION SIGNAL reporter, is especially fitted for and devoted to the work in which she is engaged.

CALL FOR STATE CONVENTION.

The tenth annual convention of West Virginia W. C. T. U. is to be held in Romney, June 14, 15 and 16. A meeting of the executive committee (general officers and presidents of organized districts) will be held at 7:30 p. m., Monday, June 13; also at nine a. m., Friday, June 17. It is hoped the board of superintendents can arrange to meet some time during the convention. The convention will be composed of the executive committee, state superintendents, one delegate at large from each organized district, three from each union and one for every twenty paying members for which auxiliary dues have been paid into the state treasury during the year. All dues should be paid to the state treasurer, and delegates elected not later than June 1. All members of convention should write Mrs. Mary Cartwright, Wheeling, for railroad rates. Names of delegates are to be sent to Mrs. Belle Harmison, Romney. Vice-presidents and state superintendents who cannot attend the annual meeting please send reports to Jennie Pickens, Quiet Dell. Evening meetings will be addressed by Rev. Anna Shaw, Miss Lydia Newcomb, and Mrs. M. M. Love. The unions will please observe Sunday, June 12, as a day of prayer for God's blessing on our meeting and the work of the coming year. "Be ye strong therefore and let not your hands be weak; for your work shall be rewarded."

MRS. JENNIE SISSON, Pres.
MRS. R. L. KENDALL, Vice-Pres.
MRS. MARY CARTWRIGHT, Cor. Sec.
MISS JENNIE PICKENS, Rec. Sec.
MRS. M. C. PARSONS, Treas.

Official Communications.

DEPARTMENT OF "WORK AMONG MINERS."

DEAR SISTERS:—There are 636,419 persons employed in the mines of the United States representing 3,000,000 of our population and over 400,000 ballots, every one of which is potent in shaping the affairs of our government. Do you not feel the importance of reaching these men, who, to a great extent are by their environment isolated from Christian association, and who so much need the salvation of Christ that they may have power to become the sons of God and that their homes may become places of attraction, safety and rest? The department of work among miners is growing steadily and surely. Already nine states have added this department to their state work, and have efficient superintendents who are pushing the work; and several other states are only waiting until the time of their executive meeting to present this work and recommend its adoption. I have sent circular letters accompanied with special and direct appeal for the adoption of this department to the president of every state and territory.

In June I will send to the state superintendents, blanks for reports to be filled out and returned to me as early as September 15. I send them this early that you may know what kind of a report is expected.

Please note. We have published, and have now on sale at the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago, Ill., two department leaflets, Nos. 16 and 17, specially designed for distribution among unions. Send for them now in large quantities. We hope soon to publish two more, one from the heart and pen of John G. Woolley. We urge the use of these leaflets in your work. Make us know there is a demand for them, and we will soon be able to furnish others.

I desire that every state superintendent of this work will write to me an account of her work and what is needed to make it more vigorous and efficient. Will not every state and territory add this department? I also desire that every local superintendent in Illinois will communicate with me now. Yours,

MRS. W. T. ENGLISH,
Nat. Supt. Work Among Miners, Quincy, Ill.

WORD FROM JENNIE CASSEDAY.

MY DEAR MISSIONERS:—I expect (D. V.) to be taken to Rest Cottage on May 14th, and I want to pay you a little good-by visit before I go. It seems unnecessary as I am away from you here as much as there, but these few miles which can be traveled in three-quarters of an hour, are a long journey to me, as formidable to my helplessness as an ocean voyage would be to you. I am to have all sorts of comfortable ways and means provided to make the going as easy as possible. The railroad and the street car line are placed at my service, and a very careful engineer over a special train, with a special schedule, etc., as complimentary gifts. One of my elderly friends was in my room the day I received the letter from the railroad official and said, "I am afraid, Jennie, you will have a low seat when you get to Heaven, you are having so many of your good things in this world." Of course she jested, for she realizes, as I do, that "every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

Many of my friends seriously oppose my trying to carry on that work this summer; they say that I am scarcely recovered from last year's exertions, but I feel, again, the call to go, and I think it will not be so hard as it was before, because we are to profit by the experiences gained last summer. I have never known a work to take such a hold upon our people or seen such coöperation as we have now. "The girls" do not want to go without me and I think I see my duty clearly. I am not allowing myself to think of the sufferings of the trip, nor of any other thing than the Master's call. While, of course, I would not consider going if I thought it would shorten my life or my usefulness, for that would be wrong, I do feel that such a blessed service as can be given there is worth all it takes, and one would be willing to give, even of life, to be privileged to see such results as this winter's livings have shown.

I wish I had strength to tell you of just one circle of King's Daughters which was formed at Rest Cottage last August. I must not allow myself to begin to tell it through, as I am not able to-day to write much. I am in a low state of physical health now, my dear comrades, and it has been a question with me whether I ought not to resign my National work in favor of some one who can push it with more vigor, but I have not the generosity to do that, and I am putting such a thought out of my mind. I should have to resign it to God since He it is who gave it to me, and you know how out of the question that would be. He gave it to me when I was very feeble, and now that I am in more declining health, I can claim the promise of His strength made perfect in weakness. My good doctor thinks my cough and the pain in the side will get better when I once reach Rest Cottage, with its piney, spice-laden atmosphere, and am able to get rested a little. . . . . .

I take this opportunity of explaining why I have not written personal letters to my state superintendents, and to urge you all to put your arms underneath the flower mission department, and to give more than usual effort to carry out its plans. I will not be able to write again before Prison Day, but will preserve my strength for letters to the prisoners.

I do not need to introduce any new plan because your department grows of itself, and every line of work may be developed from it. I thank God for your faithfulness and I rest calmly on your steadfastness. Please begin at once to prepare for Prison Day. Miss Ferguson is ready for your orders for text-cards, and we both hope that you will send in your calls as early as you possibly can. The prices are the same as in previous years, $1.25 per thousand, for small cards, and $2.50 per thousand for larger size. I am anxious to have you use my texts because it gives me a closer touch with the workers and the work. Miss Ferguson's address is, Miss Gertrude Ferguson, 3208 Rudd Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

It will give me great pleasure to receive letters from you, and to keep ourselves in personal living touch. Let us look up into God's face and say I am ready, Father, for whatever Thou givest me to do, and I am privileged to be called to serve any where Thou desirest for me.

Most tenderly and lovingly, your little sick sister,
Sick-bed, May 6. JENNIE CASSEDAY.

THE OPPORTUNE TIME.

Would you have the children, the future men and women of your community, educated to intelligent total abstinence from alcohol and kindred narcotics, now is the time to work for it. From April to the first of July, the topics to be pursued, the course of study, and the text-books for the coming year will be officially considered by the majority of school boards of this country. Now, therefore, is preëminently the time to move for the adoption of the indorsed physiologies and course of study in scientific temperance where this has not been already secured, so that it may be incorporated in the full course and all be ready to go into operation in the Fall.

Four things are absolutely essential to enforcement of a temperance education law:

1. Indorsed text-books adapted to grade in the hands of all pupils using text-books in such other studies as geography, or arithmetic, with oral lessons in the case of pupils unable to read.

2. A course of study in this branch, with not less than three lessons per week for fourteen weeks of each school year below the second year of the High School, the lessons to be taught according to the best modern methods of teaching other branches.

3. The same examinations or tests for promotion in this as in other studies.

4. The interested teacher.

In a large majority of cases, where we have the first three, we shall have the last; for the teachers of this country, as a whole, are ready to do their part, if they are given anything to do it with. Our new co-worker's letter for 1892, the annual supplement to our national plan of work and the circulars to which it refers, tells the temperance worker just how to secure these four essentials. Send to us for these, and, if at any point, the need is not covered by their suggestions, please write us.

MARY H. HUNT,
55 Central Ave., Hyde Park, Mass.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

BE SURE "GOOD SENSE"

is stamped on your waist, there are many imitations but no equals

SENSIBLE WOMEN

all want FERRIS'

GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAISTS.

Best for Health, Economy and Beauty

BUTTONS at front instead of CLASPS. Clamp Buckle at hip for Hose supporters. Tape-fastened Buttons—won't pull off. Cord-Edge Button Holes—wont wear out.

FIT ALL AGES—Infants to Adults. Short and long waist. Made in

FAST BLACK, drab and white. Send for circular.

FERRIS BROS.

Manufr's and Patentees.

341 Broadway, N. Y.

MARSHALL FIELD & CO., Chicago, Wholesale Western Agents.

For Sale by ALL LEADING RETAILERS.

Publisher's Notes.

How to Attain it.

OBJECT.

The first object of the W. C. T. U., as expressed in its constitution, national, state, district, county, local, is "to educate public sentiment." This should always be kept in mind, and a realization of the fact that anything which assists in educating public sentiment is legitimate W. C. T. U. work. Nothing will help more than reading, in the quiet of home life, books which have a right influence, and those who help to place such books in the homes of the nation are sowing the seed which, germinating, will make the world fairer, better, happier. We have such

BOOKS,

And are ready to do all we can to bring about so grand a result. But your help is needed—your feet, your voice—to reach those we cannot reach.

WHO CAN MEASURE

What it will mean to have "Childhood, Its Care and Culture," read by mothers generally, who there may learn valuable lessons to aid in the proper rearing of their children; or what great growth might come to the cause of the W. C. T. U. if

GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS

Should be placed in homes not yet reached by the influence of the organization. In reading the narration of Miss Willard's unfolding, many have been helped to a deeper consecration and many have allied themselves with the great cause the advocacy of which seems to be the culmination of her life work. Then of great interest to those who need to learn what towns and cities, consequently states and nations, as individuals, grow in the direction of tendencies which mark their origin will be

A CLASSIC TOWN,

Miss Willard's latest book. This should be in the hands of every W. C. T. U. woman, every Christian and certainly every Methodist. Of especial interest to Y's and aspiring young women generally, will be the story of how Miss Ames left the farm for the editorial sanctum, and what happened on the way, as narrated in

A YOUNG WOMAN JOURNALIST,

These are needed in every community. You need them. We can supply them. Agents wanted. For prices address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

For Flower Mission Day.

THE UNION SIGNAL, of June 2d, will be a special edition for use of the W. C. T. U. on Flower Mission day. Its contents will be specially prepared for the purpose. The tens of thousands of "shut-ins," who will be remembered by the unions on June 9th, and receive from members of the organization a bouquet and a card containing a text, etc., would value the gift of a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL. To many it might carry hope not known for years; inspiration which might lift the sinner to a purer life and the saint nearer to God. Let every inmate of jail or hospital, every sufferer in mind or body confined as a result of physical or moral infirmities, have one opportunity to read THE UNION SIGNAL.

To enable you to carry out this plan, we have determined to offer extra copies, if ordered, before June 1st, so that proper provision for filling orders can be made, at the exceedingly low rate of

One Dollar per 100.

This offer is made as the contribution of the W. T. P. A. to the interest of Flower Mission Day.

Remember to send your orders by June 1s, if you desire these rates. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

Good!

Success crowned the efforts of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and its patrons in the effort to place the Sunday-school lesson supplement to The Young Crusader in the hands of many Sunday-school children. The total circulation was the largest ever secured and reached 178,000. May the divine blessing accompany each copy! We give this item of information for the encouragement of workers everywhere, and to allow us the opportunity to say that now is the time to lay plans so that this number may be doubled in September. We will do our part, and will aid you by suggestions if you desire it.

Will state superintendents of temperance work in Sunday-schools do all in their power to accomplish this?

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

The Wonder of the World.

The coming World's Exposition in Chicago will outdo anything in modern history. The partially completed buildings are exciting the greatest admiration, and thousands of people are feeling well repaid for spending a few hours—which should be at least a day—and twenty-five cents for admission to the grounds, by the privilege of seeing for themselves the wonderful structures not yet complete.

You are too far away to enjoy this privilege. But we offer you the next best thing—the opportunity to see all the buildings pictured; complete. Forty-four pages, 12x15 inches in size, devoted to World's Fair interests, and giving much information that could not be secured on the grounds. For full description see page 15 of this paper. You will learn there, too, that you can have a copy of this handsome book if you send five new subscribers, at $1 each, to THE UNION SIGNAL, or in connection with your own subscription, both THE UNION SIGNAL one year and the Columbus Memorial for $1.30.

You want it! You will enjoy it! Your children will learn much from it!

Send for it!

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

For cards for Flower Mission work, send without delay to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

SEE HERE!

JUST THE THING FOR YOUR PUBLIC MEETINGS

—IS—

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS

With Its Stirring Music.

IT WILL HELP IMMENSELY.

Young People Like It.

The Children Enjoy It.

The Old Folks are Interested

Price, 35c. Per Copy.

Send for sample to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
161 LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

Wall Paper Retailed. Good Paper 3c. Gold Paper 5c. Send 10c for postage on samples, and his guide "How to Paper" will be sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 186-188 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

HOLD OUT YOUR HAND

That's the natural thing to do when you need help. When your hand is extended toward us, we place in it, Free, our 200 page book. Every one is apt to be interested in the description of the means by which a friend has had his health restored. This book is just that—500 times multiplied; all told in the very words of real and reliable folks; people with "a local habitation and a name."

One other thing; this book is not of interest to those only who feel that their case is serious; it contains the witness of many over-taxed and run-down people to the fact that Drs. Starkey & Palen's COMPOUND OXYGEN has been to them the one thing needful to put them on the right side of the line of health and happiness.

Will you hold out your hand? Help is yours for the asking.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. 58 Church St., Toronto, Canada.

"Immediate Attention."

PAINTERS CARPENTERS AND MECHANICS WANTED

FIFTY HOUSES WANTED

LADIES WANTED

AT ONCE—in the Factories at Harvey; must be Temperance Men who can come to live and be citizens. We have a continual demand for workmen in this growing town, where nearly $5,000,000.00 has already been invested in manufacturing industries, and where millions more are coming.

AT ONCE—in Harvey—to house the families of men who work in the factories, who are now obliged to go to other towns to live. This is an opportunity for the investment of money seldom offered.

To build and run boarding-houses for the accommodation of the workmen who have no homes.

Write us immediately for full information in regard to the above, or come at once and investigate, We have never failed to get work for all who have purchased property of us.

WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO., 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

P. S.—We will pay the actual Railroad fare of all who come from their homes to Chicago, to he amount of and not exceeding 2 1-2 per cent of what they purchase of us while here.

To the Cincinnati Convention via the B. & O.

Delegates and others attending the Cincinnati Prohibition Convention in June, are requested, before choosing their route from any point, East, West, North or South, to communicate with any of the following agents of the B. & O., who will cheerfully supply all information relative to the lowest rates obtainable, the most picturesque, quickest and safest route, and who will make special arrangements for the transportation of special parties in special cars: L. S. ALLEN, the Rookery, Chicago: W. E. REPPENT, Columbus; O. P. MCCARTY, Grand Central Station, Cincinnati; C. P. CRAIG, 415 Broadway, New York; A. J. SIMMONS, 411 Washington Street, Boston; C. R. MACKENZIE, 833 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. B. F. BOND, Baltimore; S. B. HEGE, Washington. Pullman accommodations. Two Vestibuled Limited Express trains daily between Cincinnati and the East. Quickest and best train service to Cincinnati from Columbus. The B. & O. is the most attractive route all the year around between Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati and the East.

To Saratoga and New York.

All those who contemplate going to New York or to Saratoga Springs at the time of the great meetings of the Christian Endeavor and the National Educational Association, taking advantage of the reduced rates made to those points, should not fail to consult the beautiful illustrated circulars upon the subject issued by the Michigan Central, the Niagara Falls Route. Address O. W. Ruggles, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

A Choice List of Summer Resorts.

In the Lake regions of Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa and the two Dakotas, there are hundreds of charming localities pre-eminently fitted for summer homes. Among the following selected list are names familiar to many of our readers as the perfection of Northern summer resorts. Nearly all of the Wisconsin points of interest are within a short distance from Chicago or Milwaukee, and none of them are so far away from the "busy marts of civilization" that they cannot be reached in a few hours of travel, by frequent trains, over the finest roads in the Northwest—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, and Milwaukee & Northern Railroad.

Oconomowoc, Wis.	Clear Lake, Iowa.
Minocqua, Wis.	Lakes Okoboji, Iowa.
Waukesha, Wis.	Spirit Lake, Iowa.
Palmyra, Wis.	Frontenac, Minn.
Tomahawk Lakes, Wis.	Lake Minnetonka, Minn.
Lakeside, Wis.	Ortonville, Minn.
Kilbourn City, Wis (Dells of the Wisconsin.)	Prior Lake, Minn.
	White Bear Lake, Minn.
	Beaver Dam, Wis.
Lake Madison, So Dak	Madison, Wis.
Delavan, Wis.	Big Stone Lake, So. Dak.
Sparta, Wis.	Pewaukee, Wis.
Elkhart Lake, Wis.	Wausaukee, Wis.
Ontonagon, Mich.	Marquette, Mich.

For detailed information, apply to any coupon ticket agent, or send stamp for a free illustrated tourist folder, to Geo. H. Heafford, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

CHICAGO INVESTMENTS Before risking your money write to me for the facts about values. Address MRS. L. J. LANPHERE with stamps 211 Wabash Ave. Highest references. Chicago, Ill.

A New Pansy.

Mr. F. B. Mills, whose advertisements of seeds have made him so well known, has a new offer in this issue, which every lover of flowers (and who does not love them?) should read carefully. The Alice Pansies (named by Mrs. Harrison) have created a sensation; their beauty is beyond description; are offered at a very low price. Then, too, you might grow a three-inch blossom and get $500. Mr. Mills' reliability is vouched for by the leading journals in the country.

Excellent Service.

At 5:45 P. M. The "Fast Train" leave Chicago via the Wisconsin Central Lines for St. Paul, Minneapolis, Ashland, Duluth and the Irontowns, composed of Through Pullman Vestibuled Sleepers to Chippewa Falls and Eau Claire, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Ashland and Duluth, making close connections at Union Depot, St. Paul, with the new train which has just been placed in service via the Northern Pacific Railroad to the Pacific Coast, leaving St. Paul daily at 9:00 A. M.

At 10:45 P. M. The "Pacific Express" leaves Chicago for the Pacific Coast via the Wisconsin Central and Northern Pacific Lines, composed of Pullman Vestibuled Drawing-Room and Tourist Sleepers, running through to Portland, Ore., and Tacoma, Wash., without change.

For tickets, time-tables, berth reservations, etc., apply to City Ticket Office, 205 South Clars Street, Chicago, Ill., or to JAS. C. POND, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Our Children.

PIPPIN HILL—A DIALOGUE.

BY MARY L. WYATT.

CHARACTERS:—A large boy and small girl. Fancy costumes add to the effect.

(Boy enters on right, walks to the front of platform. To audience.)

As I was going up Pippin Hill,
Pippin Hill was dirty,
I met a miss of summers ten,
And I a man of thirty.

(Girl enters on left; boy turns to her.)

Were you that pretty little miss,
Who dropped the courtesy sweet,
What was the paper in your hand
You held as we did meet?

Girl.— Oh! that was our good temperance pledge
And I had been to see, sir,
If any men on Pippin Hill
Would sign this pledge for me, sir.
Of course you know that Pippin Hill
Has many a vile saloon, sir,
I walked about till I was tired
From morning until noon, sir.

Boy.— Oh! yes, I know it very well,
I've been there quite too often,
But still I think I'm not so hard
But that my heart could soften.
But Pippin Hill's no place for you,
To show your sweet young face,
I wonder you can care for men
Who live in such disgrace.

Girl.— I think about their children dear
And poor, heart-broken wives, sir,
And think if they would sign the pledge
They'd lead far better lives, sir.

(Presents paper and pencil to him.)

Now won't you kindly write your name
Upon that line to-day, sir,
And promise not to smoke nor drink
And keep the pledge alway, sir?

Boy.— My little miss, my pretty miss
Blessings light upon you,
If I had half a crown a day
I'd spend it all upon you.

(Takes paper and pencil.)

Yes, I will sign your temperance pledge
You ask so very sweetly,
And never drink, nor smoke, nor swear,
But be reformed completely.

Girl.— Oh! you are very kind, indeed
To give so prompt an answer,
I think you're very good, I'm sure
And quite a noble man, sir.
Now won't you try and help us make
Some prohibition laws, sir?
Don't spend a half a crown on me,
But spend it on the cause, sir. [Exeunt.]

West Medford, Mass.

A LITTLE HEROINE.*

I met her on the cars, on the way home from the dusty city to a little suburban town. In order that you may better appreciate her true heroism, I will begin as I like all stories to begin, with the heroine herself.

She was just fifteen, tall and slender, with nothing about her to attract particular attention, excepting her face, which though plain, was earnest and thoughtful. Her eyes were touching in their expression of silent sorrow and yearning. While I was watching her, she turned in the seat, and in a sweet, gentle manner, without a trace of sadness, began a lively conversation with a poorly-dressed man near by.

My father, who was with me, recognized the man and spoke to him. He said it was Mr. Carton, who lived in the little town to which we were just moving, and whom father had known since babyhood. He was an uneducated man, "wise in his own conceit," cruel and profane, as well as ill-mannered in his family. I had heard many instances of his meanness, such as locking up his children's clothing and compelling them to appear in public in old and faded garments, and dressing himself as shabbily as possible whenever he thought it would mortify them.

I soon after became well acquainted with Elita Carton. I loved her very dearly, and we two, being about the same age, became close friends. I never could understand how she bore so uncomplainingly all the trials that fell to her lot. I had a brother, two years my senior, who took an interest in Lita, as he did in everything that interested me. We went out almost daily on horse-back, Lita often accompanying us on her pony.

One day—I shall never forget it—we had had a fine time cantering along pleasant roads for several hours, then going home with Lita as she had some work to do. When we reached her house our horses seemed so tired that she asked us to stop and rest them and ourselves, so we went in.

Lita's father no sooner saw her than he began scolding and cursing, and told her he wanted her to understand he did not intend to have his daughter "traipsing around the country." "And hereafter," he said, "if you cannot go out alone, you can remain at home."

I could have cried, I felt so sorry for my friend, but she never answered a word. She turned pale and I saw her lips moving as if she were whispering a prayer for help. As soon as we could, we left. I fancy I can see the great tears that stood in her eyes as I kissed her good-bye. After that, Lita never went riding with us, or came to see us, until her father died about two years later. But we wrote long letters to each other, and hid them under a rock near our favorite place by the brook.

I remember once, after her father's death, when she came to see me, that I had just received a present of a lovely little black-and-tan dog. The minute she caught sight of him, she caught him up in her arms and caressed him, her eyes filling with tears. I asked her if she loved dogs so much, why she did not have one. She said she had one once but it died "just before I first met you."

Lita was so unselfish and kind that everybody loved her. When she died, at the age of twenty, having done more good than one could reckon, it seemed as if the whole town had lost a friend and each home was less bright.

It was my fortune to become the owner of her diary. A few extracts will show how hard it must have been for her to show to the world her smiles and sunny happiness and keep her sorrows and troubles to herself, that she, "being strong, might bear the infirmities of the weak."

I must confess that the following passage was a surprise to me and a sad one. I then understood better why she had loved my dog so much and hugged him so closely.

"Oh, Gypsy! Gypsy! How could father be so cruel! You did nothing. If I angered him why couldn't he have kicked me, and not wreaked his vengeance on a poor, little innocent dog. If you had to die why should I be the cause of it? I did not imagine that my actions could harm you, much less cause your death. Why must my best friend be taken from me! You were the one living thing to whom I could confide all my trials; now you are gone, I must bury my sorrows in my own breast. All the people I know have so many cares of their own, I cannot add to them by relating my troubles."

My poor friend! She hid her sorrows so deep no human eye could find them. Many and many a burden had she lifted from my shoulders, when she was nigh fainting with her own. She gave us her smiles, and hopes and joys, and we gave her our cares and fears and griefs. Let us be thankful she has gone to the Land of the Blessed, where there is no more sorrow.

*A true story, written by a little girl

"LEND A HAND."

A very small boy was crossing Lafayette Square, the most beautiful of Washington's parks, one Sunday morning. He wore the blue uniform of the district messenger boys, and was lugging with both hands a basket containing some potted palms and roses, which, doubtless, were to decorate a rich dinner table. He was a pathetic figure, that little chap, and every one in the park was noticing him. It was such a warm morning for December, and the energy which he might have had, if there had been snow on the ground, became languor and listlessness. He at last set the big basket down and looked at it, helplessly.

"Tired out are you, my boy?" came a friendly voice from behind him and the messenger glanced up at a distinguished looking man.

"Tired out?" the question was repeated.

"Yes, sir."

"Have you to go far?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I am going your way, I can help you a bit," and the gentleman picked up the basket and carried it for some distance, the little chap trudging at his side. As they walked along, the small boy grew confidential, told who he was and where he lived and finally, in a burst of good comradeship, asked his companion where he lived.

"Just across the street from where I met you," was the answer, as the gentleman slipped a coin in the boy's hand, "in that white house opposite Lafayette Park." For it was the occupant of the White House, the President of the United States, who was carrying the flower-boy's basket.—Wide Awake.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A dear little Missouri maiden in a letter this week says that the heading to our column "looks so nice with Aunt Jane in the middle and the boys and girls around her" that she would like to "know the charge" to come into the circle; and then adds that she is a temperance girl! Hold out your hands, children, and let us give her and every temperance boy and girl, (and every one who wants to be,) the warmest kind of a welcome. Our Cozy Corner is free to all of these and to their friends. Look out next week for a letter from an "uncle" who is much interested in you all. You will enjoy it, I know, as much as did

Aunt Jane

OOZY COYNER LETTERS.

I think I have the right answer to the puzzles. I have made up some which you may publish if you wish.

P. S.—I have got about twenty to sign the pledge.

NELLIE MAY ROGERS.

Why not have postscripts like this on every Cozy Corner letter, boys and girls? Thank you, Nellie, for the puzzles. Your answers were right.

We have temperance exercises in our Sabbath-school once a month, and at our last concert we had the "Riddle" which appeared on the children's page February 11. I recited the verses and the band (there are over twenty in our band) sang out the answer, "Cold Water." Of course it was all arranged beforehand. The grown folks said it was "cute." FLORENCE E. CARTLAND.

East Parsonsfield, Me.

Wouldn't the above be a good idea for other temperance bands?

I think the name chosen for our corner is very nice. I enjoy the corner very much and like to make out the puzzles. One of your nieces.

Beatrice, Neb. JOSIE E. COBBEY.

Welcome, little niece.

I have always liked to have mother read the stories on the children's page to me, but now I am learning to read them to myself. And now I am so glad you have made this corner. I am eight years old and my name is

Chicago, Ill. HARRY MOSHIEM CRAIG.

You are getting a big boy now, Harry. Have you signed our temperance pledge?

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

43.

PI.

Beltmer ngik oollcha ew lashl rgwo pu.

DOLLIE GOODRICH.

44.

DIAMOND.

*
* * *
* * * * *
* * *
*

1. A letter from Charles. 2. The end. 3. Something that makes drunkards. 4. To write. 5. A consonant.

RUTH TAYLOR.

45.

HIDDEN NAMES OF FAMOUS MEN.

1. See, Lu, there is Fanny!
2. Will, I am penniless.
3. What a pitiful tone!
4. Aubry anticipates a visit.
5. I. G. Swan, a maker of wagons.
6. The sled is on the box. ELVA G. WILCOX.

Answers in three weeks. Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, corner Monroe and LaSalle streets, Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED APRIL 28.

34. Lady Henry Somerset. I Cor. 13: 4, I Cor. 13: 4, I Cor. 13: 5, I Cor. 13: 5, I Cor. 13: 7, I Cor. 13: 7, I Cor. 13: 8, I Cor. 13: 6, Prov. 31: 20, Prov. 31: 25, Psa. 91: 8, Prov. 31: 29, Prov. 17: 7, I Cor. 13: 6, Prov. 31: 26, I Tim. 4: 12, Titus 4: 22.

35.

A
A L E
R A C E S
A L C O H O L
A C H E S
W O E
L

36. Scarf, car; shiver, hive; growl, row; scrape, crape; ghost, host.

Correct answers: Edith Starbuck; Maud Manville; Robin Bishop; Dolly Goodrich; Justina Babb; Royal J. Davis; Leila Williams; Lora Goldman; Etta Krymer.

Kernels.

"There is a time to laugh."—SOLOMON.

IT takes two to make a quarrel, but one can make peace.

THE flighty purpose never is o'ertook
Unless the deed go with it.

PARIS has 25,000 beer saloons. No wonder the Prussians captured Paris.

"THAT'S a very musical bird," said the groceryman, pointing to an ant that was running up and down the scales.

KNOWLEDGE is good, and light is good, yet man perishes in seeking knowledge, and moths perish in seeking light.

A PARISIAN has been called to England to claim an estate valued at £500,000. He will probably have to borrow money to get home.

The memory of a kindly word
For long gone by,
The fragrance of a faded flower,
Sent lovingly,
The gleaming of a sudden smile
Or sudden tear,
The warmer pressure of the hand,
The tone of cheer,
The hush that means "I cannot speak,
But I have heard!"
The note that only bears a verse
From God's own word—
Such tiny things we hardly count
As ministry;
The givers deeming they have shown
Scant sympathy;
But, when the heart is overwrought,
Oh, who can tell
The power of such tiny things
To make it well?

—Havergal.

THE Boston Transcript has an original way of putting it: "Do not be too severe in your condemnation. Bear with the cigarette smoker. He cannot possibly live long."

"MY son," said a fond father to his little boy, whom he had been punishing by the use of the rod for the first time; "my son, I hope this has taught you a lesson."

"Yes, pa," the little boy sobbingly replied; "it's taught me that it is better to give than to receive."

THERE are three sorts of Christians—mission, anti-mission and omission Christians.

SOME people object to mutual admiration societies, but I like them better than mutual detraction societies.

LITTLE three-year-old Helen had been put to bed, but soon there was a call, "Mamma, I don't like it up here alone." So I carried up her doll, Happy. She cuddled it in her arms, and I went down again. By and by the same call, "Mamma, I don't want to be alone with Happy." As I had never staid with her till she slept, and it was very inconvenient then, I ran up hastily and said, "Helen, you have Happy in your arms, and papa and mamma down stairs, and God all about you, watching over you with His love. You must be a good girl and go to sleep." "Is God really here?" "Yes, really." So she laid her cheek in her hand and prepared to fall asleep, and I went down a second time. In a few minutes I heard again the half wail, and rushed up stairs impatiently, "Well, Helen, what now?" "Oh, mamma!" and she put out her arms imploringly. "I don't want Happy, and I don't want God. I want somebody with a skin face!"

FROM an election speech:—"A genuine patriot should at all times be ready to die for his country, even though it should cost him his life!"

THE only time when a man is generous in drawing the line between his own and his neighbor's property is when he shovels the snow off the pavement.

LOVE laughs at lexicographers. This is a fact; by way of proof take the following brief epistle from a young lady to her lover: "Dere Jon,—comeatafpastate."

AN Illinois girl, who had received a declaration of love in a type-writer letter, replied that she would not be wooed by machinery. Girls prefer the old style.

A YOUNG man in California began to read a paragraph about a mine to his sweetheart, commencing—"Yuba Mine—," when she interrupted him with, "I don't care if I do, John."

"TAKE away women," asked a writer, "and what would follow?" That's easy. The men.—Texas Siftings.

"Oh, MAMMA," said Four-year-old, seeing for the first time, the snow fall. "Oh, mamma, come see the funny rain. It's all popped out white."

Publisher's Notes.

For Everybody.

"THE STORY OF A CLASSIC TOWN," Miss Willard's latest book, is a book for everybody. Methodists will be interested because it narrates the founding of the Methodist University of the Northwest, and gives sketches and pictures of leading divines. Residents of Evanston will be interested, because it gives the story of the classic suburb in which they reside. W. C. T. U. women will be charmed with the originality of the production from the pen of Miss Willard and in the story of the outgrowth which resulted from a town being born free from the rum influence. It illustrates what can be done when good people unite to maintain righteous principles in government. Everybody will enjoy the breezy recital. Others think so. Read what they say:

New York Christian Advocate:

We were about to say that "A Classic Town: The Story of Evanston," would appeal strongly to a limited number of readers. This would be true if Frances E. Willard were not the author; everything from her pen commands wide attention. This little book is very simple and unpretending, a mere sketch, familiar and almost domestic in its intimate tone. It is full of portraits, pictures of homes, and equally life-like pen sketches. The history of Garrett Biblical Institute and Northwestern University, besides the story of the growth and of the distinguished dwellers in the town, is rehearsed in a bright way, entirely Miss Willard's own. The fresh enthusiasm of her early girlhood seems to have remained with her, and to it probably is owing much of her remarkable success as an inspirer and leader of others.

Dr. Buckley is careful in the use of words, and this commendation is correspondingly valuable.

Central Christian Advocate:

Miss Willard has written an interesting, gossipy account of Evanston, which has grown into the bulk of a volume from a familiar "retrospect" which she read on the anniversary of Mrs. Garrett's birthday, in celebration of the Garrett Biblical Institute, in 1886. She has thus helped, as she suggests herself, "to preserve some dates, facts and personalities for the use of that staid and dignified individual who will in due season materialize—the future historian." But what has been well done needs not be done again. It contains good likenesses of many notables and pleasant sketches of their lives. Miss Willard writes well and the reader will be pleased with this book.

Nashville Christian Advocate;

Everything that Miss Willard writes is readable, and this volume is no exception to the general rule. Evanston, as our readers know, is a beautiful suburb of Chicago, and the seat of the Northwestern University. It has been, first and last, the home of many noted people, and is to-day a charming town. As an old resident, Miss Willard takes a natural interest in the history of the place, and has done well to put the story on paper. Other testimonials will appear later.

Every W. C. T. U. woman should have this book, and try to place it in other homes. Price, $1.50.

Agents wanted.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts..
Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

A Treasurer's Testimony.

Here is what one state treasurer says, while all are commending it:

The Text Book for treasurers, by our National treasurer, Miss Pugh, is just what we have needed, full of bright suggestions and practical facts. It ought to be in the hands of all treasurers. MOLLIE G. HAY,
State Treas., Indiana.

All local treasurers should own it, or rather, all local unions, for the benefit of their treasurer, and every officer should be conversant with its contents. Send orders to Miss Esther Pugh, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago. Price per copy, 5 cents; per 100, $4.

Do You Want a Photograph

of one of the National W. C. T. U. leaders? You can have it. Write to us for information, and we will tell you how.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

There is NO "SURE CURE FOR EVERY CASE OF ASTHMA" or "EVERY CASE OF HAY FEVER," but the worst cases, if uncomplicated by organic disease, can be CURED TO STAY CURED by constitutional treatment, and this at the patient's home.

ASTHMA AND HAY-FEVER

We treat no one without a thorough knowledge of the case.

Incurable Cases Declined.

Examination free by mail.

We want name and address of every sufferer from Asthma or Hay Fever.

P. HAROLD HAYES, M. D., BUFFALO, N. Y.

YPSILANTI Dress Reform UNDERWEAR

SPRING GOODS REDUCED IN PRICE.

Sanitary Balbriggan, Sanitary Lisle Thread, Sanitary MERINO, SILK and Sanitary Balbriggan, Silk and Cashmere mixed.

For SPRING and SUMMER WEAR. The ONLY Sanitary Underwear, and Endorsed by the leading medical profession.

Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Price List. If your dealer cannot supply them, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.

DON'T BE DECEIVED. See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark— "Ypsilanti Health Underwear."

HAY & TODD MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR COLD BLAST CHICAGO DUST QUILTS ON

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10cts. to intending agents. F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

DELSARTE'

Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List
Agents Wanted. Also
DELSARTE CORSET CO.,
142 W. 23d St., New York.
111 State Street,
Chicago, Ill.

YOSE & SONS PIANOS. ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Sold on easy terms. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue and full information.

170 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

For Harness, Buggy Tops, Saddles, Fly Nets Traveling Bags, Military Equipments, Etc.

Gives a beautiful finish which will not peel or crack off, smut or crock by handling. Not a varnish Used by the U. S. Army and is the standard among manufacturers and owners of fine harness in every quarter of the globe.

SOLD BY ALL HARNESS MAKERS.

WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT positively cures RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, LIVER, KIDNEY and exhausting chronic diseases of both sexes. Contains 23 to 100 degrees of Electricity. GUARANTEED the latest improved and most effective MEDICAL ELECTRIC BELT in the WORLD. Electric Suspensories free with Male Belts. ELECTRIC TRUSSES FOR RUPTURE. 9,000 cured. Send 4c stamp for pamphlet.

DR. W. J. HORNE, REMOVED TO 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO

Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH

Taken internally and used locally with Inhaler. At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured. All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N.Y.

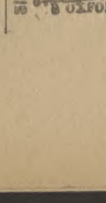
PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble, Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

RELLSWORTH YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.



$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals
are used in the preparation of
W. BAKER & CO.'S
BreakfastCocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Dr. O. P. Brown's
GREAT EXTERNAL REMEDY.
HERBAL OINTMENT!
reaches disease through the pores, arouses circulation, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25 and 50 cents. Druggists or mail. J. Gibson Brown, 7 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA

PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.

It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.

New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.

It will pay you well to write to us.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.
902-904 Royal Insurance Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR

Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The FREE St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish.
St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

FREE FOR 100 SUBSCRIBERS ONLY. With the first 100 orders received from this advertisement for HENDRYX'S COMPENDIUM OF BOOK-KEEPING AND BUSINESS FORMS FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION will be given a course of instruction by mail free. This is our regular $15 course. Do not delay, but order a Compendium at once. Price $1.
F. H. HENDRYX, 178, Bath, N. Y.

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR
DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE
A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction
By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.
A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 remarkable illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 81st thousand. 5,000 more Agents Wanted.—Men and Women. $200 a month. Experience and capital not necessary, for We Teach All. Give Credit and Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

HOW TO MAKE A FORTUNE

WANTED—Salesmen, who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line, or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser—Patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new, will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO. No. 184 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

PARENTS CANNOT AFFORD

To let their children grow up without the amusement and physical training which the World's Parlor and Lawn Game gives. ELASTIC TIP CO., 152 and 154 Lake Street, Chicago.

DULUTH 7% & 8% First Mortgages

REAL ESTATE AND MINING STOCKS.
References Furnished. Correspondence Solicited,
Tvedt, Eckstein & Co., 327 W. Superior Street, DULUTH, MINN.

THE BABY will be given a beautiful birthday card if the mother will send baby's name and age to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. This is done to advertise LACTATED FOOD, the food that SAVES BABIES' LIVES.

WANTED Women to take Crochet work to do at home. Steady work. Write for particulars. L. WHITE & CO., 209 State St., Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Dep't.

The World's Fair.

What do you think about it?

Well, this is what we think. It will be the grandest event of its character ever recorded. No exposition was ever held which was planned on so grand a scale. The area occupied is the largest, the buildings the most extensive and costly, and the exhibits will be the most extensive. It will be the first World's Exposition which provides a place for woman's work and woman's interest. It will be unique, also, in that it is the first exposition which has a moral side, and its reform, educational, philanthropic and religious conferences, planned and carried forward by the leading thinkers of the nation will be a decided innovation. Of course

You Want to be There.

Then you should learn something about it now. We have just the thing to inform you

If you go or if you do not go.

It is the

Columbus Memorial,

a large folio volume, 12x15 inches in size, printed on super-calendered paper, neatly and attractively bound in heavy enameled paper. It contains 44 pages and shows the progress and achievement this country has made in four hundred years. It contains:

Letter press and full page map of discovery, 1492 to 1606, 116 years.

Letter press and full page map of settlement, 1607 to 1673, 66 years.

Letter press and full page map of wars, 1673 to 1773, 100 years.

Letter press and full page map of independence, 1773 to 1789, 16 years.

Letter press and full page map of constitution, 1789 to 1845, 56 years.

Letter press and full page map of dissension, 1845 to 1860, 15 years.

Letter press and full page map of secession, 1860 to 1865, 5 years.

Letter press and full page map of peace, 1865 to 1892, 27 years.

Map of the city of Genoa, Italy, supposed birthplace of Columbus, with biographical sketch of Christopher Columbus.

Three pages, general descriptive matter "World's Columbian Exposition," from its inception to the present time, with a carefully prepared and authentic table of the World's Fairs that have been held at different times throughout the world, from "Crystal Palace," 1851, to the "World's Fair" of 1893.

In all their magnificence are portrayed Machinery Hall, which alone cost $1,200,000; the Manufacturers' Building, the Art Palace, the Administration Building, the Government Building, the Electrical Building, the Horticultural Building, the Agricultural Building, the Transportation Building, the Fish and Fisheries Building, the Woman's Building, designed by a woman; the Mines and Mining Building, the Forestry Building; beautiful illustration of the wonderful lagoon scene; grand bird's-eye view scene of the Exposition buildings; double page map or diagram, showing the relative position of the main buildings, including state buildings and size of each, etc., etc.

We will send this and THE UNION SIGNAL one year, postpaid, for only $1.30, or we will send it to any address postpaid, in return for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1.00 each.

Tell the children to ask their friends to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. If they send five new names and $5 we will send one of the beautiful "Columbus Memorials" postpaid, to any address they may indicate.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE, Rooms 1102–1110,
Cor. Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago.

Do you desire to aid in extending the principles of the W. C. T. U.? Then send THE UNION SIGNAL into homes where it does not enter. Send it a month on trial, or induce those you desire to interest to subscribe for one month. To any one who will send twelve monthly subscriptions, at ten cents each, or five quarterly subscriptions at twenty-five cents each, we will send, in return for service in securing the same, a photograph of any one of our leaders they may select. We will send card to aid in soliciting such subscriptions on application.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

$500 FOR A PANSY BLOSSOM!

Every reader of this paper should not fail to enjoy some of the Alice Pansies this summer, which were named by Mrs. Harrison. They create a sensation everywhere and their Beauty is beyond description. Their Mammoth Size of odd colors is wonderful, and they have cost me an enormous price to secure them, but they are far ahead of all other varieties of Pansies and can be had from no other seedsman. I want to increase their size and will pay $500 in CASH to any person growing a Blossom measuring 3 in. in diameter; 2¾ in. are very common size. See catalogue. For 25c. in silver or 28c. in stamps, I will mail, carefully packed, so they will go several days, 12 plants of the "Alice Pansies" (soon be blooming), a Pearl Tube Rose Bulb and my Illustrated Catalogue. For $1.00, I will mail 50 good plants, enough for an elegant bed, 4 Tube Rose Bulbs, and Catalogue. ☞ At these prices not a reader of this paper should fail to enjoy at least a few of the finest pansies in the world, which were named "ALICE" by Mrs. Harrison. You can have the nicest pansies around, besides you may grow 3 in. blossom and get $500. Every person ordering any of the above will receive FREE a packet of Mammoth Passion Flower Seed, Hardy Climbing Vine, perfect beauty that will flower the first year from seed and is worth $1.00. With every $1 order, I will give FREE, 6 Mammoth Verbena Plants, mixed colors, new and elegant. F. B. MILLS, Rose Hill, Onondaga Co., N.Y.
(MR. MILLS is perfectly reliable and trustworthy.—Ed.)

The 1892 Model Remington

Typewriter

Presents many points of improvement which will readily commend themselves to all users.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
327 Broadway, New York.

DO YOU WANT FACTS?

And do you desire others should know the facts in regard to the liquor traffic?
You cannot do better than by securing a copy of that wonderful book,

The Temperance Movement

By Ex-SENATOR BLAIR.

It discusses
Alcohol and Health,
Alcohol and Crime,
Alcohol and Poverty,
License or Prohibition?
Alcohol and Wealth,
Alcohol and Labor,
The Forces Against Alcohol,
Temperance Organizations,
The Church.

It is a very valuable compendium of information. Every thinker and every leader in all causes should read it. It is a book of 583 pages, beautifully illustrated. We offer it, bound in cloth, at the ridiculously low price of $1.25 postpaid.

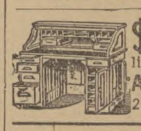
WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,
THE TEMPLE (Rooms 1102–1110.)
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago, Ill.

AGENT made $71 in four days selling my Electric Corsets and Specialties. 100 PER CENT. profit and Cash Prizes. Sample free. Dr. Bridgman, 3 Way, New York.

EYES tested free by mail. New method. Send stamp for test card. KEENE OPT. CO., 1301 Washington-st. Boston, Mass

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 63 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.



$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order.
American Desk & Seating Co.
270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

SAVE $40.00 ON NEW $140.00
BICYCLES
New, Latest Pattern $140 Bicycles for $100. Cheaper grades in proportion; cash or time. Agents wanted.
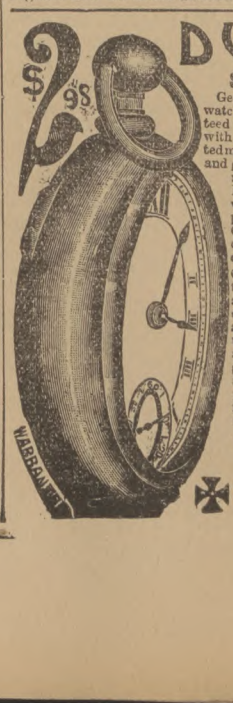
A. W. GUMP & CO., Dayton, Ohio.
BICYCLES, GUNS & TYPEWRITERS taken in exchange.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF
Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.

We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.

GRAND TERRACE ADDITION

For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.



$2.98 DUEBER
SOLID SILVERINE.

Genuine Dueber, solid silverine watch, dust and damp proof; guaranteed for 20 years. Fitted complete with our very highest grade imported movement, magnificently jeweled and guaranteed to run and keep correct time for ten years.

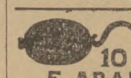
It is a heavy 3 oz. full gents' size watch, and a beauty. Our former price was $5.00, but for the next 60 days we offer them for $2.98 each, and a handsome chain and charm free with each watch.

CUT THIS OUT, send it to us with your name, post office address and name of your nearest express office, and we will ship it there for your examination. If, after examination, you are convinced that it is a bargain pay the express agent $2.98 and express charges, and it is yours. Otherwise you pay nothing and it will be returned at our expense. Address

THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO.,
334 Dearborn St.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY or COMMISSION, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser M'f'g Co. x 213 LaCrosse, Wis.

YOUR NAME on 25 LOVELY CARDS, 1 RING, 1 LACE PIN, 1 PATENT FOUNTAIN PEN, 1 FORGET-ME-NOT ALBUM, 60 Album Verses, etc., with the New and Popular Monthly, WAYSIDE GLEANINGS, THREE MONTHS FOR 10c. LAUREL CARD CO., CLINTONVILLE, CONN.



103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

FAT PEOPLE You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by DR. CLARKE'S Home Treatment. Proofs, Testimonials, Free. F. B. CLARKE, M. D., Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

HOTEL FREDONIA. Washington, D. C. H St., between 13th and 14th. ELEGANT, QUIET, HOMELIKE & STRICTLY TEMPERANCE G. H. La Fetra, Prop.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City. 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

A LADY WANTED

in each locality to manage Toilet Parlor at home; write, obtain names, send circulars. $5 to $15 weekly. Our Toilet Art Book Free. Send stamp. SYLVAN TOILET CO., Fort Huron, Mich.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free. G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline M'f'g. Co., 67 W Washington St., Chicago.

10 cents pays for the best ladies' paper published for three months. Ladies' Bazar, Chicago, Ill.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

GALVANIZED WOVEN WIRE FENCING WIRE ROPE SELVAGE.
McMULLENS
RABBIT & POULTRY FENCING.
Freight Paid. McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., CHICAGO

These Are Some of Our Supplies.

NATIONAL LEAFLETS.

The standard leaflets for use in extending the knowledge of W. C. T. U. principles and methods; divided into three sections, designed, respectively, to aid in the general work, that of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and of the Loyal Temperance Legion. Suitable size for inclosing in letters. The titles in most cases suggest the class of readers for which each is designed.

Price, per package of 10 . . . . . $ .10
Per 100, of one number, or assorted 90
Per 1000, " " 7.50

1. The National W. C. T. U. Mary T. Lathrap
2. Duties of Officers. Mary Allen West
3. Finance. Esther Pugh and F. C. Hathaway
4. The Reason Why (Statement of the Relation of the W. C. T. U. to Politics). Frances E. Willard
5. The Story of a Great Conviction. Mary B. Willard
6. How to Conduct a Public Meeting. Frances E. Willard
7. The Silent Million. B. V. Cushman, M. D.
8. Preparation for Gospel Work. Rev. Amos Dean, D. D.
9. Scientific Temperance Instruction in Public Schools. Frances E. Willard
10. The White Cross and White Ribbon. Rev. Dr. B. F. DeCosta
11. Morality vs. Law (The Age of Consent.) Martha K. Pearce, LL.B.
12. Tobacco and the Drink Habit. Ruby I. Gilbert
13. Steamers and Smokers. What shall we do about it? Meta Lander
14. Capital, Labor and Temperance. Mrs. Augusta C. Bristol
15. A Pastorless Parish. Mary Allen West
16. Doctor and Druggist (To circulate among physicians). Frances E. Willard
17. The Drinker's Thermometer. M. D. Kimball
18. Work of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. M. H. Boardman
19. Little Things in Child-Life. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry
20. "'Twould Hurt His Hand." Lucia E. F. Kimball
21. Why Special Temperance Teaching in the Sunday-school? Lucia E. F. Kimball
22. Bible Wines. Mary Allen West
23. Is Alcohol a Stimulant? (A symposium from eminent physicians.)
24. Pants are Made for Boys, Not Boys for Pants. Annis Eastman
25. Is Cider Harmless? Alice Collins
26. Let Your Women Keep Silence in the Churches.
27. Society and Society Women; A New Definition Frances E. Willard
28. A Suffrage Question-Box. Henry B. Blackwell
29. Blood Will Tell. Rev. C. C. Harrah
30. The Teacher Taught. Mary Allen West
31. Political Economy vs. Commercial Economy. Dr. A. J. Ingersoll
32. The Tobacco Toboggan. Mrs. Helen L. Bullock
33. A Whole Humanity (Address on Woman Suffrage.) Mrs. Zerelda G. Wallace
34. Liquor's War on Labor. John Lloyd Thomas
35. Hints on W. C. T. U. Gospel Work. Mrs. F. C. Hathaway
36. The Coming Brotherhood. Frances E. Willard
37. The Teacher Questioned. Alice M. Guernsey
38. The Teacher Helped. " "
39. The Relation of Temperance Reform to the Labor Movement. Prof. Richard T. Ely
40. Spirituous Liquors Not Needed in Medicine or the Arts. Dr. J. R. Nichols
41. Busy Women and the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Lucy A. Scott
42. Twelve Reasons Why Women Ought to Vote. Alice Stone Blackwell
43. Why one Woman Wants to Vote. Ella G. Ives
44. "The Letter Killeth; the Spirit Maketh Free." Mrs. S. S. Fessenden
45. The Hour and Its Needs. Mrs. Margaret B. Platt
46. Self-Government for Schools. Frances E. Willard
47. Should Women Vote? " "
48. Safety for School Children " "
49. "Dead Reckoning." R. Kelso Carter
50. Country Unions. Mary Allen West
51. Farm Mortgages. Mary Allen West
52. Gospel Temperance. John G. Woolley
53. Our Bondage. Frances E. Willard
54. Systematic Giving. Esther Tuttle Pritchard

Y. W. C. T. U.

101. A Problem Solved (How to maintain interest in our meetings). Elizabeth F. Thayer and Medora Drew
102. A Girl's Influence. Anna M. Vail
103. The Flower Mission. (A symposium from the Oak and Ivy Leaf.)
104. A New Régime. Maud Ritlenhouse
105. Counting One. Eva Kinney Griffith
106. Fair Play. Mary E. McDowell
107. Leaving the Home Nest. Alice M. Guernsey
108. The New Crusade. Frances H. Ensign

L. T. L.

201. The Civic Guard. Emily A. Kellogg
202. Tested. Elvirton Wright
203. Why I Never Tasted Liquor. Edward W. Bok
204. An Appeal to Mothers. Frances E. Willard
205. Part of a Boy. Estelle Thomson

TOTAL ABSTINENCE LEAFLETS.

A series of short sketches bearing directly on the subject of total abstinence. Adapted for distribution in public temperance meetings, etc.

Price for five, or less, each . . . . . $ .01
Per 100 50

1. Some New Facts About Alcoholic Heredity. Dr. T. D. Crothers
2. A King's Son. Mary Lowe Dickinson
3. Is it Nothing to You?
4. In the Bushel or in the Jug. John P. St. John
5. Some Methods of Prevention. Edward Everett Hale
6. Hints About Helps.
7. Pledge-keeping.
8. The Law of Habit. Frances E. Willard
9. Turn on the Light.

SUPERINTENDENTS' SERIES.

Manuals of Department Work, by National Superintendents.

Manual of the School of Methods. Mary Allen West
Price . . . . . $ .25

Manual of the Y. W. C. T. U. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes
Price . . . . . $ .25

Manual of Juvenile Work. Helen G. Rice
Price . . . . . $ .05
Ten or more, each 03
Per 100 . . . . . 2.50

Questions Answered. Anna A. Gordon
On the work of the Juvenile Department.
Price . . . . . $ .25

Evangelistic Manual. Mrs. Annie M. Palmer
Price . . . . . $ .05

Golden Keys. Mrs. E. G. Greene
Manual of Kindergarten Department.
Price . . . . . $ .25

Manual of the Purity Department. Frances E. Willard
Price . . . . . $ .05
10 or more, each 03
Per 100 . . . . . 2.50

National Prohibitory Amendment Guide. Mrs. Ada C. Bittenbender
Price . . . . . $ .25

White Cross Manual. See p. 26.

DEPARTMENT LEAFLETS.

RAILROAD.

Price, for 5, or less, each . . . . . $ .01
Per 100 50

1. The Traveler's Psalm.
2. The Moral Suasion Railroad.
3. The Good Times Railroad.
4. Railroad Temperance Association Constitution.

SYSTEMATIC GIVING.

11. Tithing vs. Entertainments. Esther Tuttle Pritchard

FOR MOTHERS' MEETINGS.

HOME LEAFLETS.

For careful home reading. They treat of various questions vitally connected with the home—especially the training of children, physically, morally and spiritually.

Price, each . . . . . $ .02
Per 100 . . . . . 1.50
Per 1,000 . . . . . 10.00

1. Mothers' Meetings—Past and Present. Mary Allen West
2. Children in the Church. Rev. C. C. Harrah
3. Jesus Christ the Emancipator of Women. Rev. C. C. Harrah
4. Food Suggestions. Mary G. Underhill
5. Mothers and Public Schools. Mrs. D. Bentley
6. Obedience. Henry Ward Beecher
7. Temperance Training in the Home. Mary Allen West
8. A Mother's Experience in Non-Alcoholic Medication. Mrs. Joel Swartz
9. Mrs. Klyne's Life Work. Alvira M. Irish
10. "Let us Live with our Children." Mrs. C. R. McCartney
11. Reverence. " "
12. Marriage with Inebriates. Dr. T. D. Crothers

PURITY LEAFLETS.

Bearing to the general work of Social Purity a relation similar to that borne by the White Cross Leaflets to the work among boys and men. A series to be read and discussed in Mothers' Meetings, and to be talked over by parents at home.

Price, full set . . . . . $ .10
Ten numbers and over, at the rate of 50 cts. per 100 (½ ct. each).

1. Letter to the Women of America. Ellice Hopkins
2. Predisposing Causes. Kate Lindsay, M. D.
3. Early Perverting Influences. Irma A. Jones
4. Danger to Our Girls. L. Anna Ballard, M. D.
5. Dress and Vice. Frances E. Willard
6. Pitfalls for our Boys. J. H. Kellogg, M. D.
7. Narcotics. Lida B. Ingalls
8. Danger Signals. Rose S. Bryan, M. D.
9. Bad Hygiene vs. Virtue. B. V. Cushman, M. D.
10. Literature and Vice. Anna Garlin Spencer
11. Responsibility of Parents. Kate C. Bushnell, M. D.
12. Some Legal Aspects of the Question. Martha K. Pearce, LL. B

WHITE CROSS SERIES.

In Purity work, the W. C. T. U. cordially co-operates with the White Cross Army.

Price, each . . . . . $ .05
Per 100 . . . . . 2.00

1. My Little Sister. / Touching Pitch. Ellice Hopkins
2. Is it Natural. / Who Holds the Rope? J. E. H.
3. The Apocalypse of Evil. Ellice Hopkins
4. Bloodguiltiness. Rev. J. M. Horsley
5. Buried Seed. Ellice Hopkins
6. An Evil Tradition. Rev. A. G. Butler
7. What Can We Do? Ellice Hopkins
8. Black Anchor. " "
9. Little Kindnesses. / The Temple of the Eternal J. E. H
10. The Man with the Drawn Sword. Ellice Hopkins
11. Personal Purity. Mrs. Lucy A. Scott
12. Real Chivalry. Mrs. Lucy A. Scott

White Cross Manual. Frances E. Willard
Pledges. See p. 37.
Badge. See p. 54.

Signal Notes.

It is said that $65,000,000 is spent in saloons in Chicago every year.

Eighty per cent of the criminal class come from bad homes or none.

The average life of women in factories is twenty-eight; of women employed as domestics, thirty-eight.

The Illinois gospel temperance league are working to get a temperance band in every church and society in the state.

Thirty thousand horses were released from the street car grind last year by the substitution of electricity as a motor.

An international alcohol exhibition will be opened in Paris, France, the present month. Not only products, but processes, machinery, and implements will be exhibited. There will be complete representations of distilling, brewing and cider-making, so that the public may trace the production of alcohol from its earliest beginning.

The annual report of Mr. J. N. Stearns, corresponding secretary of the National Temperance Society, shows progress in every department of the work. Eighty-three new publications have been issued the last twelve months, making 2,016 now on the catalogue; 30,005,069 pages of temperance literature have been printed, making a total of 856,171,978 pages since the organization of the society.

Pres. Francis E. Clark, of the United Society of Christian Endeavor says, that "numerically, the societies are growing faster than ever before. An average of over one hundred are formed every week, while the latest report shows one hundred and fifty-five in one week. There are now over 19,000 societies, with considerably over 1,100,000 members. The growth, too, is remarkably uniform in all parts of the country, and, indeed, in all parts of the world."

Dr. Chas. S. Allen states that the very first symptoms of poison by snakebite is heart failure, and the last symptom failure of the respiratory functions. Hence the popular delusion of whisky as an antidote. Its sole value as a toxical remedy is as a stimulant to prevent heart failure; excessive amounts of whisky will cause death; no one can drink a quart of it with impunity. Dr. Allen has made an exhaustive experimentation in this line, and says the treatment should be hypodermic applications to neutralize the poison, to check its advance through the circulation, and the use of internal remedies.

One-fifteenth of Germany's cultivated land is devoted to the liquor traffic, which is making it a question of beer or bread for the poorer classes of that country. The drink question is thus becoming an important one in the political economy of Germany. Professor Schmoller, of Berlin, an able political economist, thus writes: — "Among our working people the conditions of domestic life, of education, of prosperity, of progress, or degradation are all dependent on the proportion of income which flows down the father's throat. The whole condition of our lower and middle classes—one may, even without exaggeration, say the future of our nation—depends on this question. If it is true that half our paupers become so through drink, it gives us some estimate of the costly burden which we tolerate. No other of our vices bears comparison with this."

Edward Everett Hale has been the recipient of honors which would rejoice the heart of any man living. A public reception, a banquet at the Hotel Vendome, with presentations of various sorts, celebrating his seventieth birthday, have emphasized the great work he has done in the world in the interest of human brotherhood. Perhaps the chief among the many famous men and women who met to do honor to the author of the famous motto, "Look up and not down," was Oliver Wendell Holmes, of whose felicitous poem these lines are part:

"Be ours to heed his lessons while we may,
Look up for light to guide our devious way;
Look forward bravely, look not weakly back;
The past is done with; mind the coming track.
Look in with searching eye and courage stout,
But when temptation comes, look out! look out!"

False Economy

Is practiced by many people, who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Did you ever wash cut glass? It is full of narrow grooves and deep furrows. They are clear, brilliant and rainbow-hued. Use ordinary soap and at once the glass becomes dull and cloudy. The resin in the soap leaves a thin, semi-transparent tarnish on the surface.

Now wash with Ivory Soap (which contains no resin) using a soft brush and tepid water. You will be amazed at the result. The brilliancy of the glass seems intensified. The prismatic colors are now almost dazzling. Ivory Soap makes all this difference.

Copyright 1890, by The Procter & Gamble Co.

WOMAN'S SYNDICATE

We own $500,000 worth of property at South Waukegan, Ill.; we bought it at wholesale prices and will sell it at retail after it advances sufficiently in value. Upon this property we have issued Our Profit-sharing Investment Bonds which are a device that will allow Every one who owns one or more of the bonds, to Share in the Large Profits that will be made.

BONDS ARE $10 EACH

These bonds, at their face value, with such profits as may be earned at the time added, will be taken back by us at any time in payment for lots. With each advance in the value of our lots, the series of bonds then on sale will be closed, and the amount of the advance credited to each purchaser of bonds up to that date. Then a new series will begin, and so on.

To ILLUSTRATE. If by June 1st we shall have sold $50,000 worth of bonds and because of the location of a factory, or for any other reason, our property should advance in value ten per cent, which is $50,000, each bondholder would receive credit for $5.00 for each and every bond held by her, and so on, as often as the property increases in value; and when land is sold, both principal and profits are returned to the bondholder

SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN

This affords ladies an opportunity to invest a small or large amount of money in something that is unquestionably reliable, and that will bring a large profit to every bondholder, because South Waukegan is certain to become the greatest manufacturing town in the West, on account of low freight rates and other advantages. The Washburn & Moen Mfg. Co., the largest concern of its kind in the world, employs 4,000. The U. S. Sugar Refinery have invested $750,000 in buildings. They employ 550. The Starch Works, with a capacity of 14,000 bushels of corn daily, will give work to 250. The Lanyon Zinc Oxide Co., with their seven large steel buildings, will employ a vast number, and the Morrow Bros. Mfg. Co. will employ 300 workmen. These large plants will open very soon, and many more will locate here. These five alone will bring

40,000 PEOPLE TO LIVE IN SOUTH WAUKEGAN.
NO SALOONS WILL BE ALLOWED.

Our lots are all within ten minutes' walk of all of the factories, so that just as soon as the works open up, our property will be in great demand, and the increase in value, which means profits for our bondholders, will be rapid and great.

The deeds to our property and all money are held by the Commercial Loan and Trust Co., of Chicago, as Trustees for the purchasers of these bonds, thus affording ABSOLUTE SAFETY.

General Singleton, Pres. Total Abstinence Life Association, 902 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, says: "I am acquainted with the lady managers of the Woman's Land Syndicate and have implicit confidence in them; I have a general knowledge of the property and believe it to have a bright future; I think favorably of their plan of operations; I am perfectly willing for my wife to invest in it."

Send us a deposit—no matter how small—and say how many bonds you want, and we will reserve them for you until you can arrange your money matters to make full payment. THOSE WHO BUY NOW WILL MAKE THE MOST MONEY.

MANAGERS: MRS. R. A. EMMONS. REV. HENRIETTA G. MOORE, National Lecturer of the W. C. T. U. MRS. J. B. HOBBS, of the W. C. T. U.

Our Circulars giving full and complete information will be sent free to any one who will write. Make checks, drafts or money orders payable to

The Woman's Land Syndicate, 161 LA SALLE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

TO EXCHANGE HARVEY PROPERTY.

FREE WE SEND FREE A MAP OF with printed matter giving full information of HARVEY this wonderful temperance town, that promises in the near future to surpass all others in this country for the thrift, intelligence, and prosperity of its citizens, and of the wonderful advances in real estate. Harvey is situated only twenty minutes from the World's Fair grounds, and will be headquarters for Christian and temperance people during the Fair.

We will exchange lots or houses in M. M. BROWN'S Addition at cash prices for any clear property, taking half the value in trade, and give time on balance. Our ground is thickly covered with home owners, many of whom are employed in the factories, being only five minutes' walk.

Write for plats and full information. Prices will soon be advanced. NOW is the time to buy.

M. M. BROWN, Room 1111 Chamber of Commerce, CHICAGO, ILL.

 * RUBIFOAM

CLEANSES, PRESERVES, BEAUTIFIES THE TEETH.

A Perfect Liquid Dentifrice.

PRICE 25 CENTS

E. W. HOYT & CO., LOWELL, MASS.

ORIGINAL DRESS REFORM ROOMS.

(Established 1875.) Complete lines of Equipoise and Delsarte Waists, Jenness-Miller Bodices, Bust Supports, Jersey-fitting combination suits, etc., etc. Send stamp for free Illustrated Catalogue.

MRS. S. W. PIKE, 75 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

BOYS, GIRLS — EVERYBODY!

WORK WITH a WILL and WE will make a

WAY for you to OWN a Bicycle, Camera,

SEWING MACHINE,

Boy's or Girl's Watch, Choice Library, &c.

WITHOUT EXPENSE.

Full particulars free, from D. Lothrop Co., 364 & 366 Washington St., Pubs. Lothrop Magazines. Boston, Mass.

BEETHOVEN Pianos & Organs

Are the best in the world. We sell at less than wholesale price. Don't purchase until you have seen our Catalogue or you may regret it. Catalogue FREE TO ALL. Add BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO Washington, N. J.

3,000 Job Lot BICYCLES 20 to 50% off. Lowest prices on all '92 makes & 2d hd Easy payments. We sell everywhere.
'91 Cush'n $85 Juno, balls. $65 | 40 in. $37 Victor Jr. balls. $17
'90 Crescent ('91 make) " $50 | '91 $135 Rambler " $90
'91 $145 Cush'n High Grade $90 | And 20 other styles as cheap.
Largest stock & oldest dealers in U. S. Agts. wanted. Cata. free. Rouse, Hazard & Co. G. St., Peoria, Ill.

How to Dress in a Stylish and healthful manner described and illustrated. One dept. devoted to infants and children. 50c. per year; 15c. a copy. Gertrude Quarterly Box 1088, Chicago.

Veterans' Route to the Encampment.

Veterans going to the G. A. R. Encampment at Washington in September via the B. & O. R. R. will traverse territory fraught with a thousand reminiscenses of the conflicts in which they figured so gallantly. Along Cheat river, on the western slope of the Alleghanies, they will pass the scenes of Gen. McClellan's victories over Gen. Floyd in the early stages of the war. At Grafton they will pass near the battlefield of Philippi. At Piedmont they will enter the historic Potomac valley, which was debatable ground all the way to Washington. The towering mountains, which shut in the valley, echoed and re-echoed almost hourly with the roar of cannon and musketry. The mountain tops witnessed the engagements at Martinsburg, Antietam, Sharpsburg, South Mountain, Monocacy, Ball's Bluff, Leesburg, Dranesville, Chantilly, Centreville and the hundreds of skirmishes along the hillsides and in the valleys. At the foot of the mountains, along the banks of the Potomac, paced the solitary sentry, protecting often the tracks and trains of the B. & O. R. R., which the Government zealously guarded as the great highway of communication between the West and the National Capital, and which is the best known route to the East to thousands of veterans who traveled over it early in the sixties as raw recruits to join the ranks. And the Potomac! What memories its mention awakens! And Harper's Ferry, too! There stood John Brown's old fort. There "Stonewall" Jackson performed his great exploits. It was near there that Lee crossed the Potomac into Maryland and then invaded Pennsylvania to meet the repulse at Gettysburg. At Harper's Ferry begins the famous Shenandoah valley, which is penetrated from end to end by the B. & O. R. R., bringing into easy access the battlefields at Winchester, Kernstown, Opequan, Cedar Creek, Fisher's Hill, Front Royal, New Market, Harrisonburg, Cross Keys, Port Republic, Waynesboro and McDowell. What memories of heroism, of forced marches, of victories and defeats these names recall! And with them come trooping from the past the names of Sheridan, of Pope, of Banks, of Fremont, of Shields, of "Stonewall" Jackson, of Lee, of Ashby, and of Early.

It is only by the B. & O. R. R. that these famous battlefields can be reached. During the encampment excursions will be run to them daily from Washington at greatly reduced rates. Excursions will also be run to Gettysburg, to Manassas, to Bull Run, to Fredericksburg and other Virginia battlefields.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

Vol. XVIII.—No 21.] CHICAGO, May 26, 1892. Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.]

Mrs Ursula D Hettick 2419 19th St 9.02

THE WORLD'S FAIR TEMPERANCE HEADQUARTERS AT HARVEY, ILL.

MRS. E.A. RUSSELL.

ONE DOLLAR Deposited now secures a room for yourself or friends for the World's Fair at the greatest Temperance Headquarters in the World. See special offer below. The rooms are large and light, pure water, perfect ventilation; all outside rooms. Twenty-five minutes' ride to the World's Fair Grounds; probably a five-cent fare. Healthful, wholesome, perfect quiet. No disorderly persons allowed. NO SALOONS IN TOWN. Great religious services on Sunday.

Speakers for the Sundays Have been engaged as follows: WM. T. STEAD, London; FRANCES E. WILLARD, Dr. A. B. LEONARD, CLARA C. HOFFMAN, E.J. WHEELER, SAMUEL GOMPERS, MARY T.LATHRAP, MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, BISHOP ROBERTS, JOHN G. WOOLLEY, PROF. A. S. DRAPER, A.W. HAWKS. Invited: DR. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, DR. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, GEN. O. O. HOWARD, DWIGHT L. MOODY. Meetings in a fine grove, with seats for 10,000 people.

Great Changes Necessary. The first plan was for a thousand guests, but orders for rooms already received make it necessary to more than double the original design, which has been done without making any inside rooms and without increasing the height above three stories.

The Management. The business managers of the hotel are the WARING BROS. (Hon. G. P. Waring and C. L. Waring); they are the President and Treasurer of the Company and among the largest stockholders. They are men of wide experience, have always been successful and are of large financial responsibility. They have closed a contract with MRS. E. A. RUSSELL, at present the manager of the W. C. T. U. Coffee House at Minneapolis, the most successful temperance coffee house in the world to manage and have complete control of all matters pertaining to food, rooms, household conveniences or in any way affecting the comfort of our guests. This guarantees beyond all question that our guests will be well taken care of. She has been engaged in similar work all her life. She was housekeeper of the Grand Union of Saratoga; at Manhattan Beach; at the Oriental, Long Island; at the Neal House, Columbus, O.; at the West Hotel, Minneapolis. She had charge at the Continental in Philadelphia during the Centennial. (See THE UNION SIGNAL two-page editorial of April 7th.) She will organize a force of three hundred assistants, composed exclusively of WHITE-RIBBONERS and college students.

Our Supporters. Among those who will be our guests or have cordially approved of our plans may be mentioned: Frances E. Willard, John P. St. John, I. K. Funk, Miss Esther Pugh. The editors of ALL the religious papers in Chicago and numerous others of other cities, including the Christian at Work, the Sunday School Times and temperance editors without number, the authorities of the World's Fair on public meetings, Ex-Gov. Larrabee, Samuel D. Hastings and many thousand more—more than a hundred letters daily and the story of them all is "We are coming." In short the best MEN AND WOMEN in America and the world are filling our great hotel.

A Kindergarten in charge of the most skillful teachers and assisted by trained nurses will have special charge of the little ones, where mothers can leave young children for the day, while going to Fair grounds, sure that the best of care will be given them during their absence.

How to Act. Those who order and pay for rooms now get their lodgings at present rates, 4 in a room, 50c. each per day; 2 in a room, $1 each per day; 1 only in a room, $1.50 per day; and moreover among them will be distributed ONE-HALF OF ALL THE PROFITS of the enterprise during the WORLD'S FAIR. Meals need not now be paid for, they can be gotten on the European plan at from 15 cents to 75 cents as you may elect. Send only money to pay for lodgings. The way this is arranged is GUARANTEED PROFIT-SHARING STOCK CERTIFICATES are sold in $10 Shares. This stock entitles one to rooms at above rates, if taken now, to the full face value of the stock, either for themselves or their friends.

SPECIAL OFFER

We will accept subscriptions, until further notice, on the following plan: Send us ONE DOLLAR or more for each share of TEN DOLLARS each which you may wish to take, and we will enter your name and reserve for you rooms to the full amount of the shares subscribed for. You can send the balance in monthly payments of ONE DOLLAR or more for each share taken, until fully paid. Use the form at the right in sending order.

ONLY $100,000 WORTH OF THESE CERTIFICATES OFFERED. SHARES $10 EACH.

SEND FOR YOURS BEFORE YOU LAY DOWN THIS PAPER.

THE HARVEY WORLD'S FAIR HOTEL AND ENTERTAINMENT CO.

ALL ORDERS FOR STOCK SHOULD BE ADDRESSED TO

WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO.

OUR EXCLUSIVE AGENTS FOR SALE OF STOCK,

161 LA SALLE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

A CUT THIS OUT OR COPY IT,

Fill the blanks, SIGN IT, and pin it to a ONE DOLLAR BILL or ONE DOLLAR postal note for each share ordered, and mail it at once to Walter Thomas Mills & Co., 161 La Salle St., Chicago.

..... 1892.

Walter Thomas Mills & Co., 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.:

I hereby subscribe for and agree to take and pay for rooms in The World's Fair Temperance Hotel at Harvey, Ill., on the Guaranteed Profit-Sharing plan, amounting to —— shares of Ten Dollars each, total $——. It is specially understood that these certificates are, when fully paid, non-assessable, without liability, and receivable at their full face value, and at the regular rates, in payment for rooms at the above Hotel during the World's Fair, besides entitled to pro rata share of one-half the profits of the enterprise. Inclosed find $—— cash payment on this subscription, the balance to be paid in installments of not less than One Dollar per share each calendar month until fully paid, but in the event of the default of any of these payments, or in the further event of grossly immoral or improper conduct on my part at any time prior to or during the World's Fair, all rights or claims hereunder are forfeited to and at the option of the said World's Fair Hotel and Entertainment Co.

Signed.....

Address.....

HARVEY LOTS

The immense World's Fair Temperance Hotel Building is going up on Academy Addition, which is and has been under our exclusive supervision. We have ten lots for sale fronting the Hotel on the East, between the Hotel and Depot which are bargains at present, and specially desirable for overflow Boarding-houses, for Restaurants, Laundries or Fancy Stores. With 2,000 boarders per day in the Hotel you can readily see that this must be a choice location for the above purposes. Parties wishgin to secure one of these choice locations and not able to come at once can send $10 deposit and have it held for thirty days till they can come and investigate. All of our property is the best for residences at Harvey. It is on the Academy Addition that the President of the Harvey Prohibition Club resides. It is on the Academy Addition that Emma Smith DeVoe, of Harvey, and President of the Equal Suffrage Association, has purchased. The Harvey Academy is located on Academy Addition. At a mass-meeting of Harvey citizens called by the Board of Education, Tuesday, May 17, it was voted to locate the Harvey High School there.

The sale of our property is not limited to women (we believe in EQUAL RIGHTS and prefer to live where both sexes have an equal chance). We sell to men or women alike, and at the same price, but we do insist on all purchasers being

TEMPERANCE MEN OR WOMEN

The last election in Harvey settled the question of its remaining as it was originally proposed by us

A NO SALOON TOWN

PLATS AND PRICE LISTS FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

Academy Addition is the nearest point to the World's Fair, only twenty minutes' ride on Illinois Central railroad and has an elegant depot on the property at 147th street. It is also only four blocks from the Grand Trunk depot and the same to the Chicago Central depot. It comes down almost to the VERY GEOGRAPHICAL CENTER OF HARVEY and has over half a mile of beautiful frontage on the Calumet river.

INCREASE OF VALUES

Of the many lots we have sold we have seen prices advance in some cases from $400 per lot to $800, $200 lots to $400, etc., and in every instance there has been a good increase of values and, as regards values, Harvey is in its infancy.

"Immediate Attention."

PAINTERS CARPENTERS AND MECHANICS WANTED

100 HOUSES WANTED

LADIES WANTED

AT ONCE—in the Factories at Harvey; must be TEMPERANCE MEN who can come to live and be citizens. We have a continual demand for workmen in this growing town, where nearly $5,000,000 has already been invested in manufacturing industries, and where millions more are coming.

AT ONCE—in Harvey to house the families of men who work in the factories, who are now obliged to go to other towns to live. This is an opportunity for the investment of money seldom offered.

To build and run boarding-houses for the accommodation of the workmen who have no homes.

Write us immediately for full information in regard to the above, or come at once and investigate. We have never failed to get work for all who have purchased property of us.

WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO., 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

P. S.—We will pay the actual Railroad fare of all who come from their homes to Chicago, to the amount of and not exceeding 2 1-2 per cent of what they purchase of us while here.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Directors' Meeting 8
Et Tu Brute 8
Scholarships for School Children 8
A Young Woman Journalist 8
THE WATCH-TOWER 9
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Compensations. By Emma Seabury 2
British Women's Temperance Association—Welcome to Lady Henry Somerset 2
The Church and the World's Fair. By Mrs. S. M. I. Henry 3
Why Stand Ye Idle? By Helen M. Mason 4
Lady Henry Somerset to the Women's Liberal League of England 5
CORRESPONDENCE:
Editorial Correspondence—A Day in Chinatown 5
"God's Heart is the Sanitarium of the Universe" 6
Temperance Temple Items 6
PRESIDENT'S COLUMN 6
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, "Dead! Both My Boys!" 7
Grisley's Court 7
QUEEN'S GARDENS:
Croakers and Fretters 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
New Jersey—Louisiana Convention—Idaho—Missouri—Minnesota—Texas—News in a Nutshell—Temperance Hospital Receipts 10, 11, 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
Treasurer's Report 12
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 13, 15, 16
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Black, Blue and Gray 14
David's Decoration Day 14
Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner—Soft-Shelled Nuts 14
KERNELS 15

Our Library Table.

PAMPHLETS RECEIVED.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF A PHYSICIAN, by John Ellis, M. D. Hahnemann Publishing House, Philadelphia.

HOW TO MAKE OVER OLD DRESSES, by Augusta Prescott. The Home Book Company. Box 3629, New York.

THE SOWER. Bible and Tract Depot, Toronto, Canada.

THE MORNING STAR TO THE MILLENNIUM, OR HEADLIGHT PROHIBITION MOVEMENT, by Thos. Hanna. Hann & Adair, Columbus, O.

FREEDOM OF THOUGHT AND OF SPEECH. by William Mackintire Salter. Charles H. Kerr & Co., 175 Dearborn St., Chicago.

THE ACCURACY OF THE BIBLE IN THE LIGHT OF SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE. An address by Rev. J. S. Wrightmoor, Xenia, Ohio.

OUR DANGER SIGNAL, by Capt. J. E. Ray, Asheville, N. C.

THE LIFE OF LAURENCE OLIPHANT. Harper & Brothers have recently issued in two volumes, the life of this gifted man and of his equally remarkable wife. The diapason of Laurence Oliphant's life is phenomenally broad, ranging from a dinner with the queen at Windsor Castle to the peddling of strawberries in the colony of the impostor Harris at Brocton, New York; from the companionship of the wittiest and most cultured men and women in the metropolis of the world to that of the rudest farm laborers in the western republic. The controlling force of the minds of Mr. and Mrs. Oliphant was the purpose to know the spiritual secrets of God. To this they devoted their time, talents, prestige, wealth and reputation. The story of the bondage of these two bright, pure spirits to that strange man, Thomas Lake Harris, is one of the saddest chapters in the history of religious hallucination. If Laurence Oliphant had not been a man of thorough education, and if he had not traveled the world over as a journalist and a diplomatist; if he had not been a member of parliament and associated with such minds as Lord Elgin, and the prime ministers of Great Britain during a lifetime, the wonder would be less that the obscure socialist and self-constituted religious teacher should have thrown his thrall around him. As an author of famous books and contributor to the leading magazines and quarterlies of Great Britain, Laurence Oliphant is well known. As a colonizer of the Jews in Palestine, his efforts have been admired by Christian people; and it is due him to believe that in all he has said or done, incomprehensible as the religious part of it is, he was actuated by motives high and pure, for the sake of which he was willing to put aside the prospect of a brilliant parliamentary career and the enjoyment of great wealth. The names of his three most singular books are: MASOLLAM, A PROBLEM OF THE PERIOD; SYMPNEUMATA, OR EVOLUTIONARY FORCES NOW ACTIVE IN MAN; SCIENTIFIC RELIGION, OR HIGHER POSSIBILITIES OF LIFE AND PRACTICE THROUGH THE OPERATION OF NATURAL FORCES. His motto was the last lines of Goethe's "Faust." "Das ewig weibliche zieht uns hinan."

Second only to lives in their influence, are books—the silent records of deeds done in the flesh. Fresh from the press in its fair binding comes to the Library Table, A YOUNG WOMAN JOURNALIST, A MEMORIAL TRIBUTE TO JULIA A. AMES, edited by Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Very faithfully, very justly, very reverently have the contents of these pages been gathered up since the life so briefly lived, yet so full of promise, has passed on. Aside from that portion consisting of Miss Ames' own writings, the volume is made up of testimonies from those who knew her best—testimonies whose truthfulness will be vouched for by the host of friends whose tributes to the "young woman journalist" have not been printed in black and white. These witnessings to the nobility of purpose, the breadth of thought, the wealth of love and generosity, the height and depth of the piety of this young life, will be an inspiration to many a girl in search of the secret, "How to Win." From Miss Ames' pen are extracts from her journal kept while in Europe, and two addresses delivered by her. Especially full of interest are the former, written as they were out of the new experiences and thoughts of the days of travel. Portraits of Miss Ames, Miss Willard, and Lady Henry Somerset, with views of the interior of Rest Cottage and Eastnor Castle, complete a volume that is surely destined to enter thousands of homes and incite thousands of hearts to higher living.

The frontispiece in the May number of THE ARENA is a picture, with autograph of Frances E. Willard. Miss Willard contributes an article in this issue, taking for her text Lord Tennyson's words: "The woman's cause is man's." We quote one brief paragraph: "All men are sons of women, all women are daughters of men. They have, between them, but one great river of blood, one great battery of brain. They can have no separate history. They have no separate destiny, for the degradation of one has evermore dragged down the other, and in raising one we lift the other. Heredity is with us in its teachings, for the finest survivals of women inherit their father's gifts, and men the gifts of their mothers."

"Felix Austria" is a thoughtful and instructive contribution from the pen of Emil Blum, Ph. D., who, having lived in that country for fourteen years, is eminently fitted to speak concerning it. The following statements are worthy of consideration: "Although Austri-Hungary (its new political term) appears to be, at the present time, a quiet, peaceful, prosperous, well-governed, constitutional, dual monarchy, it is, in fact, financially and socially bankrupt, rotten, ruined, governed absolutely by privileged classes, and a battle-field of parties and nations, who are led by the most extreme centrifugal efforts." . . .

Samuel Leland Powers and Solomon Schindler present in separate papers a sharp discussion of the pros and cons concerning "The Use of Public Ways by Private Corporations."

The Arena Publishing Company, Boston, Mass. Per annum, $5.00.

Publisher's Notes.

ON JUNE 2, 1892.

Did you read the editorial in THE UNION SIGNAL last week, on page 8, in which Miss Willard enumerated the good things in store for you which the issue of June 2 will carry? We repeat:

"We shall have articles from the great lights of that full yet sorrowful world of philanthropy and reform which is daily growing larger. Our own Mrs. Barney, who has no equal in recounting the lives, the sorrows, and the victories wrought out in police stations and in jails; Mrs. Littell, the well-known police matron, who pioneered that great work in Chicago, and others will write for the special number. We shall have a picture and sketch of Miss Casseday, reclining on the little bed which she has not left for more than a quarter of a century, also a view of her new Rest Cottage; we have asked Mary T. Lathrap and Mary Lowe Dickinson for poems. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore will write of the woman's prison in Massachusetts. Dr. Henry Bannister, an expert in the treatment of the insane, will send us an article. There will be Bible readings for prisoners; helpful stories, showing the power of God in the overthrowing of physical, mental and moral disabilities. Indeed, a "feast of fat things," good for all to taste, and especially encouraging and helpful to those in whose interest this number will be prepared."

And this is her opinion:

"We think that white-ribboners in this and other countries will be glad to circulate the paper on that day in all institutions set apart to the defective, dependent and delinquent classes."

And her hope:

"We hope that the local unions will soon send in their orders, as this number is to be distinguished by an immensely large edition. We call upon every member in every village, town and city of the United States to think of those who are shut in, lonely and sorrowful, and then determine upon a canvass of your community, and there enthrone the influence of the light-bringing and light-giving UNION SIGNAL in tens of thousands of new hearts. Even though you are not able to circulate this special number on the day mentioned, will you not make up your minds that every hospital, asylum, home for the friendless, and most particularly of all, every prison, shall have this number dated June 2?"

Orders are already reaching us in goodly numbers, but we fear that some may delay so late that the issue will be insufficient, and some may be disappointed after all. Repeatedly attention was called to the need of sending in orders for the May 22 Sunday-school lesson early so that proper provision for them might be made; but after all nearly 2,000 came too late to be filled. Again we urge immediate attention to this matter. We can only offer them at the low price of $1 per 100 when we are enabled to print extra numbers without changing the press. Address in ordering,

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

The last number of the Library Series for the little folks (and exceedingly interesting it will be to grown-up folks) is "Child Life Abroad," containing a poem by Miss Lathbury, called, "A Spinning Song," and sketches showing how children live in Mexico. India, Turkey, Germany, Spain, Japan, Ireland and at different places in other countries, written by travelers and foreigners. Price only 10 cents in paper covers. Every child-reader should own it. Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS WANTED.

In every W. C. T. Union, and in every town, for the following books, Miss Willard's Autobiography,

Glimpses of Fifty Years.

Childhood, Its Care and Culture,

By Mary Allen West, well known everywhere as an educator and writer.

A Classic Town,

By Miss Frances E. Willard, being a description of the founding of Evanston, its growth, the development of the great M. E. university of the northwest, containing, also, sketches and pictures of leading bishops and divines. It shows, too, what a town may become when founded in righteousness and established in the principles of prohibition.

A Young Woman Journalist,

Which illustrates how a young woman made a success in early life—an inspiration to all others.

Send for description and terms to

SUBSCRIPTION BOOK DEPARTMENT,
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

IN 1881, the production of brandy in California was 362,174 gallons, and in 1891, 1,470,525 gallons.

ACCORDING to Mr. Axel Gustafson, the two banner European countries for freedom of commerce and industry—Switzerland and Holland—are also the most advanced in restricting the alcoholic drink traffic.

HONEST WORK HAPPY HOMES

Workingmen Can Pay for a Home by Working in the Factories at

WANTED!

CARPENTERS CAR BUILDERS
CAR REPAIRERS
FOUNDRYMEN
BOILER-MAKERS
LABORERS AND

MEN, BOYS AND GIRLS
AT THE BELLAIRE STAMPING CO.
FOR DRAWING PRESSES AND SPINNING LATHS.

HARVEY

All persons desiring to change their location for the better, should address all communications to

THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

BECAUSE

THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION has a contract with the Factories by which preference in employing help is given to those who live on land owned or controlled by THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION, OR ITS GRANTEES.

HERE IS THE CONTRACT. READ IT.

"And the said party of the first part in consideration of the agreements herein contained on the part of THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION, hereby covenants and agrees that it will at all times in hiring employes give preference to persons living upon land owned or controlled by THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION or its grantees, and that it will, so far as practicable, limit its employment of help to persons living upon land owned or controlled by said HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION, or its grantees."

THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION are the founders of Harvey, a temperance manufacturing town of unparalleled growth. THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION is the only company or association that has subdivided and is selling the original subdivided lots in Harvey. Other subdivisions, or additions, and there are at least five of them, are wholly outside of the village of Harvey, and are NOT IN ANY WAY connected with the manufactories in the village of Harvey.

We will pay your actual railroad fare from your home to Chicago and return, providing it does not exceed 2½ per cent of what you purchase of us while here. Our pamphlet explains everything—write for it—also plats and full information. Call on or address

THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

819 TO 825 THE ROOKERY, COR. LA SALLE AND ADAMS STS., CHICAGO, ILL.

P. S. A beautiful Columbian Exposition Souvenir, containing full views and descriptions of the World's Fair Buildings, sent free upon application.

Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVII. CHICAGO, May 26, 1892. Number 21.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

A frightful explosion occurred in a Hartford, Conn., fireworks factory, May 21.

Dr. Alice B. Stockham arrived in San Francisco, May 21, from her trip around the world.

The King's Daughters' Circles of Illinois opened their state convention at Springfield, May 25.

An epidemic of virulent cholera, causing one hundred deaths a day, is reported from Egypt.

Six people were killed outright and many were injured in a railway collision near Pine Bluff, Ark.

Snowstorms and blizzards added to the suffering in the flooded region of the Northwest, Friday and Saturday.

Rev. Wm. C. Young, D. D., of Danville, Ky., was made the moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly.

The 117th anniversary of the Carolinian declaration of independence was celebrated at Charlotte, N. C., May 20.

A dispatch from Madrid states that Spain has canceled its prohibition of American pork, which has been in force many years.

Reports place the number of homeless at eight thousand and the dead at twenty-five, the results of the inundation at Sioux City, Iowa.

Churches of all denominations were opened to Presbyterian preachers, in attendance at the General Assembly at Portland, Oregon, last Sunday.

The Czar and Czarina of Russia arrived at Copenhagen, May 24, for the purpose of attending the golden wedding of the King and Queen of Denmark.

Seven workmen were crushed by the falling of the roof of a Pittsburg, Pa., church last Saturday. This church was known as the "Old Home" and was the birthplace of the Murphy temperance movement.

The differences between Canada and Newfoundland are amicably settled by the acceptance of Canada's offer by the governor of Newfoundland. This is a happy termination of what promised to be an unprofitable tariff war.

Professor Wm. C. Richards, frequently called the "Faraday of America," a widely known scientific lecturer, author and poet, and for many years a Baptist pastor, came to the close of his busy life, in Chicago, Thursday, May 19, aged seventy-four years.

The tenth annual meeting of the woman's department in connection with the sixty-sixth anniversary of the American Home Missionary Society (Congregational), began May 25, in Washington, D. C. Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer replied to the address of welcome, and Mrs. C. L. Goodell, of St. Louis, gave a Bible reading.

The liquor sellers of flooded Sioux City presented a novel proposition to the mayor. They had arranged to create a fund of $10,000 to be used by the city in repairing flood damage to bridges, etc., provided they were allowed to re-open their business. They offered to pay one-third cash and the balance in installments, besides a monthly fifty dollar license fee to the city treasury. The mayor positively refused to consider or receive the proposition.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET states by cablegram that her sketches must intermit till the pending English elections are over.

THE distinction was made by one speaker in the Federation of Clubs that philanthropic organizations are aggressive, and the women's clubs progressive. We are glad, indeed, to see so many women grouped in the two sets of guilds, and to know that they are so truly sympathetic in words and deeds. Mrs. Augusta Stevens, of Portland, Me., at the head of the literary clubs there, made this valuable statement: "Ladies, speak extempore; manuscript is not a good conductor of electricity."

AT ITS recent state convention in Danville, Ill., the People's party adopted the following with great enthusiasm:

Resolved, That we demand that the legislature submit to a vote of the people as a separate issue the subject of an amendment to the state constitution allowing to women the full right of suffrage.

We wish each state would work up this and the prohibition resolution separately—then, when the representatives of all the states are gathered in national convention, both measures would be adopted because the whole is not greater than its parts. This is the way that all advances are made, by steadily, tirelessly, patiently "inching along."

UNLESS our brethren at Omaha make haste, the Methodist Protestant church promises to be the first to win the goal of ecclesiastical justice for women. That staunch white-ribboner of eighteen years standing, Rev. Eugenia St. John, an ordained minister, is one of the delegates to the General Conference now in session at Westminster, Md., and two other women are on the list. All the western delegates, as usual—because "Westward the star of empire takes its way!"—are in favor of admitting these delegates to the seats to which they have been regularly elected, and the outcome promises to be progressive.

REV. DR. BLANCHARD, first president of Knox College, and, until succeeded by his son, last president of Wheaton College, invested forty-six years for the cause of higher education in the prairie state. He was staunch and true, with plenty of granite in the backbone and an abundance of iron in the blood. He championed every good cause, marched at the front of the regiment; was the husband of a woman worthy in brain and heart to share his work; the father of sons and daughters who are all following his sturdy steps, and was transferred to celestial scenes of labor, May 14, 1892, as we count time.

THE People's party is not growing apace. Mr. Gompers and his wage-workers will not come in because Mr. Powderly and his did not stay out; and Mr. G.'s forces stand in proportion to Mr. P.'s as ten to one. In Rhode Island the "People's" had less than two hundred votes at the recent election—while the Prohibitionists had about eighteen hundred. In Louisiana there was no rally for their side, though they had hoped for it. The cities are not going with them. Even in the South—for the sake of which they played Judas to prohibition and woman's ballot—"the good (?)old Democratic party" is likely to hold its own, under the pressure of race issues. Meanwhile the friends of a national reform movement have called their meeting for June 28 in Cincinnati—the day before the Prohibition party meets. Let us be there and by all means let us be there when the Prohibitionists meet in political council. Then with "Reformers," "Home Protectionists" or "Liberals" on our banner, let us march to victory with —— and —— for our candidates.

THE closing exercises of Garrett Biblical Institute, theological department of Northwestern University, Evanston, were held May 5. There were thirty-seven theological graduates, of whom one was Miss Anna M. Gleason, of Wisconsin, who was given the valedictory, her subject being, "An Unclassified Order" (that is, women). Miss Gleason has sustained herself admirably throughout her course of study, and has won the universal admiration and good-will of her instructors and fellow students.

THE liquor dealers own Chicago and every large city on the continent. Their chains are riveted more closely every day. The latest is a vote of 43 to 17, whereby they have defeated in Chicago's city council a bill, which, after explicitly stating that it did not interfere with existing saloons, provided that in any block where a majority of the buildings is devoted exclusively to residence purposes, it shall be necessary, in order to obtain license, to prove that a majority of the property owners and householders have signed the saloon-keeper's application. During the progress of debate, previous to the defeat of this ordinance, it was pointed out that livery stables, hospitals, etc., must obtain permission of the property holders. But then, they lack one persuasive quality which the saloon supremely has—it is the premium pet of politics.

WHILE obviously unnecessary, it is our pleasant privilege to call attention to our new and beautiful dress. The appearance of the new costume is so radically different from any that THE UNION SIGNAL has previously worn, that we are confident it is greeted with equal surprise and gladness by our readers. For clearness and readability, we do not think the body type can be improved. It is a large facial brevier, cast in the foundry especially for THE UNION SIGNAL, and charmingly elucidates the old adage "clear as print." Every letter on the entire twenty pages is new; even in the advertising departments, where many papers thrust in old, worn type, will be found fresh, artistic faces supporting the reliable gothic and old styles which experienced advertisers favor. A new feature of particular gratification is the fresh department heads, which are largely the work of a lady artist who is a regular member of the SIGNAL force. These are not perfected as yet, and a few will be entirely changed before another issue, but in our eager desire to dress up our beloved paper in its new spring costume, parts of which have been ready a long time, we have been obliged to insert some unsatisfactory work. This will all be remedied in time. The slight increase in the width of the columns will infringe for the present on the margins, but the new stock of paper which has been ordered will be wide enough to obviate that difficulty. The press work will not be perfect, for the first or second issues, perhaps, but we can promise the very best mechanical execution as soon as the various parts learn to accommodate themselves to each other's convenience. Our lady readers will readily acquiesce in the statement that a new dress is seldom, if ever, perfect without being returned at least once to the dressmaker's hands, and fitted to the form by actual wear. It would be difficult to portray just the amount of thought and labor attending the entire re-robing of a paper like THE UNION SIGNAL, but when it is remembered that every single piece is new, and has yet to become acquainted with its fellows, to act harmoniously in its assigned place, some idea may be formed of what has been involved in this great change.

COMPENSATIONS.

BY EMMA SEABURY.

A shadow drifts over the landscape,
And hangs like a pall o'er the scene,
It lies over meadow and woodland,
And darkens the shady ravine.
But the light that flows in has a glamor,
A softer, more roseate glow,
And the charm of an undulous glory,
It knew not an hour ago.

Those blossoms are often the fairest,
That soonest come after the snow,
The songs of the birds are the sweeter,
For the silence of winter, I know.
The stars are never so welcome,
As after the tempest is gone;
The damp and the gloom of the midnight,
Are the dew and the splendor of dawn.

The rarest of all of our pleasures,
Is shot from the quiver of pain,
Our joys are the gifts of our sorrows,
As the rainbow is that of the rain;
And our passions, that move us and thrill us
With ecstacy, throb with our fears,
Have their holiest office in giving
For holiest baptism, tears.

So friendship is not worth possessing,
Until it is tested and tried;
The fabrics with light interwoven
With shade will the longest abide.
Let us mingle the threads in the future,
Since the impress of shadow is there,
So skillfully, even the angels
May say that the texture is fair.

Pittsburg, Kan.

BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION.

WELCOME TO LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

A crowded and most enthusiastic meeting of members of this Association, and of delegates from the various provincial and other branches, was held at Memorial Hall, London, on Tuesday evening, May 3, 1892, for the purpose of formally and publicly extending a welcome to Lady Henry Somerset on her return to England after a tour for temperance work and experience in America, and for the purpose of presenting to that lady a written address from the members of the executive committee.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Docwra was in the chair, and was supported on the platform by a large group of well-known workers in the temperance cause. The chairman then said: "It is with no common feelings of pleasure that I preside on this occasion to welcome our honored president after her lengthened trip to America. We realize the widespread interest in the work in which she has engaged, and it is a great pleasure to the British Women's Temperance Association to meet representatives from kindred associations who bid our president a hearty welcome home.

"We have to-night many distinguished visitors whom we also cordially welcome. We have here Mrs. Lodge, the representative of Hobart W. C. T. U.; we have Mrs. Mackintosh, of Porte Elizabeth, South Africa; we have Mrs. Woody, and Miss Reynolds, of America; we are also favored with the presence of Miss Gould, the granddaughter of Neal Dow; we have Miss Helen Hood, of Chicago, and Miss Richardson, the daughter of John Grubb Richardson.

"We receive this year, for the first time, a delegate from the Channel Islands, three branches having been established in Guernsey last autumn. We also have deputies from the south of Ireland for the first time—a delegate from Limerick is amongst us. Our faithful allies in Belfast also send representatives. We have contingents from Scotland and Wales and from each of the counties of England, with the exception of Huntingdon and Shropshire. We have received the names of two hundred and forty-seven delegates who expected to be present. The record of the year's work is one of steady growth. Fifty-nine new branches have been affiliated to the National Association, and eighty-four others have been united, showing a total of five hundred an seventy-seven branches, or an increase of seventy-seven in the year. We rejoice, Lady Henry Somerset, to welcome you home to a prospering association.

"Our income has not kept pace with the growth of our association, the sum received last year being only a little over £1,149—an amount, I believe, that is spent on intoxicating drink in about five minutes of every day. It is an ambition of mine to raise the income of our association to the amount spent on intoxicating liquor every quarter-hour."

Mrs. Steward presented Lady Henry Somerset with the formal address from the executive committee, which read as follows:

To Lady Henry Somerset, President of the British Women's Temperance Association:

We, the Executive Committee of the B. W. T. A., desire to express to you, our honored president, our heartfelt pleasure in welcoming you home after your prolonged visit among our sister workers in America; and also to record our deep gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the kind care and gracious protection extended to you in your journeys, both by sea and land. We earnestly pray that the strength, physical and mental, which has been granted to your ladyship amid your recent varied experiences, may be sustained for your renewed work at home, and that our God may abundantly bless that work to the prosperity of the cause of temperance, and every other righteous effort for the welfare of humanity and the coming of His glorious kingdom. Yours, ever sincerely,

(Signed by twenty-four members of the executive committee.)

Mr. Robert Rae, on behalf of the National Temperance League, presented the cordial welcome of that body to her ladyship, remarking inter alia as a caution, that while the Americans were a shrewd people and knew well what was suited to their own nation and people, it might not always be a good thing to adopt the same methods of action in England which had proved successful in America. Rev. Dr. Dawson Burns spoke on behalf of the United Kingdom Alliance; Mr. Stephen Shirley represented the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union and conveyed the welcome of the members to Lady Henry Somerset; Mr. W. S. Caine welcomed the guest of the evening as president of the British Temperance League; Mrs. Sheldon Amos and Mr. Walter McLaren, M. P., and Mr. Wm. Johnston, M. P. for Belfast, having joined in the general chorus of welcome; Mr. Joseph Malins, Grand Worthy Chief Templar, spoke as the representative of one hundred thousand adult and juvenile members, after which Mr. Frederick Sherlock spoke for the Church of England Temperance Association, and Mr. William Noble expressed the good wishes of the supporters of the Blue Ribbon movement.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S ADDRESS.

Madame President, ladies and gentlemen, and dear comrades in that society in which we are all loved as one, I thank you from my heart for the welcome that you have given me.

To-night I return to this home circle—a home circle dearer to me perhaps than my own fireside in one sense, because I believe we are bound by ties enduring and strong which life and death cannot sever, that do not attach us only to this world, but which anchor us in eternity. As I continued my journey in that new and wider world, I have had this Association constantly in my mind, and have turned over in my thoughts all that I could find for its profit, all that I could avoid and all that which I thought might have hindered or in anywise done it harm. As I have been moulding my ideas as a mother moulds for her child, I have only thought to bring before you, which is after all the best I can bring—the experience of that new land. (Cheers.)

There have been words spoken to-night which will always remain in my heart. When I heard of those little children's greetings from the lips of that one who has been associated with them so long, I felt that we are but blazing a way through the forest, and as we lead our troops to-day we hear the muffled music of the steps that tell us that victory is following on our track. Those children are marching in their serried ranks, united by the bond of happy union, and you and I are making that way easy. We have to take every means, we have to take every care, that the children of to-morrow shall have a better time than the children of to-day.

We are glad to speak our kindly greetings to-night, and to know how we are bound by an interest holy and blessed. We are come for deliberation and counsel. Let that deliberation and counsel be so sanctified by the spirit of God in our hearts that all shall have the touch Divine. Of what use would be deliberation and counsel were all agreed? But let us meet in such a spirit that to-morrow's conference shall have on its front the stamp of God's presence, and that His power shall be so felt in our meetings that all our purposes shall be guided by His divinest wisdom. As I traveled through America, from the moment I landed, I was received by women with kindly outstretched hands, who took me to their hearts because I was the representative of a cause dear to them; from the moment I put my foot on the American shore, I was surrounded by all that could give me happiness and peace; when I went to those immense mass-meetings, fifty-two of which I addressed in my six months' stay—my path was strewn with flowers on every hand, and all that could be brought to make that stay delightful was heaped upon me by the women of America. I felt that it was not for me only; every woman here toiling in this great cause, all the hands that have been held out to help the little ones and lift the fallen, all the lives that have been consecrated to this cause in England, all the human throbbing in this land to-day, inspired by the divine joy, all these received that welcome through me. All these things I have brought back from America—the kindly tokens of their life—the picture of Miss Willard, the great banner which they sent with loving greetings to the women of England, all these things are not my own, they are the tokens of the American women's love for the women working in the same way in England.

It is characteristic of this age that evil is no longer considered a necessity. That I believe to be the greatest credo that the nineteenth century has formulated. We have all along said that it is necessary that sin should be; that it is necessary that suffering should exist; but to-day we see that there is no such necessity according to God's laws, and by God's help we are to see that that necessity shall have no record. It is upon these lines that we are working. We are breaking down the barriers that have long hedged up creeds and nationalities. We are going into wider fields and realizing that which we have so long been looking for, that men and women everywhere, call themselves by what name they will, let them inhabit whatever country under the sun, are bound together in that grand name, humanity.

And the reason for the great hope that beats in my heart lies just in this; that whatever be our life's work to-day, whether it be to rid our country from the slavery of drink, whether it be to lift woman to her true place in the economy of God, whether it be to carry the instruction to the little ones, that is needed on the scientific basis of those principles we believe in, whatever be our life's work, in every clime and speaking every tongue, there are a thousand thousand tongues that bid us Godspeed, and a thousand thousand hands stretched out to help. The patriot, as one representing his country, the philanthropist pleading for the needy, will soon be figures belonging to the past age. To-morrow we shall all be in power; the hand worker, the home-keeper, the philanthropist and the patriot will all stand equal; with all titles of the past banished under the great glories of the one to which we are all looking—that of Christian citizen. Everything along the trend of life is leading up to this holy consummation.

As I walked through the Bowery of New York, and saw the miseries there in that modern city, I felt that the New World had some of our greatest difficulties to meet and some of our weightiest problems to face; when you see the on-marching growth of that splendid country, the power and the riches of those Western cities that arise almost as by magic from the prairies, then we realize that the greatest curse in America is this same miserable liquor traffic, and that their mightiest problems are the same with which we have to do battle over here. We draw a long breath when we get to America because we feel that we are at any rate in a country where there is room for everybody.

We dare not stand on any platform in England and say that the drink traffic is the sole source of poverty; indeed, we weaken our cause if we do. There is no statement that does so much harm to our holy work as this. There are correlating causes that we need to take into consideration. There is the great labor question, there is the housing of the poor, and there are a thousand other things that belong to the work of the true reformer. In America you realize that the liquor traffic has done a harm which is probably almost incalculable, because there is room and work for all strong and industrious men and women, and yet there are men and women struggling even in great and prosperous cities like Chicago. They have difficulties to contend with of which we know nothing. The great alien population with which America is flooded renders it one of the most difficult countries for philanthropic work. You talk glibly of America, but America means the problems of four or five nationalities rolled into one. We send our hopeless ones over there and expect the Americans to reform these men and women. We are giving them a desperate task. There is probably nothing more unyielding to deal with than the flood of an idle, incoming population. Again, the Chinese quarter presents a problem with which we have nothing equal. When I went into that quarter and realized how heathen ideas had been inculcated and fastened upon that population, I thanked God that we had not, with all our perplexities, that one. Americans are doing noble work against the difficulties which other nations have forced upon them.

Again, we have to remember that there is a vast German population in that country and that no nation there upholds this liquor traffic more than these Germans do. The Americans, proper, have, I think, a very strong and serious view of this question; yet they are surrounded with obstacles on all sides. But there is one feature in America, that I tell you, friends, if I could see in England to-day, I would willingly sacrifice my right hand; nay, more, I would give almost everything I possess in life. Go where you will in the lowest quarters of New York or in Chicago; go where you will through any city in that great country and you will never witness scenes in any saloon that at all equal what you see in this country, because the American women are sober women. You may go right through the saloons of America and no woman would dare open that door save one who had cast away every rag of respectability. It would be impossible, in an afternoon's walk, for a young man and woman to turn in together to take a drink. There is a popular sentiment in America on the question of women drinking and I would that only one-third of such sentiment as that existed here. During the six months that I spent there only at one table d'hote did I ever see a woman touch wine or beer. I have never seen a woman in any private house put one single drop of wine into her glass and drink it. It would be well for us if the work we had done could claim such results as that.

In 1873-74, the spirit of God descended upon the people of America in Pentecost of blessing; that great Crusade swept through the land of which we, to-day, are reaping the results in England. But American women knew this enthusiasm could not last, they knew it was only the power of God baptizing them for service, and as they met in the prayerful spirit which had guided them through, they formed that most splendid of all women's organizations with 300,000 members, one in ardor. They have adopted the "do everything" policy, which is the only method that any reform can entertain. They have felt that the liquor traffic was built up by custom, so they followed it into the home; they knew it was hedged by the government, so they followed it in the legislature; they knew that it was set up by false signs, and so they followed it into the schools; the women builded better than they knew in the glorious triumph of having in forty-four of the states—each of them is bigger than our own country—a law making scientific temperance instruction in respect to alcoholics and narcotics mandatory in all schools supported in whole or in part by public funds.

There may be those who differ from this view, but we judge to-day by results. We have no other means of judging. Now I feel sure that it would be absurd to say that because the American women have done well, that out of their mould every work must be turned. But every wise thought in women will say, "Let us examine the methods that have succeeded; let us sift from them the kernel, and let us with impartial mind weave out of their best what we consider needful—ever open to the conviction that possibly our methods have not always, and will not for all eternity be the very best. (Cheers.)

I went to Portland to be the guest of Neal Dow. As we drove through the streets I could not help feeling that although no monument had been erected to that great father of prohibition, those clean and bright streets, the absence of liquor shops, and all that spoke for the glorious reforms he had carried through, were the best monument that could be erected to any man. They had prepared a special treat for me in Portland, for when the authorities knew that I was coming, they saved up all the liquor they had seized during three months in order that I might see it poured out, and a stranger scene I never witnessed. I went to the great city hall and there in the cellars were stored up this confiscated mass of goods. There were the barrels labeled "sugar"; there were the milk and cream cans, and every possible device for smuggling this thing into the state. But it amounted to little more than the goods of one of our public houses. We hear of prohibition being a failure, but I cannot understand how anybody can go through Portland and realize that here is a seaport town with foreign sailors crowding daily to its shores, with all the evils that such a population must bring; and seeing these quiet, bright, clean streets, the wholesome, happy looks of the inhabitants, and the welfare of what was at one time the poorest state in America, and not realize that prohibition is God's greatest gift to man. I was glad to take up those whisky jugs and see it go into the gutter. We have all seen so many men and women go there that I was glad to see a little of the "crather" go there too.

The women of America are vast workers; there came a time when they began to realize that politics meant God in government, and as they realized this they bent their knees and knew that God must stand and reign in the Senate house as well as in the churches; they asked for divine guidance, and that light having come into their hearts, they threw all the influence of their mighty organization to help the men who had come out bravely in political action from the midst of those who were believed to be wrong. That same spirit must permeate our work to-day. Can we ask men to uphold God in government, and then as Christian women have no part in government? We dare not ask the drunkard to be sober unless we have strained every influence to close the whisky door. And so the women of America, amid a storm of opposition, stood firm and struggled for what they believed to be right, and if to-day I should express my sentiments in talking of men who have formed a party for prohibition, I should honestly say that no nobler deed was ever done, and the time shall come when the efforts of that great party shall bring about that for which they fought so long.

We stand to-day on the edge of the same crisis. Everything belongs to God; everything belongs to right.

There is only one question that I need to touch upon just for one second, and I touch it lightly. It is an uncertain plank, perhaps, in our platform, but after what has been said to-night, I dare not let the question that burns through the kingdom to-day, the question of woman's voice in government, go unnoticed. We hear a great deal about the immense advantage we are going to have when we get the popular vote. I thank God I believe that vote will bring an unadulterated blessing on this nation. I look on it as the first streak of dawn upon the horizon. There are people who tell us that the millennium will begin when we get the vote. All we shall then have is justice for the working classes and righteousness for humanity. The struggle in America is just here; we think they have temperance legislation; unless the women can uphold that legislation it is too often null and void. We fight because there is injustice. I hear women who are surrounded by every luxury say, 'I do not want to vote.' No, but the toiling sister in that factory wants to vote. I hear women say, 'What advantage is it going to bring?' None to those in the home circle who have men who love and protect them; but when we read to-day that a man in Durham who killed his wife by striking her on the head with a poker, received only nine months' imprisonment, but that a young girl, in the frenzy of shame that lay before her, under the great Gethsemane of suffering she was called upon to bear alone, although another had equally participated in her sin—who in the misery of that awful moment smothered her newborn babe, received the penalty of death commuted only to penal servitude for life, I say that woman's voice is wanted in this case (cheers), and that the woman's vote to-day means for us home protection. I do not think that any one will ever accuse me of wanting to advocate that women should be unsexed, because I believe that the truest strength of woman is in her womanliness; but I do believe that no man dares to draw a line where the woman's protection of her child shall end.

I look on that principle as no fad; I look on it as one embodying all the principles of the reforms to which we are pledged, because we may get legislation to-morrow, and unless the women's voice is heard in that legislation we shall find that we are very little further forward. I have spoken perhaps in a way that may seem to have dealt with this subject from its secular side. But, my friends, we have arrived at an era when the blessed knowledge has come to us that there is no division between the religious and the secular, that we need to-day Christian citizens in the House of Commons and polling booths just as much as we do in churches and chapels; that we need to read our newspapers in the same spirit as we read our Bibles. If I did not think that this temperance cause was Christ's cause, if I did not believe this reform and all those correlating reforms had the distinct touch of the Divine in them, I would never stand on any public platform to speak again. But I come back more persuaded than ever that we have the great responsibility of knowing how best to act, that we need to look up and above. Let us take what God sends, even though the message be new, if it strikes us that it comes from Himself as a divine gift to us."

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD'S FAIR.

BY MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

How shall we improve the opportunities of the World's Fair?

What is the duty of Christian people toward it?

It is not so much what we do as what we are that tells in results. We conquer in our warfare by what we are, so the first great thing is to be. This Fair is to be an exposition of results: a great harvest home of the world's sowing; that which is greatest of every sort, will, and ought to be, on exhibit.

Let the truth be known. If the liquor traffic, Sabbath desecration, godlessness in general are more mighty among us than Christian principle, then these will be to the fore, and Christ must take the rear. Oh, that it might be demonstrated that love, true Christlike love, is the greatest thing in the world; that the King has power invested in His representatives which is equal to the emergency; and that the exhibit of this era of the world's progress might prove that the progress has really been upward.

But if not so it is time the world knew it. The World's Fair will lay its own peculiar responsibilities upon the church and the nation. The occasion is big with opportunities which cannot be ignored without great loss to the whole world, and more loss to the church. The church, however, is very much in the attitude of the man who slept while his enemy sowed tares in his field. There is indication that she has already lost the opportunity to close the Fair on the Sabbath. That ought to have been done a decade ago. The power that can so easily defy her in the matter of saloons, beer gardens, gambling dens, and houses of prostitution, can well afford to smile at her frantic efforts to require the World's Fair to keep the Sabbath holy.

The church holds the balance of power, however, and, if so be that God is on her side—i. e., if she will truly be on His side—it would not take long to make the administration of the Exposition realize that God had some authority in this matter. If the churches of Chicago would call in the reserves of power that are hers in Jehovah, and close up the places of vice open in her midst to-day, the World's Fair Sabbath-keeping would need no care.

But this would require more than she seems to be willing to invest; and so she sits still and cries over Sabbath desecration that is likely to happen a year from now; and lets the desecration of every day and hour go on. It is so much easier to strike at an evil twelve months away, than a present tense iniquity.

Resolutions to stay away from the Fair, if it is open on the Sabbath, will not save us—will not even palliate our offense against a sin-tortured world. Staying away by the church, and leaving greed and godlessness to have things all their own way, would be cowardice. Going as the world goes, for pleasure and sight-seeing, to join in the push and selfish scramble for best points of observation, would be the greatest hypocricy. We have not time for any of these things; only time for the most earnest loyalty to lost humanity and its great Redeemer, in the use of the occasion that the Fair shall offer to us. Neither white-ribboners nor any other division of the church will have the right to absent themselves from this or any other place that opens to the unthinking masses. The more the Sabbath is disregarded, the more the liquor traffic has sway, the more immorality runs riot, the more surely should we be there in full force and with the full preparation of the gospel. Suppose the entire church should stay away for the sake of giving a testimony against it. It would be only more of the same sort of testimony that some good men now give against the corruption of politics, by refusing to visit the primaries and vote at elections.

I do not know but that she ought to stay away. Surely she ought if she will not go clothed with the spirit of God, to walk as the Son of Man walked. If she goes as the world goes she had better stay away; but then she would lose the opportunity of a lifetime to prove that Christianity among us does mean something, even if in the past we have not lived up to our privileges. Shall we wonder that the men of the world are making their plans with God left out? What else could we expect?

It is foolish to sit in a corner and sulk, because they do not make it easy for us to do the work for our Master. We must simply arise and get our machinery all in the most perfect running order; see that wheels and bands and belts of faith and prayer and works are all properly adjusted to the power; and then stand by and keep things moving. There will be opportunities: I can see them in advance, and if I live and can get to the Fair ground one day in seven (if it opens seven in the week) I shall go on Sabbath.

There will be women, weary, thoughtless, untaught mothers, dragging a flock of crying babes at their skirts,—trying to keep up with the long strides of boorish, perhaps, half-drunken men.

Lying in wait, behind a white-ribbon and the word of the Eternal for a soul—here is a chance; I go up to such a woman and say, in most sympathetic, kindly fashion—"You are tired and the children are; over here is a nice, little resting place for you; a cup of tea, a biscuit. You can put the baby down to sleep, with some one to watch it."

I ought to be able to say that. The whole church ought to make it possible for the W. C. T. U. to scatter her picket line all over the grounds and have a place into which to bring those who would respond to her touch and voice. With a little tact, the acquaintance is begun which will result in salvation, perhaps, to whole families.

There should be a place for a service; quiet, sweet, womanly, for those who are picked up; booklets—not tracts, but dainty souvenirs of the Fair—containing gospel truth, given away, which they will receive and cherish, read and ponder.

There will be men who can be reached by both men and women in such personal work. Some men, however, will only be reached by some such kindly service to wife and children. They will appreciate it, at first, in that it relieves them of an incumbrance on a holiday; but it may be a beginning to saving influence.

I believe the W. C. T. U. should seek a place for a coffee house with Mrs. Russell, of Minneapolis, in charge, which should serve meals all the week for making money, and on the Sabbath, if the Fair is open on that day, should simply give away a cup of tea and a bun, a glass of milk or lemonade to the tired ones, women and children, old men, any who would accept our shelter, and so come under our influence. I would gladly make that tea, and serve this kind of refreshment all day Sabbath and know that I was doing the most effective gospel work. I could see to it that my motives were understood. It is only a church shorn of her power that will stand appalled at the determination of the commissioners to keep open on the Sabbath. And surely, the W. C. T. U. has had a schooling which should make her quick to see the opportunity and glad to embrace it.

With the machinery halls closed and silent, which I am sure we could obtain, and the active, kindly personal effort that we might make, must make, if we are true to our cause—open gates need not mean any more Sabbath desecration than we have now; and may mean a day hallowed by many as it could have been under no other conditions of their lives.

I think churches of Chicago and vicinity, we, as white-ribboners, are all called to a most earnest inquiry of the Lord and such a consecration as this generation has not known, that we may become ready to meet the flood of humanity, of selfishness and corruption that will roll in upon us; if so be that our God will hear, and save us from coming out of it like a woman, caught unprotected in a summer storm, with all her dainty finery limp and bedraggled. We ought to be remembered by all the world for our graciousness, and dignity as well, and esteemed forever because we have sent people away better than they came. The vicinity of the Temperance Temple, and of the Headquarters of the World's W. C. T. U., in themselves make this demand upon us. It would be too bad to fail.

A SELFISH friend or lover is the unsafest thing in the world. With eyes opened by love, and heart not open wide enough to admit of aught else than self, they see and judge, and sit in judgment, and pass penalty, and the prison houses of such a life are many and awful. The wretch concentered all in self-living shall forfeit fair renown, and, dying, shall go down to the foul dust from whence he sprung, unwept, unhonored and unsung.—F. E. W.

WHY STAND YE IDLE?

BY HELEN M. MASON.

"And they said, Because no man hath hired us."

It is an anomaly,—grotesque if it were not tragic,—the fact of not alone the unskilled and the squalid, but the skilled and learned, the proud and strong, expending their time and talent, their only natural possessions, in looking for work whereby they may appropriate a share of the world's abundance to their needs. It is probably unquestioned that there is no lack of resources for supplying the necessities of all as to food, shelter, clothing, fresh air, pure water and sunlight, as well as an indulgence of the love of the beautiful.

To the development of these resources and the distribution of the product the difficulty pertains. Given, however, that the resources are ample, with the well-known fact that there are many men and women unemployed, it follows, at once, that such a movement among the particles as will bring this vast unused force into active contact with these resources, is the condition of their development and of the production of plenty. That the second essential, the distribution of an abundance in whose production all would have shared, should offer any difficulty, could hardly be looked upon as possible if we were uninitiated. They who worked would eat, and they whose work was most productive would as a direct result enjoy most comfort and most freedom of choice in action. Uninitiated we are not, yet it may be that we are made blind by our wisdom.

If so it is a duty to recover from our mental blindness and to see and say that conditions which tend forcibly to separate the work and workers and to make slaves of those who toil, are indications of the plague. The plague is over Christendom.

It is wisdom that we diagnose this dread disease and find its causes and its destructive methods. Why are there in this country one million men who are willing to work, yet unemployed, while another million derive enormous profits from the control of vast and cheaply conducted industries? And why are wages so low that the brow may sweat and sweat and hardly keep away starvation? The answers are various, and some that often pass current are fallacious. The reply most frequently given to the second query, that competition in the labor market is the cause, that where there are two men to do one man's work or even where there is one too many, the lowest bidders must get the work and none must complain, proves congestion; for in the nature of the case there is not, and cannot be one too many.

The amount of work in the whole world or the whole country requisite to produce and transport the necessaries, and, if you will, the luxuries of life for the whole world or country, is the dividend. The whole number of persons able to do productive work is the divisor. The amount of work to devolve upon a person of average ability is the quotient, and no matter how large the divisor a quotient will result. If this quotient be small, why, so much the better. There will be time left to enjoy the fruits. Not too many workers, but congestion, is the fact; too many in one place, or those who work doing too much.

Water seeks its level, and as long as any portion continues a part of the great moving mass, it goes on seeking its level, sparkling and songful. Accidentally an obstruction separates a portion from the mass,—it finds an isolated level of its own, and is soon rendered stagnant and reeking.

A local obstruction to the venous system of a man may cause a whole limb to become swollen and the body sick. The stagnant pool must be set free by cutting away the hindrance to its flow. The circulation in the physical system must be restored by wise treatment in harmony with the conditions.

The hindrance to a free movement in what is sometimes called the labor market produces diseased conditions that pertain not to a single member only. The slums are sick with inflammation and ulcer, the avenue with engorgement and stupefaction. To the whole body help must come, and the right circulation of the life fluid can alone bring relief. The important questions are, What causes the congestion? and How shall it be overcome?

The particles of water are inanimate. So are the obstacles that impede its flow; and mechanical means must remove them. The right movement among the particles of this other mass—this mass of latent labor seeking its affinity of healthy work—is not to come through causes external to itself, but through intelligent and conscious effort, the intelligence residing in the particles themselves. The impediments, too, are quite often the result of intelligent and purposed action, though the action, it is pleasant to hope, of an intellect that is childish only, and not permanently dwarfed and distorted.

Now, plainly, why is the "labor market" locally "overcrowded," bringing idleness to many and low wages to many more?

One answer is that much work is left undone which in common conscience should be done by the municipality or the commonwealth. Cities are supposed, in a greater or less degree, to be capable of self-government, and are given in such a degree self-governing power—but they should be required to surrender their charters if they cannot keep themselves clean. Whether for the general health or for the health of those who cannot rise out of their filthy surroundings, every street and alley and cellar should be kept at all times cleansed and burnished. I do not say just how this end should be compassed. I only say and expect all to agree that it is a palpable need, and associated with the fact that those who suffer most cannot by single-handed effort meet it, that it partly answers the question why there is a local surplus of latent labor, by showing also a surplus of latent work.

The second answer is perhaps of greater import than the first; and a figure forces itself forward to help in giving it expression. Light—the full light of day—is the emblem of the thing we need to bring these estranged elements into contact and transfigure the face of the earth. Now do not read me faster than I write, and say I am placing light in front of love,—knowledge before the Golden Rule. I protest I am not, for love must bring the light.

The particles of the great moving or stagnant mass of labor are men and women; and men and women have ever walked best when they have walked in the light; but these grope in darkness or follow a deceiving light, and so they gather in knots and clots and waste their energy by the way, instead of each going to his place as does each drop of blood in the healthy system. "Darkness," I think some one asks in surprise, "with dozens of morning papers, advertising columns by the mile, and free libraries and reading-rooms for perusing them?"

Yes, darkness. I say it kindly, but these luminaries bear some likeness to the dark lanterns that thieves carry. The light is all on one side,—the shadows are all one way. One of these alluring lights shines through a transparency that reads, "A Paradise for Workingmen! Good Chance for a Home!! Lots at Low Prices on Easy Payments!!! Plenty of Work for All!!!" and the story of the Spring Valley coal miners is what follows. Other advertisements are of work nearer home, and, as contrasted with the former one—are set out in good faith; but they are a one-sided light still. The forces are out of balance already, congestion pre-exists, children are doing men's work in hundreds of factories, and so two men to do one man's work is a local fact; underbidding and low wages to the successful one follow, and to the other wasted labor, spent in pursuing a thing that has eluded him, and wasted strength from disappointed hopes.

The advertisement that contains the clause, "State wages expected," betrays the hook, yet some one, conscious but discouraged, takes the bait. It is better than nothing, he thinks. They who pay for printer's ink, trim and shade the lamp with an artfulness proportioned to their skill and greed, influenced, too, by the necessity of competing with others who do likewise. What they wish to hide is hidden, but to them the labor supply is an open book. The light must shine both ways and penetrate the corners. Without willingly censuring individuals, but with the endeavor to separate a study of the present state of things from a consideration of personal responsibility for it, shall we not say that one of the great self-evident rights, or rightnesses, is that men and women, able and willing to work and inheriting the universal need to eat and to wear clothes, ought to be able to supply the inherited need by means of the inherited endowment, and that if this is not possible, something is wrong somewhere?

Theoretically, money as a medium of exchange, patents to secure inventors and compensate them for loss of time while producing something that should benefit all, and division of labor, whereby each class of workers brings out a single product, should have lightened all labor, facilitated all exchange, and overcome the obstacles which separate the workers from the work. The hidden reason why they have not done so has been hinted at already, but before we project our lighthouse theory upon the scene, it may be well to look at one other fundamental right or rightness, namely, that those who have the need and not the endowment, are likewise entitled to the supply. The need should have its correlate somewhere and the two should come together.

At first thought, some accustomed to the fact of want unsatisfied will answer, "Their Maker may be responsible, perhaps, but we are not." Well, you think you are responsible in case of a drowning person whom you can rescue. He is helpless, you can help him, and you would expect to be execrated if you did not. He may even have designed his own destruction, or he may be organically helpless, and of no further use to himself, but neither fact releases you. Protracted misery is worse than death, and to the helpless as a class is due from society that consideration which will secure them against hunger, cold and discomfort, and without attacking their liberty. They must not be taken from their natural friends and condemned to an asylum because they are sick or lame. In view of all these things, what shall the projected movement do?

(To be continued.)

LADY HENRY SOMERSET TO THE WOMEN'S LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ENGLAND.

[Politics is in a ferment in England, as everybody knows. Parliament is to be dissolved in June and the elections follow in a few weeks. Lady Henry Somerset has been asked to join the Central Committee of the Women's Liberal League, Mrs. Gladstone, president, and she responds as follows.—EDS.]

LONDON, May 11, 1892.

DEAR MRS. MCLAREN:—In accepting the invitation to join your federation and offer myself for election to your Committee, I think I owe it to myself and you to state clearly why I do so.

For the last seven years I have given all my time and energy to the temperance cause; they have been years of hard work to me, but encouraging, because of the unexampled activity that temperance workers of every order have shown. The churches have engaged in the crusade; politicians, journalists, and men of every profession, creed and class have come into the ranks; the temperance associations have never known such extensive membership or active interest as they can boast to-day.

And yet this work, which has mainly been in the direction of moral suasion, has failed in its immediate object. Statistics conclusively prove that no marked impression has been made on the drinking habits of the country, and the explanation is simple. So long as the surroundings of the poor are blighted by legalized temptation; so long as the number of licensed houses is uncontrolled by the public voice; so long as the tempting facilities for drink and ruin are regulated not with a view to the welfare of the unfortunate class who afford the staple custom of the public house, but only in the interest of the brewer's gains, the habit of temperance cannot make appreciable progress.

But if the movement has not succeeded in making England more sober it has created a strong and overwhelming opinion in favor of public action in the matter. We have long demanded a machinery that shall make public opinion locally effective in checking the most fruitful cause of human misery; and this the party with which your federation is identified has at last promised.

Such legislation, I believe, will be the first step towards emancipating England from her cruel slavery, and when women—experts in all that conduces to a pure and healthy home—have a voice in its working, the success of the movement will be secured.

Both these things are, I understand, professed objects of your federation; they are the objects of all my public work, and only through the success of the Liberal party does there seem any possibility of their enactment. I should be less than sincere if, under the circumstances, I hesitated to offer you my most loyal and devoted co-operation.

Home Rule will, however, practically be the only test question at the next election, I ought therefore candidly to say that as this seems to me not more important than these reforms, I shall feel free to place my principles in this question before my loyalty as a partisan, and shall direct my efforts strenuously against any candidate who is in sympathy with the liquor traffic. Yours in the best bond.

ISABEL SOMERSET.

EVERY man for all men that there may be no hindmost for the devil to take.—F. E. W.

TO ASK a man to sign the pledge, and then teach him that his ballot may be cast for license, high or low, instead of prohibition, is a travesty on human kindness, and an insult to God, whose laws are all prohibitory.—Caroline B. Buell.

CORRESPONDENCE

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A DAY IN CHINATOWN.

Tourists usually visit Chinatown in San Francisco at night, being taken through its worst dens by policemen, and coming away with the impression that what they thus see represents the Chinaman in America, and are ever after Chinaphobists, as their "Golden Gate" guides intended they should be. While in San Francisco I declined to take the regulation Chinatown tour with the rest of the party, feeling that as there was not time to see the better side, it was not fair to see the worse. When returning I hope to see the better side under guidance of Mrs. Nellie Blessing Eyster, who is very active in Chinese mission work; perhaps then I may look in upon China by gaslight.

The day of which I now write was spent in Los Angeles, which has a large Chinese population clustered in narrow streets running down from the old Plaza. On the other side lies the Mexican quarter, while shops of the two nationalities intermingle along Downy avenue, the dividing line between them.

Much mission work is done among the Chinese. The Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, the Methodists, the Baptists and perhaps other denominations, have missions carried on mainly by devoted Christian women; Chinese communicants are found in some of these churches and there is a Chinese church with Chinese pastor and officers. We called upon one of its deacons in his own fine tea and coffee store on one of the principal streets, and found him an affable, intelligent gentleman.

There are schools for Chinese men—in the afternoon for the vegetable men, in the evening for the men working in town—and Sunday-schools as we find them in Eastern cities, except that the boys are not so exacting as there, each claiming a teacher to himself.

"You must not go to Chinatown alone," said one friend. "It is perfectly safe," said another, one of the regular visitors there as well as president of the West End W. C. T. U., and she wrote out the directions for finding the Chinese kindergarten, said to be the only one in the United States. There came a spare day and I determined to fill it with China, and as precious hours would have been consumed in searching for company, I went alone.

The way was long and crooked, the streets were alleys set thick with Chinese shops, and thronged with Chinese men. The houses are usually back of or over the shops, so that no women and children are in sight. There is one exception to this, the dwelling of her whose steps take hold on hell. I saw only one woman during that walk, inquired my way of her, and she directed me aright. Afterward I learned she was one of the very hardest cases in Chinatown.

It was early, and the school-room not open, so I was not quite sure of the place and walked on to the end of the block where stood a house with open doors, rather, the whole front was open; I stepped in and found it a Joss house, with idols ranged around the wall, votive offerings of fruits upon the altar in front of them and quantities of incense sticks ready to be lighted.

Turning back to the schoolhouse, I saw two bright looking little girls running up to it. They were dressed "United States," and so neatly, even stylishly, they would have attracted attention in any public school. They answered my salutation politely, telling me they attended the school, and that if I would go into Mrs. Sing's she would give me the key to the schoolhouse and tell me about it.

Now Mrs. Sing was the one woman in Los Angeles I most wished to see at that moment, for I had heard much of her as a "succorer of many." She is a Christian Chinese, educated in a Methodist Mission Training School, and though the care of her large family does not leave time for actively engaging in mission work now, she is the constant friend and helper of the American women who do the work.

Her husband has been an interpreter, well-to-do and proud, as he ought to be, of his smart wife. He has built her a parlor, the wonder of Chinatown, the scoff of its heathen men. "It cost two hundred dollars," they say; "why do you waste so much on a woman?"

"I make my money in America," he replied, "and intend to spend it here. My wife shall have an American room in which she can receive her American friends." So this room, simple and unpretentious as compared with your parlor, perhaps, stands glorified as proof of a Chinese husband's love. When we visited the Chinese homes and saw how little was done there for the comfort and pleasure of the wives, I did not wonder that this little parlor, where the wife reigns supreme, seemed like a bit of Heaven to the poor, downtrodden woman.

And much of the spirit of Heaven dwells there; thither come hearts oppressed beyond endurance, and find relief in prayer which rolls the burden off at the foot of the great Burden-bearer; perplexed ones come for advice and happy ones for congratulations. As Mrs. Sing is human, doubtless she is sometimes unwise, but the reputation as a good adviser she has earned is shown by a recent incident; a heathen Chinaman and his wife had a quarrel which they nor their heathen neighbors could settle. After long wrangling the man said, "Well, let us go to Mon Sing and whatever she says we will do."

But the children have gathered for the kindergarten and the teacher, Miss Quick, is in their midst. She is the daughter of missionary parents, and was born in Ceylon; she does her work here in the true missionary spirit. This is really more of a primary school than a kindergarten, nearly all the children, of whom there are twelve, having grown beyond kindergarten age and are now learning to read, write and do number work in which they take great delight, as in singing also. In their opening exercises they repeated the ten commandments and the Lord's prayer accurately. Remembering the Joss house at the other end of the block, with its graven images, it touched me deeply to note the fervor with which they repeated the first and second commandments.

At first, I thought all the pupils, except my two little girl friends who first greeted me, were boys. They were dressed in Chinese costume exactly alike, their hair cut and combed in the same fashion, and I could draw no line of distinction between them. Soon however, I "guessed" some of them were girls, and whispered to the teacher, "How do you tell the girls from the boys?" She responded, "By their earrings; girls, even babies and women, always wear them, boys and men, never." After that I was on the lookout for earrings.

This school is under the charge of the Presbyterians, and at the meeting of their woman's board in Los Angeles, this week, its pupils gave some exercises. At the head of their Chinese mission here is Mrs. Chapin, for twenty-one years missionary in China and speaking their language as she does her native tongue. Her husband's failing health sent them back to America and to Los Angeles, but here the whole family are "about their Father's business." The seven children are being educated that they, too, may become missionaries. Mrs. Chapin and her four daughters are ardent white-ribboners, while she gives much of her time to Chinatown.

Mrs. Graham, of the Methodist mission, who works hand in hand with Mrs. Chapin, was also my guide and companion that memorable day. With one, or both, I visited many Chinese homes, where wife and mother "read" with the ladies, just as they do in India or China—first the reading lesson, slowly spelled out from a book especially prepared for this work by Mr. Conduit, then a precious Bible lesson, a hymn sung, and sometimes, when the room was private enough, a prayer, ending with the Lord's prayer, which Mrs. Chapin repeated in Chinese when the women could not sufficiently understand English.

Our first visit was to a woman literally living in a barn with earthen floor, over which paraded the chickens in which she and her husband dealt. He sat in the door, scraping and polishing a deer's horn. She had a sewing machine on which she evidently did sewing for outsiders, as piles of Chinese shirts and frocks showed through the glass doors of a wardrobe standing near her machine. She was evidently a woman of affairs, more interested in her sewing and her chicken-bargaining than in learning. But even her face lighted up when she saw Mrs. Graham.

In bright contrast to this woman was another seamstress, who was deftly sewing with her fingers. She was young, very bright and pretty. She could not speak much English, but showed the naive curiosity of a child, touching parts of my dress saying, "Pretty," or "How made?" Yet she was very observant as well as affectionate and lovable.

Here as everywhere, even in the barn home, I was charmed with the scrupulous neatness.

One heathen home we visited—and I was never more impressed with what even a little Christianity can do for woman and the home than when contrasting this with the others—was over a Chinese meat shop, through which we must go to reach it, redolent with indescribable odors; the approach was by difficult stairs and the room close and reeking with opium fumes. On its only table was the whole paraphernalia for opium smoking, as Mrs. Chapin explained to me. There was no ventilation, and in this stifling atmosphere lived the young wife and stepchildren. She was very pretty, but with one of the saddest faces I ever saw, yearning for sympathy as shown by the way she leaned up against Mrs. Graham and clung to her hand. There was not much chance for reading here, for soon the husband, a hard, pompous looking man, with all of a heathen's contempt for his wife plainly written on his face, followed us in. He was courteous to us, and Mrs. Chapin engaged him in talking about his boy, who was suffering with a sore head, as so many children do in China, while dear Mrs. Graham whispered a few words of comfort in the ear of his wife. He does not wish her to "read" with the ladies, and although rich, will not purchase the necessary primer for her, evidently believing learning thrown away upon women who have no souls.

At two o'clock in the kindergarten room was a prayer-meeting with the Chinese women and children; from this we went to Union Hall, a few streets away, the center of the Methodist mission. Here in the second story is a large room, neatly fitted up with tables, chairs, Bibles, hymn books, an organ and Chinese charts upon the wall. It is always open and into it come Chinese "boys" to study God's word and if they have not it in their own language, copy it from the beautiful large print Bible Mr. Chapin brought from China.

Every afternoon they gather here, on an average twenty-five a day, for a Bible class and prayer-meeting, taught by some of the mission visitors, and most earnest, interested pupils they are. That they understand the fundamental truths taught them, though they may not be able to express them in our idioms, was shown by the answer of one of the "boys" when asked how he knew God loved him; "Because He gave his one, only boy to die for me." MARY ALLEN WEST.

"GOD'S HEART IS THE SANITARIUM OF THE UNIVERSE."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—When the new currents of life have just "wooed the leaf from out the bud," in the gulf-washed Southern land and by the Northern lakes, tender hands garland the tombs of sleeping braves, who, by the baptism in their blood, consecrated our country to eternal peace. In Southern sunshine and on Northern hillsides reverent feet search out the lonely grave of the boy "on the other side," who fell just here, and crown it with flowers for the mother who cannot reach him. Mothers buried the war with their dead.

The other day a sweet Wisconsin woman wrote to a Southern sister, whom she had known only by her public life, words brooded out in the great heart of God and which carry healing for all wounds. In such the land shall learn the depths of peace and this great people be truly one. She says: "Sometimes I have imagined it was just such a Southern woman as you on whose breast my precious brother, of only seventeen years, breathed out his sweet young life in those cruel days of war. It was a Southern woman who caught the last fond message from lips grown white with pain. It was a Southern woman who cut the clustering curls from his fair young brow and sent them to his far-off northern home, the sight of which nearly broke my mother's heart. It was a Southern woman who said: 'Our little boy is dead.' As I lift my eyes I see hanging on the wall the picture of this same boy soldier, dressed in blue, above the mass of curls the familiar soldier cap. The young hero sleeps in Tennessee. To my left hangs another picture—that of a stalwart man in Southern gray—my mother's only brother. He rests beneath Mississippi's sunny sky:

"'Under the sod and the dew
Waiting the judgment day;
Under the one the blue,
Under the other the gray.'

"How strangely different is this great battle for the home!" H. B. K.

PRESIDENT'S COLUMN

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.
AMERICAN—Chicago, Ill., The Temple, La Salle St.
ENGLISH—London, 57 Gordon Square, N. W.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. OFFICERS.
President—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large—LADY HENRY SOMERSET, 13 Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London, E. C., Eng.
Secretary—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, O.
Assistant Secretary—ANNA A. GORDON, Evanston, Ill.
Treasurer—MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS, 26 Chomedy St., Montreal, Can.

"Would that the heart of woman warmed our creeds!
Not from the sad-eyed hermit's lonely cell,
Not from the conclave where the holy men
Glare on each other, as with angry eyes
They battle for God's glory and their own,
Till, sick of wordy strife, a show of hands
Fixes the faith of ages yet unborn,—
Ah, not from these the listening soul can hear
The father's voice that speaks itself divine!
Love must be still our master; till we learn
What he can teach us of woman's heart,
We know not His whose love embraces all."

From Oliver Wendell Holmes, and quoted in address by Rev. Mr. Sunderland, Ann Arbor, Mich.; sermon preached to the King's Daughters.

***

One of our experienced workers suggests that we should have a superintendent of W. C. T. U. work in cities, and should proceed to put forth a plan by which they could be organized according to the wards of the respective cities of the Union. Rochester, New York, is one of the best organized on this basis. The plan seems to work well. Whatever is done in cities attracts the notice of the whole country through the press, and our correspondent thinks constitutional prohibition has been lost in several states owing to the failure of temperance people to attack the public sentiment of the cities in favor of this principle, which they could not do for lack of systematic organization.

Letters come to me from Arkansas, where some of our good friends are exercised by a reported expression of mine concerning the "dark and bloody ground." This is hereby disavowed as having ever been spoken otherwise than playfully, and the utmost good-will and admiration of that great state is hereby avowed with equal earnestness.

***

It is proposed to have a tablet in stone of the poet Whittier as one of the adornments of the Woman's Temple. I am sure every one who reads this column will say that is right and ought to be done. Will not all who look upon the subject in this light, please send a practical token of their interest to Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., The Temple, Chicago, Ill.? Several have already done so, and among them the names of our sweet-spirited Quaker friends are prominent. Let us all take a little stock in this memorial to the "Woman's Laureate."

***

Margaret Morley, one of our most accomplished kindergartners, has issued a book of which I have half a mind to keep a standing notice in this column, in the interest of pure, protected childhood and happy homes some day. It is entitled, "A SONG OF LIFE" and teaches the mysteries of the creative power in words so well chosen that they are like "apples of gold in pictures of silver." Mothers and teachers, read this book to your little ones—it is a duty that you owe them and will prove one of your purest pleasures; its atmosphere will purify the playground and the fireside and the little untaught hearts.

The book costs $1.25 and our own publishing house in the Temple keeps it in stock, not for the profit, which is small, but by my special request as superintendent of purity work.

***

N. B.—In view of multiplying syndicates, and in self-defense, let me say that I have no stock in any corporation so far as I know, except enough in the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association to enable me to vote as a director (one or two shares).

Frances E. Willard

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

By faith they (the Israelites) passed through the Red Sea as by dry land; which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned.—Heb. 11. 29.

A very able article—four pages in length—appeared in a late number of the Chicago Herald, under the caption, "Woman and Her Work." It was illustrated by a picture of the Temple and the faces of sixteen of the leaders of the W. C. T. U. giving a sketch of each. In regard to the Temple it said: "When the public learned that the temperance women had leased of Marshall Field, for a term of two hundred years, a large tract of land for a Temple on the corner of Monroe and La Salle streets, it stopped a moment to wonder at the boldness of the move and then went about its business. When men set to dig the great foundations and finally put in their proper places rugged stones as large as houses; when the corner-stone was laid so impressively, solemnly and enthusiastically, and the great structure began to grow into majestic beauty, then the most obtuse realized that there was a real power behind the temperance cause.

"Now the building stands there in all the pride of its thirteen stories, and in the mingled beauty and strength of its French Gothic dress. From the graceful array of turrets, forming the three-storied roof, is to spring the glittering, golden fleche, which lifts into heaven the appealing figure of a woman. Now that the Temple is actually built, with its memorial or Willard Hall, its headquarters for local, state and National rendezvous, and its hundreds of business offices, what and who have been the real power behind this noblest of monuments, ancient or modern, to woman's heart and head? It has cost over $1,000,000. Some great capitalist or captain of finance must have been behind the Temple or it never would have arisen. Rather the greatest organization of women in the world has been beneath, behind and through the Temple, inspired and directed primarily by one woman. . . . . Now in the merry, stirring month of May, the Temple is thrown open to business and reform; solid rents will help support the most enthusiastic reformation of the age. . . . The Temple means that although women have the Christian humility to appeal to the world for what they believe a just cause, they have also reached the point when they have the material power to make themselves heard and felt." The above is the world's estimate of us. We say, God inspired the enterprise. He "was beneath, behind and through it." To Him be all the glory.

***

A friend from Indiana sends $2 for the Elizabeth L. Comstock memorial tablet. She writes: "I send this contribution to the memory of our friend because she was great enough to be the peer of the greatest and humble enough to sympathize with the least. She traveled extensively on both continents; she was the greatest prison missionary our world has ever seen. Born in England, liberally educated at Ackworth, converted under the preaching of the world-renowned Elizabeth Frye, she came to this country and entered into all services for humanity. Her presence was like God's blessed sunshine to the afflicted. Heaven is now her home, and her name should be a witness to the ages." The Malone, N. Y., W. C. T. U. sends $100 to the memory of their late beloved president, Mrs. Martha Stevens, who died last October. Dr. J. D. Van Wirt, Johnsonville, N. Y., sends $1, found in his wife's Temple mite-box after her death which occurred last month. The New Jersey state W. C. T. U. sends $60 towards a memorial tablet for the loved and lamented late state president, Mrs. S. J. C. Downs.

***

Mrs. A. A. Hicks, Belfast, Me., sends $1 to start a memorial tablet in honor of sweet, patient Jennie Casseday. Mrs. Hicks writes, "As it will be flower mission day in a few weeks, don't you think we could soon interest the friends to send in their contributions in such a manner that we could have it all raised on her birthday, the 9th of June?" Yes, this can be done if all interested in flower mission work and the saintly invalid, who is its superintendent, will send immediately a contribution towards it to Miss Esther Pugh. Lizzie and Mattie Shumati, Winchester, Va., send $2 for the Whittier tablet.

***

Mrs. Eva Higgins, state president Colorado, writes: "The Temple in miniature came safely; it is a beauty, and like the original, many will see this who can never view the Temple in its towering grandeur. We will try to push the sale in this state." Send all orders for silver models to Mrs. Carse. Let our friends remember that a two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Carse, The Temple, La Salle street, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. All who fill one before next April will receive the group consisting of Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, and the founder of the Temple, with autographs attached.

"DEAD! BOTH MY BOYS!"

In Memoriam, 1862.

BY ELLA GILBERT IVES.

One of them shot by a Confederate gun,
  One of them struck by a Union ball;
Both of them dead, just as life had begun
  To be worth the living—dead! that is all;
No more and no less, and I, not another,
  Must shut my teeth, bear the pain; only God knows
What He gives her to bear, first and last—a mother,
  One who brings men-children forth from her throes.

One of them dressed in a suit of blue,
  One of them clad in a coat of gray;
Both of them lifting faces true
  As steel, to God, on this judgment day,
Not a false fibre in either heart;
  Tender and true to mother alway.
Oh, God, how I loved them! What anguish to part!
  Only a mother can suffer that way.

One of them fair as a day in June,
  One of tnem bright as a night of stars;
Brave, both my boys; with hearts attune,
  One to the stripes and one to the bars.
Young! ah, young! I can feel their milk-teeth,
  And, as mothers can, smile back the pain.
That was but yesterday; now underneath
  God's heaven, my arms reach in vain for my twain.

One of them lies on a Northern field,
  One of them faces the Southern cross;
Both with their blood their record sealed.
  Oh, Christ, with Thy blood, save my heart from loss!
Only one with the stripes and stars
  For a winding sheet; but, oh, they were brothers!
God's stars shine on both; and God's tenderness wipes
  The tears from all eyes, especially mothers'.

Memorial Day, 1892.

GRISLEY'S COURT.

BY M. ELIZABETH YOUNG.

The sky was heavy with ominous looking clouds one evening in the early part of March; the streets were wet and muddy from the recent rains; a chilly wind was blowing from the west and the weather signal again promised clear weather.

I was hurrying toward home after a busy day at the office, and my mind held a picture of a comfortable wrapper, warm slippers and the nice supper which I knew awaited me. My only thought was to get home as quickly as possible. Suddenly I became aware of three figures—a man and two women in front of me. They were standing still, an unusual thing on a night like that, and I slackened my pace to ascertain the cause of their delay. The light from a store window shone in their faces, and as I saw the man tottering, staggering, supported by a feeble woman on either side, it needed not words to tell the story. Look at his bloodshot eyes, his unkept beard and ask wherefore? Note his poor clothes, well darned but mud-besmeared; they tell a double story; a story of the drunkard—a story of feminine love and devotion.

The man was coughing violently, and the women, evidently wife and daughter, had stopped to wait until his cough subsided. I passed on, saying to myself: "It is only another of King Alcohol's subjects. How proud he must be of his noble followers." But somehow the wrapper and slippers did not seem so attractive, and I found I was not so hungry as I thought. The vision I had in mind of a cozy evening at home faded away before the faces of those two pitiful women, the one wrinkled and wreathed in a mass of iron-gray hair; the other sad but in the full bloom of youth. I could not forget them. I reached the next corner. There was no car in sight and I turned to see whether the man and his guides were coming my way; and as they passed me the mother said in a quiet voice, but which I heard distinctly, "We had better go down to C— street, Mary, it is so dark under that bridge." As they almost carried him by me, my mind was made up.

The place was not far off, and following at a distance I picked my way along a narrow, muddy, illy lighted street; down one alley and up another until my party halted at the entrance of a dark court. "Mary, did you leave a light burning?" I heard the mother ask.

"No, mother, I did not,—there was but little oil in the lamp and I was afraid it might all be burned up before we got back. If you can hold father a bit, I will run ahead and get a light; can you?"

"Yes, I can; but, my child, I hate to have you go in there alone. It is so dark."

"Oh, never mind that," answered Mary, with a faint tinge of cheerfulness in her voice, "if you will keep father, I will be back in a minute. I am not afraid;" and she disappeared in the darkness.

They had not noticed me; evidently lone female figures were not unusual in Grisley's Court, and I had about decided to return without going farther when the man was seized with another spell of coughing. He swayed from side to side; the poor woman exerted all her physical strength to support him, but he would have fallen to the ground had I not rushed forward in time to prevent it.

"Thank you, Miss, you are very kind. Father is a bit overcome,—but here's Mary now, she'll take that arm. Thank you, thank you."

"Not at all, madam. You seem entirely unable to bear this man's weight. Let Mary take the arm you have, and if you will allow me, I will help you get him into the house," I said, which, after a slight remonstrance, they did. All this time the man followed obediently as a child. After a great deal of effort we got him up the one step which led to the house, through a long, narrow passage-way, dimly lighted by a coal-oil lamp on which was a well-smoked chimney, into a room at the extreme end. The mother hurried forward, straightened out some well worn covers that were on a low couch, and motioned for us to lead him there. Not a word was spoken by the man who let himself sink heavily upon the couch and seemed to fall immediately into a drunken stupor. The room was small and scantily furnished. Poverty, wretched poverty, was written in bold letters on every hand, yet in it all there seemed to be a brave attempt at neatness and order. After the women had done what they could to make the man comfortable, they turned an inquiring eye upon me. "Thank you, miss, you are very kind," said the elder woman. This was evidently meant for a gentle dismissal, but I was not quite ready to go. The respectful and quiet demeanor of these two women was not in keeping with the surroundings, and, if possible, I wanted to know more about them.

"I beg your pardon, my good woman, for this intrusion. I meant no rudeness, I assure you"—for somehow it seemed to me that they did not regard my presence so very kindly—"and will be entirely frank with you. You passed me on Elm street while I was waiting for a car, and noticing that neither of you looked very strong for your burden, I followed you with the intention of assisting you should it be necessary. You are entirely welcome to the little service I have given to you."

"Thank you, miss, thank you," said the mother. "You look tired; will you sit down a bit?" offering me the only chair the room afforded, while she and Mary seated themselves on a wooden box beside the stove, in which lay a few smouldering ashes. Being tired, but wishing more to know something about these people, I accepted the proffered chair.

"Do you live near here?" asked the woman.

"No, I live a long distance from this part of the city," I replied.

"Excuse me, miss, I don't mean to be unkind, but I want to tell you that you did a very dangerous thing to-night. This is one of the worst neighborhoods in the city, and nobody but the ones as live here are ever seen in this court. It is a dreadful place," and the poor woman shivered as she gave a hurried glance at the door evidently expecting some intruder, while Mary turned her face to hide a tear I saw stealing down her pale cheek.

"Is it so bad as that?" I asked, beginning to feel a little nervous at the woman's manner and at the sound of heavy footsteps on the floor above. "It seems to me, madam, that you deserve a better place than this. You have not always lived here?"

"No, not always, miss," answered the woman with a painful sigh, "not always."

"Would you mind telling me your name?" I asked, somewhat timidly.

"Are you a newspaper reporter?" And the woman turned to me almost savagely as she put this question.

"No, madam; I am only a poor girl entirely dependent on my own efforts for support. My name is Katharine Carson, and I live in the extreme north of the city. Perhaps it is because I must work, and because I know what sorrow is, that I feel a deep sympathy for any human I see in trouble. Can I not do something for you?"

"You seem kind and honest, miss. We're not much used to kindness now, but I thank you for your goodness; yet there's nothing can be done now, not now, it's too late." And she gave a long, wistful glance at the sleeping object on the couch. "And yet, miss, if you'd like to know, I will tell you what brought me to this. Though you can't do anything for us—one seldom gets out of Grisley's Court when they once get in—you may do something to keep others from getting here."

"If you do not mind telling me, I shall respect your story, madam," I replied kindly.

"It isn't a very long story and I'll take you out to the street safely when I am through. My name is Nevins." Here Mrs. Nevins suddenly stopped as she noticed the figure on the couch move; after seeing that the husband still slept, she told me she had been the daughter of a well-to-do farmer, and came to the city to attend school, where she met the man she married. He was the only son of a wealthy tavern-keeper and seemed steady and reliable. Of course he had always been used to drinking wines and liquors, but never to excess. Her parents did not object to the match, and so they were married. The son was taken into business with his father, who died soon after, leaving his entire property to his son. Finding himself with so much money at his command, John Nevins grew careless in business; drank freely, gambled recklessly, and in a short time was leading a wholly dissolute life. One after another of their luxuries disappeared; the comforts and even the necessaries of life followed in quick succession; they moved from small street to smaller, from one alley to another until they finally reached Grisley's Court, the haunt of thieves and murderers, the very abyss of human misery, which the eye of the law never saw, or seeing viewed with blind apathy.

It was a wretched story, mingled with sighs of regret, tears of remorse and words of warning. The woman dwelt with much feeling on the fact that poor Mary had been born to a life of sorrow and privation; without education, without friends, without a home; for without harmony there can be no home. And surely there was no harmony between these two women and that besotted man, except what arose from a sense of duty. And yet they both seemed affectionate toward the man who had brought them to this state. Oh, the misery of a woman's love that can follow a man even to this den and pour out the heart's treasure at a thankless shrine.

"And now, my dear young miss, you must go. It is not safe for you to stay longer, and you must not venture to come in here again. You might mee harm, and you can do us no good."

I tried to assure her that they were not beyond hope, that something could yet be done. But she only shook her head, saying sadly, "They who come to Grisley's Court seldom, if ever, leave it. Perhaps Mary may some day, I pray she may, but not I, not father nor I."

"I would really like to do something for you, Mrs. Nevins, and I mean to try."

"It's no use, miss. But you can do this, you can do all in your power to kill this accursed liquor traffic. You can teach children to avoid it. Don't marry a man connected with it in any way; it will only bring misery in the end to somebody, somewhere. Father shook his head at the idea of me marrying a man in that business, but mother thought I was getting a rich man and that was all she considered, so father soon gave in. I was too young and ignorant to see what the future might be. I thought John was good, and so he was until liquor got the best of him. He did not think the business bad because he had been raised in it. He did not know that it would bring us to Grisley's Court. Oh, miss, if you can do anything at all, and I believe you can, do everything in your power to keep people out of Grisley's Court. I tell you it's no use after they are once in," she repeated with that hopeless air of resignation that often comes to the soul that is subjected to long misery.

I said good-night to Mary, gave one last glance at her father for whom I began to have a feeling of pity, and then followed the woman, who was firm in her determination to see me to the street. After a few more words of caution against venturing into that neighborhood again, she said—"Good-night; God bless you, my child; do what you can to keep others out of Grisley's Court"—and then disappeared in the darkness, and I was again on my way home. Her words, "Keep others out of Grisley's Court," kept ringing in my ears. I am only a weak girl, but with all the strength and will of a woman's heart; yet what is my strength against such a mighty tide as this drink-flood has grown to be? What can I do? I asked myself. And my answer came in the thought that I would tell you this story, noble reader, that our combined efforts may do something to "keep others out of Grisley's Court." What will you do?

Philadelphia, Pa.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. M. RASTALL, Business Manager.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President Board of Directors.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope.—Rom. 15. 4.

DIRECTORS' MEETING.

The date of the regular quarterly meeting of the W. T. P. A. directors was April 11, but a quorum not being present it was adjourned to May 20. At that date there were present Mesdames Carse, Hagans and Plumb, Misses Willard and Pugh, the board meeting for the first time in the Temple.

The minutes of the last meeting and also of the intervening business committee meetings were read and approved with slight corrections. The business manager's report showed progress on all the lines. The cash receipts for the past four months show a gain in every department over the corresponding months of last year. We have obtained new type for THE UNION SIGNAL which now has a fresh dress and the office is greatly aided by the new material. The width of the paper is slightly increased thus adding much in attractive appearance. The Farm, Field and Stockman will come to us for press work June 1. Other negotiations are in progress and the business is in a healthy state.

The usual Saturday half-holiday was granted the employes for June, July and August.

The reports from the editors in their respective departments show steady and sure growth. Already, during this year, there have been more twenty-page editions of THE UNION SIGNAL than in any previous whole year. The children have evinced their appreciation of their own corner by hundreds of enthusiastic letters. The outlook is excellent for our beloved paper.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf is growing in helpfulness and popularity, the March special entertainment and the Easter program have been in great demand. As Miss Sudduth finds that THE UNION SIGNAL claims her time almost wholly she desired to be released from the editorship of the Oak and Ivy Leaf and suggested that Miss Jennie A. Stewart, who has been so efficient as editorial assistant, should be appointed editor, to which the board cordially assented. The Y's will have one fresh from the field and work at the head of their own paper.

After a whole day spent in close and careful consideration of the great interests committed to them, the directors adjourned, full of hope and courage for the future.

ESTHER PUGH,
Acting Secretary.

ET TU BRUTE.

Mr. Gladstone has proved the truth of his own words—"I love antiquity quite as much as I used to do; I have never been a lover of change nor do I regard it as good in itself—liberty, however, is a good in itself."

A "good" apparently for the smaller half of the population only; for the "change" which the grand old man doesn't love is that which is likely to give the "good" of liberty to those he still contemplates in a light borrowed from past ages and he proposes to consolidate the legal status that classes them with "infants and idiots." That sentiments such as those that Mr. Gladstone utters should have been propounded by a man who, in spite of his advancing years had kept marvelously in step with the quiet march of the age, and yet who through circumstances, prejudice or ignorance had failed to see the possibilities of women's political power, would not be wonderful. But for years past Mr. Gladstone has thankfully accepted the services of the Woman's Liberal Federation as one of the most powerful caucuses for propagating his principles. The women have canvassed, spoken on public platforms, attended committees and conventions and Mr. Gladstone has largely profited, as the attitude of the present electors clearly demonstrates, by their services. At the eleventh hour, however, Mr. Gladstone declares his fear "lest we should invite her unwittingly to trespass on her delicacy,—the purity, the refinement, the elevation of her own nature which are the present sources of her power." The great liberal leader has had no such fears while women were canvassing, speaking and planning for the election of his supporters. Is their delicacy likely, then, to suffer only when they are asked to record their names secretly; though they may proclaim their political views from the house-top while their purity and refinement remain unimpaired?

Mr. Gladstone has set out in the whip which he has published against woman's suffrage four propositions which he will find difficult to logically support.

1. His argument implies that representative government is a delusion, for nowhere does he deal with or maintain any argument as to why there should be justice in excluding from representation one-half of the adult population.

2. Mr. Gladstone undertakes to state that the women of the country do not demand woman's suffrage. How is the mind of the country tested on every important issue? Simply by taking a vote. The mind of the Irish nation was ascertained by the vote of their representatives. What means has Mr. Gladstone taken for ascertaining the feeling of the women of England on these important issues, and what representation have they that can make their wishes felt by that unfailing method (the likelihood of a loss of votes to any one party or the loss of a division in the House of Commons) which is so powerful an argument?

3. Mr. Gladstone dreads, as we have already pointed out, the demoralizing effect of the ballot on women. He seems to have a profound disbelief in the elevating character of popular sovereignty—a demoralization which must largely affect the character of men's political life.

4. We are asked to arrive practically at the conclusion that experience is no argument in politics. Women may be allowed to vote for the city parliament (Mr. Gladstone not only approves but applauds all this), but when the same gentlemen stand for the national legislature, apparently then everything that is sacred in family life would be endangered if woman recorded her opinion as to whether those men would be likely to represent the best interests of her home and to legislate for the welfare of the children.

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN.

It is the proud boast of Harvard that no young man of ability need be turned away from her hospitable doors by reason of his poverty. Our universities and colleges throughout the length and breadth of the land are eager to swell their scholarship and fellowship funds to enable intelligent, able-bodied young men and women to continue their studies. These institutions point with pride and approval to the youths and maidens who, year by year, accept such gifts and use them to the advantage of all concerned.

While benefactions of this kind help chiefly the students to whose lot they fall, they also strengthen the institutions of learning, both in the numbers and the talent of their graduates; and they enrich the commonwealth by developing ability which might have lain dormant for want of opportunity.

The Hebrew Manual Training schools carry the same principle forward and apply it to those boys and girls between twelve and fifteen years of age whose parents need the children's earnings. Such boys and girls are kept in school while hands and brains are trained together, and the board of managers pays to the parents, weekly, the two dollars which the child might earn as cash girl or telegraph boy. These wise administrators of an important trust deem it expedient to expend eighty dollars a year for three years directly for the maintenance of the pupil in order to keep the child in school beyond the usual minimum age of twelve years.

How different is the policy of our public school management. In a single ward of Chicago there have been, for two years past, nearly five thousand children for whom there are no seats provided. For another thousand children in the same ward, who are nominally in the schools, there is but a half-day's instruction, the morning pupils being banished in the afternoon to make room for a different set. The failure to provide schools in such wards is all the worse because the population is made up of Bohemians, Canadians, Russian Hebrews, Germans and Italians, people whose children need every hour possible of orderly companionship, among the wholesome surroundings of the schoolroom, and every opportunity of speaking and hearing good English.

Nor is Chicago worse in any respect than most of the other great cities. In New York the agitation of the public school association, three years ago, produced, it is true, a spasm of school building, but all the new schools were opened in the prosperous uptown wards, and the children of the poor, below Fourteenth street, were none the better off. Surely, wherever women vote for the school boards, their first duty should be insistence that the children of the poor shall have all the school opportunity that their poverty permits; and that no orphan need be robbed of his school right by reason of his affliction.

There is no nobler work of women in our thrice blessed country than the school children's aid societies which clothe and help the sons and daughters of the very poor, watching over their school life so far as the bounty of the rich may render possible. But why should the orphan's public school life be left to chance and charity more than the higher education of the Harvard man or the Fellow of Johns Hopkins? Why should we not have school stipends, payable through the principal of the school to the mother of the fatherless child, or the guardian of the child that is wholly orphaned? This would be a direct premium upon regular attendance, since it would never be paid where the child was a truant, and the very poor would be as eager to send their children to school as they now are to keep them away for the sake of the trifling earnings of the newsboy or bootblack, or the poor help of the tiny household drudge.

Experiments might readily be made in the larger country towns and smaller cities, where it is easier for buildings to keep pace with the growth of school population, and where the orphans and the very poor are fewer in proportion to the whole school population. Meanwhile, the women who vote upon school questions in a whole series of states, counties and towns, might well emulate the eager women of Chicago. There the school board is not elective and the school suffrage, therefore, cannot be exercised. So the women use the right of petition and, by the wise effort of the Alliance, they have induced the mayor to place women upon the school board. Encouraged by this success the Alliance has entered upon a crusade for more schools and this it will not abandon until there is a seat for every child between the ages of six and fourteen years, in the great metropolis of the Northwest.

Hand in hand with the schoolhouse agitation goes the demand for kindergartens, that all the years may be utilized for civilizing the tiny citizen before poverty drives him forth to earn his way. The logical accompaniment of these demands is still another for the paternal intervention of the city in the place of the dead father, to maintain the orphan until he can maintain himself, equipped with the full term of school training.

Thus, and thus only, can the temperance training of the schools obtain its full results, since now the vast majority of boys and girls leave school at the age of twelve, just when they are growing old enough to grasp the subject, and at the very time when the unformed character is most readily a prey to the temptations of work-a-day life.

A YOUNG WOMAN JOURNALIST.

Nothing in human nature becomes it more than the loyalty of kindred hearts. David and Jonathan, Damon and Pythias have survived in the love of the world because of their truth to one another. "In Memoriam" consecrated the devotion of Tennyson to his young college friend, Arthur Henry Hallam, and has made the imperishable fame of both. Instances less salient but bright with a light that never shone on sea or shore, illumine the fascinating pages of biography and history. All life is full of them, and they have redeemed the annals of homes and hearts unsung no less than they have gilded the memory of the great. Every new group of workers in any field has innumerable instances of the shining of double stars. In the galaxies of art and science, religion and patriotism, these are among the bright, particular stars that gem the firmament.

Our own white ribbon army furnishes its full quota of illustrations, but has none more pathetic than that embalmed in the beautiful volume just issued from the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the first book to bear the imprint of "The Temple." Helen Hood and Yolande Ames go hand in hand through all its pages, sunny and sad. Many trained pens have worked upon the chapters entitled, "What Yolande was like," "Her college life," "In the work-a-day world," etc., but to our mind the pen of Helen Hood in treating of "Home life in the last years" has gone beyond itself or that of any others that have celebrated our loved and lost companion. The chapter is so good that we must quote:

"'What is the secret of your life?' asked Mrs. Browning of Charles Kingsley; 'tell me that I may make mine beautiful too.'

"He replied: 'I had a friend.'

"What a wondrous sentence, and what a world of love and tenderness it covers! To me, writing from the home hallowed by a thousand memories of the past, these words, 'I had a friend,' are infinitely precious, for they express the love, trust and confidence which for six years Yolande and I enjoyed without an interruption."

Miss Hood then goes on to depict the daily home life of Miss Ames, her tastes, her occupations, her love of books, her spirituality. She tells of her great-hearted sympathy, which brought more companionship into her circle than it is the lot of most to enjoy in a long life-time. She describes those sorrowful weeks in Boston, and closes the account of Yolande's passage from the earth with these words, so full of simple, loving truth that they seem to us immeasurably eloquent:

"Then something in me also died."

This sentence reminds us of what Wordsworth said in closing the poem entitled "Lucy":

"But she is in her grave, and, oh,
The difference to me!"

Referring with admiration to these lines from the great poet, we have been met by literary friends with the remark: "Why, that does not mean anything. It is absolutely heartless;" but to our thought what we read between the lines is always greatest and most spiritual. Unable to express the depths of his loneliness and sorrow, the poet appeals to what we have ourselves known of unspeakable loss in that immortal sentence:

"And, oh! the difference to me!"

How many a bereaved heart will feel drawn tenderly toward that of Helen Hood in thinking over the unspeakable tenderness of that simple line: "Then something in me also died."

But it is not as a personal tribute that we meant to write about this book. Our chief thought of it is that in her death Miss Ames wrought even more than in her life. The best of her lives in this volume, which will go to the ends of the earth, over which will bend ten thousand fair, unwritten faces of aspiring, gifted young women who, as they read of her, will say, "By God's help I will be as brave, as trusty, as gentle, as untiring as Julia Ames," and this will go on through the years, for there is vitality in the book; it is one that the world's heart will not readily let die. Mary Allen West has written for it one of her most vivid chapters. Lady Henry Somerset, under the heading, "How she impressed me," has pictured forth what an American girl of this epoch may attain. Professor Susan Fry, of the University of Minnesota, the favorite college teacher of Miss Ames, has given us an object-lesson of the higher education worthy to be conned many a time and oft by schoolgirls; while Yolande's own contribution to the book, her off-hand journals while abroad, her estimate of the press, and how to gain a foothold in that magic realm, her choice paper on "The Story that Transformed the World," and other contributions, are among the best features of this varied volume, which Miss Hood has dedicated to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, than whom Miss Ames had not a better friend or a more whole-hearted admirer. We counsel mothers to buy this book for their girls, and we counsel girls to read it in the love of it. On page 29 is an enumeration of the books that were favorites with Miss Ames, and on pages 195–201 is an account of her habitudes of thought, both mental and spiritual, and her most prominent characteristics. Biography is history teaching by example, and if these studies into which Yolande entered, and these characteristics that constantly grew in her nature, could but be imitated by all who read, the sum total of the world's good, its strength and loving kindness would be increased incalculably. Believing this, we have written what we have written.

We talk about whether the liquor traffic should be prohibited. It might be well for us to remember that the Sabbath has been prohibited in our large cities.

The British Women's Temperance Association had the best convention in its history; after a debate in which remarkable ability, forensic and logical was displayed, the suffrage plank was adopted in its platform, and prohibition by woman's ballot will henceforth be a cardinal principle with our sturdy British comrades. The work was divided into departments after a more systematic fashion than has hitherto prevailed even in an association noted for its system. It was determined to have county unions, and a constitution was provided for this purpose. Hereafter, resolutions are to be offered in a more democratic fashion, namely, without having been previously prepared by the executive committee. The monthly bulletin is retained, so that temperance news will go to all parts of the kingdom at stated intervals. The monthly paper continues under the control of a committee of which Lady Henry Somerset is chairman, and she will also establish, as soon as practicable, the weekly edition of The Union Signal.

Some of our British brethren of the "strictly non-partisan" order took occasion in their addresses of welcome (?) to Lady Henry Somerset to criticise the methods of her American friends, and warned the women against such progressive ideas; but when it came her turn to speak and she set before them the history of the National W. C. T. U. and its development along many lines that were at first considered foreign to the work, the opinions of the audience were evidently with the speaker, and when she closed her eloquent address with the declaration: "If this is to make a failure I do not know what a success would be," the British cheers which lend an enthusiasm to an audience of which we know nothing in America, plainly showed that our temperance friends in England are on the war-path for politics as well as law.

Among those on the platform at the conference were the Duchess of Bedford, Lady Portsmouth, Mrs. Cyril Flower, Mrs. Bramhall-Booth, Miss Agnes Weston, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, Mrs. Woody, our W. C. T. U. president in North Carolina, Miss Helen L. Hood, and in the meeting were representatives from thirty-one leading philanthropic societies of England.

A great bereavement has come to one of our white-ribbon sisters, Mrs. S. F. Grubb, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., in the death of her oldest son, Mr. Arthur Grubb, a rising young journalist, on the staff of one of the prominent daily papers of St. Louis, and also of his little child on the same day. Mr. Grubb had been assigned to write up one of the opium dens of the city. He went to the duty with the full determination of being there not more than fifteen or twenty minutes, but in order to secure an admittance, he entered as a customer and asked for a pipe. Whether his purpose was suspected and he was purposely drugged, or whether, not being accustomed to the powerful narcotic he at once fell under its sway, cannot be known, but two or three whiffs of the dreadful poison produced a stupor which sent the life out of as loving, generous and magnanimous a man as ever breathed. In the meantime, a sad scene was going on at home. Mr. Grubb had left his young wife with their beautiful boy, who was very ill, but a few hours before, hopeful that the baby was better and on the way to recovery. On the fateful night just before the time for the return of the baby's father, the little one went into a convulsion and died in the young mother's arms. For hours she expected to hear the step of the affectionate father every moment. Finally, becoming alarmed she sent messengers over the city. Then came the terrible news that the most experienced physicians had been working to bring his life back, but in vain. The blow came with pitiful force to the mother at work in Kansas. There was a peculiar tie between mother and son. The week before when she had visited him, a long conversation had taken place concerning Christian duties, and the political life in which he was so engaged. He urged his mother to set going the scheme which he had several times broached, that of arousing the young men of the country to give their votes to their mothers in the next presidential campaign and vote the Prohibition ticket. Almost the last words to his mother were, "I have an eternal enmity to this dreadful liquor traffic."

The power of the human mind in misstatement is, as the French say, "pyramidal." Somebody is now going about saying that Lady Henry Somerset received five thousand dollars for the speeches which she made in the interest of Brother Woolley's Rest Home for drinking men in Minnesota. The facts, well known to our readers are, that Lady Henry gave about fifty addresses while in this country, and received not one penny for her work.

Socrates said: "Woman once made equal to man becomes his superior."

***

There is no day that I more desire to see than the day that shall give woman her right to vote. She who is asked to people the world should be law-giver as well as life-giver.—Isabel Somerset.

***

A bright writer has thus defined journalism: The collection, corruption and distribution of misinformation. Concerning this sort of news Josh Billings pithily said: "It is better not to know so much than to know so much that ant true."

***

We have heard of one of our leaders who sent five dollars to the National treasurer for the self-denial fund, and reported that her chief self-denial during the interval consisted in going as a matter of duty to hear the sermonizing of a most prosy minister!

***

An amusing aside occurred at the convention of Federated Women's Clubs when allusion was made to dress reform, and Miss Anthony whispered to a friend: "We have been working forty years to shape a woman's gown, but you can't do it till she has a mind."

***

The master of Trinity College, Cambridge, when asked his opinions of a certain undergraduate, said: "What time he does not spend in the adornment of his person he devotes to the neglect of his duties." Alas! this being true did not make the youth an altogether singular collegian!

***

From a letter to the editors with arbutus blossoms: "Their sweet fragrance is to me like the dear, blessed lives of our noble workers. Under the coldness of worldly apathy, the fallen leaves of neglect, the mold and mildew of sin, their 'brave efforts' come to the top and bloom, and the fragrance is of heaven."

***

The Hawaiian Queen has lately testified her interest in the W. C. T. U. of Honolulu by paying the license on their Coffee House, something over fifty dollars. Her total abstinence principles are proved by the banishment of all sorts of liquors from her table and her receptions. She also forbids in her presence the performance of a lascivious native dance, formerly a great favorite in court circles.

***

There cannot in the nature of the case be another reform so sacred as that which seeks to preserve the integrity of the organ of human thought. Prohibitory law enacted in the legislature of the intellect and enforced by the executive of the will is the basis of this reform which reaches out through its "do everything policy" into politics as well as law and summons woman with the widening ballot to the waging of a peaceful war "for God and home and every land."

***

A Washington correspondent hits off a lot of our law-makers by quoting Samuel Smiles. He says, "How many lie down at night, feverish, thought-bewildered, but not silenced, the body tossing to and fro, until the downy pillow becomes a knotted log. This is the dark period in many a brain-worker's life. And he rises at last 'with a dark veil over his fancy,' through which he sees all things." This, applied to legislators, is a severe insinuation, but alas, we have often to fear its truthfulness if not its justice.

***

Mr. Gladstone relates an amusing story which gives a very good insight into the prevalent opinion on the uses of theology among a certain class of old-fashioned politicians. He says that on one occasion he attended a country church in company with Lord Melbourne, the celebrated statesman. The minister was rating the congregation soundly upon their personal irreligion. On the way home Lord Melbourne said, after censuring the preacher, "No one has a greater respect for the church than I, but when religion invades the province of private life, it is in my opinion, going beyond its limits." In practice, if not in expression, this would be the sentiment of many.

On Duty.

CROAKERS AND FRETTERS.

BY AMBER.

Don't you get awfully tired of people who are always croaking? A frog in a big, damp, malarial pond is expected to make all the fuss he can in protest of his surroundings. But a man! Destined for a crown, and born that he may be educated for the court of a king! Placed in an emerald world with a hither side of opaline shadow, and a fine dust of diamonds to set it sparkling when winter days are flying; with ten million singing birds to make it musical, and twice ten million flowers to make it sweet; with countless stars to light it up with fiery splendor, and white, new moons to wrap it round with mystery; with other souls within it to love and make happy, and the hand of God to uphold it on its rushing way among the countless worlds that crowd its path: what right has a man to find fault with such a world?

When the woodtick shall gain a hearing, as he complains that the grand old century oak is unfit to shelter him, or the bluebird be hearkened to when he murmurs that the horizon is off color, and does not match his wings, then, I think, it will be time for man to find fault with the appointments of the magnificent ball he inhabits.

"It is a fine day!" remarks Miss Cherrylips.

"Too cold," says the croaker, "beastly wind, not fit for a dog to breathe."

Oh, yes, my dear, I heard him say it this very morning, and while I sat and listened to him I could but think to myself, "What would become of the croaker without the weather topic to fall back upon?" When all else failed him, he is sure to find something to find fault with within the range of this universal and inexhaustible topic. It is too warm or too cold; there is too much rain, or there is a drought; the winters are changing and microbes are on the increase; the peach buds are blighted by a cold snap in spring, and the potatoes have failed or are about to fail, owing to a wet June.

That is the way the croaker holds forth whenever he can get anybody to listen to him. I sometimes wonder what he would do if he had really great things to fret about. If one of his beautiful children were to die, or the faithful wife he loves so well in his heart, perhaps, but never takes the trouble to acquaint with the fact, were to weary of his endless faultfinding and steal away from it all into the quietude of the grave. I wonder if he would not then look back upon these days of "croaking" with amazement that he was ever so blind and stupid a fool.

I knew a woman once who was very, very charming. She could sing "Allan Percy" in a way that would melt the heart within you. She could paint on china and decorate the panels of doors, and on the whole she was calculated to enjoy life and make it enjoyable for others. But her home, on the contrary, was utterly devoid of peace and comfort. Her husband took no pleasure there, although he was lavish in the expenditure of money to render the place attractive. Her children were glad to get away from their home and find otherwhere the freedom and gaiety denied them there. Why was all this, when the mother was so eminently fitted by grace and accomplishments to create a beautiful and happy home? Simply because she was always fretting and fussing about trifles. She was a croaker and always finding fault. She fought flies until life was a burden to everybody who watched her. She said that they would spoil the paint, poison the food and ruin the curtains. She was after them at early dawn nor gave over the chase until late at night. She would leave the dinner table to chase a fly and kill it with a folded paper. She would stop the lullaby song she was singing to her pretty baby, to get up and call somebody to come in and hunt a stray blue-bottle that was bunting its stupid head against the window screen. She said that her life wasn't worth a farthing to her if the flies got into her home, and she would sooner jump in the river than submit to the pestilential infliction. Then she was forever prophesying some dreadful fate for herself by reason of the muddy footprints that occasionally found their way onto the carpets.

"I declare," she would say, "If you boys don't stop tracking dirt into the house I'll die before my time. If there is anything I hate it is a careless boy!"

And the boys took her at her word and stopped tracking mud. But they were gradually lured to stay away from home, and the soil they took into their hearts was perhaps harder to efface than the footmarks they left upon the floor of mother's neatly kept hallways.

She was always anticipating trouble that never came. She knew the girl was going to leave. She was simply too great a treasure to keep. She was absolutely certain that the milkman was watering his milk, and the baby would get sick. She had no doubt whatever but what her husband was going to ruin himself on 'change, and then what would become of them all? So she worried and fretted and fumed, until patience, like a hunted bird, spread its wings and flew away, and what might have been a happy home became a stranded wreck upon the rocks of contention.

Oh, I tell you right now, girls, if you can only cultivate one accomplishment out of the many that wait to crown a perfect womanhood, cultivate a pleasant temper and a cheerful disposition. The ability to speak many languages, to paint, to dance, to sing, or even to wield a graceful pen is nothing compared to the ability to make a lovely home. Nobody ever yet succeeded in that noblest endeavor without abjuring needless faultfinding, croaking and fretting.

NEW JERSEY.

UP—AND AT IT!

The state executive committee met at Beverley in April, Mrs. Bourne, state president, presiding. Mrs. Ellis, state corresponding secretary, in a most touching manner, led the devotional half-hour. The work was discussed and plans formulated which touched every part of the state. A fine program was outlined for the Ocean Grove school of methods, July 6th and 7th. The World's Petition was indorsed and ordered circulated. County presidents were urged to have mite-boxes for the Temperance Temple introduced in every union. Mrs. Helen M. Brittin, of Madison, was appointed to fill the vacancy in the press department, occasioned by the death of Mrs. Helen Peck Crane.

The Y conference in Library Hall, Trenton, was ably conducted by Miss Mary Campbell, state superintendent. It was a very enthusiastic affair and brought out much talent, which was very encouraging to the older workers present, but as a full account has appeared in The Oak and Ivy Leaf, I will not repeat.

Madame Angelini, of Italy, pleased the people of Trenton exceedingly one Sabbath not long since. Dr. Smith, pastor of State Street church, Trenton (but recently of St. Paul's, Minn.), spoke under the auspices of Trenton, No. 1, in the opera house, on "Alcohol Impeached." The audience was very large and highly appreciative. The address abounded with telling hits, and pointed allusions that brought forth round after round of applause.

Monmouth county has organized a law and order league, to sustain the authorities against the race track gambling; and if large numbers, earnest words and ringing resolutions can put a stop to this defiance of law on the part of race track men, there will be no racing at Monmouth Park this summer.

Spring county conventions are now the order of the day. Our space will not permit a full report of each, so we must content ourselves with giving only a bit here and there. Cape May held one of the most successful at Tuckahoe. The state president added much to the interest of the occasion by her presence. Several ministers and business gentlemen attended, and gave to these tireless workers words of cheer and encouragement. One of their brightest Y's gave the response to the welcome. The resolutions were up to the standard, yet all the day long there was a sadness upon the hearts of those most active, at the thought of a dearly loved one who could never again be with them, and a most tender resolution was put on record to the memory of their late president. The music was most enlivening, and added much to the enjoyableness of the day and evening. Just put a pin in this point, dear sisters: It pays to have music.

Mercer county held, in place of a convention at Hightstown, a school of methods, which was very helpful and satisfactory. Morris county convention at Boonton was largely attended. Mrs. Greenman, the county president, keeps every part of the work at "high-water mark" by her wise generalship, and so this convention could not be otherwise than most successful. Beautiful tributes in prose and verse were given in memory of Mesdames Downs, Crane, and Salmon, one of which we give entire, by Mrs. Brittin:

"He smiteth the forest, and what shall fall
But the grandest, noblest, among them all;
Now here, and now there, from among the rest,
It seems as if God were choosing His best.
There never were women more true to their trust!
Oh! well may we weep by the sacred dust!
Ah! well—it may be we loved them too much,
And Thy kingdom, oh, Lord, we know is of such!
Now the helpful hands, and the tired feet,
Have gone to a rest that is long and sweet."

It was here, in this county, that Mrs. Downs received her first inspiration for work, in our woman's temperance society, and right royally did she obey the command, we know.

Anthony Comstock was the speaker of the evening, and a social was given at the parsonage in his honor after the exercises, which was highly appreciated.

All along the line the Sunday-school work is advancing, as a result of the temperance lesson in the regular course. Seed is being sown which will bring forth a rich harvest in the men and women of the future. Pledge cards are already being ordered in large numbers, especially from Middlesex county, and if kept up for the year to come, will roll up a vast number.

The city of Burlington has scored a victory which has the promise of lasting a year. When the council met in April the W. C. T. U. presented a petition signed by seven hundred citizens protesting against granting licenses, also a prominent iron founder detailing in an open letter how his business was injured by the drinking of his men. Both documents were ignored, and twenty-five licenses granted, but the Rev. Edward Hodge, a Presbyterian clergyman, secured a writ of certiorari on the city clerk against nineteen, claiming that the city charter gave only the council power to license inns and taverns. Leon Abbett, Jr., son of the governor, was engaged as counsel, and the cases were carried up to the Supreme Court. Meanwhile the mayor ordered the saloons closed, while the cases were pending, and just here stick your pin again: law can be enforced if there is an enforcer! The court ruled the licenses illegal, but, not to be downed, the liquor men reapplied under "inns and taverns act." In the meantime new ordinances have just gone into effect, which provide that "applications for license shall be considered at the regular meeting of the council in March and no other," and so when the applications of these licenses came up in the May meeting, the president of the council ruled them "out of order." Another instance of the enforcer on the side of law.

Lambertville, Hunderton county, is to have at least temporary relief from the curse of rum, too. Dissensions between the landlords and saloon-keepers enabled the temperance men to elect a board of excise, and the city became dry at midnight, May 4, with the exception of one license, which did not expire until June 4. Before this result was achieved, one of the landlords, formerly a railroad brakeman who now sports a seven hundred dollar diamond, on an immaculate shirt bosom, and drives two or three very valuable trotters, as the outcome of his successful business, openly boasted that he was under the protection of one of the "beer barons" of the state,—whose local representative is upon the governor's staff,—and did not care what the board refused, but he counted without his host, for the experience of the governor during the past year in appointing county excise boards in South Jersey was not of the most pleasing character, nor assuring to his success in the near future as a candidate for United States senator. He did not propose to hit the same snag in the northern counties—hence the legislature, at his bidding, repealed the law taking the power to appoint these county boards from the governor and vesting it in the courts. And when these gentlemen (?) waited upon him, he very politely waived them away with, "I can do nothing to aid you, the power is taken from me!" A most astute politician is his excellency—the governor of New Jersey!

Another element which contributed to bring about the aforesaid results was the display of dress, diamonds and horses of these liquor men upon the public streets setting the laboring men to thinking, "Who did all this? Why should I toil and serve, and these live in luxury and ease? What part have I had to make it thus?" and sober reflection caused them to determine to turn the tables, and by vote cease the accursed traffic in human souls in their midst! God help them take a wider range with their enlightened convictions, and now and ever vote the traffic from state and nation!

N. L. CAMINADE,
State Reporter, Trenton.

A BRILLIANT gathering was that at the northern district Colorado W. C. T. U. convention, held at Loveland recently. Preparations for the National Convention were discussed and the presence of Mrs. Mary Woodbridge added greatly to the inspiration of the meetings.

LOUISIANA CONVENTION.

The tenth annual convention of Louisiana W. C. T U was held in Monroe, April 21-24. A large number of delegates were present, and a larger number would have been in attendance but for the excited state of political feeling everywhere in Louisiana. The universal opinion seems to be that it was a most successful and pleasant convention. Besides our own workers, we had with us Mrs. Snell and Miss Kearney, of Mississippi, and Miss Griffin, of Alabama. They added much to our pleasure and we feel sure that all will remember and be benefited by Mrs. Snell's Bible readings. The annual address of our president, Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick, was replete with interest. It was a resume of the work of our state union during the past ten years, and was suggestive of plans for future work.

The citizens of Monroe were more than hospitable and greeted us with warm cordiality, making us feel that it was "good to be there." The audiences were large at every meeting and collections were generous. The reports from different parts of the state showed an advance all along the line. It was especially delightful to hear of the zealous work of our Y. W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Merrick, our loved and gracious president, who has served faithfully as state president for ten years, felt that she must lay aside those duties for a time and rest, and though unanimously re-elected, she adhered to her resolution and refused to accept the office. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, president; Mrs. Alice Zable, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Emma Wood, recording secretary; Mrs. Dot Harper, treasurer. Mrs. Merrick was elected honorary president, for all felt that we wished her aid and counsel in the state executive committee, and we would give all honor to her whom we respect and love so much.

Many plans for active work have been made. Legislative work has been laid out on which I hope to report favorably before the coming session of Louisiana General Assembly closes. Two new departments have been adopted, physical culture, and one for "securing homes for homeless children." Miss Belle Kearney has been engaged as state organizer and she expects to go over the state, quarterly, organizing W. C. T. U's, Y. W. C. T. U's and L. T. L's, besides visiting old unions. With this brave young worker in the field we feel that much will be done to push the work forward.

I have just ahead of me a five weeks' campaign in the state, and I expect to visit, in that time, places far from lines of public travel; some of them twenty miles from a railroad. I will tell you of the work done later. With our hearts full of love for humanity, and our lever resting on God, we hope to move the state for good, to elevate the standard of right in Louisiana and to draw men and women to Christ. Thank God, we are freed from the clutches of the lottery, and the evils that emanated from its noxious presence.

MARY READ GOODALE,
State Reporter, Baton Rouge.

IDAHO.

REPORT OF MOSCOW CONVENTION.

To one who has spent some time in southern Idaho, the green hills of the northern part of the state are a pleasing variety. The first W. C. T. U. convention of northern Idaho met last month at Moscow, a flourishing town of 4,500 inhabitants, situated in a most fertile region. The church in which the convention met was pleasingly decorated. On the wall back of the pulpit, in a semicircle, was the motto, "For God and Home and Native Land;" just within the half circle hung the white silk banner of the Moscow union and the blue silk banner of the state. Flags were gracefully draped on each end of the platform and about the pulpit were placed a number of blooming plants.

The first hour was spent in a consecration meeting, led by Mrs. Mitchell, state organizer. An address of welcome was then given by the president of Moscow union, Mrs. Hall. The response, by Miss Townsend, of Kendrick, was full of earnest thought. The afternoon program included two excellent papers, one on "Mothers' Influence," by Mrs. Kaiser, of Genesee, and the other on "Evangelistic Work," by Mrs. Bassett, of Moscow. Both papers were discussed and many good thoughts were suggested.

The evening brought another address of welcome on behalf of the Good Templars, by Rev. Murphy, and a response by Mrs. Rosecrans. The music of each evening was furnished by a choir led by Mr. E. R. Headly, a gentleman who has lately come to Moscow to reside and is doing much in the way of singing prohibition to the people, and in many other ways helping along the cause. The next on the program for the evening was an address by Mrs. Black, state president, after which Rev. Smith, of Genesee, preached a sermon from the text, "Quit you like men, be strong."

Friday's program added many good things to our feast, among them "How to Enlist the Children," by Miss Minta McGrew, of Genesee; also a paper on "Sabbath Observance," by Mrs. Allen, of Kendrick, read by Miss Harris. An excellent paper, "The Everyday Mercies of God," by Mrs. Louise A. Walker, was very earnestly and gracefully rendered; "Legislative Work," by Mrs. Mitchell, was crowded full of practical suggestions for work. Mrs. Black then led in a brief parliamentary drill. Friday evening a Demorest medal contest was given in the town hall, where a full house greeted the contestants. The people left the hall well pleased that a favorite young lady of Moscow won the medal.

Saturday morning the subject of social purity was earnestly discussed, Mrs. Walker, of Kendrick, leading in the discussion. The committees reported; a set of strong resolutions and an excellent plan of work were adopted. The committee on constitution reported a constitution for the district of northern Idaho, making it auxiliary to the state, which was adopted. Judge Crotemer spoke on the subject of scientific temperance instruction. After this came the election of an able corps of officers. Saturday evening Mrs. Mitchell gave a very convincing address on the subject of franchise.

On Sabbath afternoon a children's meeting was addressed by Mrs. Mitchell and Mrs. Black. A mass-meeting in the town hall Sabbath evening showed increasing interest. A paper by Mrs. Black on "Lady Henry Somerset," a recitation by Mr. Cole and an address by Mrs. Mitchell, interspersed with good and appropriate music, were the leading features of this closing meeting of the Moscow convention. The earnest talks, the fervent prayers were ended, the parting hour came and while we sang "God be with you till we meet again," tears came to many eyes and we realized the preciousness of "the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

SARAH H. BLACK.

MISSOURI.

ITEMS OF WORK.

The two great meetings in Missouri at Kansas City and St. Louis have been an inspiration to W. C. T. U. workers throughout the state, and no previous month's work has been so fully reported. Several unions have been visited by Dr. Anna Shaw, who spoke to large audiences at Kansas City on "Home Rule for America," and the "Fate of Republics." She also spoke at Springfield, Carthage and Holden.

Miss Clara Parrish, of Paris, Ill., is an excellent worker who has been busily engaged, for twenty-five days, in the second district. She is pronounced by all a superior organizer: her house-to-house visitations are effectual and have won many conservatives to our ranks. Had the weather been favorable many more homes would have been visited. During her stay, she visited ten different localities, spoke twenty-four times, made fifty calls, "resurrected" two unions, organized eight new ones and four L. T. L's, added new members to the Meadville and the Carrollton Y's, making a total of fourteen societies organized and one hundred and eighty-four new members added to our ranks. Will W. C. T. U. women look on page forty-four in our last State Minutes and see what Mrs. Hoffman says of Miss Parrish's work? While Miss Parrish's terms are necessarily more than is quoted there, I see no reason why, in every district, our membership could not be increased as it has been in the second.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter and the newly appointed state superintendent of juvenile work, Miss Nettie Browning Danforth, of Charleston, are earnestly working in their district, speaking, organizing unions, L. T. L's and attending county conventions. Dexter held her fifth silver medal contest amid great enthusiasm. Music by the L. T. L. was highly appreciated. The medal was won by Miss Daisy Ringer. Poplar Bluff and Thayer have also treated their citizens to medal contests.

Experience meetings are becoming popular in the fourteenth district, the latest being a ten-cent experience meeting by the Thayer L. T. L. The proceeds were contributed to Willard fountain. The state superintendent of Y work enjoyed visiting the Y's of Carthage and Butler, and organized new Y's at Thayer, Holden, Warrensburg and Poplar Bluff. Y's were also organized within the past month at Meadville, Linneus, Huntsville and Monroe City by Miss Parrish. Who can say the girls of Missouri are not doing their part?

The twelfth district president is laboring to have each of the nine counties organized and fully equipped by the last of May. Columbia has had temperance meetings which will, it is hoped, help to keep saloons out of our university city.

The mother of the president of the sixth district has been very ill, and work she hoped to have done has thus been prevented.

The editor of the Home Guard, Mrs. King, by her ingenuity, caused the arrest and conviction of one F. R. Strong, who has been sending all over our land impure circulars, and it is hoped the postoffice department will land the author of "Little Gem" circulars where he justly belongs. Let us not forget the Home Guard's self-denial week, and may this paper receive the encouragement it deserves. Bonne Terre is enthusiastically knocking at every open door. They gave "The American Jubilee" to a crowded house and net receipts were $24.89. Much literature is being distributed in a systematic manner. Their L. T. L. has an average attendance of seventy-four. A memorial service was held in honor of Miss Ames. One column in the Register is filled with choice temperance literature. A colored union of seven members has been organized. Fifteen mite-boxes are being filled. A reception was given Mrs. C. C. Bliss by the W. C. T. U. before her departure and, as a slight token of their appreciation, they presented her with a beautiful picture.

World's day was a day long to be remembered at Paynesville. The program was carefully arranged. One of the most able addresses ever delivered in this city was given by Rev. P. Pryor, on Sabbath Observance. This is the home of one of our district presidents, and is a city where there is a strong sentiment against woman's public work, but each duty performed "In His Name" enables the workers to grow stronger. Neosho has a flourishing I. O. G. T. and a W. C. T. U. Before election they held a mass prayer-meeting, hoping the ever ready Master would lead those in authority to cast ballots aright.

Holden has had the good fortune to have our state president, Mrs. Hoffman, Miss Carter and Dr. Anna Shaw to lecture for them. All these meetings were largely attended. Now that Holden has a new Y, we expect more news from them next month. Wellsville recently held their fifth Demorest medal contest. A class of nine boys was secured. In former classes the girls were in the majority and all were pleased to know the boys were becoming interested. The ladies of the W. C. T. U. presented Prof. E. A. Wise with a bookcase for having so kindly drilled the several classes.

Ludlow is rejoicing over its newly organized W. C. T. U. It has twenty-one regular members and ten honorary. I foresee a bright future for this union. Miss Jennie Clayton is meeting with success in her line of work, physical culture and healthful dress, and unions will do well to secure her services. Mrs. Fannie Dungan, state superintendent of fair work, has been obliged to resign on account of ill-health. Co-workers, put in your state minutes in the place of Mrs. S. B. Shields, state superintendent of juvenile work, the name of Miss Nettie Browning Danforth, of Charleston.

Mrs. C. S. Schofield, who was for two years president of the Humansville W. C. T. U., was called home on the 7th inst. She was a faithful worker in every good enterprise and an "honor to the cause she loved so well." She was the step-mother of General Schofield. A beautiful floral tribute of cut flowers was the gift of the Humansville W. C. T. U. May we all profit by the light which so beautifully shone through her. Verily "she hath done what she could."

MRS. MARY E. JONES,
State Reporter, Humansville.

MINNESOTA.

MOVEMENTS IN THE GOPHER STATE.

The Lucy Hayes union of this city had been anticipating the lecture of Mrs. Clara Hoffman, and when at last the evening and the lecturer came, they were well repaid. A good audience gathered in the Park Avenue Congregational church, and from her first clearcut sentence gave closest attention to the close of the lecture; and surely no sincere man or woman could leave the house that night without a strong conviction of which he ought to choose, "Christ or Barabbas"—Christ representing purity and righteousness (in politics as well as elsewhere), and Barabbas the opposite. Mrs. Hoffman lectured also in several other places throughout the state.

John G. Woolley's retreat at Rest Island is engaging more and more the sympathy and support of the Minnesota W. C. T. U., and the second meeting or assembly, which will be held on the grounds in June, promises to far surpass the first in interest and attendance, wonderful as that first was. Mr. Woolley has engaged some of the best speakers to be there, and it is hoped to have Miss Willard herself to dedicate "Willard Cottage." A fine hotel will be ready for guests, and it is rumored that our Mrs. Russell will have charge of it, which is entire surety of its successful management in every respect.

The union at Canton, under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Carrie Estey Miller, is enjoying prosperity. Very interesting as well as instructive meetings are held, each member in turn carrying on a meeting in the interests of her department. Socials have also been held and they expect to entertain the county convention this spring. Money Creek union lost its president when Mrs. H. M. McElroy removed to Wheeler, Iowa. That her labors had been appreciated by the members of the union was evidenced by their presenting her with a silver cake basket, inscribed, "Mrs. H. M. McElroy, from Money Creek W. C. T. U." But though thus bereft of their leader, and many of the members laid by for a time by la grippe, the union still lives and moves. They greatly desired Miss Willard and Lady Somerset to come to them, but that was impossible. Miss Willard, however, sent them a package of literature which they have found most helpful. The union has taken up work for the lumbermen during the winter, has ordered autograph cards for the children's chain at the Columbian Exposition, and is preparing its protest against Senator Dolph's bill.

Dover Y's held an evening entertainment, and "every member invited one friend, and in this way we obtained a few new members," a most excellent plan. If each union in our state were to go and do likewise the aggregate of the "few" to each union would be a grand total to the state. Madelia union possesses some very earnest and efficient workers. Their little town is cursed with the presence of four saloons; on every hand, and far out into the country the effect of the curse is seen. For several years the question of license or no license had not been up at annual elections, so tightly had the rum power held its grip upon the people that they did not even question its right to do so, but last winter the W. C. T. U. made a successful effort to rouse the voters from their lethargy, agitating the question so thoroughly that a mass-meeting was held a few nights before election, earnest appeals made, and public sentiment expressed against the saloons; but was it too much to expect the overthrow of the giant at one battle? Something has been gained anyway, for "agitation is better than stagnation."

MRS. AMY A. GREEN,
State Reporter, Minneapolis.

TEXAS TIDINGS.

Texas joined with all other white-ribboners in waving a farewell to dear Lady Somerset, and prayed for her safe arrival at the "haven where she would be," rejoicing that her editorial connection with THE UNION SIGNAL will not be severed by her departure.

We are much disappointed that Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell has been obliged to defer her visit to us, but have her promise of as early a fulfillment of her engagements as possible. Mrs. Stoddard is sending out life-size pictures of our peerless leader, Miss Willard, which is offered with a year's subscription to the White Ribbon, for seventy-five cents. The state Prohibition convention met at Waco, April 26.

Miss Hetherington introduces the boys and girls of the Texas L. T. L. to some new companies, saying: "I know you will give them a cordial welcome into our ranks, and we will all try and keep step together and obey the commands of our Captain, the Lord Jesus Christ." First comes Beaumont with over sixty pledged members; Orange division, with fifty-four members; Sabine Pass, Colmesneil, Groveton, Duncan's Woods, and Liberty have each a flourishing division, Ennis also, and Mrs. Jno. Rowe writes that they have five dollars for the Beauchamp memorial tablet for the Temple. Houston has division No. 2 organized by Mrs. May Sprong, former corresponding secretary of the local W. C. T. U., who resigned that position to accept the superintendency of L. T. L. of that city.

The week of prayer occurred April 3 to 10, considering the special topics of Sunday closing and no liquor at the World's Fair. Mexia (pronounced Mahaia) has had a Demorest medal contest, in which four girls and an equal number of boys participated. This time it was a boy who won—Rero Herring. A touching incident connected with the contest was the greeting of the boy's father. He said: "I am the father of this boy, I raised him to plow. I am proud of him; but I must tell you I have set him a good example. I never took a dram of whisky, a chew of tobacco, or a smoke in my life. I am a Prohibitionist."

Alice McHan says, "a little band of women are holding the fort in the cause of temperance in Sweetwater." Houston has had an object lesson which has startled the whole community. A young man under the influence of liquor and morphine, murdered his mother and aunt in a drunken frenzy, cutting their throats with a razor. He was well educated and cultured, but whisky, morphine and their attendant evils have done their work, and now he occupies a felon's cell.

"He was pure as morning dew,
As he knelt at his mother's knee."

Our city has a most flourishing woman's exchange which has helped many girls to pay their tuition while learning type-writing, stenography and book-keeping. One young girl earned eleven dollars one week with cake. Your correspondent is secretary of this institution. Texas sends congratulations to Mrs. Carse upon taking possession of a room in the Temple. It is most fitting that the originator and successful conductor of the enterprise should be the first to occupy the building.

MRS. ELIZABETH STRONG TRACY,
State Reporter, Houston.

NOTICE.

The convention of Wisconsin W. C. T. U. will be held in Christ Presbyterian church, Wisconsin Ave., Madison, June 7 to 10. One and one-third fare has been obtained for delegates and visitors. Visitors wishing reduced rates at hotels and boarding houses should write to the state corresponding secretary, 322 Washing Ave.

MARIA F. HANCHETT,
State Corresponding Secretary.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

REV. JAMES PINKHAM is an able prohibition speaker who is at present doing good work in Wyoming.

REV. C. H. and MRS. ST. JOHN have been conducting a series of evangelistic services at Weir, Kan., which have been fruitful in results.

A UNION has been organized in Dixie, Walla Walla county, Wash., with Mrs. Mary L. McIlroy, an earnest and efficient worker, as president.

THE semi-annual convention of Bucks county, Pa., W. C. T. U. was held in Newtown, May 4. A Demorest gold medal contest in the evening was largely attended.

VALUED friends and helpers of the Ohio temperance folk are Mr. and Mrs. David Tatum who have left their home in Cleveland, O., for a residence in Ravenswood, Ill.

INDIANA W. C. T. U. has had eighteen schools of methods this year, thus showing genuine progress, for there can be no truer thermometer in white ribbon work than the number of schools of methods that a state conducts in a year.

THE St. Paul, Minn., W. C. T. U., since its organization four months ago, has taken many advance steps in various lines of work, preventive measures rather than reformatory being adopted. It is a band of thoughtful, earnest, united women.

VAHAN K. BESHGETOOR, the Armenian, has finished his course in the Theological Seminary, at Rochester, N. Y., and received his ordination. He is deeply interested in the temperance work, and has secured a large number of signatures to the World's Petition.

THE West Virginia W. C. T. U., is awake and is pushing organization, by means of such able workers as Mrs. M. M. Love, Miss Lydia Newcomb, Miss Vandalia Varnum and Miss Jennie Smith, who goes to Moundsville to be the principal speaker at an all-day meeting, July 4.

THE Scandinavian W. C. T. U. of Duluth, Minn., organized last fall, has conducted a series of successful temperance mass-meetings during the winter which have given it prestige and made it a power which will influence for good the Scandinavian community of Duluth.

A WORTHY organization in which some of our prominent Southern white-ribboners are interested is the Woman's National Indian Association, with headquarters at New Orleans, La. Its object is to secure protection and equal rights for the Indian. Mrs. E. John Ellis is president.

THE West Side Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Chicago has established a free dispensary for the cure of alcoholism, at W. C. T. U. headquarters at 870 West Madison street, in charge of Dr. A. V. Hutchins. It is open every evening from eight till nine and the treatment is absolutely free.

THE Vassar College Y. W. C. T. U. holds fortnightly meetings, at which some phaseof W. C. T. U. work is presented and studied. A recent visit from Mrs. Barnes was a great stimulus, adding seventeen members to their ranks. College Y's are young women who will go out into the world to carry on the work for which they are preparing themselves so well.

MRS. EDITH DAVIS, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, associate superintendent of social purity for the National W. C. T. U., is one of our gifted and consecrated white-ribboners. During her husband's absence recently, Mrs. Davis filled his pulpit most acceptably. There is great interest manifested in the social purity work in Milwaukee, and a series of meetings are being planned in the Y. M. C. A. and other halls in the interest of the White Cross movement.

MISS ANNA DOWNEY, of Chicago, one of the best evangelists in this country, and a Bible reader of rare originality and power, and Miss Sallie Boyd, of West Virginia, an earnest and capable Christian speaker and worker, have joined forces in the field this winter. They will afford the very best help to any local union that may wish to hold evangelistic meetings, and for this reason we repeat our announcement. These ladies can be heard from at Geneva, N. Y.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL RECEIPTS.

Connecticut—Guilford: Mrs. C. E. Hall, $1; Plainville: Y's, $5; Moosup: Y's, $2; South Norwalk: Y's, $1.

North Dakota—Drayton: W. C. T. U., $5; Sanborn: Y's, $1.

District of Columbia—Washington: Y's $1.

Illinois—Belle Flower: Y's, $1; Sparta: Y's, $2.10; Milo Wheat Land: W. C. T. U., $2.75; Plainville: W. C. T. U., $1; Bradford: W. C. T. U., $10; Joliet; W. C. T. U., $1; Y's, $1; McLean: W. C. T. U., $1; Sheldon: W. C. T. U., $5; Bloomington: Mrs. A. E. Sanford, state treasurer, $87.50; Colonia; Mrs. T. W. Reese, $1; Chester: M. C. W., $2; Belvidere: Y's, $1; Galesburg: Mrs. Hiram Mars, $5; New Salem: W. C. T. U., $1; Harvey: W. C. T. U., $1; Raritan; W. C. T. U., $1; Sidney: Y's, $2; Streator: W. C. T. U., $1; Sycamore: Y's, $1; Chatsworth: W. C. T. U., $1; Chicago, West Side: W. C. T. U., $1; Henry: W. C. T. U., $1; Chicago: Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, $100; Wheaton: Mrs. C. M. Hawley, $1; Champaign: W. C. T. U., $1; Odell: W. C. T. U., $1; Hinckley: Y's, $2; Mendota: W. C. T. U., $1; Bristol: W. C. T. U., $3; Maple Park: W. C. T. U., $1; Endenburg: Y's, $5; Lexington: Y's, $1; Mendon: W. C. T. U., $1; Bloomington: Mrs. A. E. Sanford, state treasurer, $63.50; Newton; Y's $1; Ashland: W. C. T. U., $5.34; Genoa: W. C. T. U., $1; Chicago: South Side W. C. T. U., $1; Chicago: Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, $150; Bloomington: Mrs. A. E. Sanford, state treasurer, $6; Fernwood: $1; Chicago: Mite barrel, 60 cents; Bloomington: Mrs. A. E. Sanford, state treasurer, $87.50.

Indiana—Alexandria: Y's, $5.

Kansas—Eldorado: Mrs. H. H. Grover's S. S. class, $10; Hiawatha: Y's, $1.

Kentucky—Lexington: W. C. T. U., $10.

Massachusetts—Amherst: Y's, $3; Auburndale: "La Salle Sem," Y's, $1.75; Southfield: $5; West Bedford: Y's, $1; Taunton: Y's, $3; Dorchester: Y's, $3.

Michigan—Coat's Grove: Mrs. A. S. Miller, $1; S. Bay City: Y's, $2.

Minnesota—Fillmore: W. C. T. U., $3.50; Winnebago City: Y's, $5; St. Charles: W. C. T. U., $1.50; Hastings: W. C. T. U., $2; Minneapolis: Lucy Hayes W. C. T. U., $5.50; St. Charles: Y's, $1; Hastings; Mrs. D. B. Truax, $1; Caledonia: Y's, $1; Etna: W. C. T. U., $3.80.

Mississippi—Vicksburg: Y's, $2.50; Vicksburg: Ida Vandenberg, $2.50.

Missouri—Hannibal: W. C. T. U., $5; Rich Hill: Mrs. H. McKibben, $5.

New York—Ransomville: Y's, $3; Perry: W. C. T. U., $10; Purchase: Y's, $5; Varick: Y's, $1; Livingston Manor: 25 cts.; Plattsburg: Y's, $5.

New Jersey—Ocean Grove: Y's, $10; Vineland: Y's, $5; Atlantic: Y's, $5; Moorestown: Y's, $5; Plainfield: Y's, $2.50.

Nova Scotia—Dartmouth: S. Waddell, $1; Yarmouth: Y's, $3.

Ohio—Steubenville: Y's, $1; Toledo: Y's, $10; Portsmouth: W. C. T. U., $5; Plymouth: Y's, $3; West Union: Y's, $1; Martin's Ferry: Y's, $10; Perrysville: Y's, $1; North Baltimore: Y's, $1; Wilmington: Y's, $1; Cleveland: West Side Y's, $1; Oxford: Y's, $2; New Paris: Y's, $1; Canton: Y's, $1; Canton: Y's, $1.

Pennsylvania—Philadelphia: Sarah Bennoch, $5; George Institute Y's, $5.

Rhode Island—Phenix: Y's, $1.88.

Texas—Mexia: Mollie Sheeks, $5.

Virginia—Riverton: Y's, $2.

Vermont—Craftsbury: Y's, $1; Fair Haven: W. C T. U., $5; Chelsea: Y's, $1.

Wisconsin—Central Park: Y's, $5.

MRS. C. E. BIGELOW, Treas.

Official Communications.

TREASURERS' REPORTS.

One of the great needs of the W. C. T. U. is money. But were it known how great is the aggregate spent annually we should be astonished, and our enemies would be forced to respect us. In order to reach this total effectually and systematically, the National treasurer has prepared blanks for reports. It is urged that every state adopt these, that every local union use them. Two blanks are needed, one for report and one for remittance. The price of these are four dollars per thousand, each, fifty cents per hundred, or singly, two cents each. Let every local union order these, also at the same time, order the treasurer's text book, price five cents.

ESTHER PUGH, Treas.
The Temple, Chicago.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

One of the special features in the June GREAT DIVIDE will be a tale of the evolution of the soul, "The Little Death," combining the realism of Dumas, the romanticism and philosophy of Bulwer Lytton, the lifelike verisimilitude of Robert Louis Stevenson and the tragic force of Rider Haggard, with the unique flavor of the Rocky Mountains, all moulded by a mind of rare individuality, literary force and original genius.

EX-GOV. ALVA ADAMS

The story deals with the strange freaks of heredity, the occult philosophy of Brahmanism, the mysteries of Odic force and Hypnotism, the profoundly intellectual doctrine of "The Little Death," and the strange story of murder by consent.

CLARENCE P. HOYT

Incidental to the narrative, are given the ghostly experiences in the State Penitentiary, and the suicide of the murderer; also, his reappearance on the track of the midnight Rio Grande Express midst the sublime scenery of the Royal Gorge, where the alphabet of the soul's philosophy is revealed and the tragic tale ends.

Fashioned by a grand master of the art, and the startling and original facts of the story marshaled with a vivid force of narrative power that implies not only talent of the highest order, but genius pure and simple.

DR NICHOLAS BONIFIELD-STANHOPE

All of the characters here illustrated except the convict, are influential citizens of Colorado, and are now living.

Hon. Alva Adams is one of the most intellectual and forcible men of the West—Governor of Colorado, 1887-89. It was to him the convict, Dr. Bonifield Stanhope, addressed his remarkable confession which appears in the story of "The Little Death."

"FITZ MAC"

Clarence P. Hoyt, Warden Colorado State Penitentiary at the time that strange criminal genius Dr. Bonifield-Stanhope committed suicide in the institution.

Dr. Nicholas Bonifield Stanhope, the scholarly scion of a distinguished English family, whose confession constitutes the gist of this most remarkable and thrilling chronicle. Sentenced to the penitentiary for life under the alias of Nicholas Bone.

"Fitz Mac" is the quill name of one of the ablest and most widely known journalists of the West, who is the author of "The Little Death."

Startling, original illustrations and articles too numerous to mention, on Rocky Mountain scenery, minerals, mines, crystals, relics, natural wonders, caves, grotesque and marvelous works of nature, burning rock, and wild flowers, complete the June GREAT DIVIDE. Sample copy, 10c.

Our contributors are Litterateurs, Plain People, Cowboys, Scouts, Miners, Indians—people familiar whereof they write, who tell their stories in their own quaint way.

16 Gemstones Free

as a premium with THE GREAT DIVIDE.

Commended alike by Scientists and the Great Public, they continue to attract subscribers by their intrinsic value. In addition to this, all of the 16 Gemstones are cut and polished ready for jewelry mounting, and given free to each new subscriber sending $1, price of yearly subscription.

 There is an object lesson for you and yours in subscribing now; therefore send $1 to-day for yearly subscription, and the Gemstones will be sent you same day order is received. Always address,

THE GREAT DIVIDE,
1518 Arapahoe Street, Denver, Colorado.

Dr. O. P. BROWN'S TISSUE BUILDER, for the Skin and Body.

The beauty of the Romans was largely due to anointing. Dr. O. P. Brown's HERBAL TISSUE BUILDER, made from an old Roman Oil formula, has a wonderful effect on the skin, acting as a Tonic. It feeds the tissues, fills up wrinkles, plumps the figure, beautifies the complexion and hands. Most skins, hungry for nourishment, absorb it as thirsty plants do water. Druggists or by mail, $1. Send 10c. for Sample and Lady's paper illustrated.

WOMAN'S LIFE, 47 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J.

Publisher's Notes.

A NEW DRESS.

THE UNION SIGNAL has indulged in a new dress. It was not ready for Easter, but the cool season makes it tolerable to be a little later than usual this year; so it is trying it on this week to be quite sure it will fit and be becoming for Flower Mission Day. We call upon all to admire it. It is not extravagant, its gown being of clear, plain print, but it has blossoms on its head-gear. Buttercups and daisies indicate where news from the field can be found; choice blossoms show the careful culling from the articles written by correspondents; the emblems of office and elaborate scroll work show the pains taken by our contributors to send their best for the benefit of our readers; the lattice and the bird in the cage suggest the home-like atmosphere of the household; the honeycomb emblemizes the sweets gathered in the queen's gardens; the lighthouse shining so brightly in surrounding darkness tells how the light of truth should illuminate the dark places of the earth. And then the title, could anything be more beautiful? Clear, plain, artistic; it will be generally admired.

How do you like the new dress? Do call the attention of your friends to it, and secure their interest so that they will want its constant visits. Then let us know, and we will gladly send it.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

IT IS A BEAUTY.

What? Why, the new badge for the senior L. T. L.'s or graduates of the Loyal Temperance Legion. For a long time we have been trying to find just where we could have a badge manufactured of a metal that will not tarnish, but always show undimmed its brightness—as our boys and girls should. At last success has crowned these efforts, and we have a lovely button badge for the coats of the large boys and a pendant of the same design for girls. Made of that beautiful new metal of which all are talking and with approval—aluminum or aluminium. The design is, of course, circular, with Maltese cross on it and the initials T. A. in monogram. These stand for Total Abstinence. We will print the cut of the design next week. The boys, of course, will wear the buttons on the coat collar as G. A. R. men do theirs. The girls can hang the pendant on their chain or fasten it to the breastpin by a small chain or a narrow ribbon.

And what is the price? The button is 25c or $2.50 per doz. The pendant 20c or $2 per dozen. We hope to see a whole army of temperance young people wearing them. Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

AUTOGRAPH PLEDGE CARDS.

As the time for the World's Exposition approaches the demand for the autograph pledge cards for the children's chain is increasing. These cards are in red, white and blue, with pledge on one side and place for the name on the other. They are punctured so as to make it easy to link them together. We can supply these cards in any quantity on short order at the following rates: Per package of 30, 10 cts; 3 packages for 25 cts. Let every child who will, have an opportunity to send an autograph to the World's Exposition.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

IMPORTANT NOTICE
OF THE
HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

Buy inside the RED LINES on the new map of HARVEY, Cook County, Illinois, mailed free by the

HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

The RED LINES enclose the entire Village of HARVEY and the land of the

HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

The factories are all inside the RED LINES on the land laid out and supplied with Railroad facilities by the

HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

The Stores, Banks, Business Offices, R. R. Depot, Sewers, Paved Streets, Electric Cars, Churches and Public Schools are all inside the RED LINES and on the land originally platted and sold by the

HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

There is a clause in every deed issued by the Harvey Land Association, forever prohibiting the sale of liquor in Harvey. All persons and firms that offer lots in ADDITIONS of Harvey are not selling lots in HARVEY. None of the Additions are in Harvey and are not in any way connected with the

HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

A pamphlet explaining exerything, plats and price list, also a beautiful World's Fair Souvinier sent free by the

HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION

whose Chicago office is at 825 The Rookery, corner La Salle and Adams Streets, and at the large Brick Bank Building at Harvey

Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE PEERLESS STEAM COOKER

Will enable you to cook a whole meal over ONE BURNER on gasoline, oil, gas, or common cook stove. It will pay FOR ITSELF IN ONE Season, for canning fruit. AGENTS WANTED, either sex, big profits. For particulars address, with stamp,

C. E. Swartzbaugh & Co.,
334 Dearborn St., Room 920, Chicago.

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO.
Publishers,
740 & 742 BROADWAY, NEW YORK,
Books treating the Great Questions of the Day relating to the Church, the State, and the Conditions and Tendencies of American Civilization.
Send for Catalogues & Descriptive Circulars

IN THE WILDS OF AFRICA.

TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease. A missionary agent writes: "I have sold TOKOLOGY in various parts of South Africa; it gives universal satisfaction, and is pronounced a God-send." Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.
ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison-st. Chicago.

House Furnishing
has many branches. We concentrate our entire resources on wall papering. Pretty effects—new designs. 100 samples mailed for 8 cents. Prices, 5 to 50c. a roll.
A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St., Phila.

CHICAGO INVESTMENTS Before risking your money write to me for the facts about values.
Address MRS. L. J. LANPHERE
with stamps 211 Wabash Ave.
Highest references. Chicago, Ill.

How to Dress in a Stylish and healthful manner described and illustrated. One department devoted to infants and children. 50c per year; 15c. per copy. Gertrude Quarterly Box 1088, Chicago.

VOSE & SON'S PIANOS
EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

BICYCLES ON EASY PAYMENTS
No extra charge. All makes new or 2d hd. Lowest price guaranteed. Largest stock & oldest dealers in U. S. Cats. free. Agts. wanted. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 G St., Peoria, Ill

SEND for our list of 19 Catalogs of Music and Musical Instruments.
W. STORY, 26 Central St., Boston, Mass

SOCIAL—Persons sending full particulars of their most successful social will be similarly favored. New successful idea. C. R. C., Auburn Park, Ill.

A NEW ENTERTAINMENT FOR
W. C. T. U's
L. T. L's and SCHOOLS.
Copies 10c. each. Address
ANNA L. MORSE, Farmer's Creek, Mich.

Dr. O. P. Brown's
GREAT EXTERNAL REMEDY,
HERBAL OINTMENT!
reaches disease through the pores, arouses circulation, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25 and 50 cents. Druggists or mail. J. Gibson Brown, 7 Grand St., Jersey City, N J.

Van Houten's Cocoa, pure, soluble, economical.

Every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL should write to Walter Thomas Mills & Co., 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill., for their new booklet, entitled "Chicago's Growth in Ten Years." Only 16 pages, but contains volumes of information. Sent free.

TO SARATOGA AND NEW YORK.

All those who contemplate going to New York or to Saratoga Springs at the time of the great meetings of the Christian Endeavor and the National Educational Association, taking advantage of the reduced rates made to those points, should not fail to consult the beautiful illustrated circulars upon the subject issued by the Michigan Central, the Niagara Falls Route. Address O. W. RUGGLES, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

EXCELLENT SERVICE.

At 5:45 P. M. The "Fast Train" leaves Chicago via the Wisconsin Central Lines for St. Paul, Minneapolis, Ashland, Duluth and the Irontowns, composed of Through Pullman Vestibuled Sleepers to Chippewa Falls and Eau Claire, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Ashland and Duluth, making close connections at Union Depot, St. Paul, with the new train which has just been placed in service via the Northern Pacific Railroad to the Pacific Coast, leaving St. Paul daily at 9:00 A. M.

At 10:45 P. M. The "Pacific Express" leaves Chicago for the Pacific Coast via the Wisconsin Central and Northern Pacific Lines, composed of Pullman Vestibuled Drawing-Room and Tourist Sleepers, running through to Portland, Ore., and Tacoma, Wash., without change.

For tickets, time-tables, berth reservations, etc., apply to City Ticket Office, No. 205 South Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., or to JAS. C. POND, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.

To the Cincinnati Convention via the B. & O.

Delegates and others attending the Cincinnati Prohibition Convention in June, are requested, before choosing their route from any point, East, West, North or South, to communicate with any of the following agents of the B. & O. who will cheerfully supply all information relative to the lowest rates obtainable, the most picturesque, quickest and safest route, and who will make special arrangements for the transportation of special parties in special cars L. S. ALLEN, the Rookery, Chicago W. E. REPPERT, Columbus; O. P MCCARTY, Grand Central Station, Cincinnati; C. P. CRAIG, 415 Broadway, New York; A. J. SIMMONS, 411 Washington Street, Boston; C. R. MACKENZIE, 33 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia: B. F. BOND, Baltimore; S. B. HEGE, Washington Pullman accommodations. Two Vestibuled Limited Express trains daily between Cincinnati and the East. Quickest and best train service to Cincinnati from Columbus. The B. & O. is the most attractive route all the year around between Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati and the East.

OUR CHILDREN

BLACK, BLUE AND GRAY.

The steady tramp of martial feet
Was heard upon the village street.
Sweet music filled the fragrant air,
So sweet with breath of flowers fair.
Beneath the shade of stately trees,
Whose green flags nestled in the breeze,
Each soldier paused to bow his head
In presence of the soldier-dead.

Three little playmates left their play
And turned their eager steps that way.
Their aprons filled with daisies white,
And dandelions golden bright.
And one dear child was very fair,
With azure eyes and golden hair.
And one was dark with glowing eyes,
Whose birth had been 'neath Southern skies.
And one, the third, oh, black was she
As child of Africa could be.
And arm in arm they came to strew
The soldiers' graves; 'twas all they knew
Of Decoration Day. And so,
With hearts and faces all aglow,
They scattered blossoms far and wide,
Where foe and friend lay side by side.

A soldier, smiling, turned to see
And jest a little with the three.
"Why, little Effie, don't you know
That Madge's father long ago,
Against your father fought? And here"-
Pointing to Topsy, standing near—
"Is the whole cause of all the fuss;
Her people got us in the muss."

The children lifted wondering eyes,
Half tearful in their sore surprise.
Then with a mutual impulse turned,
The soldier's stately presence spurned.
And standing closely side by side,
And twining loving arms, they cried:
"We don't believe a word you say,
But, if it's true, why, now sir, they

"Are up in heaven, and God, we know,
Forgets what happened long ago.
And we don't fight, ah, no, for we—
We love each other, don't you see?"
Then hand in hand they walked away—
The girl in blue, the girl in gray,
And she for whose down-trodden race
The soldiers perished face to face.

* * * * *

Oh, happy Decoration Day,
Which binds in love both blue and gray!
May thy sweet blossoms never cease
To bloom in love and trust and peace.

—Mary D. Brine, in Congregationalist.

DAVID'S DECORATION DAY.

BY EMILY TOLMAN.

"How many stones all just alike!" exclaimed David, as he, with his younger brother, Dick, and their uncle Charles, passed into the quiet, green inclosure of the National Cemetery, at Hampton, Virginia.

"I shouldn't wonder if there were as many as a hundred," said Dick.

"Pshaw! there are lots more than that; aren't there, uncle?" interposed David. "See, it says on this cannon that five thousand Union soldiers are buried here. Were they all killed in battle?"

"No, David; some of them died in hospitals; and many have been buried here from the Soldiers' Home, over yonder," replied Uncle Charles, pointing to a group of buildings a short distance away.

"See, they are in straight lines just like an army on parade," said David, as he looked over the long rows of marble headstones.

"What a forest of trees, and how green the grass is!" exclaimed Dick. "Oh! there's a holly tree like the one we had last Christmas at home. What kind of a bird do you suppose that was that just flew out of it? It might be a mocking-bird; you know we heard one singing yesterday. I'm going to see if there isn't a nest there."

"Where shall I put my flowers, uncle?" asked David, who carried a large bunch of roses.

"You might look about for a New York soldier's grave, and decorate that."

"But there are ever so many of them, uncle."

"Well, how would you like to place your flowers on one of these unknown graves? See how many there are in this row, marked with only a number, because no one knew the name of the soldier buried there."

"All right, I will decorate this unknown grave," replied David, reverently placing his roses on the green turf.

"They are coming! The soldiers are coming!" cried Dick excitedly, returning from his search in the holly tree. "I hear the drum. Can't we go to meet them?"

The sound of a muffled drum, and the tramp, tramp, tramp of the soldiers now became distinctly audible.

"The best place for us to get a good view of them without being in their way is over by the flag-staff. We will go back there directly; but while we are here let us just look at this fine monument. This is what we saw when we were coming on the boat."

"Why, the fence around it is made of guns with bayonet spikes; and for posts there are cannon," exclaimed Dick.

"Didn't you say there were other national cemeteries, uncle?" asked David, as they walked back toward the flag-staff.

"Yes, there are eighty-two in all; fifteen besides this in Virginia. This is a comparatively small one. At Arlington sixteen thousand soldiers are buried, and as many more at Fredericksburg. About three hundred thousand Union soldiers lie in our national cemeteries. Over one hundred thousand of these are unknown. War is a dreadful thing, boys. Besides all these there were a good many soldiers whose bodies were sent to their friends, and who are buried in private cemeteries. You should learn these lines:

"'Four hundred thousand men,
The good, the brave, the true,
In tangle wood, in mountain glen,
On battle-field, in prison pen,
Lie dead for me and you.
Four hundred thousand of the brave
Have made our ransomed soil their grave,
For me and you,
Good friend, for me and you.'"

As the solemn music of the band, and the measured tread of the soldiers drew near, the boys forgot all else in watching the troops from the National Military Asylum. Nine hundred scarred and gray-haired veterans, in army blue, marched or limped through the gates and down the rose-bordered avenue. They were commanded by a mounted officer whose empty sleeve told of active service during the war. Some of the more able-bodied men bore huge baskets of flowers with which to decorate the graves of their comrades.

"Look at that tall soldier at the head of this company," said Uncle Charles. "He entered the army as a colonel; and for gallantry in the field was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general. But though he fought bravely the battles of his country, there was one foe that proved too strong for him. So, instead of living in a comfortable home of his own, surrounded by friends and honored by everybody, he is spending his last days in this public institution, degraded from the rank of a general to that of a mere sergeant."

"What enemy was it, uncle?" asked the boys, looking with interest after the tall sergeant.

"The same enemy that conquered that poor fellow we saw lying in the gutter the other day."

"Oh! you mean rum," exclaimed David.

"Yes, David; and do you know that if all the men who were killed by strong drink in a year were buried in one cemetery, it would take a much larger one than this? It has been said that '100,000 victims of the drink habit go down to eternal ruin every year.'"

"Why, uncle, in four years that would make as many as the Union army lost in the Civil War!" replied David.

"And people don't decorate their graves," added Dick.

"Now, boys, if you want to do good service for your country, what do you say to taking up arms against this terrible foe?"

"Oh! that is what the Loyal Temperance Legion is for, that Cousin Joe belongs to. I would like to join it," said David.

"And I too," echoed Dick.

"Look, the soldiers are forming into line again," exclaimed David. "They are going to march out. Why, the band is playing Yankee Doodle! How funny! When they came in, it was just as solemn as a funeral."

"It is a custom in the army," explained Uncle Charles, "for the band to play a dirge when marching to the grave with the body of a comrade, and lively music when returning. It is necessary in time of war to keep up the courage of the survivors."

"This is the kind of a tune we'll play when all the grog-shops are shut up," said Dick, capering about gleefully to the inspiring strains of the military band. "We won't have any dirge when old Alcohol is dead."

Arlington, Mass.

DEAR AUNT JANE:—I have heard of your "Cozy Corner." I think you might give the big boys a chance in it. I am for temperance whether I eat or drink. Of course I would not touch wine or strong drink. Once I passed a bottle of wine to a man at a public table, because he couldn't reach it and he asked me twice, and I didn't want to appear rude, but it burned my hand and made my heart ache, and I asked Jesus to forgive me and make me strong never to do it again. Because I am temperance, my appetite belongs to the One who gives me strength to rule my temper. I don't drink tea nor coffee, eat hot bread, pork, or pickles any more, nor abuse my stomach with doses of vinegar and pepper; and my blood is better, I am almost never sick, and I can jump over a chair-top easily, and I can sleep like a baby and enjoy every meal I eat. I have noticed, Aunty, that willing workers make the sweetest singers. I think it is so with the bees. Here is a little rhyme I wrote for my younger brothers and sisters:

Oh, dear me, suz,
Why do bees buzz?
Because they is
About their biz!

Your roguish nephew, WALTER T.

Wellesley, Mass.

Three cheers for "Uncle Walter," boys and girls.

I am a little girl nine years old. I enjoy reading the children's page in THE UNION SIGNAL. I read the stories to my brother and sister. I am a prohibition girl. This is the first letter I ever tried to write to a newspaper. ETHEL M. WINETEER.

Belle Plain, Ill.

Write again, Ethel, we would be glad to hear from you. Won't you tell us what you do for prohibition?

I like "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner," as a name for our part of the paper. I am six years old.

Yours lovingly, BERTHA THORNLEY.

My mother takes THE UNION SIGNAL. I like "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner." HARRY THORNLEY.

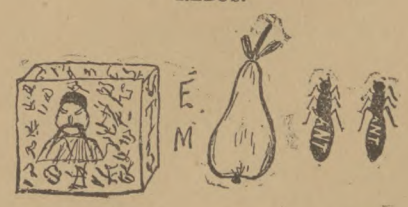
London, Ont.

I am glad you like our "Cozy Corner," dear little friends. Aunt Jane enjoyed your letters which were so plainly printed.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

46.

REBUS.



JOHN ROSE.

47.

CROSS WORD ENIGMA.

In gray, not in pink,
In talk, not in think,
In care, not in pain,
In snow, not in rain,
In hand, not in arm,
In good, not in harm,
In play, not in recreation,
My whole, the curse of our nation.

LORA GOLDMAN.

48.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of thirteen letters.
My 5, 9, 4, 7 grows under ground.
My 3, 12, 10, 1, 13 is something children like to eat.
My 8, 11, 2, 6 is a thought.
My whole is celebrated this month.

Answers in three weeks. Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle Sts., Chicago. Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MAY 5.

37. Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner.

38.
A R C H
P E E P
A C R E
P H I Z
I T E M
P E A R
A L L Y

39. I will guide thee with mine eye.

Correct answers: Meda N. Reed; Grace E. Smith, Angelia Hodgens; Virgie Rider; Bessie R. Clayton Clive Yeager; Lois Eldridge; Rebecca; Fona Goudey.

Kernels.

A LITTLE five-year-old girl of Rochester, N Y., drew the picture of a dog and cat on her slate, and calling her mother's attention to it, said, "A cat oughtn't to have but four legs, but I drew it with six legs so she could get away from the dog."

"You did not pay very close attention to the sermon, I fear, this morning." "Oh! yes, I did, mamma." "Well, what did the minister say?" "He said the picnic would start at ten o'clock, Thursday morning; and oh! ma, can I go?"

INQUISITIVE party (to hod-carrier)—"And do you go up that ladder all day long?" Pat—"No, sur; half ov the toime Oi come down."

THERE is often room for much courage in speech, courage not so much to maintain opinions as to confess ignorance.

NEVER think it is time to die until you are called; for the Lord leaves us till we have done our work, and never sends more sin and sorrow than we can bear and be the better for, if we hold fast by Him.—Louisa M. Alcott.

O DEATH, that ever followeth after life!
O life, that ever cometh out of death!
Now do we know, in that great, ceaseless strife,
'Tis life that conquereth!

PLEASANT weather there may be in the voyage of life, but never weather so pleasant that the hand may leave the helm, or the eye the compass.

Fear not to trust His simple word,
So sweet, so tried, so true,
And you are safe for evermore,
Yes, even you!
—F. R. Havergal.

DANIEL DREW was a very absent-minded man. Once he started for the Erie train and thought he had left his watch at home. First he thought he would go back after it. In an absent-minded way he took out his watch, looked at it, and exclaimed:

"Whew! five o'clock, and the train goes out five ten, I won't have time."

Then he put his watch back in his pocket and telegraphed his wife to send it to Albany by express.

"But Horace Greeley," said Depew, "was more absent-minded than Drew."

"Do you remember the instance?" I asked.

"Yes. Whitelaw Reid said when Greeley left the Tribune office one day he put a card on his office door, 'Will return at three o'clock.'

"Happening to return at 1:30, and seeing the sign, he sat down in the hall and waited for himself till three o'clock. Greeley was absent-minded!"
—Eli Perkins' Twenty Years of Wit.

"I KNOW a man," said Eli Perkins, "who was meaner than a dog. This man and dog went into a saloon together, but the man got beastly drunk while the dog kept sober and went home like a gentleman."

"WHAT have you learned to-day, Willie?" said the fond mother when her first-born returned from his first day at school. "I learned the difference between a horidicular and a perpizontal line."

"No, Johnnie," said the Sunday-school teacher, "men do not salute each other by kissing any more as they used to in the Bible times. What would you think if you saw one man come up to another in the street and fall on his neck and kiss him?"

"Why," replied the practical young American, "I'd think he wanted to borrow a quarter."

THEY'RE ALL ALIKE.

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
"I'll not forget a single thing
That you've requested me to bring
When I come home to-night"—and then
Comes empty-handed home again?

Publisher's Notes.

SOME IMPROVEMENTS.

From the report made by the office editor, Miss Margaret Sudduth, to the board of directors on Friday, May 20, the following quotations are taken that our readers may remember how much more they all receive for $1.00 per year than they expected. These items are of great interest to all:

"Ten weeks ago we began our twenty-page issue, and with two extra numbers earlier in the year, have already issued more twenty-page editions than we had last year, and more, in proportion, than any year since the paper was started. * * * Improvements on the first page have been secured by removing the unsightly table of contents and paying special attention to the size as well as the contents of the paragraphs. * * * As a substitute for the table of contents, a running 'Bill of Fare' is written each week for the inside editorial page."

"The colored cover page has added largely to the attractiveness of the paper and 'ye editors' thank the business manager every time the press turns out the crisp, cheery, salmon-tinted covers."

"The children's page has been made far more attractive to our young readers by the introduction of puzzles and a special column for the little ones, called 'Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner.' The delight of the children has been shown by hundreds of enthusiastic letters written by them and their grateful parents to Aunt Jane."

"Miss Willard's editorial contributions have been highly appreciated, judging from the favorable comments of the press and the eulogistic commendations of hosts of readers. Her broad outlook takes in all reforms, but she keeps ever prominent the leading reform of the century. Her crisp, unique form of expression has given our paper an individuality that has already elevated it to high rank among the very best journals and subjects it to frequent quotations in such valuable magazines as The Review of Reviews and The Literary Digest."

With such improvements, every member of every union and every leader of thought should read it. Do they? If not, try to have them.

DO YOU REALIZE

That THE UNION SIGNAL of June 2d will be a special edition for use of the W. C. T. U. on Flower Mission day? Its contents will be specially prepared for the purpose. The tens of thousands of "shut-ins," who will be remembered by the unions on June 9th, and receive from members of the organization a bouquet and a card containing a text, etc., would value the gift of a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL. To many it might carry hope not known for years; inspiration which might lift the sinner to a purer life and the saint nearer to God. Let every inmate of jail or hospital, every sufferer in mind or body confined as a result of physical or moral infirmities, have one opportunity to read THE UNION SIGNAL.

To enable you to carry out this plan, we have determined to offer extra copies, if ordered before June 1st, so that proper provision for filling orders can be made at the exceedingly low rate of

One Dollar per 100.

This offer is made as the contribution of the W. T. P. A. to the interest of Flower Mission Day.

Remember to send your orders by June 1st if you desire these rates. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Corner Monroe and La Salle Sts.,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

THIS LOT COST 60 CENTS.

LARGER QUANTITY, BETTER QUALITY, ONLY 25 CENTS.

No Sane Woman

would pay 12 cents a pound for Powdered Soap when she could buy it in bars for 6 cents, though every woman knows that Powdered soap is handier and better than soap in bars or cakes. But when a woman can buy Powdered soap for the SAME PRICE as bar soap, of course she takes the Powdered soap for it does ½ her work and the other ½ is no work at all.

Gold Dust WASHING POWDER

IS POWDERED SOAP AT BAR SOAP PRICES. It is sold by every enterprising grocer in wholesale packages (4 lbs.) for 25 CENTS.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

The 1892 Model Remington

Typewriter

Presents many points of improvement which will readily commend themselves to all users.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
327 Broadway, New York.

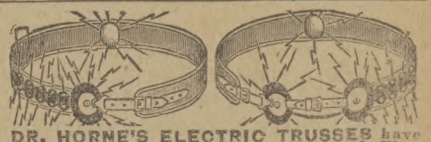
One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR — COLD BLAST — NO DUST NO GUILT — CHICAGO

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

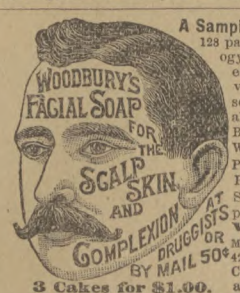
DO YOU KNOW
That the PERFECTION
FLOUR BIN & SIEVE
Combines Sack or Barrel, Sifter Pan and Scoop, preserves flour from mould and mustiness.
Keeps out dust, vermin, etc.
YOU OUGHT to HAVE ONE.
Ask our agent or your dealer for them, if they cannot supply you, write to us Satisfaction Guaranteed.
Prices to hold { 25 lbs. $2.50 / 50 lbs. $3.00 / 100 lbs. $4.00 } AGENTS WANTED.
SHERMAN & BUTLER,
26-28 W. Lake St. B 136 CHICAGO, ILL.



DR. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES have cured 10,000 Ruptures in 15 years. The only Electric Truss in the world. 60-page book free.
DR. HORNE, INVENTOR, 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.
Medtion THE UNION SIGNAL.

HAPPY HOMES
By using the BEVERIDGE COOKER. Latest and simplest cooking utensil. No odor. Food can't burn. Saves labor and fuel. Cooks on oil, gas or coal stove. Agents wanted, either sex. Big pay. A lady sold 1730 in one town. Address, for terms,
W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

PURE GUM RUBBER GOODS
Of Every Description; also,
Mackintosh Clothing;
also, Japanese Tissue,
For Mending Without Needle or Thread,
ELASTIC TIP CO.,
Headquarters 152-154 Lake St., Chicago

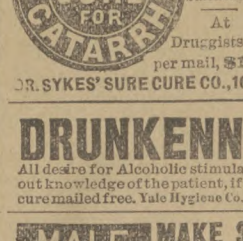


3 Cakes for $1.00.

A Sample Cake of Soap and 128 page Book on Dermatology and Beauty; Illustrated; on Skin, Scalp, Nervous and Blood diseases sent sealed for 10c.; also Disfigurements like Birth Marks, Moles, Warts, India Ink and Powder marks, Scars, Pittings, Redness of Nose Superfluous Hair, Pimples, etc. JOHN H. WOODBURY, DERMATOLOGIST, 125 West 42d Street, New York City. Consultation free, at office or by letter

DIAMOND DYES give the fastest, brightest handsomest colors, and make the old clothes look like new. They are the original and only reliable package dyes. Sample card free. WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

BAKER'S COCOA.
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.



Taken internally and used locally with Insufflator. At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book "Common Sense Talk" and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured.
All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whisper heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. First cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N.Y.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. L. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble, Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

R YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance town of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

THE Total Abstinence Life Association
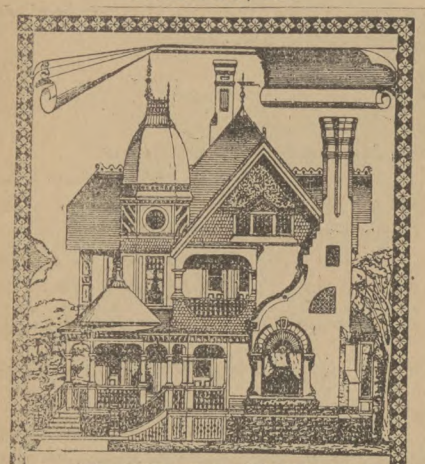
OF AMERICA
PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.

It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.

New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.

It will pay you well to write to us.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.
902-904 Royal Insurance Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.



AGEM FOR ALL WHO WANT TO BUILD

Our new book of 172 pages, 8½ x 11 inches The "Cottage Souvenir," containing a great variety of Designs & Plans of costing from $500 to $10,000. The Beauty and Completeness of these Designs, combining so many new features, has given this book a wonderful sale, and hundreds of Beautiful Homes are being built in all parts of our land from its designs. Price $2. Send for prospectus and sample pages, FREE.

Artistic Dwellings

GEO. F. BARBER & CO., Architects,
KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Spoons and Forks with our
"XII" SECTIONAL PLATING
ARE THE MOST ECONOMICAL
FOR GENERAL USE

·1847·
ROGERS BROS "XII"
SPOONS AND FORKS
Are plated THREE TIMES HEAVIER on the three points most exposed to wear.
SOLD BY FIRST-CLASS DEALERS.

Sir Henry Thompson, the most noted physician of England, says that more than half of all diseases come from errors in diet.

Send for Free Sample of Garfield Tea to 319 West 45th Street, New York City.

GARFIELD TEA Overcomes results of bad eating; cures Sick Headache; restores Complexion; cures Constipation.

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR
DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE
A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction
By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.
A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 remarkable illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 31st thousand. 5,000 more Agents Wanted,—Men and Women, $200 a month. ☞ Experience and capital not necessary, for We Teach All, Give Credit and Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Have MANY IMITATORS but NO EQUALS.
Be sure your Waist is stamped 'Good Sense.'

Publisher's Notes.

WE MUST TELL YOU AGAIN.

The coming World's Exposition in Chicago will outdo anything in modern history. The partially completed buildings are exciting the greatest admiration, and thousands of people are feeling well repaid for spending a few hours—which should be at least a day—and twenty-five cents for admission to the grounds, by the privilege of seeing for themselves the wonderful structures not yet complete.

You are too far away to enjoy this privilege. But we offer you the next best thing—the opportunity to see all the buildings pictured, complete. Forty-four pages, 12x15 inches in size, devoted to World's Fair interests, and giving much information that could not be secured on the grounds. For full description see page 15 of this paper. You will learn there, too, that you can have a copy of this handsome book if you send five new subscribers, at $1 each, to The Union Signal, or in connection with your own subscription, both The Union Signal one year and the Columbus Memorial for $1.30.

You want it! You will enjoy it! Your children will learn much from it! Send for it!

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

JUST TO REMIND YOU.

The Object.

The first object of the W. C. T. U., as expressed in its constitution, national, state, district, county, local, is "to educate public sentiment." This should always be kept in mind, and a realization of the fact that anything which assists in educating public sentiment is legitimate W. C. T. U. work. Nothing will help more than reading, in the quiet of home life, books which have a right influence, and those who help to place such books in the homes of the nation are sowing the seed which, germinating, will make the world fairer, better, happier. We have such

Books,

And are ready to do all we can to bring about so grand a result. But your help is needed—your feet, your voice—to reach those we cannot reach.

Who can Measure

What it will mean to have "Childhood, Its Care and Culture," read by mothers generally, who there may learn valuable lessons to aid in the proper rearing of their children; or what great growth might come to the cause of the W. C. T. U. if

Glimpses of Fifty Years

Should be placed in homes not yet reached by the influence of the organization? In reading the narration of Miss Willard's unfolding, many have been helped to a deeper consecration, and many have allied themselves with the great cause, the advocacy of which seems to be the culmination of her life work. Then of great interest to those who need to learn what towns and cities, consequently states and nations, as individuals, grow in the direction of tendencies which mark their origin will be

A Classic Town

Miss Willard's latest book. This should be in the hands of every W. C. T. U. woman, every Christian and certainly every Methodist. Of especial interest to Y's and aspiring young women generally, will be the story of how Miss Ames left the farm for the editorial sanctum, and what happened on the way, as narrated in

A Young Woman Journalist,

These are needed in every community. You need them. We can supply them.

Agents Wanted.

For prices address
Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

There is NO "SURE CURE FOR EVERY CASE OF ASTHMA" or "EVERY CASE OF HAY FEVER," but the worst cases, if uncomplicated by organic disease, can be CURED TO STAY CURED by constitutional treatment, and this at the patient's home.

ASTHMA AND HAY-FEVER

We treat no one without a thorough knowledge of the case.

Incurable Cases Declined.

Examination free by mail.
We want name and address of every sufferer from Asthma or Hay Fever.
P. HAROLD HAYES, M. D., BUFFALO, N. Y.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

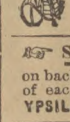
DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.
Thomas' Good Health Corset Waists BY MAIL. Ladies $1.50 Misses 1.25 Children, 60
Best for Economy, Health and Beauty. Buttoned or to clasp in front. Long or short waist. Material the very best.
Thousands mailed in the last year, with entire satisfaction to Patrons. Money cheerfully refunded if not satisfactory.
Agents wanted everywhere.
H. A. Thomas & Co., Manf'r's
465 W. Van Buren St. Chicago.

MISS BEACH'S
Curling Fluid
Keeps the hair in curl for days. No Odor or Sediment. Harmless. Gives vigor and beauty to hair, increases its growth. A toilet necessity. At druggists or sent prepaid 50c.
LADY AGENTS wanted.
DENISON CHEMICAL CO.,
56 (H) LaSalle St., Chicago.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory.
Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York.
Also 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.



LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

☞ See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL in your own home. First-class Sewing Machines at wholesale prices.
$35 Standard Singer Machine for $9.50
$45 " " " $15.50
$55 Arlington " $19.50
All latest improvements, light running. Warranted 5 years. Complete set of attachments FREE. Send for catalogue.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 358 Dearborn St. & 201 Chicago, Ill.

DULUTH 7% & 8% First Mortgages
REAL ESTATE AND MINING STOCKS.
References Furnished. Correspondence Solicited,
Tvedt, Eckstein & Co., 327 W. Superior Street. DULUTH, MINN.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths.
Address, CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

EYES tested free by mail. New method. Send stamp for test card. KEENE OPT. CO., 1301 Washington-st. Boston, Mass

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to
H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

SAVE $40.00 ON NEW $140.00 BICYCLES
New, Latest Pattern $140 Bicycles for $100. Cheaper grades in proportion; cash or time. Agents wanted.
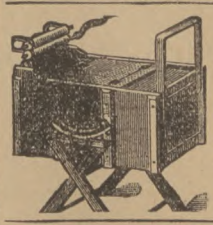
A. W. GUMP & CO., Dayton, Ohio.
BICYCLES, GUNS & TYPEWRITERS taken in exchange.



WHEREVER THE ROCKER WASHER is used the Washboard becomes an Relic of Barbarism. It is warranted to do the washing of an ordinary family in one hour as clean as can be washed by hand. Write for full description and prices. Rocker Washer Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.
Agents wanted.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS
CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.
Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.
N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,
163-165 DEARBORN ST. - CHICAGO, ILL.
New York. Boston.

DON'T YOU THINK
Your baby would look pretty in a carriage like that?

We have prettier ones.
Also cheaper ones.
All shown in our catalogue, which we will mail FREE if you write for it.
FREIGHT PAID BY
WALTER HILL CO., 218 Wabash Av., CHICAGO.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF
Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.
We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.
GRAND TERRACE ADDITION.
For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.
Take a Course in the SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW. (Incorporated.)
Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to
J. Cotner, Jr., Sec'y,
DETROIT, MICH.
525 Whitney Block.

MAKE YOUR OWN SODA WATER.
COSTS BUT ONE CENT A GLASS.
On receipt of $1 we will mail you recipe for making most delicious soda water. [No bottling or boiling required.] Easily made in a few minutes. Any flavor desired.
Equal to Ice Cream Sodas. Full directions sent.
ACME SODA CO., 48 East 9th St., N. Y.

HOME STUDY BOOK-KEEPING SHORTHAND
Each person sending us before July 1st $1 for HENDRYX'S COMPENDIUM OF BOOK-KEEPING and BUSINESS FORMS for SELF INSTRUCTION, will receive instructions by mail free. Special inducements also given during the summer to SHORTHAND students. F. H. HENDRYX, 178, Bath, N. Y.

EPILEPSY OR FALLING FITS.
A member of my family having been cured in a wonderful manner of this terrible disease, I will, for the benefit of humanity, gladly make known the remedy, FREE OF CHARGE, to any one addressing
MRS. H. JONES, Box 606, Philadelphia, Pa.

SALESMEN wanted, ladies as well as gentlemen, with experience, or better, willing to be instructed to sell Chicago Suburban lots in the country. Commission high, and property very salable.
S. A. CRAIG & CO., 184 Dearborn St., Chicago.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR
Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish.
FREE
St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

There seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance than by placing Drinking Fountains on the streets of our cities and towns.
Special prices given to W. C. T. Unions.
Send for Illustrated Catalogue and full particulars.
J. W. FISKE,
21 and 23 Barclay Street,
NEW YORK.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN
CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT
SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

FAT PEOPLE You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by DR. CLARKE'S Home Treatment. Proofs, Testimonials, Free.
F. B. CLARKE, M. D., Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, O., for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free.
G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

WANTED Women to take Crochet work to do at home. Steady work. Write for particulars. L. WHITE & CO., 209 State St., Chicago, Ill.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St., Chicago.

10 cents pays for the best ladies' paper published for three months. Ladies' Bazar Chicago, Ill

These are some of our Supplies.

NATIONAL LEAFLETS.

The standard leaflets for use in extending the knowledge of W. C. T. U. principles and methods; divided into three sections, designed, respectively, to aid in the general work, that of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and of the Loyal Temperance Legion. Suitable size for inclosing in letters. The titles in most cases suggest the class of readers for which each is designed.

Price, per package of 10 . . . . . $ .10
Per 100, of one number, or assorted 90
Per 1000, " " 7.50

1. The National W. C. T. U. Mary T. Lathrap
2. Duties of Officers. Mary Allen West
3. Finance. Esther Pugh and F. C. Hathaway
4. The Reason Why (Statement of the Relation of the W. C. T. U. to Politics). Frances E. Willard
5. The Story of a Great Conviction. Mary B. Willard
6. How to Conduct a Public Meeting. Frances E. Willard
7. The Silent Million. B. V. Cushman, M. D.
8. Preparation for Gospel Work. Rev. Amos Dean, D. D.
9. Scientific Temperance Instruction in Public Schools. Frances E. Willard
10. The White Cross and White Ribbon. Rev. Dr. B. F. DeCosta
11. Morality vs. Law (The Age of Consent.) Martha K. Pearce, LL.B.
12. Tobacco and the Drink Habit. Ruby I. Gilbert
13. Steamers and Smokers. What shall we do about it? Meta Lander
14. Capital, Labor and Temperance. Mrs. Augusta C. Bristol
15. A Pastorless Parish. Mary Allen West
16. Doctor and Druggist (To circulate among physicians). Frances E. Willard
17. The Drinker's Thermometer. M. D. Kimball
18. Work of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. M. H. Boardman
19. Little Things in Child-Life. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry
20. "'Twould Hurt His Hand." Lucia E. F. Kimball
21. Why Special Temperance Teaching in the Sunday-school? Lucia E. F. Kimball
22. Bible Wines. Mary Allen West
23. Is Alcohol a Stimulant? (A symposium from eminent physicians.)
24. Pants are Made for Boys, Not Boys for Pants. Annis Eastman
25. Is Cider Harmless? Alice Collins
26. Let Your Women Keep Silence in the Churches.
27. Society and Society Women; A New Definition Frances E. Willard
28. A Suffrage Question-Box. Henry B. Blackwell
29. Blood Will Tell. Rev. C. C. Harrah
30. The Teacher Taught. Mary Allen West
31. Political Economy vs. Commercial Economy. Dr. A. J. Ingersoll
32. The Tobacco Toboggan. Mrs. Helen L. Bullock
33. A Whole Humanity (Address on Woman Suffrage.) Mrs. Zerelda G. Wallace
34. Liquor's War on Labor. John Lloyd Thomas
35. Hints on W. C. T. U. Gospel Work. Mrs. F. C. Hathaway
36. The Coming Brotherhood. Frances E. Willard
37. The Teacher Questioned. Alice M. Guernsey
38. The Teacher Helped. " "
39. The Relation of Temperance Reform to the Labor Movement. Prof. Richard T. Ely
40. Spirituous Liquors Not Needed in Medicine or the Arts. Dr. J. R. Nichols
41. Busy Women and the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Lucy A. Scott
42. Twelve Reasons Why Women Ought to Vote. Alice Stone Blackwell
43. Why one Woman Wants to Vote. Ella G. Ives
44. "The Letter Killeth; the Spirit Maketh Free." Mrs. S. S. Fessenden
45. The Hour and Its Needs. Mrs. Margaret B. Platt
46. Self-Government for Schools. Frances E. Willard
47. Should Women Vote? " "
48. Safety for School Children. " "
49. "Dead Reckoning." R. Kelso Carter
50. Country Unions. Mary Allen West
51. Farm Mortgages. Mary Allen West
52. Gospel Temperance. John G. Woolley
53. Our Bondage. Frances E. Willard
54. Systematic Giving. Esther Tuttle Pritchard

Y. W. C. T. U.

101. A Problem Solved (How to maintain interest in our meetings). Elizabeth F. Thayer and Medora Drew
102. A Girl's Influence. Anna M. Vail
103. The Flower Mission. (A symposium from the Oak and Ivy Leaf.)
104. A New Régime. Maud Rittenhouse
105. Counting One. Eva Kinney Griffith
106. Fair Play. Mary E. McDowell
107. Leaving the Home Nest. Alice M. Guernsey
108. The New Crusade. Frances H. Ensign

L. T. L.

201. The Civic Guard. Emily A. Kellogg
202. Tested. Elvirton Wright
203. Why I Never Tasted Liquor. Edward W. Bok
204. An Appeal to Mothers. Frances E. Willard
205. Part of a Boy. Estelle Thomson

TOTAL ABSTINENCE LEAFLETS.

A series of short sketches bearing directly on the subject of total abstinence. Adapted for distribution in public temperance meetings, etc.

Price for five, or less, each . . . . . $ .01
Per 100 50

1. Some New Facts About Alcoholic Heredity. Dr. T. D. Crothers
2. A King's Son. Mary Lowe Dickinson
3. Is it Nothing to You?
4. In the Bushel or in the Jug. John P. St. John
5. Some Methods of Prevention. Edward Everett Hale
6. Hints About Helps.
7. Pledge-keeping.
8. The Law of Habit. Frances E. Willard
9. Turn on the Light.

SUPERINTENDENTS' SERIES.

Manuals of Department Work, by National Superintendents.

Manual of the School of Methods. Mary Allen West
Price . . . . . $ .25

Manual of the Y. W. C. T. U. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes
Price . . . . . $ .25

Manual of Juvenile Work. Helen G. Rice
Price . . . . . $ .05
Ten or more, each 03
Per 100 . . . . . 2.50

Questions Answered. Anna A. Gordon
On the work of the Juvenile Department.
Price . . . . . $ .25

Evangelistic Manual. Mrs. Annie M. Palmer
Price . . . . . $ .05

Golden Keys. Mrs. E. G. Greene
Manual of Kindergarten Department.
Price . . . . . $ .25

Manual of the Purity Department. Frances E. Willard
Price . . . . . $ .05
10 or more, each 03
Per 100 . . . . . 2.50

National Prohibitory Amendment Guide. Mrs. Ada C. Bittenbender
Price . . . . . $ .25

White Cross Manual. See p. 26.

DEPARTMENT LEAFLETS.

RAILROAD.

Price, for 5, or less, each . . . . . $ .01
Per 100 50

1. The Traveler's Psalm.
2. The Moral Suasion Railroad.
3. The Good Times Railroad.
4. Railroad Temperance Association Constitution.

SYSTEMATIC GIVING.

11. Tithing vs. Entertainments. Esther Tuttle Pritchard

FOR MOTHERS' MEETINGS.

HOME LEAFLETS.

For careful home reading. They treat of various questions vitally connected with the home—especially the training of children, physically, morally and spiritually.

Price, each . . . . . $ .02
Per 100 . . . . . 1.50
Per 1,000 . . . . . 10.00

1. Mothers' Meetings—Past and Present. Mary Allen West
2. Children in the Church. Rev. C. C. Harrah
3. Jesus Christ the Emancipator of Women. Rev. C. C. Harrah
4. Food Suggestions. Mary G. Underhill
5. Mothers and Public Schools. Mrs. D. Bentley
6. Obedience. Henry Ward Beecher
7. Temperance Training in the Home. Mary Allen West
8. A Mother's Experience in Non-Alcoholic Medication. Mrs. Joel Swartz
9. Mrs. Klyne's Life Work. Alvira M. Irish
10. "Let us Live with our Children." Mrs. C. R. McCartney
11. Reverence. " "
12. Marriage with Inebriates. Dr. T. D. Crothers

PURITY LEAFLETS.

Bearing to the general work of Social Purity a relation similar to that borne by the White Cross Leaflets to the work among boys and men. A series to be read and discussed in Mothers' Meetings, and to be talked over by parents at home.

Price, full set . . . . . $ .10
Ten numbers and over, at the rate of 50 cts. per 100 (½ ct. each).

1. Letter to the Women of America. Ellice Hopkins
2. Predisposing Causes. Kate Lindsay, M. D.
3. Early Perverting Influences. Irma A. Jones
4. Danger to Our Girls. L. Anna Ballard, M. D.
5. Dress and Vice. Frances E. Willard
6. Pitfalls for our Boys. J. H. Kellogg, M. D.
7. Narcotics. Lida B. Ingalls
8. Danger Signals. Rose S. Bryan, M. D.
9. Bad Hygiene vs. Virtue. B. V. Cushman, M. D.
10. Literature and Vice. Anna Garlin Spencer
11. Responsibility of Parents. Kate C. Bushnell, M. D.
12. Some Legal Aspects of the Question. Martha K. Pearce, LL. B

WHITE CROSS SERIES.

In Purity work, the W. C. T. U. cordially co-operates with the White Cross Army.

Price, each . . . . . $ .03
Per 100 . . . . . 2.00

1. My Little Sister. / Touching Pitch. Ellice Hopkins
2. Is it Natural. / Who Holds the Rope? J. E. H.
3. The Apocalypse of Evil. Ellice Hopkins
4. Bloodguiltiness. Rev. J. M. Horsley
5. Buried Seed. Ellice Hopkins
6. An Evil Tradition. Rev. A. G. Butler
7. What Can We Do? Ellice Hopkins
8. Black Anchor. " "
9. Little Kindnesses. / The Temple of the Eternal " " / J. E. H
10. The Man with the Drawn Sword. Ellice Hopkins
11. Personal Purity. Mrs. Lucy A. Scott
12. Real Chivalry. Mrs. Lucy A. Scott

White Cross Manual. Frances E. Willard
Pledges. See p. 37.
Badge. See p. 54.

Signal Notes.

THE cheap food depot of the Salvation Army in London has supplied 2,606,648 meals to unfortunates.

THE National Carriage and Harness Retail Dealers' Association have put themselves in the advance line by banishing intoxicants from their banquets.

THIRTY-ONE organizations of women (not temperance societies) responded to the call, and were represented in the World's W. C. T. U. conference in London, May 6th.

THE United States Government has signed the treaty for the suppression of the slave trade with Africa, and the limitation (why not the prohibition?) of the importation of rum. This agreement protects a population of 125,000,000.

THE National Prohibition convention meets at Cincinnati, O., June 28. Reduced rates are announced and special terms have been made with leading hotels for the entertainment of delegates. The National Reformers will meet in the Palace Hotel at ten o'clock a m. June 28.

THE Zurich Society for combating the alcohol habit has circulated an appeal on the Continent, pointing out the dangers which menace the future of Europe through the use of intoxicants, and calling upon people to show their patriotism by becoming abstainers —Bombay Guardian.

THE C. H. Spurgeon memorial fund, started in London, is not for the purpose of rearing a costly memorial (extravagant and needless), but is to be used to aid the worthy institutions and organizations founded by him, and the work of which is his most suitable monument.

THE Baptist Union Theological Seminary at Morgan Park, Ill., has made the study of the temperance question a subdivision of the required work in the department of ethics. The students are now studying the relation of the Christian to politics. This is a new departure, and the temperance women have expressed their wish that it might become universal in all theological schools.

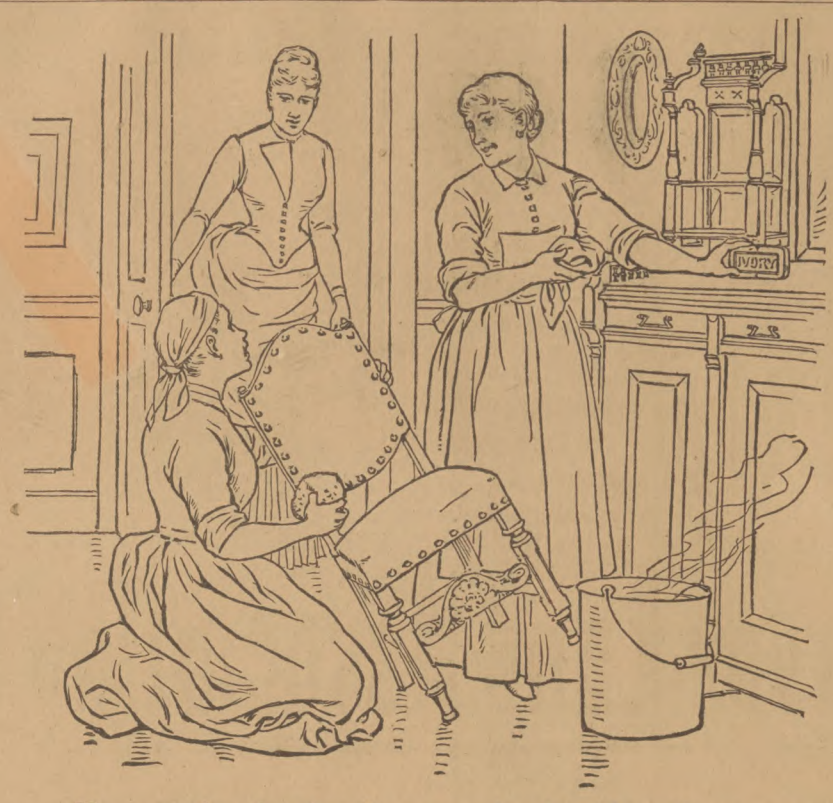
INDIANAPOLIS has a council of women including the representatives of forty-nine local organizations. They work for better sanitation, cleaner streets and educational improvement. One of their representatives is president of the Laundry Girls' union, and it is interesting to see this bright woman hobnobbing with the president of the Art Institute in the common interest of the council.

THE women's clubs, of which this country has two hundred, are sound on the question of non-alcoholic stimulation and brain poisons generally. The Nineteenth Century Club, of Memphis, Tenn., with one hundred members, elegant rooms, and all that goes to make a first-rate institution of the sort, recently entertained Joe Jefferson the actor, and Joel Chandler Harris, the dialectician—in a new sense. Some thought there should be punch, but Mrs. Watson, the president, said no, and the club stood by her.

A BOOK has recently been received by the secretary of the New York Sabbath committee, from the secretary of the Workingmen's Lord's Day Rest Association of London. Each of the 491 pages of the volume contains the following petition, together with the autograph in writing, the occupation and residence of each signer: "We, the undersigned, feeling the national importance of preserving Sunday as a day of rest from labor for all classes, desire to express our hope that the Columbian Exposition to be held in Chicago in 1893 may be closed on the day of rest."

Good Cooking

Is one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc., use Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk. Directions on the label. Sold by your grocer and druggist.



Never wash painted walls or woodwork with ordinary soap. You want to remove the dirt only—not the dirt and a part of the paint! Ordinary soap is too highly chemicalled for such a use.

A pail of tepid water, two sponges, and a cake of Ivory Soap are all you need. Apply the soap with one sponge and remove the dirt with the other, rinsing frequently in clean water.

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

25 CENTS.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Paper, 25 cents.
Cloth, 50 cents.
Popular Edition.

Illustrated, Cloth, $1.00.
Dr. Abbott's New Book.

The Evolution of Christianity.

By LYMAN ABBOTT, D. D., $1.25.

A book of remarkable interest and value, containing in a revised form the lectures given by Dr. Abbott to crowded audiences in Boston last winter.

Little Brothers of the Air.

By OLIVE THORNE MILLER, author of "Bird-Ways," "In Nesting Time," etc. Each, $1.25.

Mrs. Miller writes delightfully of kingbirds, blue-jays, woodpeckers, thrushes, bobolinks, goldfinches, cuckoos, red-breasts, and many other birds.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

SYLPH CYCLES RUN EASY

Hollow Tires.

Perfection of cycle manufacture; no need now to ride springless cycles or depend on tires alone for comfort. SYLPH SPRING FRAME destroys vibrat'n. Light, simple, strong. Cata. free

Rouse-Duryea Cy. Co.
77 G St., Peoria, Ill. Agts. Wanted

THE WOMAN'S LAND SYNDICATE

OVER 2,000 BONDS ALREADY SOLD.

Another Large Factory just located at South Waukegan, Ill.—The Morrow Bros. Mfg. Co. They will erect three large factory buildings at once, and will employ a large number of workmen. This makes two large factories that have located here since we purchased over $500,000 worth of lots. All property in the town will advance in price June 15th about 12 1-2 per cent on account of above factories.

THIS ADDS $62,500 to the VALUE of our PROPERTY.

Every woman that purchases one or more of our PROFIT-SHARING INVESTMENT BONDS before June 15th, will share in these enormous profits. To illustrate: If, on June 15th, we have sold $50,000 worth of Bonds, one-half of $62,500, or $31,250, divided equally among the purchasers of said $50,000 worth of Bonds, will be $6.25 for each and every Bond. When the property advances in value again, one-half of the profits are divided equally among all purchasers up to the time it advances, and so on.

BONDS ARE SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN.

This affords women an opportunity to invest a small or large amount of money in SOMETHING THAT IS UNQUESTIONABLY RELIABLE and that will bring a large profit to every bondholder, because SOUTH WAUKEGAN is certain to become the greatest manufacturing town in the West on account of low freight rates and other advantages. THE WASHBURN & MOEN MFG. CO., the largest concern of its kind in the world, employs 4,000. The U. S. SUGAR REFINERY have invested $750,000.00 in buildings. They employ 550. THE STARCH WORKS, with a capacity of 14,000 bushels of corn daily, will give work to 250. THE LANYON ZINC OXIDE CO., with their seven large steel buildings, will employ a vast number, and the MORROW BROS. MFG. CO. will employ 300 workmen. These large plants will open very soon, and many more will locate here. These five alone will bring

40,000 PEOPLE TO LIVE IN SOUTH WAUKEGAN.

Our lots are all within ten minutes' walk of all of the factories, so that just as soon as the works open up, our property will be in great demand and the increase in value, which means profit for our bondholders, will be rapid and great.

The deed to our property and all money are held by the Commercial Loan and Trust Co., of Chicago, as Trustees for the purchasers of these bonds, thus affording ABSOLUTE SAFETY.

GENERAL SINGLETON, Pres. Total Abstinence Life Association, 902 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, says: "I have investigated the WOMAN'S LAND SYNDICATE, and have advised my wife to invest in their bonds, believing it will be very profitable."

All Who Investigate Our Plans Buy Bonds.

If you want a share of this $62,500, you must secure the Bonds you want before June 15th. You can send a deposit, NO MATTER HOW SMALL, say how many you want, and we will consider it a sale. You can pay for them when convenient.

Our pamphlet, telling all about our plan and the town, is sent FREE.

MANAGERS:—MRS. R. A. EMMONS, ex-Secretary of the Woman's Lecture Bureau.
REV. HENRIETTA G. MOORE, National Lecturer, and MRS. J. B. HOBBS.

MAKE CHECKS, DRAFTS OR MONEY ORDERS PAYABLE TO

THE WOMAN'S LAND SYNDICATE 161 La Salle Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

Washburn Springs ASWESEEIT

The GREAT IMPETUS which property has received just south of WAUKEGAN, ILL., is surprising until you learn the reason. Three of the LARGEST FACTORIES in the U. S. have located there and are now in operation.

THEY WILL EMPLOY Over 5,000 MEN.

This means a new city of from 15,000 to 30,000 population inside of two years. It means that lots now worth $300 will then be in demand at ten times that amount.

Our lots (50x150 feet) at $300 and upwards are unequaled for LOCATION, IMPROVEMENTS and PRICE.

Send a deposit of $5.00 to secure best unsold lot, and we will send you our little pamphlet, "Asweseeit," free, showing our selection. If you are not satisfied after investigating, you can select any other unsold lot of same price, or we will return your money. Those who do not invest now will be trying to do so a few months later at two or three times the prices now ruling. Come now and enjoy the increase from an inside point of view.

Plats, maps and pamphlets giving full description FREE upon application. Address either

FRANK I. BENNETT & CO., 100 Washington-st., Chicago. OR DUNLAP SMITH & CO., 170 Dearborn-st., Chicago.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.
FOR GOD AND HOME. WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883. AND EVERY LAND
CHICAGO, June 2, 1892.

Ursula D Herrick
2419 19th st
9202

What The Harvey Land Association Have to Say:

THE TRUTH ABOUT HARVEY.

Few towns less than two years old are better known by reputation than the town of Harvey, Ill.

It is cited on all sides as an illustration of what is possible in the art of town building; and, next to Chicago itself (which Julian Ralph says will be the most wonderful feature the World's Fair will have to offer), the town of Harvey will be the most interesting exhibit of what is possible for a combination of brains, capital and principle to accomplish.

Next to building castles in Spain the easiest thing is building towns on paper.

But Harvey is not built that way.

It is an easy matter to select a vacant tract of land somewhere, and say, "Go to, now, let us build here a city," and forthwith proceed to draw maps, advertise in the newspapers, and sell corner lots.

This has been done in the wilds of Indiana, in the everglades of Florida, and in the desert of Sahara, but cities and towns so "built," are but ——"the baseless fabric of a vision."

In the first place, in order to really build a real town, you must have the proper conditions. Cities and towns do not spring into existence except for good and sufficient reasons.

That was a very carefully observant old lady who remarked upon the thoughtful dispensation of Providence in always causing a river to run through a great city!

And she was right. If there had never been a Chicago river there would never have been a Chicago.

And if there had never been equally good reasons for the existence of Harvey, Harvey would never have existed.

The visitor, as he steps off the cars at that place to-day sees at a glance what Mr. T. W. Harvey saw two years ago when he went out there shooting prairie chickens.

For instance: That water runs down hill at Harvey; which means an elevation of land, and natural drainage.

That the city line of Chicago is two and one-half miles distant; which, while it means close proximity to the greatest city of the West, also means exemption from city taxes.

The soil and sub-soil are well adapted for building, the best of pure, soft water has been reached by artesian wells, and as for pure air, there is none more bracing in the state of Illinois.

Without question here was a perfect site for a great manufacturing town. The railroads offered all the transportation facilities that could be asked for; there was room enough; everything was all right. But it is one thing to have land to sell, and another to sell your land.

Any one at all conversant with affairs, knows what pulling and hauling there is from Maine to Texas to locate industrial concerns. They are the life blood of prosperity, and everybody knows it.

Here is where management came in — management backed by ample capital.

It is a trite saying, "Nothing succeeds like success," but it is a true one, and manufacturers go where manufactures are. "Birds of a feather, etc."

The Harvey Land Association meant business from the start, and they were quick to show it.

The land once bought, streets were not merely laid out, they were drained, paved and lighted. Parks were not merely talked about; they were graded, grassed and filled with flowers and shrubbery. Shade was not simply wished for; it was provided by planting sixteen thousand trees one year and almost as many more the next. Artesian wells and a superb system of water-works brought the best of water from the recesses of the earth; a belt-line electric railway was built, equipped and operated, and a first-class electric plant supplies both light and transportation. Hotels, schools and churches were erected; business offices and a Masonic Temple were built; the Illinois Central put up a $14,000 depot, and provided cheap, frequent and rapid transit to and from Chicago. In fact, everything was done to make the new town attractive as a place of residence, and valuable as a place for investment.

Meantime, the power which made these things possible was working with all its energies to bring to Harvey the manufacturing plants, without which all else would have been wasted effort. In this, as in other things, the management was wonderfully successful, and suddenly, as if by magic, the silent prairie began to resound with the cheerful hum of machinery. One great concern after another established itself here with such rapidity as to attract the attention of the entire country, and from that day till this, the name of Harvey has been synonymous with all that is progressive and successful in town building in America.

But what is the secret of this marvelous success?

No secret; but two underlying principles undoubtedly have a great deal to do with it:

1st. The enforcement of temperance.

2d. The promotion of industry.

The founders of Harvey are temperance men, tried and true. They believe in temperance as a matter of principle, and as policy in business. Harvey was made a prohibition town from the start, and no matter what may be done in the city of Chicago, or at the World's Fair, or elsewhere, in the state of Illinois, or throughout the civilized world, no liquor will ever be sold in Harvey.

This has, no doubt, done much to impress manufacturers and capitalists with the desirability of location and investment in that place.

Again, no man, woman or child need be idle in Harvey. Those who want work, and know how to work, find work waiting for them.

It is this way:

Manufacturers who accept the generous terms offered them by the founders of the town of Harvey, do so with the proviso that they "will at all times in hiring employès give the preference to persons living upon land owned or controlled by the said Harvey Land Association, or its grantees, and that they will, so far as practicable, limit employment of help to persons so living upon the land owned or controlled by the said Harvey Land Association, or its grantees."

In these days, when in many parts of the country men have to beg for employment with less success than they can beg for bread, such a stipulation, immediate in its effect and lasting in its duration, is rightfully regarded as a guaranty of prolonged prosperity.

But mark you:

This provision is carefully drawn, and does not apply to persons living on land outside the limits of Harvey—no matter how near the line, no matter on what "addition," or by whom the land may be offered for sale. The only surety in this respect is to buy lots of the Harvey Land Association.

The questions may be asked: Is not Harvey full? Are not all the best lots gone?

The town of Harvey was planned on a magnificent scale. It covers as much territory as the city of Springfield, Ill., the capital of the state. As good lots as have been sold at all, are yet for sale in Harvey, and on as favorable terms as they ever have been.

There is not the slightest reason for going outside the limits, and those who do so should understand that they are simply buying lots on the vacant prairie, where they can be had by the million, between Harvey and Cairo. Good corn land, no doubt, but the peculiar privileges which accrue to dwellers upon real estate bought of the Harvey Land Association, certainly do not apply, and never will.

And the people who are thinking of making an investment ought to know it.

Especially those who buy as boys used to swap jackknives, "unsight, unseen."

To persons who are able to go and see for themselves what is Harvey and what is not Harvey, where the improvements are, and where the improvements are not, where the factories are and where the factories are not, such a warning is unnecessary. They will find out all about it when they get there.

An interesting and most suggestive fact in connection with the industries at Harvey, is the steady growth of those already established.

The ozone of prosperity seems inherent in the atmosphere.

For instance:

The Craver & Steele Manufacturing Company were only under contract to employ two hundred men; but there are five hundred and ten on their pay-roll to-day, and they are shipping agricultural machinery—largely to South America—at the rate of seven car-loads per day.

The Harvey Steel Car and Repairing Shops have become too small, and a large addition is being completed as fast as possible.

The Laughlin Manufacturing Company, which manufactures rolled shafting, all sizes and all lengths, are building an extension two hundred by eighty feet.

Harvey is not only growing, but everything there is growing with it.

The Bellaire Stamping Company, which manufactures all kinds of stamped tin and brass goods, is just starting up its works, and will employ seven hundred hands.

The Buda Foundry and Manufacturing Company is doing a general foundry business, making a specialty of heavy castings.

The Middleton Car Spring Co. is in successful operation.

The Automatic Mower and Manufacturing Company, which also manufactures corn crushers, hay presses, windmills and farming tools generally, will manufacture new forge and bolt machinery, the castings for each machine weighing 3,500 pounds.

The Wells Glass Company, which manufactures beveled and stained glass, has just completed an extensive plant.

A. J. Sweeney & Son, from Wheeling, West Virginia, are just erecting their large works (stone and brick) for the manufacturing of marine engines and boilers, rolling-mill machinery, plate glass machinery, nail mill machinery, punching and shearing machinery for rolling-mill use and other heavy work. Their traveling overhead crane will carry sixty-five tons at any given point. The foundations of their buildings are just being laid in concrete and cement, six feet deep, on which are built the stone foundations and brick walls.

J. Mathews & Son's boiler works and foundry for the manufacturing of steam boilers and boiler fronts, water towers, oil tanks for cars, etc., are just laying the foundations of their buildings, and expect to be in operation early this summer.

The wheel department of the Craver & Steele Manufacturing Company, formerly of Grinnell Wagon Works, have very large orders for wheels. They have increased their wheel plant so that they are enabled to turn out many carloads of wheels for wagons. They also manufacture spring wagons for farmers' use on a large scale.

The Atkinson Steel Spring Works expect to be in operation within sixty days.

The Chicago Rock-faced Stone Company propose to build just east of the Bellaire Stamping Company, and be in operation by the middle of June.

The growth of Harvey, from nobody at all to 4,000 population in less than two years, has but just begun, and is gathering impetus with the passage of every month. Nothing can be more certain than the advance of real estate under such circumstances.

Its proximity to the World's Fair (twenty-five minutes) would alone be reason enough for this; but, bless your heart, the World's Fair will only be an incident in the history of Harvey!

Harvey's growth will not be limited by the World's Fair or by the nineteenth century.

Copyright 1892 by The Harvey Land Association, 825 The Rookery, Chicago.

OUR WHITE RIBBON SAINT,

Miss Jennie Casseday, Superintendent of the World's and National W. C. T. U. Flower Mission.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

"To me the meanest flower that blows can give, Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears."
—Wordsworth.

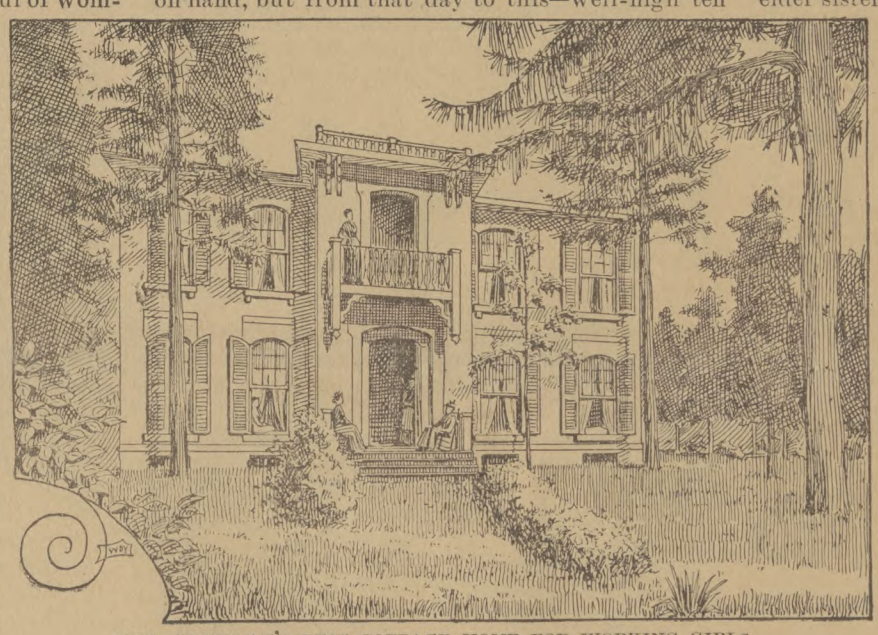
We were in the beautiful city of Louisville, Ky., Anna Gordon and I, in the autumn of 1881. Riding along Chestnut, one of its shady residence streets, with that chief among temperance orators, Col. George W. Bain, he said to us, "As we pass yonder pleasant homestead, look to the wide front window on the first floor and you will see a white figure reclining on a bed—that is Miss Jennie Casseday—the best loved woman in our state."

As we slowly passed her home, we saw for the first time the most ethereal human form that ever served as vase of rarest porcelain, through which should shine the spirit-lamp of a great soul. Always alert to learn about women gifted and good, we plied our white-ribbon brother with interrogations and found out that the Cassedays were a family of talents altogether uncommon. Ben Casseday, brother of Jennie, was the associate of George D. Prentice, editor of the famous Louisville Courier-Journal. They were of sturdy Presbyterian stock, and in their home the best fruits of that time were garnered. Men and women the most cultured were their guests, among them the poets, Alice and Phœbe Cary being favorites. Its present occupants are Miss Jennie's sister, Mrs. Fannie Casseday Duncan, one of the most incisive and successful of women journalists, and her husband, Mr. John Duncan, a well-known member of the editorial guild. But "the whole house revolves around her ladyship," as the loving-hearted Mrs. Duncan proudly says, from whose last note to me I cannot do better than to extract the following:

"LOUISVILLE, May 20, 1892.

"MY DEAR EDITOR:—Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to write you the 'bright, gossipy letter' for which you ask on the subject of that unique and most fascinating individual my sister Jen, who has been an inspiration to multitudes of souls, and to whom a quaint old lady lately said, 'Jennie, I feel sure you will have a low seat in heaven for you have such a high one here.' But the executive committee of the Woman's Christian Associations meets in our city May 31, and as I am secretary my hands are more than full."



MISS CASSEDAY'S REST COTTAGE HOME FOR WORKING GIRLS.

In Boston, newcomers are told that they must see Bunker Hill monument and the state house; in New York, Central Park and the Pulitzer Building; in Philadelphia, Liberty Bell and City Hall; in Chicago, the World's Fair grounds and Woman's Temple, but in Louisville, they point out the statue of George D. Prentice and the white window from which smiles the loving face of our white ribbon saint.

The "Jennie Casseday Infirmary" recently dedicated in Louisville, is a demonstration of the love felt for her by philanthropic leaders in her own city. From her came the inspiration and at her bedside the plans were made. Young women of the King's Daughters order were chiefly instrumental in carrying them out and as a result, this hospital for women, complete in every appointment, now stands near one of the city parks, a homelike building (formerly the mansion of a wealthy family), accommodating forty patients and conducted by physicians and nurses who are experts in the treatment of nervous diseases.

Miss Casseday's fame is the most remarkable recorded instance of the triumph of mind over matter; of spirit over clay. In more than thirty years she has not walked a step nor sat erect. Her bed has been her world and to its side, in reverent tenderness, much that is best in the world has gladly come. Here the most famous singers and musicians have exercised their beautiful gifts for the pleasure of this woman, who seeks to add to everybody's happiness. The telephone that hangs just within reach of that arm no larger than a child's, was placed at her disposal by the city; the phonograph repeats for her everything she cares to hear from concert to prayer-meeting, temperance speech to opera, sermon to convention. On a recent birthday her white ribbon comrades from all parts of the nation sent her the most complete and satisfying music box that money would procure. Ingenious contrivances enable this indefatigable worker to find the implements of her heavenly craft always within reach and it is a most interesting story to see into how small a compass can be brought, through the inventions of our time, the outfit of a bedfast philanthropist. The telegraph is, through the telephone, at her command; the stylographic pen, the manifolding pad, the postal card, the newspaper, the photographs of fellow workers and pictures of the various institutions with which she is connected, are all within arm's reach. Happily, at the "Rest Cottage home for working girls," founded through her efforts and influence, this outfit for work is not permitted, hence we hope, but do not altogether believe, that our friend takes a wee bit of vacation nowadays.

Before this, it has been made apparent that the white-ribboners could by no means fail to seek the help and comradeship of this elect soul, who had so long "borne and labored and had patience." With an earnest prayer for guidance I sought her sacred presence. Never shall I forget the kindling smile, the soft and tender hand-clasp, the Bible on the snowy counterpane, the fresh flowers on the pretty shelf between the bed and window. We talked of the ministry of these winsome heralds of good will, with the beautiful "mission" of which Miss Casseday was already connected; and I asked if she would accept the superintendency of such a department, should it be established by the convention. To this she consented, not without reluctance, having already much Christian work on hand, but from that day to this—well-nigh ten years—she has been our faithful and beloved leader in the most lovely line of Christian endeavor among all our forty-six different "branchings out." In the annual leaflet wherein these are all enumerated and described, hers is listed as follows:

"FLOWER MISSION:—Superintendent, Miss Jennie Casseday, 216 East Chestnut street, Louisville, Ky.

"Secretary, Miss Gertrude Ferguson, 3208 Rudd Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

"This department aims to graft our gospel work upon a beautiful form of philanthropy. Bouquets are tied with white ribbons and a Scripture verse and selection relative to temperance is attached. Our literature is circulated to accompany the flowers and the total abstinence pledge is offered at appropriate times in prison, hospital and other centers of need and sin and sorrow."

This work involves endless letter writing, articles for the press and planning that reaches out over the whole world. June 9 is the anniversary of Miss Casseday's birth, and has become known as "prisoner's day" throughout our borders; a special distribution of flowers being then made, literature distributed and services held. A most interesting article could be made of extracts taken from the letters of prisoners and other sorrowful ones, addressed on that day to Miss Casseday in token of their remembrance and affection.

At our National Convention the annual report of our superintendent of flower mission work, was formerly read by Mrs. Munnell, now president of Kentucky W. C. T. U. and in more recent years by the department secretary, Miss Gertrude Ferguson, after which a telegram of tender love is sent Miss Casseday.

The woman thus encompassed by the prayers, the faith and affection of multitudes, is a perpetual sufferer. Besides the life-long disease that holds her, a prisoner of hope upon her bed, she has frequent acute attacks and in a recent letter to the Y's she says: "I am on the down grade again and I am going to throw myself on your kindness and urge you to supplement my weakness for prison day work with your young and vigorous strength. I am failing rapidly in strength and am coughing very badly. For the past month my cough has been uncontrollable and now is accompanied by a constant and severe pain in the right side. This is not to distress you, or to call out your sympathy, of which you give so freely, but only to let you see how much I need your co-operation that the work may have good speed this summer."

And then she says with a pathos beyond words:

"I am asking Our Father for a new outpouring of His Holy Spirit that I may be so conscious of His presence as to be able to draw the young souls at our dear summer Rest Cottage to 'acquaint themselves with God and be at peace.'

"As I think of the long sweet summer and all the happy seed-sowing you have before you: of all the joy and shine you will make over this wide land, of the busy brains that will think and plan beautiful things and the willing feet and hands that will execute, I rejoice with you and thank God that He has given to the sorrowing, the suffering, and the needy ones of earth so many bright Y's to minister in His Name.

"It is far easier for me to suffer and be still and wait patiently, because I feel so confident of your co-operation and that you will do all in your power to supplement my feebleness, and not only this but that in so doing you will strengthen and sweeten and broaden your own souls.

"In bonds of tender comradeship your invalid elder sister, JENNIE CASSEDAY."

Sick-bed, May 6, 1892.

A note from Miss Ferguson tells of Miss Casseday's removal from the city to the Rest Cottage, nineteen miles distant.

"LOUISVILLE, May 20.

"Last Tuesday morning, the time set apart for the removal of our dear Miss Casseday to Rest Cottage, dawned bright and beautiful. Every arrangement had been perfected by the railroad officials and loving friends. Six young men carried our beloved from her room to the platform car, thence to the special car at the terminus of the street car line and on to her beautiful room in Rest Cottage, never once allowing her cot to touch the floor of the car, but bearing it up to prevent the slightest jar. Pray that the quiet of this lovely retreat may restore her to more than her usual degree of strength."

In the picture of the cottage, her bed can be seen at the lower right hand window and a lovely lawn with trees spreads out before her gentle eyes. Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson has just come from Louisville, where she went on "The King's (Daughters) business," and says, "the presence of Jennie Casseday seems like the vestibule of heaven."

The lesson of this blithe yet chastened spirit, this hampered yet buoyant life, comes to us all like a breath from Paradise. Where God is there is peace and power.

When but a little over twenty years of age our white ribbon saint became aware that her couch of constant pain would be her only world, she lifted up her heart to God for His indwelling, and love for Christ and for humanity took possession of her whole being and brought to her a present heaven which has radiated out over the world, since then each day more widely.

What she did every one of us can do. From the most difficult conditions we can wring out the most celestial successes; from the alembic of pain distil the choicest character; from loneliness and contradiction be lifted to high companionship and sweet serenity.

Miss Casseday is no recluse; her nature is not in the least ascetic. Everybody feels at home with her, no matter how good, no matter how bad he may be. A homely, humanlike philosophy keeps our friend company and seasons her conversation with many a pungent phrase. Her face is smiling always; her wit and brightness never fail. She "makes the best of now and here;" she turns to utmost use each smallest ray of happiness. The investment she has made of life and opportunity are princely. Her patience puts us all to shame; her perseverance excels that of any one whom we have known, and her greatest peculiarity is that she has "A heart at leisure from itself,

To soothe and sympathize."

Evanston, Ill., June 1, 1892.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, June 2, 1892. Number 22.

CHANGE OF DATE OF THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

On account of the meeting in Denver, October 18 to 25, of the state synod of the Presbyterian church, the ladies of the local union have asked for a change of date for the National Convention. It will therefore begin Friday, October 28, and continue till November 2 inclusive.

The executive committee and superintendents will meet separately on Wednesday, the 26th, and jointly the following day, and two days following the Convention will be devoted to committee meetings.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Count Tolstoi, the Russian novelist and reformer, is seriously ill.

The heat in Berlin is intense. Many sunstrokes have been reported.

Decoration Day was observed very generally throughout the country.

The Methodist Conference adjourned sine die at noon on Thursday last.

Wellington, Kansas, was nearly demolished by a cyclone on the 27th ult.

Illinois and Wisconsin Prohibitionists assemble in state conventions this week.

The reciprocity treaty between Austria and the United States has been signed at Washington.

Eight state buildings are now in process of construction on the Columbian Exposition grounds.

The English House of Commons, for the first time in recorded history, refused to adjourn for Derby day.

The Presbyterian General Assembly has remanded Dr. Briggs' case to the New York Assembly for a new trial.

Miss Anna Dickinson's suit against the Republican National Committee to recover a balance of $125 has been dismissed.

Prof. John Bach McMaster, of the University of Pennsylvania, has accepted the presidency of the Illinois University.

The Methodist Protestant church has voted to leave out the words "promise to obey" from the marriage ceremony.

Fully three thousand people, great and small, embarked for Europe on the nine steamships that left New York May 26.

State Treasurer Wilson, at Springfield, Ill., is designated by the governor to receive cash contributions for the sufferers from the Illinois floods.

The Wergeland, the first Norwegian vessel to brave the dangers of the shallow canals between Montreal and Kingston, reached Chicago May 26.

The Presbyterian General Assembly voted to remit the question of deaconesses to the presbyteries for final action. This is equivalent to an indorsement.

The great amphitheater at Minneapolis, Minn., for the use of the Republican National convention, is completed. It will contain ten thousand persons, and has excellent acoustic properties.

At the services in Riverside Park, New York, on Decoration Day, Gen. Horace Porter announced the practical success of the movement to erect a suitable monument to General Grant.

Reports of the inundations in the lower Mississippi district state that the amount of damage by flood and tornado is incalculable. The waters continue to rise everywhere in the South.

TEMPERANCE reform has now been made a plank in the platform of the Women's Liberal League of England, and Lady Henry Somerset is a member of its central council.

SINCE we came into the Temple the business of our Woman's Publishing Association has greatly increased, and our callers come in a constant stream from all parts of the world.

THE Young Crusader is making a remarkable record this year; its increase is 9,000 since January, and of the Sunday-school edition 178,000 are already ordered with large additions by each mail.

SOME good women in a bad Michigan town recently upset the bill boards where a "Gaiety Group" of traveling ballet-dancers were pictured. The aggregate self-respect and sense of decency in these wives and mothers thus accomplished what the town authorities were too wicked or too weak to undertake.

THE students of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., to the number of one hundred and twenty young men (and women) have formed a Prohibition Party League, and offered a scholarship of one hundred and fifty dollars to the student who, before the opening of the autumn term, secures the largest number of signatures to the Million Voters Pledge. Rev. Dr. Delano has addressed the League, and our National President is to do so soon.

REV. DR. RAINSFORD now comes out, excellent man, non-expert and belated reformer that he is, for "beer and light wines to be furnished by the churches" (!) as an offset to the saloon. Inspector Byrnes, chief of the New York police force, declares himself in favor of "specially locating houses of ill-fame and regulating them." A brace of Daniels come to judgment; Rip Van Winkles risen from sleep with dreams most prophetless! Where have they been hibernating these last decades?

THE House of Representatives has voted that the United States Government Exhibit shall not be open on Sunday and has conditioned the vote by which it promises five million dollars more to the World's Fair upon the banishment of alcoholic liquors from the grounds. The phases of these two great ethical questions change with each new day, but the questions were never so much alive as now. The mighty cannonade of the church and temperance army begins to tell on the entrenchments of godlessness and greed. The combat deepens; the battle presseth even to the gates. Pray on, work on, hope on, now is the victory nearer than when we first believed and wrought our faith into our deeds.

Later.—Congress has heard from the Germans and also from that greater "Congress" called "The Brewers." Hence it has rescinded all the foregoing action except that relating to the government exhibit. The Hyde Park prohibition district is thus left defenseless so far as it is included in the Fair grounds and so far as Congress could deprive that plucky suburb of protection. In the present status of affairs when great destinies are hanging in the balances, we urge all state presidents, National superintendents, local presidents, indeed, every temperance man and woman who can afford fifty cents to put into the electric message, to send a night telegram to our benighted Congressmen—each addressing, by name, the representative from his or her own district, and remembering "the king's business demands haste."

WE are vigorously pursued by the grand jury of correspondence, whose jury box is the American continent, with criticisms upon the use of the name of the W. C. T. U. as an indorsement of syndicates, trusts, stock companies, and "such like." We think the point well taken, and would hereby announce that we are not in favor and never have been of any such use of the charmed four initials that indicate the great white ribbon movement. We believe those letters to be sacred, and that they should never be used in any business enterprise that redounds to the financial interests of individuals and corporations outside the W. C. T. U. itself. Except the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the Woman's Temperance Temple, and the Woman's Temperance Hospital, there are no organizations that have a right to any National use of the letters W. C. T. U. We are urged hundreds of times in a year to give our names (and we here refer to the presidents of National societies who are also editors of THE UNION SIGNAL), but in every case we have declined. For "the world's people" are alert to coin money from the good name that Heaven has helped us to acquire, and women, most excellent, may easily fall into the snare, and that without the slightest wrong intention. But we learn wisdom from experience, and caution from the things that we suffer.

IT never rains but it pours—our rainwater spring illustrates this truth in a most cisternfull fashion. It thunders all around the sky ecclesiastical; witness the following toothsome telegram received last week and signed by Eugenia F. St. John: "Ministerial and lay delegates (women) admitted to Methodist Protestant General Conference." The Methodist Episcopal Conference climaxed and closed on Thursday evening, May 26. Having voted the day previous to make the numerical representation of lay and ministerial delegates equal, the question, "Who are laymen?" came once more to the front. Gallant champions were there, as we have had them from the first. Bishop Fitzgerald presided. Rev. Dr. D. H. Moore, of Cincinnati, insisted that the question be settled now and here; this was the proper tribunal—the court of last resort. But his motion did not prevail. Rev. Dr. Hamilton, of Boston, now moved that unless two-thirds of the annual conferences and three-fourths of the next General Conference vote that the word laymen means men only, it shall thereafter be considered to include women. This was adopted by a vote of 241 to 160, amid great applause and after vigorous speeches against it by those redoubtable champions of men, Rev. Drs. Buckley, of New York, and Bristol, of Chicago. The laboring oar is thus transferred to the hands of our conservative brethren, and the vote already taken in the church and by the ministry makes it a foregone conclusion that at this o'clock in the century, the word LAYMEN (immortal word!) will be so defined in the church of Susanna and John Wesley as to prove that Methodists believe what the Hindu women of Bombay declare in the motto of their Sorosis: "The world was made for women, too." In Memphis, Tenn., the same week that witnessed the two forward movements just described, saw the Cumberland Presbyterian denomination in throes of excitement as to whether or not women could be "ruling elders." They finally decided that they were, though one good and outspoken brother said, as he voted "aye," "It's bitter medicine to a man of my raising, but I s'pose we've got to take it." We fancy he was "more scared than hurt."

A NEW MISSION OF THE FLOWERS.

(In love of Jennie Casseday.)

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

SLOWLY upward through the darkness,
Crept the opening buds of spring;
Slowly climbed the weary winter
Toward the time of blossoming.

And I, listening, heard a whisper,
And I, waiting, felt a thrill
Such as pulses through the sea-tides
When the sweet moon has her will.

All the young leaves sang together,
With a murmurous throb and stir,
"We must hasten! June is coming—
We must grow and grow for her!

"For she loved us till her loving
Won our secret from the sod,
Till she knew each tiny blossom
Held for souls the love of God.

"Love of God, outreaching tender
Hands and hearts of helpful grace
To the souls in darkness lying,
Missing e'en the dear Christ's face—

"Till she sent them, all love-laden,
To God's needy everywhere.
She is waiting—she will miss us,
We must hasten to be there.

"Soft spring sunshine, smile upon us!
Give us life, oh, summer air!
Touch us gently, rain and dewdrop,
Make us strong and make us fair.

"We would pour the spicy sweetness
Of all gardens, fresh with showers,
On the heart of her, the priestess,
In God's Temple of the flowers."

New York City.

DID IT PAY?

BY MRS. J. K. BARNEY.

THE trial was over and the man had received his sentence—"to prison." No one took any notice, for the prisoner had no "friends at court." Only the officer gave a touch with his foot as he said, "Wake up here and come along."

The poor young fellow lifted his face, wild, haggard and desperate as he muttered, "Don't drive, time will be long enough, I guess." A pull and a punch from the officer hastened his movements and he was soon in line with "the rest of 'em."

Just a dozen of "em," ranging all the way from sixteen to sixty years. A plain looking, middle-aged woman, with nothing specially noticeable about her unless it might be a tiny bow of white ribbon upon her chain, seemed watching for the prisoners, and her eyes quickly singled out this one. "Oh, Ben, I only heard about your trouble a few minutes ago. I'm sorry I did not get here earlier, but I am afraid I could not have helped you," and a gentle hand was placed upon the handcuffed wrists. A quick change swept over the face, but he said carelessly,

"No, you'd been no use, they were all dead ag'in me; they know so much they are 'head of God. Let 'em wait, there'll come a reckonin' time and I'll light a fire for 'em."

This last was an allusion to what he had been sentenced for. Deacon Brown's barn had been burned to the ground and Ben Stuart, a drunken loafer about town, had been seen "hanging round" at dark and in the morning could give no satisfactory account of himself. Not a single man in the court room knew anything for certain—not even Ben himself—but Ben knew that, bad as he was, he had not meant to burn the barn, but he "had been there asleep in the hay, and waking up had lighted his pipe and gone out into the air; then he was thirsty and started off cross lots for Mike's saloon, where he had no trouble to get a drink, then he went down by the river and crawled up to the brush-heap, and next thing the officers were punching him in the morning."

He had told this over and over again, but all laughed and said "'twas well known Ben had a grudge against Deacon Brown for discharging him."

When his sentence was given he dropped his head into his hands and registered a vow that "when his time was out he'd burn Brown's house over his head if he had to swing for it."

This sounds dreadful, but you wouldn't wonder if you knew Ben's story. Born in an almshouse, and his mother a poor waif whom "the town had cared for" in such a way that at fifteen she had brought into the world this child, kicked and cuffed, the uninteresting pauper child had grown old fast. Twice a "home" had been provided for him where he was "to work and go to school three months in a year," but he proved incorrigible—"would get to the cider barrel in spite of all watching, and was dangerous to have round."

At twenty-three we've seen him old in wickedness, and now sentenced "where he'd be safe for a while." Just two persons had ever spoken kindly to him. Brown's little daughter when he worked for her father, and this woman, whose hand had touched the irons upon his wrist as though they pained her, and she had asked him into the mission, and "always seemed glad to see him."

There was only a chance for good-bye and Ben was on his way to prison. Time went on and Ben "minded his ways," and was reckoned "a good prisoner." The restraint and regularity of his life was good for him physically, but mentally and morally he remained a dwarf. Only one thought possessed him, "to get out and get even with Brown."

The regular Sunday services had had no interest to him, only once when Brown had "helped," and Ben had seen himself pointed out to Brown's friends—then he rose up from his seat and shook his fist. For that he had been placed in the dungeon and kept on bread and water twenty-four hours; but this he could bear for he chuckled, "Brown never'll come again, and he'd better not."

"Flower mission Sunday" had come. What it meant no one seemed to know, "only they'd heard the women were coming," and sure enough, on Sunday morning as they filed into the chapel there sat several women, and great baskets of flowers filled the dreary place with perfume. Not a man, old or young, but felt that he had company come to see him.

Ben's whole being started into life with the very first words of the service,—for they fell from the same lips which had said "good-bye" to him that day when he was "ironed and carried off."

After a brief prayer and singing the speaker took into her hands some of the flowers, called attention to the white ribbon which fastened them, and held the card with its gospel message and then told the story of the "Flower Mission."

It grew very still as the sick room was pictured where, for so many years, the gentle sufferer had been a prisoner of pain, and from whom had come the inspiration for the work which white-ribboners loved so well.

Then the Scripture texts were read over and explained,—another hymn sung, and the big baskets were placed before the speaker. She gave out to the ladies until their arms were full, then said, "Wait,—and let every head be bowed for just a moment of prayer." The words so simple, so tearful, so pleading fell upon every heart and as the heads were lifted, almost every one brushed a hand across the face. Eager hands reached out for the flowers, and the texts were read by many through tears.

Ben looked at the young lady coming down "his row," and, as he held out his hands, gave a start, then set his teeth and dropped the flowers upon the floor.

The lady turned and picked them up and as her eyes met his, she exclaimed, "Why, Ben, is this you? I was wishing to see you, for I've always wanted to tell you I did not believe that you meant to burn my father's barn—you were always so kind when you worked for father. Keep up good heart, better times will come. Read your text and believe it." Ben looked dazed, then straightening up, he lifted high his right hand.

All this took only a moment, but it meant more than can be computed by figures. The distribution was over, again they sung, a few words of hope and cheer were given, a brief prayer offered and "they fell into line." True, they took the same miserable lock-step, but the faces wore a different expression and though the flowers were carried a little awkwardly, no one seemed careless of what had been received.

Ben walked his cell that day, stopping, once in a while, to put his face down on the flowers, but all the time he carried in a tight grasp his "text card." "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

It was one of the texts the lady had read and she looked at him as she added, "This means you, my friend, just put your name in there and say it over until you believe it, that God promises you eternal life." Then followed a little talk, which made it plain that "eternal life" was not a far-off, distant blessing, but something each might enter upon that very day.

Ben had found out for the first time that he had a soul, and the women thought it worth saving. How they cried when they talked and prayed, and even when they sung. Brown's girl had grown so much, but she remembered him and didn't believe him guilty. "What if she and that other woman knew how he meant to burn Brown's house! He'd have to look out that she wasn't inside. How'd house-burning and eternal life go together? He'd burn the house and then get eternal life!" He read the text again and he knew at once he must give up his plan! For the first time in his life he left his food untouched. "Must he give up everything because some women had come there and talked and cried, and brought flowers?" and with the thought he threw his little bouquet to the end of his cell, followed and put his foot upon it. Just then the keeper looked in as he went his rounds. Later he said, "Some of the men put their flowers in their cups, but there's Stuart, he flung them down and stood on them—an obtuse, sullen fellow that."

If he could have looked in a few hours later he would have understood as little; for he would have seen Stuart lying upon the floor with his face upon the flowers. Sometime afterwards Stuart told "the flower-woman" (he had come to think of her that way, not knowing her name), "Somewhere between midnight and morning I gave up burning Brown's house, and lots of other things and took eternal life. It was the first chance I'd had, and I couldn't 'ford to lose it."

The years have come and gone and "Flower Mission Day" has become an established feature of W. C. T. U. work, and hundreds of pathetic stories could be related of its gentle ministry, but no better trophy could be shown than Benjamin Stuart, a plain, silent man, whose fidelity to principle and heroism in time of trial would put to shame the majority of professing Christians.

Deacon Brown says, "There's lots of nonsense about the women carrying flowers and setting up to preach," but Ben says, "It pays to do it."

Providence, R. I.

A WOMAN'S REFORMATORY PRISON.

BY MARY A. LIVERMORE.

It is more than a century ago that John Howard began the great work of prison reform. He had gauged the misery of prisons; he had plunged into the depths of dungeons; he had learned the futility of attempting to repress crime by punishment alone. He comprehended the divineness of Christianity beyond most of his age; he understood the character of our heavenly Father as expounded by Jesus, who was "the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His person." He saw how God diffuses the sunlight, and distills the dew on the just and on the unjust, how spring breathes fragrance, and autumn pours its plenty on the evil as well as on the good. And he flung down the gauntlet to the un-Christian Christendom of his day, which has come down the century to our time, "Imitate the all-Father in your treatment of criminals! Let your prisons be moral reformatories, schools for fallen humanity!"

But the world learns slowly, and reforms in the past have moved like "sick men in their sleep, three paces, and then faltering." And it has not been much more than twenty-five or thirty years since earnest and intelligent efforts have been made to carry out the Christ-like demand of the great philanthropist. To-day, in most of the Northern states the improvement in prisons and their management is very notable. In some states, reformatory prisons are in operation, which seem to have reached the very acme of excellence. Two of the three state prisons of Massachusetts are moral reformatories, and the third, which is always spoken of as a "penal institution" only, is dominated by a spirit that seeks the education and reformation of the convict.

A member of the Massachusetts Prison Reform Association, and a frequent visitor to these institutions at Sherborn, Concord and Charlestown, I am able to see for myself the wise humanity that manages them, and to keep in touch with the spirit of the men and women who have them in charge. The barbarous custom of clothing prisoners in the striped garb, never seen outside a prison, is banished from Massachusetts. Men convicts wear an ordinary business suit, black, brown, navy blue or mixed black and white, the color indicating to the officials the grade of the prisoner. Women wear dark blue gingham, the varying size of the plaids, which the guest does not notice, marking their grade to their officers. Both men and women wear their hair as their taste inclines them, and the men wear beards and whiskers, or not, as they please.

Mrs. Ellen C. Johnson is the warden of the Women's Reformatory Prison at Sherborn, Mass.,—a woman, who, for thorough acquaintance with criminal women, skill in managing them, faith in humanity, patience, wisdom, and wise motherliness, cannot be duplicated in America. Until that prison went into operation, I had said, with the world generally, that it was much more difficult to reform a fallen woman than a fallen man, and I believed it. We were twelve years at work trying to obtain the prison, and when at last it was established, I was so fearful that it might not be a success, and that criminal women would defy all efforts to improve them, that I waited for two years before visiting it. Then my visit was for two days, and before the close of the first day I had unlearned the heresy of a life-time. It is easier to reform women than men, only we have not attempted it until recently. They are more amenable to kind treatment, respond more readily to moral and religious appeals, and catch more quickly the divine contagion of pleasant manners, orderly behavior and refined speech. I have never yet met a criminal woman in whom the mother-heart had died out, and nearly all who have had experience with women in prisons tell the same story.

I lack time and space for details of the wonderful work done at Sherborn by Mrs. Johnson, whose heart is in the reformatory. Love makes us wise to win the erring, and this is the secret of this grand woman's success. Even the employments of the women are made to bear on their reformation. Is a woman refractory in the sewing-room, where shirts by the thousand are cut and made in a week? She is sent out to the pasture to look after the young calves, or lambs, to feed them, or romp with them awhile, as she may have the mood. Has a passionless despair seized her, as she contemplates her long sentence, sunless past and hopeless future? The motherly warden takes her to the feeding-room of the silk-worms, whose voracity is inappeasable, and asks her to lend a hand in their care, in the meanwhile administering a needed tonic by well-fitting words of courage, hope and patience.

Has some wretched girl dropped into sullen stubbornness, that under ordinary treatment would soon develop into angry defiance? She is escorted to the hennery, where motherless chickens, brought forth by the incubator, are clamoring pitifully for motherly care. And the sullen frown soon gives way to tender smiles as she provides for the brooding of the unfledged, unmothered little creatures. The dairy, the herd of sleek cows, the vegetable garden, the fruit farm and the flower beds are all made to minister to the salvation of these poor women, as well as the morning and evening chapel service, the weekly temperance meeting, the Sunday-school, and the Sunday meeting, when the woman chaplain preaches a sermon. A large half of the women, almost two-thirds, are reformed, and as all are taught to read and write, and to learn some industry by which they can live after they are released, good places are generally found for them in the country, beyond the reach of temptation.

"How many of these women owe their incarceration in this prison to drinking habits?" I asked Mrs. Johnson, when I last visited the Reformatory.

"Ninety-seven out of a hundred are here, either for habitual drunkenness, or for crimes committed under the influence of strong drink," was her answer. "Shut up the grog-shops of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, and ninety-seven out of a hundred of the women who come here will come no more forever!"

As society is organized at present, no permanent reformation of the criminal population of our country is possible. For as they leave the reformatory prison, which has environed them with redeeming influences, eight or nine-tenths of them being dominated with love of alcoholic stimulants, which has ruined them, the saloon outbids all other competitors for their society, and—ultimately—their patronage, and they fall back into the pit from which they have partly escaped. It is the old story of Penelope, the web woven in the day-time is unraveled by night. Is there never to be an end of this farcical tragedy?

Melrose, Mass.

THE LAST BOUQUET.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

"It is better for only two or three to go to the almshouse, I think," said Mrs. Latimer. "When we go in larger numbers it interferes with their work, and the matron thinks she must arrange for a service. So, if there's no objection, I'll ask Mrs. Gilbert and Hester Vance to take the flowers there this year."

A murmur of assent which amounted to a vote in this unparliamentary body indicated that the Sperry union agreed with its president, and the two names suggested were written down as the committee to visit the almshouse on flower mission day. Committees for the jail, hospital, children's home and uncommon cases were also appointed.

The W. C. T. U. in Sperry was neither a large nor aggressive body, only a "link of white ribbon" in the long chain, but it did its duty on special occasions, of which flower mission day was one. Mrs. Gilbert understood very well why she was to accompany Hester Vance to the almshouse.

"They know I have a carriage, you see," she whispered to Hester with a twinkle of the eye, "but you'll have to do all the talking, remember that; I can't say anything to those people for I'm no talker."

Mrs. Gilbert was called "rich" in the small city of Sperry; and she really was rich, because she had some money and any amount of willingness to use it. Her fat gray pony—Prohibition by name—might be seen ambling along the streets or off over the hills doing temperance work nearly every day; and she would hold the reins and sit and wait with serene patience while some other woman delivered a message. Her whip, too, with its fluttering white ribbon was a constant advertisement of the "cause," read of all men, especially the "saloon props" and, as one of them said, "it was a constant aggravation." So I think Mrs. Gilbert did talk, after all.

As for Hester Vance, she was another useful woman. Poor and plain she certainly was, but one rare gift was hers. She could talk with people of all classes and conditions in the most soul-searching way, without repelling or giving offense. There is no one word which fully expresses that blessed "tact" in which nature and grace so perfectly unite. These two women then, who together made "one harmonious whole," set forth to discharge their duty early in the afternoon of a bright June day.

"This is Heaven's flower mission day for all of us, I think," said Hester, her homely face reflecting the glory of sunshine, green lawns, flowering shrubs and bird songs, as they rode through the streets in Mrs. Gilbert's low, easy carriage, with a big basket of flowers at their feet.

"Yes, and I was thinking how difficult it seems on such a day to understand why there need be any almshouses! The world is full and running over with beauty and riches if 'twas only divided evenly," replied Mrs. Gilbert.

"That's the trouble! The division isn't even—there's always a 'remainder'; and remainders mean fractions. And these fractions with souls are the perplexing part of human arithmetic," said Hester with a sigh.

They soon left the avenue with its lovely homes, and rode country-ward across what was known as "the flats." Here, at a certain point where four ways met, stood the almshouse, big and yellow, and full of windows. There was nothing attractive in the spot, save a far-away view of woods and mountains, which had been provided without the aid or consent of commissioners!

A lame girl, hanging upon the garden gate, saw "Prohibition" turning into the yard, and seizing her crutches, hastened with all speed into the house to spread the news. "Billy will come next," said Hester with a smile, and sure enough, deaf and dumb Billy, whose face wore a perpetual smile, and whose head was always bobbing and bowing like a "Jack-in-the-box," came running out to fasten the horse. Mrs. Briggs, the matron, met them at the door, and silly Nancy came hurrying along the corridor as fast as her old mother, whose hand she held, would permit. They all knew Hester, and she knew them—that strange little company of unfortunates. Besides those mentioned there were Kizzy, who was partially insane, and Gran'sir Crawford, so very old that he thought God had forgotten to take him to Heaven; and the "knitter," another aged inmate, who sat patiently by the window all day, knitting and watching for her son, who had gone west and been lost to her many years. Then there was "the madam," who had once been in good circumstances, but was now left, the last of her family, an unwilling dependent upon public charity. She had a room furnished from her own old home, a quiet, quaint corner, sometimes visited by those who remembered her past. Two or three women of the irresponsible class remained in the kitchen, where were also several children with searching, pitiful eyes. The men, most of whom were vagrants swept together by the besom of intemperance, were in the fields at work, much to Hester's relief. She soon took her stand by the long kitchen table with the basket of flowers beside her and talked to the little company about the flower mission. From that to Christ's mission was an easy transition, helped by the precious texts on cards attached to the bouquets. Hester had little confidence in her own words, but the texts—ah! those were good seed, selected with prayer and in faith, which must blossom in days to come.

And how quietly they listened! Even poor Kizzy forgot to rattle the pans she had begun to wash with a great demonstration, and leaned over the sink in sullen silence. And when Hester, with folded hands and closed eyes, offered a brief, tender prayer, all bowed their heads and some were weeping.

Then came the distribution of bouquets. Silly Nancy curtesied to the floor, and was so pleased with her success that she repeated it many times, vying with Billy, who, at the other end of the room, was smiling and bowing his thanks with reckless energy.

The anxious-faced knitter took her flowers quietly, remarking: "I'll save 'em for Johnny,—he always liked roses."

Kizzy glared upon Hester with tigerish eyes, quite inclined to resent a gift which she could neither eat nor drink. But Hester leaned toward her and whispered: "'He careth for you.' That means, 'Jesus cares for you.'"

Then Kizzy laughed shrilly. "Oh! you mean the Gentleman up there?" pointing upward. "Somebody told me once that He was awful sorry when Kizzy was bad." And she laughed again; but took the bouquet carefully and held it to her cheek with an expression that was almost tender. For the children there were picture books and a few toys with the flowers, and for "the madam," a package of magazines and papers.

It was hard for Hester to leave after the distribution was over; for, with quick recognition of kindly interest, they clamored for further attention.

"Why can't ye stay here always?" said the lame girl, holding Hester's dress with one thin hand.

"I want to tell ye how they got the farm away," persisted Gran'sir Crawford, with tremulous deliberation, smiting the floor with his staff. Even "the knitter" roused, at the last moment, to inquire earnestly: "Did you ever happen to meet my Johnny when you was out West?"

"No, I never saw your boy," replied Hester, "but perhaps you'll see him by-and-by. Learn the texts on your cards. Yes, yes, I'll come again! Good-bye," and with a smile which each one appropriated, Hester joined Mrs. Gilbert at the carriage.

"You're all tired out," said that lady with a scrutinizing glance at the flushed face. "There I stood beside the madam like a wooden woman, while you gave those poor things the flowers and yourself. Oh, you needn't tell me! I pity them till my heart aches, but I might as well read the Declaration of Independence to them as to try to express my sympathy in words. They wouldn't believe it. But they cluster around you as if there was some virtue in your clothes, even. It's a gift, Hester, from Him who drew the common people to Himself and healed them all. But I must take you home now as soon as possible, so you can rest. Get up, Pro!"

"I have one beautiful bouquet left, rosebuds and smilax, which I must dispose of before I go home," said Hester.

"Nonsense! As if you couldn't keep that! You've done your duty as a 'committee,' I'm sure," insisted Mrs. Gilbert.

And Hester was tempted to go straight to her room and her rocking-chair; for she was weary with the weariness which comes, not from distributing bouquets, but from the giving out of sympathy and spiritual vitality. But there was a face which haunted her, a young girl's face at the window of a dingy boarding house on a certain corner. "Leave me here," she said as they finally reached it, "my conscience is a tyrant, and won't let me sleep if I carry home this last bouquet."

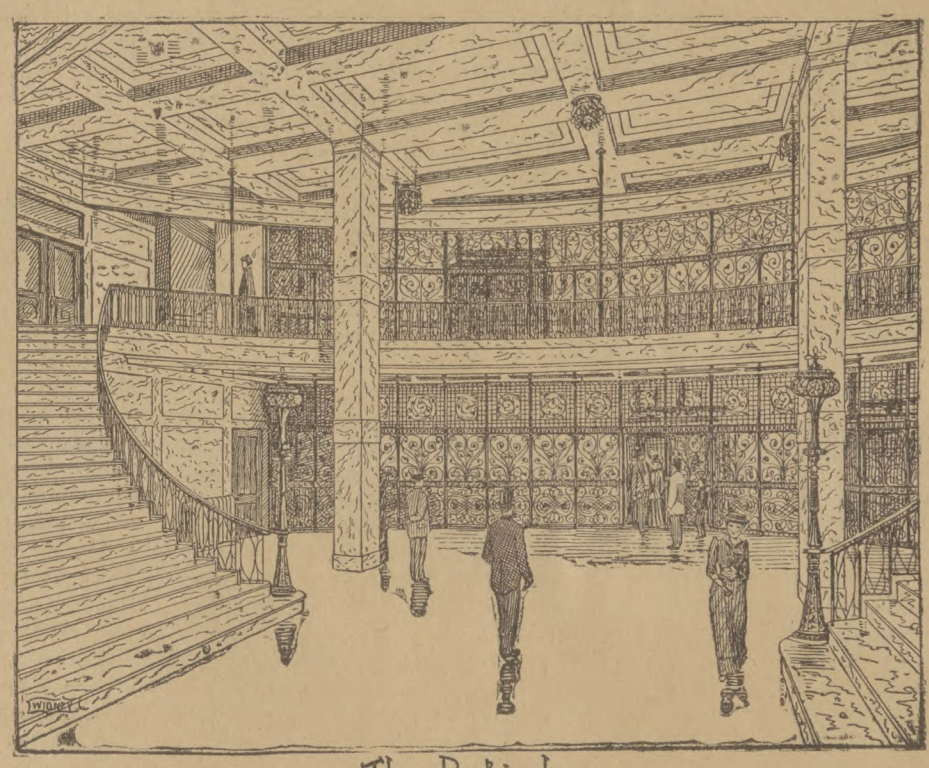
A stout, good-natured woman met Hester in the hall which was redolent of cabbage odors, and answered her inquiry. "Oh, yes, you mean Nellie Atkins, as sits by my window. She ain't sick, but —well, maybe she is, too. She's none of my folks, but I used to live neighbor to her mother out in the country, and the other night Nellie come to me and she says: 'Mis' Lawson, I want to stay with ye a few days. There's no quiet where I board, and I just want to think.' So she's been thinkin' ever since, but she don't seem to get through the tangle, whatever 'tis, and I tell her she better stop thinkin' and go to eatin'. Yes, you may come right up. My, ain't them flowers pretty? Here, Nellie, this lady thought you was sick—seein' you mopin' at the window—and she's brought you a most lovely bunch of posies."

The heavy-eyed girl turned with a startled, defiant look toward the intruder.

"I saw you at the window," Hester hastened to say, "and thinking you might be ill, I said to myself, 'She shall have my last bouquet!' for this is flower mission day, and we white-ribboners are trying to give a little good cheer to everybody that needs it. So, take this, my dear, there's a text on the card, you see, and I hope you'll soon be out in the sunshine again. Good-bye," and away went Hester, for she saw that this young stranger had no words for her.

A few days later as she was passing the corner, Mrs. Lawson called her in. "I've been watching for you," said she, leading the way to a little back parlor, "for I thought you'd like to know what heaps of good them flowers did. You see," she continued, seating herself on the edge of an easy chair, "Nellie lived up country where my folks used to live, and about a year ago her father died and left her mother with four children and a little rocky farm with a mor'gage on it. Nellie was the oldest, and she was bound to help. Of course she thought there wasn't no place to make money but in the city. She thought anybody with a willin' pair of hands could make big wages, which you and I know is a dreadful mistake. Why, even my hands hain't made a fortune yet," and Mrs. Lawson laughed as she held out her broad, red palms, "and what chance has a slip of a girl with no friends to give her a lift? So she came to the city and went into a dry-goods store. And what do you s'pose she got for wages? Just three dollars and fifty cents a week! Her board was three dollars, and that left fifty cents for clothes and shoes and things a girl has to have. Well, she wasn't used to city ways and her work bothered her some, and if there was any chance for better wages she never got 'em. So she come to me one night, as I told ye, and says, 'Miss Lawson, won't you let me stay here till I can see what's best to do?' And I says to her, 'Nellie, I think you better go home to your mother. You'd better make butter and cheese than to stay here where it's so hard for a girl to get along.'

"She didn't make much of any answer, but moped around, sittin' at the window as you could see and lookin' kind of white and scared, which wasn't natural at all, for she was a pretty, red-cheeked girl when she lived up country. This went on till you brought them flowers. You'd scarcely left the house before she broke down, and I heard her cryin' 's if her heart would break. Do you see that?' says she, pointin' to the rosebuds and smilax. 'When father was buried the church folks brought flowers just like them and put all 'round him. They did it because he was such a good man—so honest and true. That's what they said, honest and true. Oh, I'd almost forgot! I'd almost forgot!' And then she sobbed and cried. By 'n' by she told me how her clothes was gettin' shabby, and her shoes was 'most gone, and her mother wrote askin' if she had earned anything to help pay int'rest on the mor'gage. And she hadn't any money. Then Satan he come disguised as an angel of light, and he was ready to give her the whole world—so to speak—if she'd foller him. And she'd been parleyin' with him, waverin' and doubtin' all the time she was at my upper front window, and I never knowin' it, and that was the last day she felt she could stay with me. Well," Mrs. Lawson paused a good many times to clear her voice, and now took time to wipe her eyes vigorously, "all this she told me with the flowers layin' in her lap. By 'n' by she read what was on the card. 'Oh, Mis' Lawson,' says she, 'how did that woman happen to know?' She reached it out to me and there 'twas; 'I will arise and go to my father!' 'Nellie,' says I, 'that's a voice from heaven!' Well, the business was settled then and there. I give her a few things and bought her a ticket with my own money, and see her aboard the train with my own eyes, bound for Woodsville. And the last thing she said, and she had a dreadful happy look in her eyes—was that I should thank you for savin' her life; that's her very words, savin' her life! So I watched, knowin' you did sewin' on the street sometimes, for I knew by my own feelin's that you'd be glad one bunch of flowers did so much for poor Nellie." Glad? Hester's heart fairly ached with the "gladness," and good Mrs. Lawson was fully satisfied with her interest as she looked into the tear-filled eyes.



The Rotunda.

Hester had been at work all day for an exacting woman who never knew just what she wanted, but she forgot it all as she mounted the stairs to her own small room. What an "exceeding great reward" for a little service! "And to think that that text happened to be with those flowers"!

The Business Office.

And then her thoughts ran out to the "beginnings of things," and to the patient invalid whose prayers and personality had been permeating the flower mission work all these years. Standing at her upper window she watched the distant hills, touched with sunset tints, and softly sang:

"Cast thy bread upon the waters,
Waft it on with praying breath,
In some distant, doubtful moment,
It may save a soul from death;
When you sleep in solemn silence,
'Neath the morn and evening dew,
Stranger hands which you have strengthened.
May strew lilies over you."

Norwich, Conn.

OUR GREAT ARSENAL.

BY FANNY H. RASTALL.

"We wage our peaceful war for God and Home and Native Land," a war in which "bullets are ballots, and weapons are ideas;" so says our great leader. As in other conflicts, there must be plans of campaign, arsenals for ammunition, and records of victory reared. While standing in wondering admiration over such monuments and glorying in their completion it is well to learn, too, of the sources of supply that furnished equipment without which success could not have been achieved.

Every week the readers of The Union Signal have been told of the progress made in the erection of the Temple. The fact of its completion has been duly announced; its beauties have been described, and the removal of the offices of all organizations of the W. C. T. U. centering in the neighborhood of this artistic building and of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the official W. C. T. U. publishing house, has been made public. Our friends who visited the office at 161 La Salle street, knowing how to find us there and familiar with the accustomed places, must now seek us in new quarters. To these, and to others it may be a pleasure to learn of the new surroundings and where to look for them.

Pass, then, one-half block south on La Salle street from 161 and cross from the northeast to the southwest corner; a few steps farther south will bring you to the entrance—the beautiful arch described in a former number of The Union Signal. Entering through double doors, pause for a moment in the rotunda. The floor is of Florentine mosaic, the walls and massive pillars of Italian marble of white, slightly veined, chaste and pure in effect; on the right and on the left are large rooms occupied by banks, two on the ground floor and two above, the last named reached by a flight of steps of the same marble from which the walls and pillars are built, and under which are fine counters for newspapers, periodicals, soda fountains, etc., but no cigars. God grant that the Temple forever may be kept free from such pollution, from any taint which would prevent the rule of the Divine power. Opposite the entrance are eight high speed elevators, entering any one of which you are lifted to the eleventh floor. Leaving it, directly opposite on the glass panel of the door you read: "Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Business office." This is room 1110, light, bright, beautiful, occupied by the cashier, her assistant, the show-case, (behind which is a large bookcase of oak, to match the woodwork of the building) filled with supplies, chiefly our own publications for purchasers, and one of the most genial and accommodating of young ladies to serve callers. Here, too, are the subscription book department and the subscription clerks, three of whom are kept busy in caring for subscribers to The Union Signal and keeping accurate the lists.

Adjoining this on the south is room 1109, differing but slightly in shape and size from 1110. Here the second assistant bookkeeper, three stenographers and eleven clerks are busy from morning until night. The department of superintendents, the club raisers, The Young Crusader, the Oak and Ivy Leaf, Bible and monthly readings, Our Day and other lists are carefully overlooked by the one to whom the duty has been assigned, and the faithful clerks to attend to orders stand ready to refer to letters and books to prove their fidelity to duty. From the windows of both these rooms you may look to the street below with its swarming crowds, down on multitudes of roofs of buildings of only seven stories, and into their smoking chimneys, and away beyond them to the waters of Lake Michigan, sometimes blue and clear, reflecting the heavens above, sometimes turbulent and muddy, made so by mundane commotion. The wish, the prayer is spontaneous, that in reality we may rise so near to heaven as to be lifted above all earthly turbulence and impurity.

Return to the corridor from 1110—but not to the elevator—and walk to the right over the mosaic floor, noting still that the walls are faced with the same Italian marble, and that the windows behind the elevators make artificial light unnecessary (not a common thing in high city buildings) until you reach the bend where nearly in front of you is a door upon which is painted "Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Editorial Rooms." Here Miss Ada Melville, editorial secretary, receives all guests and shows the sanctas sanctarum of Miss Sudduth, Mrs. Kells and Miss Stewart behind glass partitions, and of Miss Guernsey in a small, adjoining room. In the editorial reception room will be noticed two large oak book-cases containing THE UNION SIGNAL library, and pictures of W. C. T. U. celebrities on the wall will indicate the loving regard in which not only these but all co-workers are held.

Still further to the east is the room of the advertising manager, fronting, as also do the editorial rooms, north. This is another busy hive, where R. S. Thain, his two assistants and two stenographers labor to fill with unobjectionable advertisements the columns set apart for that purpose in the publications of the W. T. P. A. Gradually the toning up process goes on, and as contracts expire certain advertisements are tabooed, and none can secure contracts who cannot convince those in charge that rectitude lies at the base of their business methods. Still, sometimes the most careful are misled, and readers are advised to examine for themselves the claims of all who speak in the interest of their business through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Returning, to the right is the office of the business manager, which is also the place of meeting for the board of directors and business committee, a bright, airy room, containing desk, small book-case, chiffonier and chairs, on the west of which is the small sanctum of Miss Willard. When the National President consented to assume the duties of editor-in-chief of THE UNION SIGNAL, so many calls were made upon her that to attempt to work at the office was a hopeless undertaking, and the idea was abandoned. But this little snuggery, containing a desk, a lounge, a table and a chair, was selected for her privacy, and, guarded on one side by the business manager and on the other by an editor, she will be "not at home" during office hours.

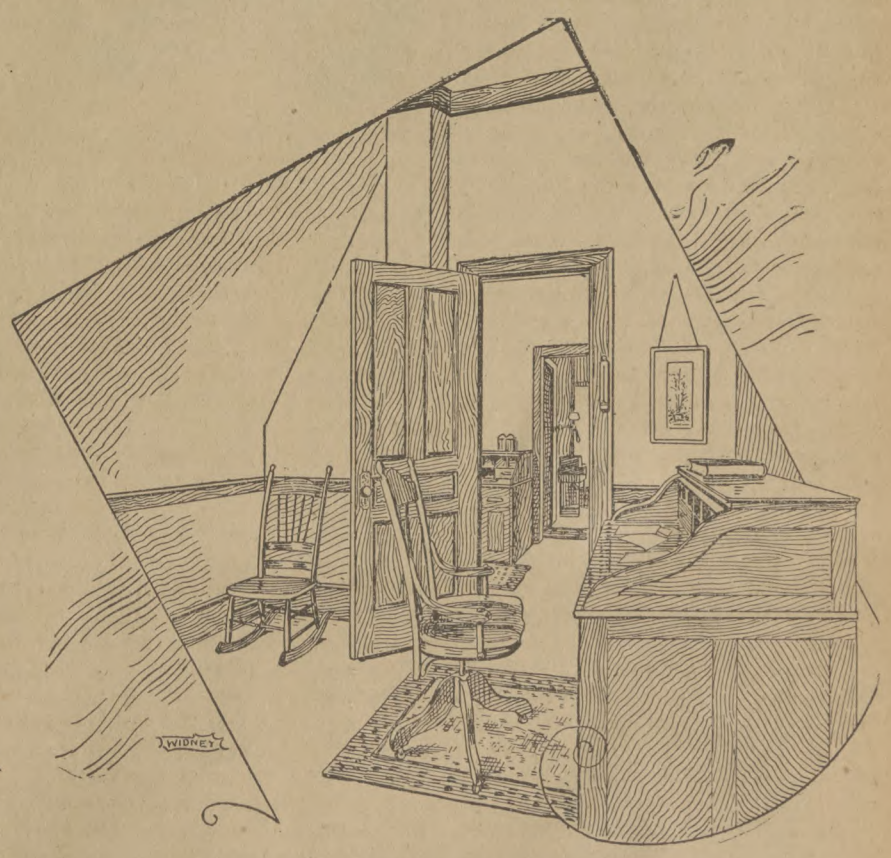
These rooms are occupied by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. The National W. C. T. U., the World's W. C. T. U., the Illinois W. C. T. U., the Chicago Central W. C. T. U., and the Temple Trustees occupy other rooms on the same floor, which some other pen may describe; they are outside the purpose of this article. May no disturbing thought or untrue act leave taint of human impurity within these walls; and as the tenants—(employes all of the greatest corporation among women, lifted farther toward the skies than before), be also nearer the great heart of our Divine leader, and partake more and more of the heavenly nature.

The insurance companies forbade the removal of the manufacturing plant into the Temple; a description of it will appear later.

HOW IT WAS SAID.

Two extracts are copied into the Bar Harbor, (Me.) Record, stating that Lady Henry Somerset regarded the Maine law as a failure. It is well-known to our readers that our English editor made exactly the opposite declaration in all her articles and printed addresses. I was with her in Maine, and know this to be true. It is natural that the Bar Harbor papers, full of hotels, should desire to make this representation, but it is absolutely false. This announcement comes quickly upon the good news of the most successful W. C. T. U. convention ever held in the county in which Bar Harbor is situated. Four hundred dollars worth of liquor was spilled within twenty miles of Bar Harbor last autumn, and the largest church at Southwest Harbor witnessed the gathering of our clans. We do not charge the Bar Harbor paper with an intention to do injustice. We only say it looks like that.—F. E. W.

The Business Manager's Room.



Miss Willard's Room.

THE HOUSEHOLD

RESURRECTION.

BY H. A. DELANO.

"HOW do they come?" And by what power,
Violet, pink and passion flower?
Delicate, bright arbutus sweet,
Trailing in beauty at your feet,
How do they come?

Who prompted them? And who that said
"Awake, oh, sleepers; arise, oh, dead"?
They were not quickened had they not died—
But how did they know the fair spring-tide?
How did they know?

They had not power, they had not breath,
Impotent, passive, mute in death;
But this body of grace, this beautiful form
Came forth in triumph at spring-tide morn,
At spring-tide morn.

"Welcome," I cry; away I fling
The thought of death—its venomed sting,
No victory crowns the grave to-day,
E'en violets push the stone away,
The stone away.

"Rejoice," I cry; "a sweet hope crowns
The heart o'er which the Bastile frowns;
Love is far mightier than stones,
And heart that bleeds at last atones,
At last atones."

Evanston, Ill.

"I KNOW IN WHOM I HAVE BELIEVED."

MY DEAR CO-WORKERS:—How glad I am to be permitted to add my testimony to the value of flower mission work in the prison houses of our land. Many personal letters from the prisoners' pens have come to me bearing precious tokens of wonderful results. As the most convincing proof of the blessings which accompany and flow from this ministry of flowers, I have chosen extracts from a few of these letters, and copy them for you. Some months ago a poor convict in a far-away state penitentiary wrote to thank me for the comfort and the joy, the brightness and the pleasure which had been brought into his life through our flower mission. He dwelt touchingly upon the happiness gathered from that Prison Day's work and wondered if any of those to whom our flowers and gifts came ever acknowledged the kindness, and added: "I take the liberty of tendering my little token of grateful esteem." I need not tell you how quickly my heart responded.

I wrote to him at once that it rejoiced me greatly to be the instrument in God's hands of bringing any ray of cheer, any touch of beauty into his life, and that it was a sweet reward to hear of success in our efforts to brighten; but that there is a deeper, grander mission for which we yearn, and if I could only have read in his letter that he had been taught to "know and believe the love of God" to him, then, indeed, would we rejoice in hope of the real and eternal good God's grace had enabled us to accomplish. I will let his own words tell you the rest. He writes:

"DEAR FRIEND:—Pardon me for the liberty I take in addressing you once more, but after reading your friendly letter, and noting the solicitude for my eternal welfare pervading it, I could not deny myself the pleasure of assuring you that I have found Him on whose promises you so confidently lean, and from which you extract in all the sorrows and pains of earth such unfailing consolation.

* * * * * * *

"Permit me to thank you for the little Christian souvenir enclosed in your letter. I greatly value it, so highly, in fact, nothing could induce me to part with it. I enclose some verses written by one of my fellow prisoners, and dedicated to you which I hope will afford you pleasure. Wishing you much happiness and pleasure in all things, I remain yours in Him."

The verses are well worth reading, and I will give them to you:

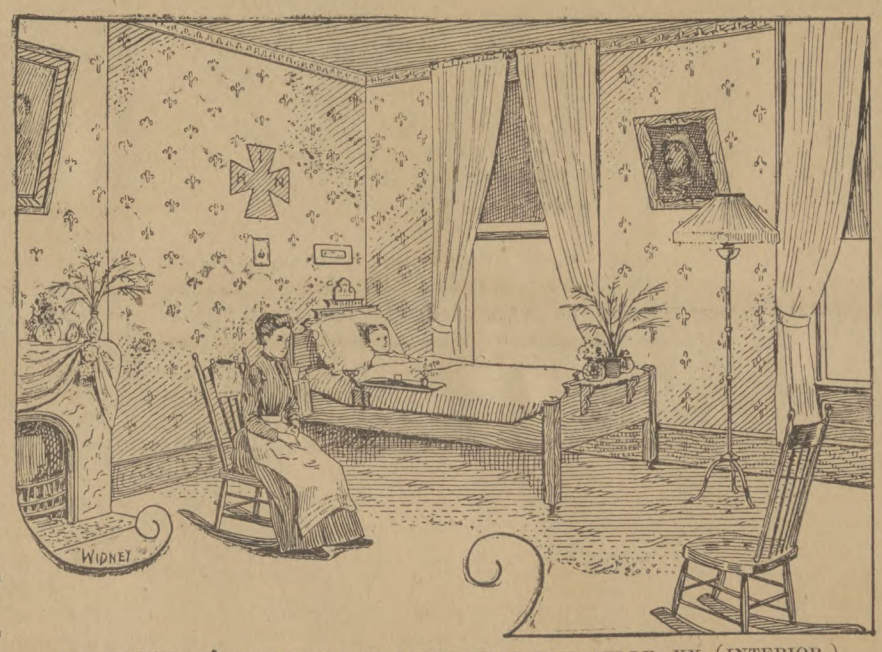
THE MASTER'S WORK.

The Master stood by His vineyard gate,
Pleading early and pleading late.
Calling for laborers all day long,
For hearts that were true, for hands that were strong,
To gather the fruit, ere night should fall:
But few would listen to the earnest call.

"Come, work in my vineyard!" the sweet voice said.
"Oh, Master! we go where the wine runs red
And cymbals clash in the festal halls.
Yet, when pleasure's taste on our senses pall
We will do Thy work—but not to-day;
The banquet waits and we must away."

"Come, work in my vineyard!" the Master cried
To a passing group; and these replied,
"We are lords of flocks and pastures fair,
That merit our time and our constant care;
Thy work is hard and we may not wait;"
And these passed on by the vineyard gate.

At His sandaled feet a woman bent,
Whose strength in a life of pain was spent,
And whose fragile form seemed unfit to bear
The winter's cold blasts or the sun's fierce glare;
"Thy servant, Master, I fain would be;
Is there no task Thou canst find for me?"



MISS CASSEDAY'S REST COTTAGE HOME NEAR LOUISVILLE, KY. (INTERIOR.)

With gentle grace on the drooping head
He laid His hand, and tenderly said:
"Daughter, hard toil is but for the strong;
Thy hands are weak, and the day will be long;
And tho' thy service I greatly prize,
The fainting flesh oft the will denies."

"Nay, Master! my strength may not be great,
But there are places desolate
In Thy wide vineyard, where e'en I,
My humble efforts might well apply.
I pray Thee, Lord, my service prove,
Nor slight this offering of my love."

With tear-dimmed eyes the Master spoke:
"So let it be; and since My yoke
Thou fain wouldst wear, be it thy part
To bear sweet solace to every heart
That sinks beneath a load of care—
Drags out its days in dark despair—
And it may chance that list'ning unto thee,
Each wayward thought shall turn once more to Me."

I wonder if I wrote you last fall of a thanksgiving present which was sent me from Jackson, Michigan? It is a picture painted for me by one of the men confined there, and represents a wine tankard and two wine-glasses. The tankard holds wild roses instead of the stuff that stingeth like an adder, and by it one of the glasses shattered beyond repair, whilst the other is filled with clear water nourishing a dainty bouquet. The other members of the Prison Missionary Society had the picture prettily framed in gilt and sent it by express. The following is from the same prison:

"MISS JENNIE CASSEDAY:—For the past three or four years I have been the recipient of a bouquet with a little card attached by a white ribbon, bearing a Scriptural text. I am serving a twenty-five years' sentence. I have been here fourteen years. It has been a long, dreary journey; there have been many cloudy days, some dark, a few very dark. Once, I remember, I came in from the shop at the close of my day's work so despondent that I knelt and asked the Lord to never permit me to see the dawn of another day. But He would not grant my request and soon after the flower mission ladies came, the cloud disappeared, and I have never seen it since.

"Miss Casseday, you have read of the great deserts of Africa and Arabia, with only here and there a fertile spot, or oasis, to welcome and give rest to the weary traveler. Do you think in all the caravans that ever traveled these deserts there could be found a single person who was not thankful for existence?

"Well, that is why I come to talk to you to-day. These visits of the flower mission have been bright oases in this desert journey, and the card I received last week on prison day brought such pleasant memories to mind and strengthened me. 'His children shall have a place of refuge.'—Proverbs 14:26.

"This brought to my recollection when I was a boy my mother hired me to a farmer for eight months. During that time nearly every Sunday I would go down home and see my little brother and sister, also my mother, and tell her all the little perplexities so common to childhood. Home was a kind of refuge."

With a communication from one about to be released, after three years' confinement, I will close this long letter. He says:

"It is my earnest desire to live the balance of my allotted time as the Lord will have me, and to spend my remaining days with those I love at home. Extending to you the well-wishes and kind regards of every member of our prison society, I remain most truly and sincerely your friend in Jesus."

I could almost fill your paper with such extracts, but these are a fair sample, and many souls are rejoicing to-day because of your labor of love for Christ's sake to those who need your Christian help. As with many of you, I have been sneered at and ridiculed about "taking flowers to jail-birds, petting convicts, etc.," but when these messages of soul-coming to Jesus reach me, how little such scoffs hurt! We "know in whom we have believed, and are persuaded that He is able to keep that which we have committed unto Him against that day." Therefore, dearly beloved, let us "not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." Most tenderly your rejoicing sister,

JENNIE CASSEDAY.

FLOWERS IN THE SLUMS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

Slum is an ugly word, and I do not call my visits to poor neighbors "slumming." It never got in the dictionary while Noah Webster lived. He was nice about his words; but it is so expressive, phonetically, that Charles Kingsley and Thackeray set the die of their usage upon it, and its face value keeps it in circulation. "Slum!" It suggests all that it means—slime and slush under foot, smoke and grime overhead; garbage in the rear, gutter in front; rumshops on the main floor, homes in the cellar and attic, with unwashed, uncombed children everywhere.

In the slums a rose is as rare as a star. Perhaps one reason the slum people are so woe-begone and wicked is that no flowers grow there. Jesus said of the lilies, "They toil not," and maybe that is why they do so much good. Real live missionaries they certainly have been for two summers past in Bethesda Mission and the surrounding neighborhood, telling of the Father's love, and that He wants to make this world cheerful and beautiful for His children.

Posies have always been coveted in hospitals—they are good nurses—and later they found their sweet way into the prison; but in so far as I know, they were first sent out to minister to free, able-bodied sinners in the notorious "first ward" of Chicago. There was no ceremony or theory about it at the start. It just happened. One day about two years ago a lady brought a generous box of flowers to THE UNION SIGNAL office and I asked for a few to put on the table at the mission that evening.

I saw they would not keep for the next night. At the close of the services as I took them from the vase, a young man, whose good-will to the mission made him feel privileged, asked for one to wear. As I gave it to him, another came up and said, "You must not be partial, Mrs. Cushman." Directly there was a crowd around the table. I had not enough to give every man one, and those who were favored looked so much happier than the others that I promised all a treat of boutonnieres at an early date. I sent notes to personal friends living near the city and so arranged for flowers that I could give them away one night in the week. The result was more than I had hoped. The hardest face would relax at the offer of a blossom, and the man become "easy to talk to."

At that time our organ was asthmatic, and the volunteer choir irregular. I had groaned within and without for money to provide music, believing it would increase the attendance and in every way strengthen the influence of the mission. To my surprise I found the flowers accomplished all I had hoped for from the music we could not afford, and I believe many men were won, by their gentle wooing, from the influences which drag down and destroy. "I want to take one to my little girl," a man would sometimes say, who wore it away on his coat; but when it became a fashion with the mission attendants no one felt it a weakness, and the lovely things were just as bright and sweet on a tattered jacket as on a broadcloth coat. Never shall I forget the appearance of a tiny waif, with the stem of a blazing red "piney" drawn through a hole in the front of his blouse, while his decoration behind was a segment of blue checked shirting floating through a large hole in his trousers. He was happy, and as oblivious as the posy itself to the fact that his attire was not all "in keeping."

"Mother always had a row of these in the garden," said a young man who bore the marks of a wanderer, as he reverently pinned a spray of sweet pea to his greasy flannel shirt. Ah, in many cases that was the power of the posy, that it wakened memories of the old home, and sometimes with those sacred recollections came repentance, sweeping the soul with its cleansing flood. I like to take a box of flowers among the men and let each pick his choice. It is interesting to hear the remarks. "My grandmother raised me, and the old lady was great for hollyhocks," one said as he gingerly lifted a flaming spike of the time-honored bloom. "Oh, may I have one of them big johnny-jump-ups? That ain't what you call 'em, but we called the little fellers that when I was a kid, and I used to talk to 'em—they kind of have faces, you know." He was a quiet young man who came to the meetings very regularly and kept his pledge faithfully. Sunflowers in their season are favorites. They are cheerful, and these men most of all crave what brings cheer into their lives. The saloon-keeper understands that element in their nature and caters to it. Whisky is the least of his interior decorations. His only custom would be that of drunkards if the chief attractions of his haunt were the drinks.

Last season we arranged for a larger floral supply, and found it of great use in parish visiting. A nosegay gave us entree to every place. Afterward tract, Scripture text and invitation to the meetings were well received.

When a surplus was left after the evening meetings I would take a box to give away on the street as I went home, and no role do I enjoy so well as that of the Nydia on South Clark street. I count it remarkable that in two years of street distribution of flowers I have but once had a blossom snatched. The sidewalks swarm with children at ten o'clock on a hot summer night, who crowd and clamor, "Teacher, give me one." They hide them in their pockets and aprons and reach empty hands for more, they lie and say they have had none, but they never set upon me to rob me as they easily could. Grown men and women ask me to "remember" them. A quaint, little old woman, with a handkerchief folded over her square shoulders, spied some nasturtiums, and cried, "Oooh! I used to haf these in my garten in Rotterdam!" and she went home with a cluster to make her dream of the garden across the sea. One night a rough man whose open shirt and bronzed and bearded breast told of life before the mast, asked most respectfully, "Ma'am, would you please give me one of these?" pointing to some gorgeous asters; "the last time I had one was in Japan." Another time, passing a couple of showily dressed girls sitting in a door, right upon the street, I offered each a little bouquet, and as I left them I heard one say, "She must be from the mission; only Christians give away flowers."

Do I think they "convert" any one? I do not know, but I believe that any bit of pure happiness brought into a life is a touch of Christ upon it. It seems to me that to give harmless pleasure "is just like Him," and that they who grow and give the lovely blossoms, together with those who receive them, have His blessing. I do know that they make the mission beloved, and many listen to the word of life who otherwise would not have come within its sound.

I receive inquiries as to the way of preparing and sending. The very first to help me in this was the Mt. Carroll, Ill., Y. One of the "girls," a sprightly grandmother approaching sixty, was experienced in sending flowers to the old flower mission in this city. She went to the express agent there and arranged to have them carried free. Then she packed the flowers lightly in paper boxes, sprinkling well, and tying the box round with plenty of string. It is well to pick the flowers in the cool of the morning, keep them with stems in water during the day and box to send by night train. They are then delivered early in the morning. This, if they have to come as far as from Mt. Carroll, which is, I think, the farthest point from which they can be successfully shipped. Nearer points can send in on morning train so they will be delivered at the mission in the afternoon of the same day. I am delighted to hear that unions in the vicinity of the city are arranging to send to us regularly. They must, in every case, secure free transportation, as we cannot pay expressage. I wish some who have not yet set a day would plan to have some reach us early Saturday. They can serve Saturday night, all day Sunday, and be given away after the Sunday night service. It would be delightful, too, to have some come Wednesday morning, to be given to the women who attend the mothers' meeting Wednesday afternoon. These women have not a spot of soil where they can plant seeds, and nothing grows in pots or boxes in the dense, smoky air of the locality in which they live. All of them have little children, some of them sick ones. If unions wishing to have their flowers given to the women will write "Mothers' Meeting" on the box they will be used there.

The boxes should be addressed, Bethesda Mission, 406 S. Clark street, Chicago. Friends, do not expect them to be acknowledged. The great flower missions employ secretaries, but Bethesda has just one "superintendent," who is maid-of-all work, and often feels literally made of all work. Please do not add this correspondence to her duties, but just put your blossoms on the train, adding your loving prayers and thoughts to their fragrance, and "after many days" you shall receive blessed return from Him who sees to it that no cup of cold water, given to the least of His, is unrewarded.

RELIGIOUS EXERCISES FOR PRISON DAY VISITATION.

BY JENNIE CASSEDAY.

1. Opening Hymn:—"Jesus, lover of my soul."
2. Prayer, closing with the Lord's Prayer repeated in unison in which ask all the prisoners to join.
3. Reading of the Scripture texts prepared by the National superintendent for this service.
4. Address to the assembled prisoners.
5. Distribution of flowers and carefully selected reading matter.
6. Singing:—Long metre Doxology by the visiting committee and prisoners.

BIBLE READING—GOD'S ABOUNDING LOVE.

BY FANNIE C. HATHAWAY.

"'Tis the gift of all most precious,
That the poorest may receive,
And it saveth to the utmost
Whosoever will believe."

Foundation Text.—The Lord . . . . is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.—II. Peter 3: 9.

What more could He do to prove to us His great love—His love for each of us? Everywhere in His blessed Word we see how from first to last He tries to get our attention to this fact, saying, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price."—Isa. 55: 1.

We can never get food out of the invitation, we must eat, and nothing can bring us to the table except a turning from sin, an abandonment of self, and loyalty to God. Then may we eat and be satisfied. Again He says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Rev. 3: 20. We have read "if any man," but have said, "It does not mean me," or "If I open the door there will be demands made upon me;" and so the unsatisfied longing has gone on because we would not heed the loving voice.

A story is told of Dr. Arnot who was in charge of a church in Glasgow. One of his parishioners was in great trouble. She could not pay her debts, could not pay her rent. The good man hearing of it hastened to her home intent on helping her. As he rapped at her door he thought he heard some one inside, but there came no response to his continued knocking. A few days after, meeting the woman he said: "I called at your home because I heard you were in trouble; I wanted to help you pay your debts."

She exclaimed, "Oh, sir, was that you? I was at home, but supposing it was the landlord to demand what I could not pay, I kept the door locked."

Thus we owe God a debt we can never pay, but in His boundless love He comes, not to demand His dues, "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved."—John 3:17. But He comes in tenderest love, asking us to receive His Son, who will pay all our debts and set us free. Shall we not unbar the door and say at once,

"I'll keep Him no more out at the door
But let the dear Saviour come in"?

The sun does not shine for a few trees and flowers, but for the wide world's joy. The lonely pine on the mountain-top waves its somber boughs and cries, "Thou art my sun!" And the little meadow violet lifts its cup of blue and whispers with its perfumed breath, "Thou art my sun!" And the grain in a thousand fields rustles in the wind, and makes answer, "Thou art my sun!" So God sits in heaven, not for a favored few, but for the universe of life: and there is no creature so poor or so low that he may not look up with childlike confidence and say, "My Father, thou art mine!"

Then when our weakness, because of sin, presses upon us we shall hear again the sure word of promise which changes the "I can't" of human weakness to the "I can" of divine strength. "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us."—Eph. 3:20. Is not that a wonderful promise? It does not matter how hopeless our case has seemed, there is hope now, for it is His power, not ours. "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do."—Phil. 2:13. Shall we not give Him possession of our wills and let Him work in us? We have not to overcome His reluctance to save us; He is trying to overcome our reluctance to be saved. We cannot measure His mercy by any human gauge.

"Kind hearts there are, but yet the tenderest one
Has limits to its mercy—God has none."

How beautifully His limitless tenderness is revealed in His own Son, giving His life for His enemies and suffering such cruelty at their hands; when one of those crucified thieves with Him acknowledged his sins and turned one look of trust toward Christ, with but a sentence of prayer, how quickly His own sufferings were forgotten, how quickly He gave answer: "To-day thou shalt be with me."—Luke 23: 42, 43.

It was mockingly said of Him at this time "He saved others, himself He cannot save."—Mark 15: 13. How much of truth these derisive words contained. He was too intent on saving each of us to save Himself suffering, cruelty or death. When we come in some measure to comprehend this great love, and that our sin pressed the thorns a little deeper into His brow, shall we not turn us about and take the gifts He offers so freely?

It is said that the king, riding by one day in his magnificent carriage, met Lord Chesterfield and remembered to have heard him spoken of as the most polite man in all England. "I will see," mused the king, and immediately ordering his carriage to stop, invited him to a seat by his side. At once Lord Chesterfield stepped in, accepting the invitation with thanks. The king told him what he had heard and said, "Now I know it is true," to which Lord Chesterfield replied, "How could I refuse the invitation of a King?"

We have invitations from the King of kings, yet we have turned our back upon Him, and hence could not understand His voice nor receive His gifts. Shall we not turn us about, and reach out the hand of faith, then shall we find our burdens lifted and our sorrow turned into joy. And in that day thou shalt say, "O Lord, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest me."—Is. 12: 1, 2.

The Union Signal AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President Board of Directors.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever.—John 14 : 16.

OUR BILL OF FARE

This week is redolent with the odors of flowers and bright with the sunshine of helping others. This is our special flower mission number, so most appropriately placed is Miss Willard's sketch of "Our White Ribbon Saint," on the inside cover page, as the very first reading matter of the paper. Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson introduces the contributed matter by an exquisite poem, "A New Mission of the Flowers"; Mrs. J. K. Barney tells a true and touching prison incident; Mrs. Mary A. Livermore demonstrates the relation of drink to crime in her description of "A Woman's Reformatory Prison"; Mrs. O. W. Scott takes us to a real almshouse in her realistic narrative, "The Last Bouquet." Our business manager, Mrs. Fanny H. Rastall, assisted by illustrations, describes the new quarters of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association in the Temple under the caption, "Our Great Arsenal." The Household department begins with a flower poem, "Resurrection," by Rev. H. A. Delano, follows with a precious letter from Miss Casseday; the wonderful influence of "Flowers in the Slums" is well set forth by Dr. Cushman, and an appropriate Bible reading, "God's Abounding Love" is prepared by Mrs. F. H. Hathaway. Mrs. Eva Kinney Griffith discourses on "The Message of the Flowers," and the children have a sweet poem, "Little Hands," by Miss Melville and a touching story, "How Bess Helped," by Dorothy Robinson. The book reviews and Temperance Temple Items will be found on page 19.

THE FLOWER MISSION.

In the early days of the white ribbon movement, when Mrs. Annie Wittenmeyer was president, many of us heard her tell a story that illustrates the flower mission better than any other single one of which we know. It was in this wise:

In a Pennsylvania town a man was tried for murder, duly convicted under the forms of law and sentenced to be hanged on an appointed day. Good men went to see him in his cell, wishing to smooth his way out of the world, and hoping that they might point him to a better; but whenever men or women stood opposite his barred and padlocked door, the same sight was before them; the barren walls, the small iron bedstead, with a burly figure seated thereon in the costume of a tramp; an old soft sombrero crushed down over the head; a stumpy corn-cob pipe between the lips; but the face turned away as far as possible, and no sign of interest or good feeling anywhere manifested. Many became discouraged by this unvarying scene. Now and then, somebody—perhaps a kind-hearted minister—would speak in this wise: "My friend, I am pastor of —— church. I came to see you from an impulse of good will, and should be glad to sit down opposite you and have a talk with you if you so please." Then the man would hold the pipe in his hand and without turning even by a hair towards his interlocutor would gruffly answer in a voice that seemed to emanate from caverns of mystery and alienation: "You've come too late; that's what's the matter with you. I dare say you voted to license the liquor with which I was crazed when I killed the man on whose account I am to die. I do not want any of your good talk; just leave me alone; that is all the charity I ask of you or anybody like you."

Sometimes a Sunday-school worker would stand before the grated cell and speak as the minister had done. The action of the prisoner was then the same, and his words varied only enough to give expression to the thought that if the Sunday-school man had come along when the condemned criminal was a little boy and taught him to leave strong drink alone it might have done him any amount of good; indeed, very likely it would have meant a happy life and freedom from darkness so deep as to be well-nigh visible.

Thus the strange criminal served out to each his answer in due proportion, until all who had thought to do him good became discouraged and went down to their houses more or less unjustified in their own minds.

At last, a woman, who had heard about the cavalier treatment he was administering to his well-wishers, determined to see what she could do for him, and with the rare delicacy and tact for which—no matter what their faults—women are famed, she went into her garden, when the dew of morning was yet upon the flowers, gathered a bunch of blue-eyed violets, and went over to the prison. By the jailer's permission, she soon stood beside the grated door. She had stepped softly along the corridor and without a word she took her place. Soon the fragrance of the flowers penetrated the cheerless cell. She could see that an impression had been made. She put her hand between the iron bars and held out the bunch of violets. The man did not witness this action, but upon his senses had sweetly stolen the fragrance of the flowers he had loved best of all in his boyhood's happy days.

She saw his breast heave, and soon a deep sigh showed that his heart was touched. He turned his unwieldy figure around, pushed back his heavy hat, and looked into the smiling, gentle and motherly face. As the woman stood there holding out the flowers, he stretched forth his hand to grasp them, put them to his lips, and then broke down with tears and sobs, saying, in his deep voice: "And so you came to bring me posies such as I gathered in the old home across the sea from mother's garden border;" and soon he wept aloud, and she cried too. And then he said, "I will do anything you ask." She knelt on one side of that solemn door, he on the other, and while she prayed with strong crying and tears, the doomed criminal poured out his soul to God, asking forgiveness for his sins.

Perhaps no kind word could have found out that inmost chamber of his soul where still lived something good and true. Perhaps no tenderest strain of music might have penetrated there, but the subtle perfume of the flowers, so unexpected that he had never defended himself against its soft intrusion, touched the springs of feeling, made entrance for the subtle, warm, interpenetrating spirit of our God, and the spell of a new love which is an heavenly, was laid upon that dark and guilty soul.

We perfectly understand that this is a strong putting of the case, but we believe its like could be recited by many flower mission women the wide world over. So innocent and sweet is the ministry of the flower-gospel that while every heart must own its sacred benefits, few could tell just when and where they have received them. The ministry of beauty is one of universal sway; all hearts confess it; and why should we not believe that the most beautiful things, and the most winsome that we have ever looked upon, have been in God's thought intended for purposes more benignant than our thoughtless hearts have known?

John B. Gough used to tell a touching incident of a little fellow who went to the hospital to die, and his kind brother who was a newsboy, was wont to come to see him on days when visitors might enter. At his last visit, the elder brother found the little one near the border line, and as he left he said to him, as he had said before: "The Saviour will be there to take you, Johnnie, just as you step over. Don't you remember in the Sunday-school they used to ask us to hold up our hands to show we wanted to belong to Him, and they said He would be sure to see us; so when you feel that the last breath is coming, hold up your hand; He will see it as He passes down the ward." In the night the little spirit slipped away, and in the morning, when the doctor went along the ward, he saw the small white hand held up against the pillow.

Incidents just as touching could be told of our flower work among children in the hospitals. They have loved the little bunch of mignonette, the pretty rosebud, the sweet, old-fashioned posies—these perhaps most of all. They have spelled out the gospel texts tied to the bouquets by the white ribbon which speaks of purity and peace. Sometimes the flowers have been found in the little cold hands, sometimes upon the breast, and the card all carefully saved under the pillows of those friendless little ones. The greatest beauty of the work is, that it makes children of grown people and gives wisdom beyond their years to little children.

That was a pretty scene beheld by some of us as we were driving along the street in a well-to-do western village—a couple of young men with their coats off, working in the flower beds that the Y's had planted, because these grand young fellows were honorary members of the society and had promised to help the girls, so that when the morning train went to the city, a few miles off, it should carry in their quota of the storehouse of God written in fragrance and bloom, to brighten the dreary cells of prisoners, the lonely pillows of those who suffered in the hospitals, the homes of the friendless and orphanages and of other little ones even worse bereft.

It is a great mission, the flower mission. The saintly womanhood of its leader, Miss Jennie Casseday, of Louisville, Ky., her tireless writing of letters dated "Sick-bed"; loving epistles always penned by her own painful and sometimes swollen hand, have carried light as far as earth's remotest bounds. We wish more young people would take up this flower mission work. It would enrich and mellow their own spirits wonderfully, and it would add beyond all telling to the sum total of that faith in human nature of which each young heart is sometimes barren and which, alas, does not very richly grow in the soil of poverty, intemperance and crime; but it is the heavenly instinct, this love towards God and love towards man, which can be planted even in the least fertile places and has not failed to yield some thirty, some sixty and some an hundred-fold.

" We heard not a sound of their marshaling feet,
Saw never a gleam of a spear,
'Till their tents stood saucily fronting each street,
And the Army of Blossoms is here."

THE NEW HOSPITALITY.

In the "long pull and strong pull, and pull altogether" that is the order of the day for those who are making honest effort to keep the transition a peaceful one, from the social chaos of to-day to the social order of the century which is about to begin, one of the most gracious functions is the new hospitality.

The spirit which found utterance in the Quaker way of calling every man friend, and in bidding the stranger welcome, is spreading abroad as never before, irrespective of the principles of any sect, ignoring the barriers of nationality, and sharing the loveliness of home. As a privilege and a contribution to the happiness of mankind, this new hospitality is distinctively a thing of the present day.

In one of the quaint, substantial farmhouses of Chester county, in Pennsylvania, in the days of the underground railway, many a fugitive slave was sheltered as he made his way from the rice swamps of the far South toward Canada. To-day the need for that exciting form of hospitality has passed away, and the two daughters of that lovely home, true to its traditions, leave their capacious barn open every night of the year, knowing that its generous mass of hay will be the bed of some wayfaring tramp. It is understood in the fraternity that there must be no smoking there, and that a square meal and a friendly word await all comers. In the face of the infamous tramp laws that disgrace the statute books of many states, the quiet hospitality of these two elderly women has guaranteed them the affectionate gratitude of a multitude of unfortunate brothers, and their lonely farmhouse is a safer dwelling every day in the year than the palace of Jay Gould.

A stately old house just out of Philadelphia, one of the many "headquarters of Washington," has been for fifty years the home of one of the examples of the new hospitality. Having no children of their own, the dwellers there adopted four little daughters, orphans, whose lot without such intervention would have been more than problematical. With means narrowly limited, entailing the utmost conscientious economy, this home was made the rendezvous of weary teachers, a place of rest and recreation for several saleswomen who regularly spent Sunday, and the fortnight of vacation in the summer, under the trees of the quaint English garden. When one of these guests said, as sometimes happened, "We have no way of returning this hospitality," the hostess would say, "If it were to be returned in kind, it would not be true hospitality, but merely barter. I am only handing on such friendliness as was shown me abroad by friends whom I can never hope to see in my home!"

The hospitality of the lovely farm homes into which city children are received by thousands every summer will never be adequately chronicled, for no human eye sees the change wrought in the mind of the little prisoners of city walls by a sojourn ever so brief in the wholesome freedom of farm life.

Very recently there has sprung into being a new manifestation of the new hospitality. This leads people of prosperous circumstances to make their homes among the working class, seeking their social life among the wage-earning majority rather than in the select circles of the prosperous.

So far the homes are few which have been founded with this intention, but each one of them is a center of such interest that it would seem probable that but a short time will elapse before large numbers of earnest young people, in determining where to pitch their tents, will seriously consider the reasons for and against this or that region of poverty. The college settlements in several cities have shown the way, living as neighbors among people whom our social maladjustments deprive of all noble social life, people for whom the saloon is the only friendly gathering place.

In the great cities where rents are such that the family must crowd into the smallest possible quarters, where the baby's crying is omnipresent through the evening, and the fatigue of the day's work leaves the father's eyes and brain too weary for reading, it is not the attraction of the drink alone which draws him to the saloon. The saloon is a gathering place which is warm and bright in winter. The saloon-keeper is always glad to see one, his welcome is not formal enough to be embarrassing, the self-interest which prompts it is not thrust obnoxiously into the foreground, and the tired man, disgusted with the discomfort of his day, drifts thither many times from sheer lack of comfort everywhere else.

Of course, after the drink habit is formed, the longing for stimulants strengthens the other attractions of the saloon. But those who have lived among the workers, even for a brief time, know how the day's work brings a keen longing for recreation with it, and that this longing cannot, as our great cities are now arranged, be satisfied anywhere else so completely, and, as it seems for the moment, so cheaply as in the saloon. It is here that the new hospitality touches the temperance question.

All this is work by substitution, giving new ideals with new associations, social life in which all the temptation is upward and none of it downward, in place of the temptations of the saloon. As a part of the do-everything policy, it is well worth careful study and adaptation, for where two or three earnest men and women settle in a given spot it is easy, with tact and good sense, to gather around them volunteers from all parts of a city, to do whatever the neighborhood may need, supplanting the saloons with wholesome entertainment, gradually building up reading room, library, coffee house, night school, university extension, clubs of all helpful sorts, along with the simpler but no less valuable home hospitality of daily life.

GENERAL BIDWELL OF CALIFORNIA.

We have not shunned to declare the faith that was in us as to the course that should be taken by reformers in the campaign of 1892. We believe and always shall, that if half a dozen or more leaders of the Prohibition and the People's party could agree on a candidate for president it would be the wise and helpful thing that would in the largest way serve the best interests of everybody in this country.

While we did not succeed in seeing eye to eye concerning the platform, we believe it would be possible for us to agree on the same ticket, and we are in possession of information from leaders in the old parties who admit that nothing would strike such a blow to their hopes as precisely this outcome of our own. But we are loyal and shall stand heartily with "our own folks" in whatever they may determine at Cincinnati. If they should make a nomination and then appoint a committee of trusty leaders who should be empowered to indorse the man nominated in Omaha, whoever he may be, in case he proves to be a thorough-going adherent of our cause, it seems to us that would be the next strategic move. We know this view is shared by very many of the best in our leadership as well as in the rank and file. We know it is shared by General Bidwell, of California, who is one of the noblest and best men America has produced, and who is being prominently spoken of as the candidate of the Prohibition party. We have taken occasion elsewhere to name him with Col. Geo. W. Bain, of Kentucky, as candidates especially desirable in case our chief leader, Ex-Governor St. John, should decline the use of his name, which we are told on good authority he is certain to do.

General Bidwell was born in Chautauqua county, New York, was bred in the state of Ohio, walked three hundred miles from the little village where his home was situated to Kingston, near Lake Erie, when he was about fourteen years of age, seeking a school where his quenchless thirst for knowledge might find its natural satisfaction. He was an insatiable student, soon learned Kirkham's Grammar by heart along with many other excellent treatises, and before he was fifteen applied for a position as teacher. As he was a tall, vigorous youth, and had a thorough knowledge of the branches taught, he secured a school and was for some years both teacher and student. Desiring to be a good penman, he paid a visit to Platt Spencer, the famous author of the Spencerian system, and worked for him while he learned some of the graces of chirography.

Later on Mr. Bidwell journeyed to Missouri, and having saved a thousand dollars entered a claim, after which he went to St. Louis to get books that he might go on with his self-education. In his absence an unprincipled man whom, in his generosity of nature, he had allowed to put a log house on one corner of his claim, "jumped" it, as the saying is, so that Mr. Bidwell lost his thousand dollars and everything he had in the world. But, happily, he did not lose his faith in God, man, or himself. He now moved on to California, being not a "Forty-niner," but a pioneer from the year 1841. Here he worked and studied, and during the war was made by Governor Stanford, the famous founder of the university, a general of militia to help guard the state from revolt during the civil war. He also commanded many United States soldiers, and distinguished himself as a military leader. The story of California has been written up by General Bidwell in The Century magazine, and is a most readable contribution. After the war he went to Congress, where he met Miss Kennedy (the daughter of J. G. Kennedy, superintendent of the seventh and eighth censuses of the United States), a charming young woman, much his junior, who, like himself, was born and reared a total abstainer, and who is large-brained as well as large-hearted, sympathizing with every true progressive movement. They were married in 1868.

The General owns the largest cultivated ranch in California, 25,000 acres. Here he many years ago began to raise grapes, thinking to furnish a pure, unfermented wine, but seeing the evil effects of this attempt, and that it could not honorably be carried out, he had all his grape vines rooted up, and left the business altogether. The General was the Prohibition party's candidate for governor of California two years ago, and polled ten thousand votes, the largest number ever concentrated around any one man in the annals of temperance in that state. He sympathizes warmly with the labor movement, and would prefer, above all things, that the two great camps should have the greatness to unite and, under some name of wider significance than heretofore, march on to victory. Concerning this and concerning our noble California brother "we shall see what we shall see."

THE Michigan W. C. T. U. convention had the most complete program on record. We are sending it out broadcast. What wasn't remembered isn't worth knowing, but what was is vital to our best achievement. Mrs. Lathrap's annual address was a statesmanlike document, of which extracts will be given in THE UNION SIGNAL. Mrs. Emma C. Wheeler, for many years corresponding secretary of the state union, resigned on account of a change of residence. She and her family will hereafter live in Paris, Canada, and we cannot do our friends across the border a better turn than to tell them her new address right early. Beautiful testimonials were given to this true lady and rare first mate of the Michigan life-boat. Mrs. Julia Parrish, whose name our readers know, was chosen her successor. Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker, of Brooklyn, presented the suffrage cause, Mrs. Lathrap first reading the following resolution:

Resolved, That the delegates of the eighteenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Michigan, having become convinced that the ballot in the hands of woman is her best weapon of protection and will most surely overthrow the liquor traffic in this country, hereby earnestly declare our sympathy with the national movement for obtaining federal suffrage, and we will, so far as practicable, sign and circulate the following petition:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress Assembled:

WHEREAS, The right to vote for members of the House of Representatives is by the Constitution of the United States vested in the people of the United States, without condition, limitation or restriction, and women are people—therefore, we as citizens of the United States respectfully request your honorable bodies to pass a bill enabling women citizens of the United States to vote for members of the House of Representatives.

This was adopted by the nearly three hundred delegates without a dissenting voice.

Greece has the violet; England the red rose; Wales, the leek; Scotland, the thistle; Ireland, the shamrock; France, the lily; Prussia, the linden; Saxony, the mignonette, and Canada, the sugar maple. There is a movement in this country to have for our national flower the corn plant. The golden rod has been much talked of, but there are no wiser heads than are now setting forth the superior significance of the corn plant or maize as our national emblem.

***

"I was oblivious of the crowd surging past me," writes Joseph Cook, "in the windy, cool, May afternoon sunshine, near one of the great towers of the Brooklyn bridge, as I read the account of the temperance meeting held in my home in Boston, published in THE UNION SIGNAL. The goddess of liberty was lifting her arm against a bright western sky, and her form and alert attitude were particularly effective. The enthusiasm of the article was so contagious that I looked to see if the goddess herself did not wear a white ribbon. She will in due time!"

***

At the recent meeting of the executive committee of the Women's National Council at the Palmer House, after efforts had been made for some hours to secure a fire in the parlor where the meeting was held, an attendant came to the door when the women were all deeply engaged in deliberations (each one being fitted out with a heavy shawl or cloak), and asked if they wanted a fire. Miss Anthony replied in her decisive tones, and it was laughingly remarked by the women they believed she had never used the words before: "No; we have given that up."

***

A great historic saying, attributed to Wesley, is, "Our people die well." This has been true of many of his followers, for being followers of the "Lamb," they died in holy triumph and exalted faith. But now, new signs are dawning that "our people," yea, many of all Christian people, are learning to live well. "No man liveth to himself." We are finding out at last that Jesus came not only to teach men to die well, but to live well. The late, but sure-come revival in social studies based on the Golden Rule presages that Christ's church is more mindful than ever before that the greatest question of the Master to each one of us is this: "Can I suffice for death and not for life?"

***

Mrs. Lucinda Stone, of Michigan, perhaps its leading pioneer on the woman question, mentions that her daughter was the first woman to enter the great Michigan University, and that she was shunned as one who was trying to get out of her sphere, so much so, that although she eventually graduated with high honors, at the closing reception but one lady, the wife of President Angell (and a grand woman she is), spoke to the young collegian at all. Times have changed. Four thousand young women are now in the colleges of the country, and their acquaintance and friendship is esteemed an honor by all persons who are in their right minds.

***

Mrs. Micajah Dyer, of Boston, made a bright speech before the Federation Clubs in which she said that she presided over a society of women numbering 1,200, who, on one day, voted overwhelmingly in favor of a certain measure, and on the next morning, after several speeches had been made, changed their minds and went almost solidly the other way. She was speaking of this to a gentleman connected with public life and he said: "Console yourself, my friend; men do just so. The explanation probably is, that they had not made up their minds, but only, as Charles Dickens puts it, 'what they were pleased to call their minds.'" Mrs. Dyer also told a suggestive anecdote to the following purport: "When she was a little child, her mother was teaching her how to sweep, and observing her mistakes, said: 'Do not stand in the way of your broom; you are sweeping the dirt towards yourself; keep behind it and give the broom free scope.' All through life," said the bright Bostonian, "I have had occasion to apply my mother's words, for I have often seen myself and other women standing exactly in the way of their brooms." ON DUTY.

THE MESSAGE OF THE FLOWERS.

BY EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH.

Why is the world so full of flowers? Why do daisies peep from the hedges, dandelions spring from the roadside, buttercups bloom in the meadows, cowslips glow on the marshes, and lilies float on the lakelet, with their faces upturned to the passing world of men? Have they not some message to tell from the Father who creates and loves us all? George Macdonald has said: "A flower comes from the same heart as man himself, and is sent to be his companion and minister. There is something divinely magical, because profoundly human, in them. In some, at least, the human is plain; we see a face of childlike peace and confidence that appeals to our best. Our feeling for some of them doubtless owes something to childish associations; but how did they get their hold of our childhood? Why did they enter our souls at all? They are joyous, inarticulate children, come with vague messages from the Father of all. If I confess that what they say sometimes makes me weep, how can I call my feeling for them anything but love?

Who has not been touched at some time of his life at the sight of a cluster of roses crowded close together as if they were caressing each other! Surely the first message the flowers bring is a message of kindness to one another, and the lesson they would teach is that of dwelling together in loving companionship. The flowers never quarrel or fight. However closely they are crowded together they are always at peace. They are not jealous of each other's beauty or fragrance; but each one looks its best in its own place and all together make the meadow or garden beautiful.

The flowers speak of the Father's love. Note how delicately each petal is fashioned. Some are round, some are pointed, some are single and some double, but all are beautifully made after an invisible pattern kept in the Father's heart, the little dots and faint lines to be found on some flowers and the rich or delicate tints of others which no artist's brush or pencil can imitate in their perfectness. Must not the Father love the world to make such exquisite things to beautify and adorn it?

They speak of the Father's tenderness. The flowers are not afraid to bloom all alone in the dark woods far away from the homes of men. They are not afraid to blossom on the edge of a wild and lonely crag. They know the loving Father who called them into being will not allow them to suffer any pain or misfortune that is not best for them and the world of which they are a part. Sometimes a flower falls to the ground and is crushed by the foot of a passer-by. Does it cry out with indignation? Oh, no, it just fills the air with fragrance. So we, when we are wronged, should not seek for revenge, but rather give back some of Heaven's sweet fragrance of forgiveness.

The flowers also teach us faith. They are so small, so slender, and weak. They cannot protect themselves from the fierce storms that sweep over the earth, nor from the worm that gnaws at their roots. Sometimes a hard rain batters them down, a strong wind breaks their frail stems or scatters their petals on the ground; but they do not falter because these dangers may come to them; they just fulfill the mission of their little lives—to make the world cheery with their presence, and leave all the rest to the Father.

Sometimes they meet with hindrances. The ground is too hard, or too dry, the sun is too hot, or a big stone or stick lies in their path, but they keep right on blossoming as well as they can, trying to make the world a little more beautiful than it would be without them, even if they cannot be as beautiful as they would.

Particular flowers have a special message for us. There are the pond lilies coming up out of the mud and slime of shallow and sometimes stagnant water. Who would look for beauty in such a place? Yet from the mud and slime around them they gather the very sustenance which in them is transformed into such exquisite loveliness. So the brave, sweet, hopeful heart that is filled with Christ's love may live a beautiful life amid the darkest and most unwelcome surroundings.

Flowers always turn toward the light. Place them in a dark cellar where there is but one little window and they will all reach eagerly out toward it. The sun gives them their life and beauty, so they turn their faces up to it and smile back its warmth and light. Christ is the light of the world. His love is the life of the soul. We should ever turn our hearts toward Him with the same love and trust that the flowers give. You cannot cage an eagle by building a high wall around him. As long as the top is open he can always fly away. You cannot imprison a soul by shutting a man away from the world. As long as his heart is open to God's love the soul may fly upward and be at rest in the arms of the Almighty.

The message of the flowers is for you, dear heart, it is a message of love, joy and forgiveness from our Father in heaven. Accept it, and you will be at peace.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

The ink was scarcely dry on my last letter before material came to me for another, Erie county being the first to send a budget. Their March convention was held at East Aurora. The absence of the faithful corresponding secretary was felt by all, and she received their hearty sympathy, being still shut in by injuries received while on her way home from a previous convention. The local unions reported growth and enthusiasm, which was encouraging. A cordial welcome greeted the convention, and words of cheer were spoken by fraternal delegates and pastors of the churches.

Physical culture, under the direction of Mrs. J. O. Bennett, is receiving special attention, and the county president says, "This is a right step in the right direction, for anything which strengthens and develops us physically will develop us mentally and spiritually," and the people say AMEN. Dr. Sarah Morris, of Buffalo, gave what might be called a prelude to the evening address, and in earnest, heartfelt words endeavored to stimulate the young to still greater usefulness. The evening address, by Mrs. Nettie Beach, of Tonawanda, one of Erie county's own workers, was all that could be desired, and beyond criticism.

A consecration service held the second day was conducted by Mrs. Staley, and was indeed a wonderful service. Miss Blanche Heazlitt, of Chicago, was present during the convention and added to the general interest by timely remarks. Music and recitations gave variety to the program, each one doing his best. A kind friend presented the county with bannerettes, which made it seem "quite like a state convention." The gathering, as a whole, was more than satisfactory.

Schenectady county met in the Y. W. C. A. rooms in Schenectady not long ago, and the program was a most excellent one. A full delegation was present, and under the able management of the president, the business was dispatched with promptness and ability. Cheer came to them through the words of one of the church pastors, whose heart was full of God and the right. Excellent resolutions were adopted, the county being solidly arrayed against the Excise Bill of the liquor dealers' association, against the social evil, and against opening the World's Fair on the Sabbath. Thirteen departments are taken up in the county and good work done in them all. Two encouraging features mentioned were, the number of children present during the children's hour, and the attention and interest of the local press in sending reporters to the meetings and in the reports given. A Demorest medal contest, a question-box and a parliamentary drill all gave excellent satisfaction.

Herkimer county sends a report of a convention held at Little Falls, recently. There are ten unions in the county with a membership of two hundred and eighty. Twenty-five responded to roll-call. Treasurer's report showed a good fund on hand, and the outlook for the coming days is encouraging. Progress has been made during the past year and broader fields are in view. A male quartette furnished fine music at the evening meeting, which was followed by an address from Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., our state vice-president. The Good Templars attended this meeting in a body, and the large audience present gave most marked and gratifying attention to the speaker, whose earnest words carried conviction with them. A letter of greeting and God-speed was read from the Herkimer county grange, and after other business was disposed of the convention adjourned.

Orange county held its semi-annual convention this spring, at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. The pleasant Presbyterian church never seemed more sunny and homelike than when Mrs. Pope, in words graceful and tender, bade them "welcome to the hearts and homes of Cornwall." A workers' conference was held each day, conducted by the president, Mrs. Washington, and proved most helpful. The devotional hours were marked by deep interest. Excellent papers were read by several of the county superintendents. Mrs. Dr. Van Etten, of Port Jervis, favored the convention with a scholarly paper on "Heredity." Miss E. W. Greenwood was the evening speaker and completely carried the audience by her eloquent presentation of the subject, "The Home and Temperance." The corresponding secretary, Miss Shafer, says: "There were many other 'good things' said and done but the limits of your space in THE UNION SIGNAL forbid their being told." This happens with every convention, but the good things are not lost, by any means. They are treasured in many hearts.

"I shot an arrow into the air
It fell to earth I knew not where.

* * * * * * * *

"I breathed a song into the air
It fell to earth I knew not where.

* * * * * * * *

"Long, long afterward in an oak
I found the arrow still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end
I found again in the heart of a friend."

RED-LETTER DAY.

The W. C. T. U., No. 2, of Buffalo, endeavored to make the red-letter day a day of prayer and praise by announcing a public service at the People's Congregational church in the afternoon. Notices were prepared and sent to the papers, also an article explaining the nature and purpose of the day. A number of earnest, faithful workers and friends whose sympathy was in the work, gathered at the church, and led by the president, Mrs. Danforth, held a very pleasant and profitable meeting. They feel certain of good results in the future as the outcome. A resolution was adopted that the body of evangelical churches of Buffalo should protest against the opening of the World's Fair on the Sabbath, and against the sale of intoxicants there at all times.

EXPERIENCE MEETING.

King's county held such a meeting this spring, each woman bringing fifty cents and telling how it was earned. The amount raised was twenty-two dollars, and various were the experiences. These meetings are being held in many places in our state with excellent results, and women are learning the value of giving as never before, and as the money is to be earned—not simply given,—new lessons are being learned through the work done; King's county commends these meetings and the labors that attend them.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE AND NO-LICENSE.

The Silver Lake quartette did a week's work in Lockport during a no-license campaign, and night after night Music Hall was crowded to the doors. They came through the efforts of the Prohibition club, and did excellent work. While no-license did not win the day, yet the meetings did much good in an educational way.

Mrs. Emily Underhill Burgess, of Ulster county, has just completed a tour of Niagara county—speaking every evening, and visiting almost every union in the county. She has stirred up the workers to renewed energy, and will not soon be forgotten by the people of the county.

The semi-annual convention of Cayuga county met at Auburn in the Second Baptist church, on the 12th, 13th, 14th of April. It was conceded by all present to have been by far the most profitable and successful meeting of the kind ever held in the county. Mrs. Weaver, our state superintendent of evangelistic work, was present during the entire time, opening the convention on the first evening with an address, and speaking on various subjects during the two following days. She also presided over the question-box and conducted the Bible readings.

Excellent papers were read on the following subjects: "A Vital Question," "Physical Culture," "Fair Work," and "If we saved the children to-day, we shall have saved the nation to-morrow." The last received especial mention as being worthy of publication. The pastor of the church in which the meeting was held was present. Several from other parts of the county also were there. A Demorest medal contest was held the second evening. Reports of state and National conventions were given and a report of work at Auburn coffee house. New unions have been organized, and one old one partly revived by the county missionary. The L. T. L. gave an excellent entertainment, and on the whole Cayuga county may well feel gratified with the success of this convention.

FRANCES W. GRAHAM,
State Reporter, Lockport.

REV. SAMUEL WELLS POWELL died at Chester Centre, Mass., May 7, aged 54. He was an active Prohibitionist and a man of letters, eminent for his studies in ancient history, and his loss is a great one.

MAINE.

THE PROHIBITION CONVENTION AND OTHER NOTES.

The topmost branches of our pine trees are already beginning to catch the breezes which foretell next autumn's political tempests in state and nation. This year the Prohibition party was the first to throw down the gauntlet, holding its state convention at Bangor on May 5th. Bangor was certainly a most appropriate place for the holding of a temperance convention, for it is the home of the chairman of the state committee, Volney B. Cushing and also of Representative Boutelle, the author of that famous "cordial sympathy" resolution so adroitly appended to the last national Republican platform that it proved satisfactory to the widely differing elements of the party from its ministers to its maltsters.

Surrounded by the stars and stripes, the following mottoes were conspicuous on the walls of the city hall in which the convention met: "No protection or free trade for the liquor traffic," "Twin robbers—the saloon and monopoly," "The people need more money and less rum." One hundred and seventy-six delegates were reported in attendance. The nominee for governor, Timothy B. Hussey, in accepting the candidacy, remarked that he had been asked to stand for the making of a furrow which should turn the liquor curse so deep that it would never come up again. (Mr. Hussey is one of the leading plow manufacturers of New England.) As a friend, he has been long connected with a church which has stood for temperance and has always accorded equal privileges to its noble men and women. Naturally, he is in touch with the best thought of the age, and should he secure a sufficient number of votes, another worthy name would be added to the already long list of Maine's excellent governors.

The platform adopted gives the lie to the statement sometimes made that temperance men are people of one idea. Starting out with the declaration that legal prohibition of the liquor traffic is sound in principle, practical in application and beneficial in results, and recognizing that while our state has derived substantial good therefrom, all possible benefits have not been realized because the dominant parties are allied to national organizations which are subservient to the liquor power, they demand that "the manufacture, importation, exportation and interstate transportation of intoxicating beverages be suppressed by state and national law, thoroughly enforced by officers in sympathy therewith." The platform then considers in a most sensible and "uncranklike" way the financial and other issues now before the people, such as tariff reform, strict enforcement of civil service law, restriction of immigration, rights of the working classes, etc., and ends with the following, which was adopted without a dissenting vote:

We favor the proposed amendment to the constitution of Maine to be voted on in the September election, which provides that new voters shall be able to read the constitution of the state in the English language and write their names, unless prevented from so doing by a physical disability; and we favor suffrage for the women of Maine on the same terms.

It is perhaps a happy omen that the party which was the first in Maine to declare for the Australian ballot should also lead the van on the suffrage question. In the evening a crowded house listened to an eloquent address by Rev. Dr. Miner, of Boston.

Though the Maine spoke is at a considerable distance from the hub of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, it tries to keep its evolutions as nearly as possible in time with those at Chicago. For a long time the headquarters of the state and also of the Portland union have been at 51½ Exchange street, in rented rooms, but hardly had the National established itself in the beautiful Temple when our state set up housekeeping under its own vine and fig tree at 150 Free street, while the Portland union will hereafter hold its meetings in the building where it carries on its day nursery and free kindergarten.

THE UNION SIGNAL has manifested such an interest in coffee houses that it may not be amiss to refer to a kindred enterprise of one of our brightest and most active unions, the W. C. T. U. boarding house at Bath. Their local press superintendent writes: "This house was opened in the spring of 1883 for the purpose of having a boarding house run on a Christian temperance principle. A matron was employed and the house furnished, with the aid of the temperance people in the city, one rich man giving $200 towards it. In the front of the house are double parlors which at that time were used as our headquarters and a free reading room, but is now given up to the Y's for their use. The double parlors are very prettily furnished, and we have a piano. The house is pleasantly located on high land, and the view of the city and the surrounding country is very attractive. It has been well patronized. At present Mrs. H. B. Jordan, from Bar Harbor, is matron; she is a thorough temperance worker, as well as a competent cook and housekeeper. We have heard from people living outside the city that they were glad their boys could find a pleasant home with no temptations to drink before them. The second and third floors are for boarders, and in the busy part of the year are filled. One local paper contained an item about the opening of the house and closed it with, 'I am sorry for you, ladies, but you can't make it pay.' But even editors are fallible."

The W. C. T. U. at Mechanic Falls has been wonderfully successful in its Sunday night union gospel temperance meetings. The last held at the Baptist church consisted of fine music, readings, remarks by pastors and high school teachers. For three years the Auburn union has employed one of its members as a social purity worker, paying her $400 each year, an arrangement being made whereby her home should be open to any young woman coming as a stranger to the city, or needing temporary shelter or advice. It was found that in order to close the year in good financial condition a little more money was needed, and each member was asked to try to earn a dollar for the cause. In this a goodly number was successful. A supper and entertainment were given, the latter consisting of music and the experiences of the ladies in earning their money. While the participants were not as illustrious as those at Evanston, the experiences were quite as thrilling and humorous. Most of the dollars were earned in small sums, a few cents at a time. The proceeds of the evening amounted to about forty-seven dollars.

Our department of systematic giving is making progress under the direction of Mrs. Anna Hussey. Many counties and local unions have adopted the department and are doing good work. Literature has been freely circulated: attention is now directed to securing sermons and addresses on the subject, and the teaching of Scripture in reference to Christian giving is claiming the attention of our thoughtful women as never before.

MARY L. FRENCH,
State Reporter, Auburn.

NEW MEXICO NEWS.

It has been months since our Territory has been heard from—but we know that, probably, when the world knows not. The reports from unions are most difficult to secure, but our president has graciously taken the burden upon herself and sent, for all the locals, her own report which I take pleasure in embodying herewith:

"I have not forgotten my promise to write you an account of the W. C. T. U. in New Mexico. I have visited several places and find the faithful ones still at the post of duty. Albuquerque W. C. T. U. held its annual meeting a month ago; it was largely attended and unusually interesting. Some new officers were elected while the greater number of superintendents were continued. Several new members have been added and the union is now considering the question of opening a coffee room; they will no doubt do so, providing a good location can be secured. Las Vegas W. C. T. U. has for several months held monthly parlor meetings which have been well attended, interesting many 'outsiders' in the work and proving a source of instruction to the members. The reading room is still maintained, the Chinese school well sustained, and although the union there has lost several members by removal the work still goes on. A Demorest contest was recently held, the competitors being pupils from the three schools; it was well attended and a success in every way.

"Blossburg union has done good, practical work with the children and in having the saloons closed on the Sabbath. Cerrillos is also doing good work in that little mining town. The L. T. L. has the promise of good results in the future. Raton and Socorro have had hard battles for existence on account of removals, but the work is held together with a hope that 'it will be better further on.' Roswell has not rallied from the shock of its officers all moving away, the transitory communities being the most discouraging feature of frontier effort, yet they must carry with them the impulse to teach others whithersoever they wander, hence the continued effort out West of constant reorganizing.

"I have not heard from Chama, Eddy or Las Cruces. Silver City and Santa Fe workers are still in the harness holding the fort and drilling the children for the conflict surely approaching. I recently visited the beautiful and picturesque mountain mining town of Kingston, thirty-two miles from the railroad. We held four meetings there and organized a union of forty-five members, half of whom are honoraries. Mrs. William Harris is president, while our loyal white-ribboner, Mrs. W. E. Marble, has marshaled into line the L. T. L. She has for some time been preparing the soil there 'for such a time as this.' They already have in operation a W. C. T. U. reading-room.

"I also made a like visit to Springer, held a public meeting and organized a promising union with ten members and two honoraries. I feel that they will do good and lasting work, as they have for some time been anxious to form an organization. Mrs. Lulu B. Hyde is president, Mrs. C. T. Jones, vice-president, Mrs. Kittie Hosmer, secretary, Mrs. Minnie Hories, treasurer. The secretary, Mrs. Hosmer, is editor of The Springer Banner, which will give hearty support to the W. C. T. U. They are also doing splendid work in Gallup, by 'resolutions, protests and petitions,' and have acquainted the country with the fact that there is a W. C. T. U. in the town of Gallup.

"For many reasons—financial, political and otherwise—the work in the Territory has not progressed as I would like to see it, but the near future seems more promising and we shall move with the tide. Mrs. Flora Burlingame has been recently appointed territorial superintendent of juvenile work and we hope to see this department given a new lease of life, for the hope of this country lies in the children. The annual meeting will be held, probably, in Las Vegas, the last week in August. The territorial treasurer is in Chicago for the summer. The territorial superintendent of jail and prison work is in Nebraska. The franchise superintendent is in Philadelphia and has been for months with her children in school there. It will readily be seen when workers are few, losses, even temporarily, are felt immediately and keenly.

"I am exceedingly anxious that the L. T. L's of New Mexico shall each give an entertainment for the benefit of the Temple, and I shall urge the superintendents to move in that direction. Mrs. Carse sent me a fac simile of the Temple inkstand design and it is certainly beautiful. I cannot tell you how I prize it. It is gratifying at last to see our western women rising to the situation and determined to aid in this central home building, now so nearly complete. We are veins to the artery of our cause and we realize the artery must not dwindle. The fountain-head of materialization of our ideas and spirit is in the central Temple and all women ought to aid the rising. They will when once they grasp the outreaching possibilities," Poor New Mexico will be on hand with her proportion in due season.

"We shall keep an eye open for the statehood convention and be on the ground with a good, strong suffrage plank for the lords of creation to consider. The suffrage question could profitably be discussed oftener in the societies, but as yet it has received only indifference. But the time cometh when all women will see, even though exasperatingly blind nowadays to their own interests.

"There is a plan to organize a Prohibition party at the fair this fall. A local organization will be formed in Las Vegas very soon. At present the World's Fair work is engaging the attention of the women and we feel sure that the best interests of New Mexico will be cared for, as women are doing so much patriotic work the country over."

ADA MORLEY JARRETT,
Territorial Reporter, Albuquerque.

EASTERN WASHINGTON.

CONTESTS AND CONFERENCES.

The brave little union at Tyler has recently held a silver medal contest at the Lance Hills schoolhouse. Twelve children also recited in the smaller class for a special prize. The workers at Tyler have made it a custom to solicit a fund for a silver cup as a prize for the class too young to compete for the Demorest medals. The parents select the recitations. This time the prize was a napkin ring, won by little Miss Corbett. The collection at the Lance Hills contest will be used to purchase the prize for this class at the next contest. The audience was large and the people were interested. Mrs. Moore intends holding the contests in both classes (and perhaps unite the Tyler and Lance Hills class) till a gold medal can be won. The Tyler people are rejoicing over the conversion of several drinking men, the result of the meetings held there this winter by the Free Methodist and Methodist Episcopal churches.

At the ministerial district conference held in Cheney last month, Rev. Selleck, of Sprague, preached a prohibition sermon of great power. The Cheney union is lamenting over the lecture of Dr. Kate Mitchell that they did not hear, as the good doctor failed to arrive. The Kate Bushnell union at Spokane is rejoicing over the series of meetings held under their auspices by Joe Hess. He is reported as being "a fine speaker, fearless in his denunciations of cowardly Christians, solid in the religious and prohibition faith." Mrs. Buck, the president, writes, "I wish we could employ him a month." Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox, of Oregon, National organizer, has been in Klickitat county for a few days. At Columbus eleven members were added to the union and sixteen to the L. T. L.

The Goldendale union is jubilant. Mrs. Bowers reports five new members added to the Centerville union. At Goldendale one hundred and three signed the pledge the first evening Mrs. Cox spoke, and many more the second night. She stirred up the moral element, and the election, at which the issue was "License versus no saloons," was a complete victory for the Prohibitionists.

Walla Walla reports thirteen in attendance at a regular meeting on a recent very stormy day. The gospel temperance meetings are kept up on Sunday afternoons. Miss Amy Richards, of the Walla Walla public schools, delivered an excellent address at the Sunday meeting two weeks ago.

From Latah comes the report that the newly elected city officers are all anti-saloon men. The W. C. T. U. and Prohibition club are flourishing. The Whitman county convention held in Colfax was an enthusiastic one. Resolutions on all the leading issues of our work were passed. The officers were all re-elected. Mrs. H. H. Chatham, president of Pullman union, was elected delegate-at-large to the state convention. A resolution was passed which requested the ministers of all the churches in the county to take up a collection for the Russian famine sufferers.

A county W. C. T. U. picnic will be held at Garfield in July. Mrs. Cox is to speak at Colton, Pullman, Guy, Paloure and Oakdale soon. Mrs. S. E. Potter was made superintendent of World's Petition.

LUCY A. SWITZER,
State Reporter, Cheney.

FLORIDA.

THE NEW SOMERSET PARK.

While the soft buds are bursting into bloom, and all nature is being arrayed in emerald robes in your northern clime, we of the Sunny South have long been in the full flush of summer beauty; harvests of golden fruit have been reaped, and now comes the watching and waiting for good things to come.

Since our state convention in March, we have been very busy devising ways and means for carrying on our work in the peninsular state.

We fully realize that we are a long way from National Headquarters where there is "music in the air," and the tramp of many feet is heard, as the clans gather for council or for war. Nevertheless, we would keep within hailing distance of the great white ribbon host, but in order to do this we must move, and this implies life, and consequently growth.

In the interests of our state work we have devised a plan which seems feasible and in itself desirable. Through the kindness of citizens, we have secured a gift of lands contiguous to, and a part of, one of the prettiest and healthiest towns in middle Florida, midway between Jacksonville and Tampa, on the A. & W. R. R., a spur of the great J. T. & K. W. system and only one hour's ride from the waters of the broad Atlantic. Here we will build our state headquarters and also a winter assembly and school of methods. The land will be platted and sold in suitable lots to our white-ribboners and friends of the cause, who desire a home where even in mid-winter they can walk or ride in the open air with the greatest comfort, and where the novelty of a "winter encampment" will prove a most desirable attraction. The completion of this plan has occupied nearly all of our time since the convention at Winter Park, yet we feel that it has been time well spent.

We have decided to call our assembly grounds "Somerset Park," and, dear sisters of the ribbon white, if there is "anything in a name" we surely must succeed in our new enterprise. The park is located at Lake Helen, Fla., near a beautiful, clear water spring lake (in which are fish waiting to be caught for the white-ribboners' table), and among the high rolling pines, whose resinous odor gives the promise of healthfulness so eagerly sought by many visitors and tourists each year. Lake Helen has been long and favorably known as a health resort; it has two fine hotels with all modern conveniences, besides many cottages and elegant residences. This assembly ground can be made a very beautiful place, and we feel that we can give a hearty welcome to any who come south during the inclement season. Here they will find comrades and friends, here they can secure a delightful home at less expense than would at first be thought possible, amid these congenial surroundings. Those who wish to avail themselves of this good opportunity can make suitable arrangements, and on the installment plan, if desired.

Our state union has been duly incorporated, and the prospect is encouraging for more aggressive work; many of the state superintendents are fully alive to the necessity of action; a new and flourishing union at Lake Helen is the first fruits, and we confidently await the better things "farther on," while "we labor and wait" "In His Name."

E. A. HILL, Orange City.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A NEW union of twenty-nine members at Lake City is reported by Colorado's president.

MRS. MITCHELL, Idaho's organizer, is doing faithful work in the northern part of the state.

REV. HENRIETTA G. MOORE wishes it announced that all calls for her services should be sent to her at Springfield, O.

NEVADA white-ribboners are moving. Reno has had four successful Demorest medal contests. Rev. C. H. Gardner and Mrs. Eva Gardner, with their helpers, have been doing noble work in Mason Valley. Elko has a large and enthusiastic Y. W. C. T. U.

THE Prohibition party of Colorado has nominated Prof. Henry Gordon, of Trinidad (our Anna's brother), for superintendent of public instruction.

THE back numbers of your temperance and Christian papers are requested for Kansas missionary work, by the American Sunday-school Union, Burlington, Kan.

MISS ELIZABETH U. YATES recently appointed National lecturer of the franchise department, is having a very successful lecture trip in Pennsylvania and New York.

THE union at Greenville, Me., is only one year old but has an active membership of thirty-five and fifteen honoraries. They have a flourishing L. T. L. of fifty members.

THE Somerset county, New Jersey, W. C. T. U. at a school of methods, recently passed a resolution not to use compressed yeast, which is made from the fermenting principle of beer.

MRS. MOLLIE MCGEE SNELL gave the annual sermon before the Mississippi W. C. T. U. convention last month and invitations come to her to hold revival meetings all over the state.

THE Ontario W. C. T. U. are stirring workers as witnessed by their anti-narcotic petition and circulars, copies of which may be had by addressing Mrs. Edwin Cole, Carleton Place, Ont.

DURING 100 days in California, Dr. Mary Wood Allen has spoken fifty-five times. At a recent district convention in Colorado, she won many hearts by her wonderful presentation of the subject of social purity.

BUCKS county, Pa., held its first contest for the Demorest gold medal on the evening of the spring convention in Newtown, May 5. There were eight contestants, and the hall, the largest in the place, was crowded with an interested audience.

AT Sprague, Wash. (the headquarters of the Idaho division of the Northern Pacific railway), the white-ribboners are planning to start a free reading room for the railroad employes, there being no public library nor reading-room in the town.

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, president of the Maine W. C. T. U., is attending every county convention in her state this year. This is not a small undertaking in a state of such distances, some of her engagements involving a journey of one hundred and twenty miles by carriage.

THE W. C. T. U. workers at Auburn, Cal., have secured 3,000 names to their no-license petition. Of these 1,500 are voters, and the names represent seventy-five per cent of the property holders. The vote is to be taken July 25, and the county white-ribboners are "up and at it," so that no-license shall carry the day.

BETHESDA Mission, Chicago, rejoices in the flowers sent there, but as there is no fund for paying expressage the superintendent begs unions sending floral offerings to secure free transportation by the express companies. A number of unions have made arrangements, through the local agents, for delivering the flowers without charge.

A SUGGESTION sent by a friend, and worthy of note by W. C. T. U. workers: At, or near, base ball parks or other crowded outdoor resorts in town or city, have plenty of good ice water on hand, free. Ice cream or ice cold lemonade on sale in a neat tent on hot days; hot tea, coffee or lemonade in cooler weather. These sold at reasonable prices will do much to offset the desire for stimulating liquors.

THE town of New London, O., went wet at a recent election. A drummer for a wholesale liquor house said: "I have respect for Mr. —— and Mrs. ——;" (they are pronounced Prohibitionists and voted as they believed.) "And," continued the drummer, "I will patronize them in their business when I can, but for Mr. —— and others who pretend to be Prohibitionists and then vote the Republican ticket, I have no respect."

THE fourteenth annual convention of the first congressional district of Iowa will be held in the Baptist church, Washington, Washington county, Iowa, June 15 and 16. The general officers, county presidents, and district superintendents are delegates ex officio, and there should be one delegate for every ten members from local unions. Delegates' names should be reported to Mrs. Dr. Crawford, Washington, chairman of reception committee.

THE following pledge for little ones under six years of age is suggested by Louise A. Barton, Harbor Springs, Mich., thus placing the responsibility of its keeping upon the parents:

Papa and mamma helping me,
I promise I will not take
Strong drink, wine, beer or cider
For my precious Jesus' sake.

I will not take His name in vain,
As do many whom I see;
My lips tobacco shall not soil,
Mother and father helping me.

MISS FRANCES GRIFFIN, of Alabama, is received everywhere with enthusiasm. A Louisiana paper says: "Miss Griffin's strength of mind, accomplishments and thoroughly finished education would do credit to the best college-bred girl in any of the new institutions, north or south. She has a large Christian breadth of view, and her sparkling wit illumines not only her public addresses but her private conversation as well, while her business ability in securing money for the W. C. T. U. School of Methods at Wayne, N. C., is a marvel to languid women who can only act upon the momentous question of what they shall eat, what they shall drink and wherewithal they shall be clothed."

A FRIEND and old-time reader of THE UNION SIGNAL sends the following good suggestion: "I have been long thinking of a plan to extend interest in the W. C. T. U., and that is to have two or more members of the local W's and Y's go to the country and village school-houses, where there are no unions organized, and hold meetings; take song books and have the people help sing and talk about the different lines of work, the Temple, and anything of interest. I think if every schoolhouse could be visited there could be many members who would join the nearest union; the ladies would be interested, and the children could be invited to the meetings of the L. T. L. where there was one. At least the children could be induced to take the pledge, and the men would be interested because their wives and children were. I think much might be done for the union, for the children and for prohibition."

NOTICE.

The resignation of Mrs. Lucy M. Van Deventer as state president of Nevada is received with sincere and heartfelt regrets, and this board extend their grateful thanks to our retiring state president for her earnest and self-sacrificing work in our state which has been a labor of love for us for six years. While the pressure of other duties has been very heavy upon her, she has borne the burden for us in the spirit of the loving Saviour who went about doing good. State officers: Mrs. M. Merrill, first vice-president, Reno; Mrs. Lena M. Westlake, recording secretary, Reno; Mrs. Frances J. Crawford, treasurer, Reno; Mrs. Clara S. Ward, corresponding secretary, Reno.

Reno, Nevada, May 12, 1892.

LAKE BLUFF SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Each year the effort is more earnest to make the W. C. T. U. days exceed in attractiveness and power the last meeting, and the present is no exception. The names which are offered are the best. Mrs. Woodbridge will spend almost a week, helping each day, including a Sabbath with two addresses. Miss Willard will be there one Sunday, with two addresses, and we confidently hope for her to open some of the topics of the school. Mrs. Pritchard will give a daily Bible reading. Mrs. Benjamin will conduct a parliamentary drill four evenings. Any of these experts will be fully worth a trip to hear. On the mornings of July 14, 15 and 16 an hour will be in charge of such leaders of the Y's as the state superintendents of Y work of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, Miss Cowen, Miss Dickson and Miss Borkey, also Miss Stewart, editor of the Oak and Ivy Leaf. It is to be hoped that the Y's will take advantage of this rare opportunity. There will be a gold medal contest one evening and a splendid elocutionary entertainment by Mrs. Hessie Hunter Hurlbert, Misses Lenore Ayres and Lulu Jones, musicians, another. Take notice, every W. C. T. U. woman, and prepare to be at Lake Bluff from July 14 to 24. Board at very reasonable rates. For any other particulars address

MISS ESTHER PUGH,
The Temple, Chicago.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

Good New Stories.

A Golden Gossip.

A Neighborhood Story, showing the excellent effect of good gossip, with a kind motive. By Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, author of "Faith Gartney's Girlhood," etc. Eighth thousand. $1.50.

Roger Hunt.

By Celia P. Woolley, author of "Rachel Armstrong" and "A Girl Graduate." $1.25.

Miss Bagg's Secretary.

A West Point Romance, by Clara Louise Burnham, author of "The Mistress of Beech Knoll," "Young Maids and Old," etc. Fourth Thousand. $1.25.

The Lady of Ft. St. John.

A powerful novel of New Brunswick in the seventeenth century. By Mary Hartwell Catherwood. $1.25.

Ciphers.

By Ellen Olney Kirk, author of "The Story of Margaret Kent," "Walford," etc. Fourth Thousand. $1.25.

Betty Alden.

The fourth historical story of the Plymouth Colony. By Jane G. Austin, author of "A Nameless Nobleman," "Standish of Standish," "Doctor Le Baron and his Daughters," etc. Seventh thousand. Each $1.25.

Huckleberries.

Gathered from New England Hills. Excellent Short Stories by Rose Terry Cooke, author of "Steadfast," "Happy Dodd." $1.25.

Fourteen to One.

A book of remarkably good Short Stories. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. $1.25.

Sold by Booksellers Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

New W. C. T. U. and Prohibition Song Book. By the Silver Lake Quartette and W. A. Williams. Larger than their former books. 35c. Ready June 15. Advance orders, 30c. Also music chart 40x90 in $1; Parliamentary Chart, $1. Address W. A. WILLIAMS, Warnock, Ohio

SEND FOR IT.

Don't purchase until you have seen it. Great amount of information to be derived from it.

WHAT IS IT?

Our handsomely illustrated Catalogue of Pianos and Organs. Free to all. Address

BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO.
WASHINGTON, N. J.

THE COBLENTZ CURE

Morphine, Opium and Whiskey habits cured at home. No pain, no exposure. Trial on Morphine free. One case in every county cured free. Address, COMPOUND OXYGEN ASSOCIATION, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Music Send stamp for complete cat'log of sheet & book music at less than ½ regular rates. E. J. Knowles, 3844 Aldine Place, Chicago.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.

OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

$4.95 GOLD PLATED

WARRANTED GENUINE.

ONE YEAR TRIAL FREE

A watch that cannot stand the test is dear at any price. We send with this watch a printed agreement giving you the privilege of returning the watch at any time within ONE YEAR if it does not give perfect satisfaction in every respect. We are the only firm in the world that sell goods on such liberal conditions and can show thousands upon thousands of testimonials from every state in the Union. The case is hunting style, double case and double plated, superbly engraved and decorated and fitted completely with our richly jeweled and celebrated movement, guaranteed a perfect time keeper.

Cut this out, send it to us with your name and Xpress office address, and we will send it there by express for your examination. If after examination you are convinced that it is a bargain pay the agent $4.95 and express charges and it is yours; write to-day this will not appear again. Address

THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago.

18K

Publisher's Notes.

HOW TO ADDRESS YOUR LETTERS.

In all cases send to The Temple, Chicago.

If you have an article you desire published in The Union Signal, write to editors of The Union Signal.

Any items concerning Y. W. C. T. U. work, or communications for the Oak and Ivy Leaf, send to Miss Jennie A. Stewart.

Any item or articles for publication in The Young Crusader, any book or leaflet manuscript, or letters concerning such, send to Miss Alice M. Guernsey.

Subscriptions for any of our papers, orders for our publications, subscription lists, orders for job printing, etc., send to

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.

Advertisements, or questions regarding them, send to

R. S. Thain, Adv. Mgr.

THESE ARE THEY.

Glimpses of Fifty Years,

By Frances E. Willard. An autobiography. Fifty thousand copies sold and still there is a demand

Childhood, Its Care and Culture.

By Mary Allen West. Valued in every home. Agents hear nothing but praise of this helpful book.

Story of a Classic Town.

By Frances E. Willard. A necessity to every Methodist and a help to every temperance worker.

A Young Woman Journalist.

Edited by Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Helpful to all ambitious young women and of engrossing interest to all W. C. T. U. workers.

Agents Wanted

For these books everywhere. Send for circulars.

Address

Subscription Book Department,
Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

The last number of the Library Series for the little folks (and exceedingly interesting it will be to grown-up folks) is "Child Life Abroad," containing a poem by Miss Lathbury, called, "A Spinning Song," and sketches showing how children live in Mexico. India, Turkey, Germany, Spain, Japan, Ireland and at different places in other countries, written by travelers and foreigners. Price only 10 cents in paper covers. Every child-reader should own it. Send orders to

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill,

See Here.

JUST THE THING FOR YOUR PUBLIC MEETINGS

—IS—

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS.

With Its Stirring Music.

IT WILL HELP IMMENSELY.

Young People Like It.

The Children Enjoy It.

Old Folks are Interested.

Price, 35c. Per Copy.

Send for sample to

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) CHICAGO.

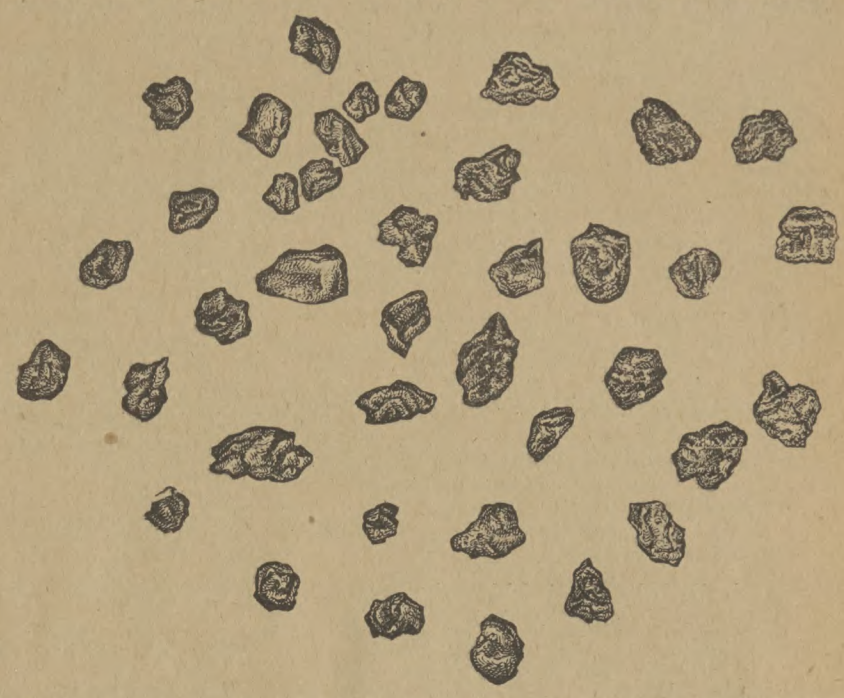
Buffalo Lithia Water.

A POWERFUL SOLVENT OF STONE IN THE BLADDER.

A Huge Stone Weighing Two Ounces and Twenty-seven Grains Dissolves Under its Action.

Reprint from the New England Medical Monthly for November, 1890.

STONE IN THE BLADDER.



The above plate is from a photograph which forms a part of a communication of Dr. GEORGE H. PIERCE, of DANBURY, CONN., to the NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL MONTHLY for November, 1890 (see page 76 of that journal), and represents THE EXACT SIZE and SHAPE of some of the largest specimens of TWO OUNCES and TWENTY-SEVEN GRAINS of DISSOLVED STONE discharged by a patient designated as "Mr. S.," under the action of

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER.

SMALLER PARTICLES AND A QUANTITY OF BRICK DUST DEPOSIT, Dr. P. states, were not estimated.

In BRIGHT'S DISEASE, GOUT, RHEUMATIC GOUT, RHEUMATISM, many forms of DYSPEPSIA and NERVOUS DISORDERS, and in the peculiar affections of WOMEN, especially in deranged conditions of the monthly functions, these waters are among the most potent of known remedies.

Water in Cases of One-Dozen Half-Gallon Bottles, $5.00 F. O. B. Here.

DESCRIPTIVE PAMPHLETS SENT FREE.

SPRINGS OPEN FOR GUESTS JUNE 1st.

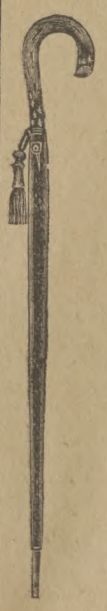
THOMAS F. GOODE, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

ROBERT STEVENSON & CO., Chicago Agents,

92 and 94 LAKE STREET.

EYES tested free by mail. New method. Send stamp for test card. KEENE OPT. CO., 1301 Washington-st. Boston, Mass

Handel Brothers. Chicago.



We were the first house to introduce the

Prince of Wales Crook UMBRELLA

They come in charming varieties of woods—the silk is of an unwearoutable sort—the price is $2.90 for either 26 or 28 inch. It's a world beater Send for one or two.

AGENT made $71 in four days selling my Electric Corsets and Specialties. 100 PER CENT. profit and Cash Prizes. Sample free. Dr. Bridgman, B'way, New York.

AGENTS Coin Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Every woman buys. Best and cheapest cooker sold. Big Profits to good workers, male or female. Sample's weight 12 oz. Adv'g matter furnished For circulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

$5 to $15 per day, at home, selling LIGHTNING PLATER and plating jewelry, watches tableware, &c. Plates the finest of jewelry good as new, on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. No capital. Every house has goods needing plating. Wholesale to agents $5. Write for circulars. H. E. DELNO & Co., Columbus, O.

A complete garment, worn under the corset or flannels, protecting the clothing from perspiration Cheaper than dress shields, 1 pair doing the work of 6 Misses' bust measure, 28-33, 80c; Ladies' bust measure, 34-39, $1; Ladies,' bust measure, 40-46, $1.25

AGENTS WANTED.

M. DEWEY, Man'fr,
1397 West Monroe Street, Chicago.
Send money by Post Office Order. Catalogue Free.

HAY-FEVER

A GIBBS' ORONASAL RESPIRATOR

used at home, will afford absolute relief throughout the season. A wonderful invention, Convenient, Scientific, Infallible; thoroughly tested for many years. Costs but little—relief obtained is beyond estimate. Equally good for Catarrh. Sent postpaid. Pamphlet with testimonials free.

GIBBS RESPIRATOR CO 36M La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

OUR CHILDREN

LITTLE HANDS.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

THE little hands, God bless them!
Dimpled hands—not very strong;
Made for kisses and for clinging—
Never made for doing wrong.

Blessed little hands for all that—
Father, hold them every day,
Keep them kind and keep them lovely
In their rest and at their play.

Little hands may carry gladness
Into lives made dark by care,
Little hands filled full of flowers
Have a welcome everywhere.

Fill the children's hands with brightness,
Brightness from the field and wood,
Let the tender fingers aid you
In the joy of doing good.

O the little hands, God bless them!
Bless them in their mission sweet,
Till they scatter heavenly blossoms
At the gracious Master's feet.

HOW BESS HELPED.

BY DOROTHY ROBINSON.

HAVE you noticed how those raspberries are ripening?" asked Grandma Wesson. "I don't know what we shall do with them; we can't begin to use them all and we can't give them away, either, for everybody has all they want."

"Oh, grandma!" said Bess.

Grandma was talking to Auntie Nell, but Bess, out on the porch, heard. Bess was a little city girl spending the summer at grandma's farm.

"Oh, grandma, can I have some?"

"Why, of course, child, all that you want, only don't make yourself sick."

"Oh, but I don't want them to eat, grandma, I want to—to—"

"What does the child mean?" said grandma.

"Why, you see," said Bess, speaking very fast with her cheeks flushing, "Miss Grover, she's our Sunday-school teacher, you know, she belongs to a flower mis—missionary and she told us about it; how they give flowers and fruit and things to poor, sick folks who haven't any money and—and I thought maybe—"

"I understand," said grandma, wiping her glasses, "yes, you can have all you can pick."

"Can I? all I can pick! Oh, grandma!"

"Yes," said grandma again, "and Uncle Fred will take them to the depot but it will be hard work for you."

"Yes, course," said Bess. "I'm going to pick a bushel; can't I begin right away?"

Grandma laughed. "You can try," she said, "but it's too late to begin to-day."

Bess sighed. "Seems 'most 's if I can't wait," she said.

Bright and early the next morning she began and had just filled her little basket once when Cousin Rob, with lunch basket and fishpole, came by. "Want to go to the lake?" he called.

Didn't she though?

"Pa said I could stay all day and ma said she thought grandma'd let you go if I promise to be real careful, and Alice King and some of the other big girls are going."

Bess' face fell. "But the berries."

"What of 'em. Grandma won't care."

"But they are for the sick folks, Rob."

"Sick folks!"

"Yes, in the city, you know. Grandma said I might and I can't go. I'm awful sorry—"

"Oh, well, you needn't go if you don't want to, of course," and he was off.

I think there were some tears under the pink sunbonnet but only the robins and cat-birds saw them and they never told. Grandma brought her some lemonade and praised her; perhaps she heard what Rob said, but it was pretty hard work, especially when the sun was so hot and she couldn't help thinking how cool it must be down at the lake where the great trees hung over it and the lilies blossomed. But she kept on and at night she had—yes, she really had,—a whole bushel, and Uncle Fred was going to take them to the station after supper.

Bess was out on the porch watching them—somehow she didn't feel so tired when she could see them—when Rob came along with an armful of water lilies.

"Half for you and half for mother," he said.

Now Bess thought the great white lilies, with golden hearts, were the very loveliest flowers in the whole world and she hesitated a little, then—"Grandma, can't I send these, too?"

"Yes," said grandma, and then she went out doors.

Bess and Auntie Nell put the lilies in a box with wet leaves so they shouldn't wilt, but before they were through grandma came in with, I can't begin to tell you all the flowers. There were pansies, great clusters of pinky late roses, larkspurs, bunches of spicy pinks and "almost every flower in the whole garden," exclaimed Bess delightedly, and the box wouldn't begin to hold them, and they had to get another.

Bess didn't know that Uncle Fred mailed a letter that night that Auntie Nell had written to Miss Grover, but a few days after there came an envelope addressed to "Miss Elizabeth Wesson."

"All for me?" asked Bess.

It wasn't nearly so easy to read as her copies, so Auntie Nell read it to her.

I wish I could tell you all that Miss Grover wrote; of the places where they took the flowers and berries; of sick people seeing nothing but bare walls and dusty streets and how glad they were of them.

"The very best letter ever was," said Bess when auntie finished; "we'll do it again, won't we, grandma?"

But grandma was wiping her glasses and only said, "The blessed child."

Lamont, Mich.

IN DEMAND.

One day Tommy had been asked to do several "chores" about the house. He was wanted to bring in wood, hunt eggs, run errands, etc. He grew tired of it at last, and upon some new request he said, half impatiently, half jokingly: "Well, I think here's a boy that's in pretty good demand to-day."

"Good articles are always in demand," replied one who heard him.

"O yes; I s'pose so!" said Tommy, as he marched off to do this favor also, evidently thinking it was a little tiresome. The demand seemed to press a little hard upon the supply.

Yes, Tommy, "good articles are always in demand." This is true the world over. People like to choose the best they can find; not only the best things, but the best men. Good lawyers, good doctors, good teachers, good merchants, good mechanics, good farmers, good editors, good preachers, will all find that the great world has plenty for them to do. They are in demand.

But worthless things have poor sale. They may go a-begging. Men don't want them. The lazy, the disobliging, and the careless are not often asked to do much, when better hands may be had.—Western Christian Advocate.

IT PAYS TO BE IN EARNEST.

A boy was once walking along a dusty road. The sun was very warm and oppressive; but, as was his usual way, he stepped along quickly, thinking that the faster he walked the sooner he would reach the end of his journey. He soon heard a carriage coming, and when it had caught up with him the driver reined in his horse and kindly asked the lad to ride, which invitation he gladly accepted. When he was seated in the carriage the gentleman, a good Quaker, said, "I noticed thee walking along briskly, and so asked thee to ride; but if I had seen thee walking lazily, I would not have done so by any means."—Morning Star.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—How many of you have ever helped in flower mission work? And how many know anything about the dear lady who has lain for twenty-five years on a sick bed in Louisville, Ky.? On the other pages of this paper you will find a great deal about Miss Jennie Casseday and the good work she has been the means of starting. If you have a flower garden or can ask somebody to give you some flowers, fasten to them a bit of paper or card on which you have written a Scripture text, and carry the bouquet thus prepared to some one who has no flowers or is sick and suffering. God will bless your act and you will be a genuine "flower-missioner." Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

I enjoy the letters and puzzles in our corner very much. I am a temperance girl.

Evansville, Wis. PEARL CAMPBELL.

And you will grow up to be a temperance woman, I am sure.

We are two little brothers, ten and eight years old. We have a baby brother one year old and a baby cousin, a little girl nine months old; her mamma died two months ago and gave her to us. Mamma has been reading the Children's page in THE UNION SIGNAL to us. We like it so much.

CARL AND CHESTER HACKNEY.

Maryville, Tenn.

The dear little baby sister-cousin will have strong helpers in these temperance boy cousins. I hope you will always like THE UNION SIGNAL, boys, and what it teaches.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

49.

ANAGRAM.

(The name of a "shut-in" invalid whose greatest desire is to lighten the suffering of others.)

Say, Jasmine, send ices.

50.

A BOUQUET.

(The first line rhymes with the second, the third with the fourth and so on. The initials of the flowers when found will spell the words omitted in the last line.)

For this sweet nosegay our first thought
Is the starry, blue —— —— ——
We choose the yellow daffodilly
And haste to add the pure white——.
This bit of brilliant ——
Will recall home where'er we wander,
And clustering berries will entwine
With leaves from the ripening——;
These pretty wild flowers now combine
(Beware of thorns on ——!)
Of June's own flower, the favorite——,
A quantity we will dispose;
And take some of this bold,
Bright-hued gaudy——.
We'll want some green and must deprive a
Vine of leaves, this clinging ——
That covers all the barren walls
Will answer well; some white ——
To "thoughts of heaven" will give wing; a
Bit of flowering ——
Whose blossoms "memory" express
Is next, and for variety add some —— ——
Down near the pond I thought I saw some.
For the month of weddings —— ——
Would be the proper thing: and gay ——
Will make our bouquet bright and lightsome.

* * *

And now 'tis arranged with sweet precision,
We'll send it all to the —— ——.

Answers in three weeks. Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MAY 12.

40. Stop, top; peach, each; drum, rum; grace, race; where, here.

41.
N O S E
O B E Y
S E A R
E Y R Y

42. Poor-house.

Correct answers: Eva B. Frarey; Flora Carson; Agnes L. Fitch; Florence Nelson.

The Republican Convention.

The next convention of the Republican party will be held at Minneapolis, Minn., commencing June 7th, and the following information in regard to rates and arrangements for the transportation of visitors will be of interest to our readers.

The North-Western Line will sell excursion tickets to Minneapolis and return at the very low rate of one fare for the round trip, and will provide the best of facilities for the transportation of delegates and visitors.

Three superbly appointed trains are run over this line between Chicago and Minneapolis.

The "Day Express," with luxurious parlor cars, leaves Chicago at 8:15 A. M., and arrives at Minneapolis in the evening, affording a delightful daylight ride through some of the most picturesque scenery of the northwest.

The "North-Western Limited" solid vestibuled train, lighted throughout by gas, and equipped with palace sleeping cars and dining cars, leaves Chicago daily at 6:00 P. M. and arrives at Minneapolis early the following morning

The "Night Express" leaves Chicago daily at 11 15 P. M., after arrival of all trains of connecting lines from the East and South, and is equipped with palace sleeping cars, standard day coaches and North-Western dining cars.

Tickets via the North-Western Line from Chicago to Minneapolis will be good via the direct line, through Janesville, Madison and Devil's Lake, or via the "Lake Shore Route," which closely follows the shore of Lake Michigan and passes through Milwaukee, Waukesha and Madison, or will be good going one route and returning the other.

Circulars giving detailed information in regard to rates, arrangements, etc., and also containing map of the city of Minneapolis, will be furnished on application to W. A. Thrall, G. P. & T. A., Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago, Ill.

HALF RATES TO ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS.

On June 3. 6, 7, 8 and 9, the Chicago. St. Paul & Kansas City Railway will sell excursion tickets to Minneapolis at rate of one lowest first-class fare for the round trip from all stations on its line within 250 miles of Minneapolis, tickets to be good returning until June 15, 1892, inclusive. From stations outside of 250-mile limit half-fare tickets will be sold on June 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, good for return until June 25, 1892, inclusive.

Do not miss this opportunity of a pleasant visit to the health-giving resorts of the Northwest, and, in addition to attending the convention, enjoy a few days' rest and recreation at some of the many beautiful lakes in the vicinity of the Twin Cities. For full particulars, time of special trains, etc., call on ticket agents of the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railway.

TO SARATOGA AND NEW YORK.

All those who contemplate going to New York or to Saratoga Springs at the time of the great meetings of the Christian Endeavor and the National Educational Association, taking advantage of the reduced rates made to those points, should not fail to consult the beautiful illustrated circulars upon the subject issued by the Michigan Central, the Niagara Falls Route. Address O. W. Ruggles, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

CALIFORNIA.

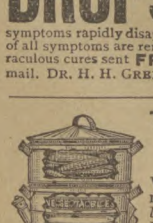
California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad.

Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 723 Monadnock Building, Chicago, Ill., if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.

THE BERKSHIRE HILLS SANATORIUM.
For the cure of Cancer in all its forms, without the use of the knife Book with complete information mailed free. Dr. W. E. Brown & Son No. Adams, Mass

DROPSY TREATED FREE Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 DAYS TREATMENT FREE by mail. DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS, Specialists, ATLANTA, GA.



THE PEERLESS STEAM COOKER
Will enable you to cook a whole meal over ONE BURNER on gasoline, oil, gas, or common cook stove. It will pay FOR ITSELF IN ONE Season, for canning fruit. AGENTS WANTED, either sex, big profits. For particulars address, with stamp,
C. E. Swartzbaugh & Co., 334 Dearborn St., Room 920, Chicago.

Publisher's Notes.

THE BOARD OF LADY MANAGERS.

The Board of Lady Managers of the Columbian Exposition has determined that the women of the country shall have a better opportunity, both to receive and to impart information, than they have enjoyed at any exposition yet held; and if you turn to THE UNION SIGNAL of May 19th, and to page 4 of that paper, you will find a hint in Miss Willard's address of some of the fine things that will be secured for that event. To enjoy this thoroughly we must be informed, and the best of information is found in the

Columbus Memorial,

a large folio volume, 12x15, on fine super-calendered paper, and contains nine maps, illustrating the stages of development in America since the discovery by Columbus. It has a comparative showing of the world's fairs of the past, and contains besides, the pictures of all the buildings now in process of erection in Chicago.

Machinery Hall, which alone cost $1,200,000; the Manufacturers' Building, the Art Palace, the Administration Building, the Government Building, the Electrical Building, the Horticultural Building, the Agricultural Building, the Transportation Building, the Fish and Fisheries Building, the Woman's Building, designed by a woman; the Mines and Mining Building, the Forestry Building; beautiful illustration of the wonderful lagoon scene, grand bird's-eye view scene of the Exposition buildings; double-page map or diagram, showing the relative position of the main buildings, including state buildings and size of each, etc., etc.

To teachers it will be especially valuable.

We will send this and THE UNION SIGNAL one year, postpaid, for only $1.30, or we will send it to any address postpaid, in return for five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1 each.

Tell the children to ask their friends to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL. If they send five new names and $5 we will send one of the beautiful "Columbus Memorials" postpaid, to any address they may indicate.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102–1110.) Chicago, Ill.

A GREAT POWER FOR OUR WORK.

One of our leaders in Brooklyn writes as follows:

"I feel that THE UNION SIGNAL is a great power for our work, and I know by tried and tested cases under my own experience that its quiet reading will do more to disarm prejudice and to awaken interest in, and respect for, our work than the most liberal dose of leaflets, or the most unimpeachable and labored arguments of the average type of soundly sensible and orthodox lecturers. I therefore heartily wish we could sow broadcast this, our beloved organ, not only among our own white-ribboners, but the Christian Endeavor Societies also, that through them we might reach the unconverted and the different classes outside. I wish that every white-ribboner would pledge herself as a committee of one to secure one new subscriber for THE UNION SIGNAL from the Christian Endeavor ranks, or else herself subscribe for a copy to be sent to one such. Oh, what would the harvest be! I will set the example myself along this line."

That is spoken like a true white-ribboner. We wish the solo of this voice could grow into a mighty chorus.

TELL YOUR CHILDREN

That if they want a photograph of Miss Frances E. Willard, Miss Anna Gordon, who wrote and compiled the songs they sing in the L. T. L., or any of the leaders in the temperance cause, they can have one, and if they will write to us we will tell them how to secure it.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,

There is NO "SURE CURE FOR EVERY CASE OF ASTHMA" or "EVERY CASE OF HAY FEVER," but the worst cases, if uncomplicated by organic disease, can be CURED TO STAY CURED by constitutional treatment, and this at the patient's home.

ASTHMA AND HAY-FEVER

We treat no one without a thorough knowledge of the case.

Incurable Cases Declined.

Examination free by mail.
We want name and address of every sufferer from Asthma or Hay Fever.
P. HAROLD HAYES, M. D., BUFFALO, N. Y.

YPSILANTI Dress Reform UNDERWEAR

SPRING GOODS REDUCED IN PRICE.

Sanitary Balbriggan, Sanitary Lisle Thread, Sanitary MERINO, SILK and Sanitary Balbriggan, Silk and Cashmere mixed.
For SPRING and SUMMER WEAR. The ONLY Sanitary Underwear, and Endorsed by the leading medical profession.

Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Price List. If your dealer cannot supply them, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.

DON'T BE DECEIVED. See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark— "Ypsilanti Health Underwear."

HAY & TODD MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

METAL TIPPED. EVER READY DRESS STAY Will Not Cut through.
See name "EVER READY" on back of each Stay.

ACKNOWLEDGED THE BEST DRESS STAY ON THE MARKET.
PERSPIRATION PROOF. PLIABLE. EASILY ADJUSTED.
Ask for them. Take none but them. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.
MANUFACTURED BY
THE YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MANUFACTURING CO., YPSILANTI, MICHIGAN.
FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.
SPECIAL DEPOTS { MODEL DRESS STEEL and BUSTLE CO. 74 Grand St., New York. BROWN & METZNER, 535 Market St., San Francisco.

The 1892 Model Remington Typewriter

Presents many points of improvement which will readily commend themselves to all users.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
327 Broadway, New York.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address
THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE
Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. For gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10cts. to intending agents, F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill

Dr. O. P. BROWN'S TISSUE BUILDER, for the Skin and Body.

The beauty of the Romans was largely due to anointing. Dr. O. P. Brown's HERBAL TISSUE BUILDER, made from an old Roman Oil formula, has a wonderful effect on the skin, acting as a Tonic. It feeds the tissues, fills up wrinkles, plumps the figure, beautifies the complexion and hands. Most skins, hungry for nourishment, absorb it as thirsty plants do water. Druggists or by mail, $1. Send 10c. for Sample and Lady's paper illustrated.
WOMAN'S LIFE, 47 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J.

"BEAUTY" ACCOMMODATION WAIST No. 7,
WITH TAMPICO DRESS FORM.

Made of finest Sateen, Soft Sateen bust and pockets for Tampico Dress forms Removable Steels, Adjustable Shoulder Straps. Lace Back. Button Front, curved to figure at back

PERFECT FORM, EASE AND SUPPORT.

Sizes 18 to 30 in. in White and Black. Sent free by mail, for $1.50. Little Beauty Waists for children, the best. Catalogue free
E. H. HORWOOD & CO.,
51 Mercer St., - New York.

DULUTH 7% & 8% First Mortgages
REAL ESTATE AND MINING STOCKS.
References Furnished, Correspondence Solicited,
Tvedt, Eckstein & Co., 327 W. Superior Street. DULUTH, MINN.

DON'T YOU THINK
Your baby would look pretty in a carriage like that?

We have prettier ones.
Also cheaper ones.
All shown in our catalogue, which we will mail FREE if you write for it.
FREIGHT PAID BY
WALTER HILL CO., 218 Wabash Av., CHICAGO.

YOSE & SONS PIANOS! ESTABLISHED IN 1851.
Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue.
170 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.,
OR
LYON, POTTER & CO.,
176 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILL.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

BreakfastCocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

THE

Total Abstinence Life Association

OF AMERICA

PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.

It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.

New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.

It will pay you well to write to us.

THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.

902-904 Royal Insurance Building,

CHICAGO, ILL.

For Harness, Buggy Tops, Saddles, Fly Nets Traveling Bags, Military Equipments, Etc.

Gives a beautiful finish which will not peel or crack off, smut or crock by handling. Not a varnish Used by the U. S. Army and is the standard among manufacturers and owners of fine harness in every quarter of the globe.

SOLD BY ALL HARNESS MAKERS.

Dr. O. P. Brown's
GREAT EXTERNAL REMEDY,
HERBAL OINTMENT!

reaches disease through the pores, arouses circulation, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25 and 50 cents, Druggists or mail. J. Gibson Brown, 7 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR

DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

OR LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction

By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 remarkable illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 31st thousand. 5,000 more Agents Wanted.—Men and Women. $200 a month. ☞ Experience and capital not necessary, for We Teach All. Give Credit and Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF

Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.

We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.

GRAND TERRACE ADDITION.

For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Freight Paid. McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., CHICAGO

Publisher's Notes.

FLOWER MISSION CARDS.

As announced already, we are now prepared to furnish you with Scripture text cards for flower mission work at very reasonable prices. The cards are of bristol board, punctured ready to affix to the bouquet. There are ninety-nine different texts selected for this purpose. The cards are put up in packages of thirty-three each, with different verse, and are for sale at the following rates: Per package of 33 cards, 10 cts.; three packages for 25 cts.

A large supply is now on hand and orders can be promptly filled by the

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

IT IS A BEAUTY.

What? Why, the new badge for the senior L. T. L.'s or graduates of the Loyal Temperance Legion. For a long time we have been trying to find just where we could have a badge manufactured of a metal that will not tarnish, but always show undimmed its brightness—as our boys and girls should. At last success has crowned these efforts, and we have a lovely button badge for the coats of the large boys and a pendant of the same design for girls, made of that beautiful new metal of which all are talking and with approval—aluminum or aluminium. The design is, of course, circular, with Maltese cross on it and the initials T. A. in monogram. These stand for Total Abstinence. We will print the cut of the design next week. The boys, of course, will wear the buttons on the coat collar as G. A. R. men do theirs. The girls can hang the pendant on their chain or fasten it to the breastpin by a small chain or a narrow ribbon.

And what is the price? The button is 25cts. or $2.50 per doz. The pendant 20cts. or $2 per dozen. We hope to see a whole army of temperance young people wearing them. Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

AUTOGRAPH PLEDGE CARDS.

As the time for the World's Exposition approaches the demand for the autograph pledge cards for the children's chain is increasing. These cards are in red, white and blue, with pledge on one side and place for the name on the other. They are punctured so as to make it easy to link them together. We can supply these cards in any quantity on short order at the following rates: Per package of 30, 10 cts; 3 packages for 25 cts. Let every child who will, have an opportunity to send an autograph to the World's Exposition.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

APPRECIATIVE.

Read what Mrs. Livermore says about "A Young Woman Journalist":

MELROSE, MASS., May 21, 1892.

MY DEAR MRS. RASTALL:—The new book of the Woman's Publishing House is simply perfect. I am charmed with it—I am very proud of it. There is nothing to criticise, and nothing left to desire in its mechanical execution. Its literary physiognomy is equally attractive—tender, true, loyal, lofty, spiritual. It is a fitting memorial of the sweet, good, girl whose brief life story it rehearses most exquisitely. My husband and I have been turning over the leaves of the dainty volume for the last hour, reading here and there to one another, with wet eyes and low voices, for we both loved the gentle, gifted young journalist. God granted her an early discharge from the battle of life. But if this matchless biography of her shall find its way into the hands of the young girls of the W. C. T. U., it must stimulate many of them to follow her radiant example. Yours most truly, MARY A. LIVERMORE.

FOR SUMMER WEAR

Send for circular.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE Corset Waists

are now made in

VENTILATING CLOTH,

also in FINE

Single Ply CLOTH:

SINGLE PLY for Children, Misses & Ladies.

GOOD SENSE Waists are superior to all others. —Tape-fastened Buttons, Cord-edge Button Holes—Clamp Bucke at Hip securely holds Hose Supporter. Shape permits full expansion of lungs. Gives Satisfaction. Be sure your waist is stamped "GOOD SENSE."

FERRIS BROS., Manufacturers and Patentees, 34 Broadway, New York.
For Sale by ALL LEADING RETAILERS.
MARSHALL FIELD & CO., Chicago, Ill., Wholesale Western Agents.

'DELSARTE'

Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.
Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York.
Also 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

HOTEL FREDONIA. Washington, D. C. H St., between 13th and 14th. ELEGANT, QUIET, HOMELIKE & STRICTLY TEMPERANCE G. H. La Fetra, Prop.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY or COMMISSION, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g Co. x 213 LaCrosse, Wis.

SAVE $40.00 ON NEW $140.00 BICYCLES

New, Latest Pattern $140 Bicycles for $100. Cheaper grades in proportion; cash or time. Agents wanted. A. W. GUMP & CO., Dayton, Ohio.

BICYCLES, GUNS & TYPEWRITERS taken in exchange.

HOME STUDY BOOK-KEEPING SHORTHAND

Each person sending us before July 1st $1 for HENDRYX'S COMPENDIUM OF BOOK-KEEPING and BUSINESS FORMS for SELF INSTRUCTION, will receive instructions by mail free. Special inducements also given during the summer to SHORTHAND students. F. H. HENDRYX, 178, Bath, N. Y.

WHEREVER THE ROCKER WASHER is used the Washboard becomes a Relic of Barbarism. It is warranted to do the washing of an ordinary family in one hour as clean as can be washed by hand. Write for full description and prices. Rocker Washer Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Agents wanted.

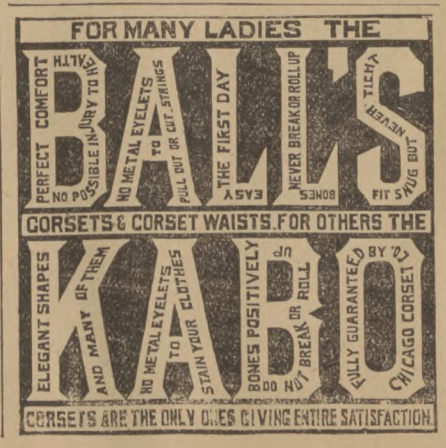
How TO MAKE A Fortune

WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser; patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen to whom we give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new, will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., 184 Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.



WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT positively cures RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, LIVER, KIDNEY and exhausting chronic diseases of both sexes. Contains 23 to 100 degrees of Electricity. GUARANTEED the latest improved, cheapest, scientific, powerful, durable and most effective MEDICAL ELECTRIC BELT in the WORLD. Electric Suspensories free with Male Belts. ELECTRIC TRUSSES FOR RUPTURE. 9,000 cured. Send 4c stamp for pamphlet.

DR. W. J. HORNE, REMOVED TO 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO

Mention THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH

Taken internally and used locally with Insufflator. At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured. All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample. Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. HISCOX, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N. Y.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. HACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed Liver and Kidney cure Constipation, and Complexion trouble. Blood sample. Sold by Purifier. Send for McCLURE DRUG CO., all Druggists. Ft. Wayne, Ind.

RESORT YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

PARENTS CANNOT AFFORD To let their children grow up without the amusement and physical training which the Parlor and Lawn Game gives. Elicits World's CO., 152 and 154 Lake Street, Chicago. STIC TIP

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

THE BABY will be given a beautiful birthday card if the mother will send baby's name and age to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. This is done to advertise LACTATED FOOD, the food that SAVES BABIES' LIVES.

Wall Paper Retailed. Good Paper, Gold Paper 5c. Send 10c for postage on samples, and handsome guide "How to Paper" will be sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 136-138 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR

Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The FREE St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish. St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order. American Desk & Seating Co. 270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED 103 E. ADAMS ST.

FAT PEOPLE You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by DR. CLARKE'S Home Treatment. Proofs, Testimonials, Free F. B. CLARKE, M. D., Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Wash Machine Co., Cleveland, O., for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

WANTED Women to take Crochet work to do home. Steady work. Write for particulars. L. WHITE & CO., 209 State St., Chicago, Ill.

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St., Chicago

10 cents pays for the best ladies' paper published for three months. Ladies' Bazar, Chicago.

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. C. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

Our Library Table.

TEN MEN OF MONEY ISLAND is a somewhat unique conception, written for the purpose of explaining, in the simplest manner possible, the system of finance as practiced in this country. The author, S. F. Norton, calls it "The Primer of Finance," and such it is, though of more interest than primers usually possess. Mr. Norton sends out ten individuals to "start a new world." They establish themselves on an island, having but little to begin life with beyond intelligence. Through their needs, they solve, by degrees, the problems of division of labor, overproduction, and the adjusting of public burdens. They climb the ladder of citizenship until a demand for money is filled by silver and gold coins, and until, through the greed of a few, dishonest banking becomes the hot-bed in which is engendered financial crises, mortgages, pauperism and crime; then the people arouse themselves, tear down the faulty structures and out of their sad experiences build a new system altogether admirable. Although the author has amusingly disregarded certain inconsistencies of plot and narrative, he tells most serious facts in a very clear and attractive style.

F. J. Schulte and Company, Publishers, 298 Dearborn street, Chicago.

SHORT STORIES, a magazine of select fiction, published by The Current Literature Pub. Co., 52-54 Lafayette Place, New York City. $3.00 per year. Fifteen complete stories appear in the May issue of this periodical, the most striking of which is "The Lifted Veil," from the pen of George Eliot,—a strange tale founded upon the ever-fascinating mysteries of clairvoyance and hypnotism.

G. W. Burnam, of Luzerne, N. Y., is the author of a very practical little tract entitled, "TRACT DISTRIBUTING—HOW, WHEN, WHERE. Mr. Burnam plainly appreciates the fact that here is a means of seed-sowing not to be despised or overlooked, since the unobtrusive leaflet found on street-car seat or in waiting-room, or quietly handed to the passer-by may be the means of arresting a thoughtless heart and calling its attention to higher things. Address Box 115, Luzerne, N. Y.

THE NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE is what one would expect it to be—from its name—sound and sweet throughout. The articles are illustrated by pictures of uncommon beauty, and the subjects presented are those which reach the majority. The May issue is especially fine. "The South American Republics," by William Eleroy Curtis, makes one feel at home with the southern neighbors who are living their national life, and strengthening their national characteristics so near our doors. Horatio J. Perry takes one "On the Track of Columbus," following in fancy the same route followed by that "ancient mariner" four hundred years ago, and experiencing the new and strange sensations he experienced. "The Governor's Reception," by Frances M. Abbott, is a quaint story built upon the simple plot of rich "city-folks" with poor country relations, a bit of romance, and the consequent events that might have been but were not. "The Chicago Stock Yards," by P. J. O'Keefe, will attract many readers, since Chicago is, for a while, at least, the real "hub" of the gigantic wheel of progress. The article is written with minute care, illustrated in realistic style, and is a good dissertation upon that far-famed Chicago institution. Among the remaining noteworthy contributions one is pleased to read Elizabeth Le Baron Marsh's charming description of "Jenny Lind in Northampton." Published by New England Magazine Corporation, 86 Federal St., Boston.

GOOD FORM, issued monthly by Walter L. Gallup & Co., Chicago. $2 per year.

This magazine is one that wins its own way to the admiration of the wives and sisters—the home-makers. It is choicely illustrated, with fresh, readable articles on everyday topics. In the May number, M. D. Kimball has an illustrated article on "Photographing for Fun." Mary E. Cardwill writes with commendable good sense on "Children on Tiptoe—That Horrid Examination." Mrs. Ida B. Gillson takes one on a charming journey in her "Round Trip to Alaska." Nixon Waterman's second article on "The Creation of Newspapers," is entertaining and instructive. Amber's "String of Beads" is full of beauty—the changeful beauty of true gems, with their glinting light and shadow. The departments of GOOD FORM make a small, well-edited cyclopedia of hints and helps on house-keeping, home-decorating and furnishing, hygiene, gardening, and practical amusements.

An interesting feature of THE AMERICAN ANTIQUARIAN AND ORIENTAL JOURNAL for May is Dr. W. R. Birdsall's paper on "The Cliff Dwellings of the Canons of the Mesa Verde." The Mesa Verde is a plateau or tableland in southwestern Colorado. Much of the valuable information concerning this ancient people is due to the painstaking research of the three Wetherhill brothers, with whom Dr. Birdsall sojourned during the summer of '91. J. P. MacLean's third article on the "Pre-Columbian Discovery of America," also appears in this issue. THE AMERICAN ANTIQUARIAN is such reading as one cannot do on crowded street cars, or at busy lunch-tables. Looking ever backward, as it does, into the silence of dead ages, the reader has need of quiet concentration of thought to gather to himself its wealth of exhumed treasures.

Address S. D. Peet, Avon, Ill., or 175 Wabash Avenue, Chicago. Issued bi-monthly. Terms, $4 per annum.

All the reading world is eagerly scanning magazines and newspapers for information regarding the World's Fair. Fully competent to meet this demand is the WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION ILLUSTRATED. It is wholly devoted to the great world-feature of 1893, and aside from its present interest will prove a valuable accession to libraries, public and private. Each number is beautifully and abundantly furnished with illustrations of buildings in progress and completed, of the beautiful Fair sites, and photographs of artists, architects and commissioners. The reading matter is first grade, yet adapted to all classes of readers. It is an education to follow, even in print, this gigantic enterprise of the closing century, and those who have faithfully read this valuable monthly will be equipped to intelligently enjoy the Exposition.

J. B. Campbell, president and general manager, 159 and 161 Adams street, Chicago.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

THE TEMPLE.

By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days.—Heb. 11:30.

It has been decided to honor John G. Whittier with something more than merely his name on a tablet. A memorial clock in Willard Hall is to be designed and dedicated to him; it is to be very chaste and beautiful, will face the rostrum, and be run by electricity. The design is not yet fully decided upon. Miss Willard says she wants to have a ship in full sail as one of its emblems. The following stanza written by Whittier for Willard Hall, is to be inscribed upon it;

"Freighted with love, our temperance ship
Around the world shall sail,
Take heart and hope, dear mariners,
God's errands never fail."

The clock will cost about $500. Let our rich men and women subscribe liberally to this unique memorial to the great Quaker poet. Don't wait until his eyes are closed to earthly scenes, and his ear deaf to earthly voices before you send your offerings. Let his eye be gladdened and his heart rejoiced with the sight of the beautiful memorial when his presence graces, as we hope it will, the dedicatory services at the Temple, June, 1893. Walter G. Tucker, Wellesley, Mass., sends $10 for the Whittier memorial.

***

How it cheers our heart to see our brothers take an interest in the Temple. Mr. James Turner, of Nashville, Tenn., a warm friend of the cause who twice has sent gifts to the Temple, now sends a check for $100. He writes: "I take pleasure in presenting the enclosed check for the Temple. That the women may much sooner than they at present calculate, have a full and clear title (unencumbered) to their building, and that the cause so dear to their hearts may grow brighter and brighter unto a perfect consummation, is my desire and prayer." He wishes the name of Mrs. Wm. J. Cummings, Nashville, Tenn., to be placed on a tablet. He says she is eminently worthy to receive that honor. Of the above amount James Turner gave $60, W. J. Cummings, $25, W. K. Phillips, $10, and R. E. Page, $5. A letter received from Ottawa, Ill., contained $1 and the following words: "An admirer of the untiring zeal and perseverance of Jane Weeden sends the enclosed $1 for the proposed tablet in her honor."

The W. C. T. U. of Indiana, Pa., sends $71.91 which completes its pledge of $100. The money is to be applied on a tablet in memory of Rev. Wm. Shadrack, D. D. Mrs. L. H. Hill says he was a pioneer missionary among the Baptists, and established church after church with marvelous results. He died at the ripe age of eighty-six. She adds: "The W. C. T. U. of Indiana, Pa., is proud that this man, whom everybody loved and revered for his many virtues and great ability, was a member of their union." Mrs. M. O. Kooser, Somerset, Pa., sends $100, which was bequeathed to the Temple by Miss Belle Kimmell, who died July, 1891. Mrs. Kooser writes: "The money has been paid into my hands within a few days by the executor of her will, and I herewith inclose draft for $100 in full of bequest to the Temperance Temple at Chicago." Mrs. E. L. Howland, Manchester, N. Y., sends $15, given by the Howland family toward a memorial for Mrs. M. J. Decker, a former president of Ontario county, now entered into rest. Mrs. Howland writes: "Mrs. Decker's labors as organizer, also as treasurer of this state in former years, are remembered by many who wish that her name may be engraved upon the walls of our beautiful Temple."

***

Two dollars come from Mrs. Alice C. Martin, the savings of her little son, Willie, who died April, 1889, at Tulare, South Dakota. At last a gift comes from a Y union for the Julia A. Ames memorial window, $3.65 is sent for this purpose by the Y of Angola, N. Y., also $2 for the same window comes from the New London, Wis., Independent Order of Good Templars. $100 comes from the Y's of Dorchester, Mass. Miss Fessenden, the talented daughter of Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, state president of Massachusetts, has been the moving power in raising this gift. The Wayne, Nebraska, W. C. T. U. sends $100—this also includes a full baby band. The Morristown, N. J., W. C. T. U. sends $47—on pledge of $100. The Greenwich, Conn., union sends $25—on a $100 pledge. The Y's of Providence, R. I., send $38, as first installment on $100. The Corunna, Mich., W. C. T. U. sends $10, as first payment on a $100 pledge. A county union at Afolkey, Ill., sends $15. Mrs. Laura Kramer writes, "As we are deprived of many ways of gathering money we succeeded in making a quilt, and by ten and twenty-five cent names secured the enclosed sum." This union, no doubt, will succeed in raising its $100. Will not other county unions try the same method? The Englewood, Ill., W. C. T. U. sends $30, which completes its gift of $100. The West Duluth, Minn., union sent $35, on a $100 pledge. The Lucas county, Ohio, W. C. T. U. sends $74, making $80 paid on pledge. The Jordan, Ill., union sends $35 on $100.

***

The latest purchaser of Temple trust bonds is our generous friend, Henry H. Faxon, of Quincy, Mass. Let all who desire a perfectly safe investment secure these bonds. They are as safe as government bonds and pay an annual dividend of six per cent. Write Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle St., Chicago, for all particulars. Send a two cent stamp to Mrs. M. B. Carse, The Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, and secure a mite-box and full description of the Temple. All checks should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh and all matters in regard to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your government extends.

NAMES | RESIDENCES.

We must have one million names this year. Will not men and women, youths and maidens, boys and girls, who love the great cause of home protection, paste this petition on a nice, white sheet of paper and circulate it to the best of their ability, sending the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Rest Cottage Evanston, Ill.?

Signal Notes.

"I WANT," says Sir Wilfrid Lawson, "the hearthstone vote. Every person in the household of full age should have a vote to preserve the purity of the home."

SINCE January 1, Mrs. Annie Jenness-Miller has given sixty-six lectures in twenty-two states on the subject of dress-reform, and finds the interest constantly increasing.

IT was stated at the pastors' college students' meeting in London recently that Mr. Spurgeon left enough sermons in manuscript to supply a weekly issue for a dozen years.

NO AFTER-DINNER smoking was the rule at a recent banquet of the St. David's Society, a Welsh organization of New York, attended by about three hundred persons, of whom at least seventy-five were women.

THE sixteenth annual report of the British Women's Temperance Association gives a list of forty-eight new branches and eleven Y branches gained to the association during the year, bringing up the total number of societies to 577.

THERE is said to be an abstinence society in St. Petersburg with six hundred members whose activity has consisted in establishing no less than eight tea-houses in that part of the city where drinking places most abound. An inebriates' asylum is also contemplated.

"AMONG persons selected with care for physical soundness and sobriety the death rate is more profoundly affected by the use of intoxicating drinks than from any other cause, apart from heredity," is the statement of the president of one of the oldest life insurance companies in England.

THE Ohio physical education law provides for regular instruction in all grades of the public schools, in first and second-class cities (those of five thousand inhabitants and over) and in all the state institutions. The boards of education are made responsible for the enforcement of the law, and are required to adapt the instruction to the capacity of the pupils in the various grades.

AN American lady who uses only a certain beverage of her own invention for nourishment, is undergoing a thirty days' fast in London. She claims that by use of this temperance drink people can do very comfortably without either food or drink for a long period. She is a philanthropist and expects to show that with her liquor, any one can live easily on about three pence a day. What a boon this would prove to the starving poor!

REV. DR. E. O. BUXTON, of Cleveland, has taken up the work of exhibiting to the public the non-interference of the police with crime. He shows how juries are bribed and perjurers flourish, while the workers of iniquity are not punished. He says that the theaters of Cleveland are hotbeds of vice and immorality, and handles the authorities without gloves. There should be more ministers engaged in this same line of effort, and it is cause for rejoicing to notice that from day to day their number multiplies.

THE press committee of the National Prohibition convention issues a breezy circular urging a large attendance of Prohibitionists at the coming great gathering June 29 and 30, at Cincinnati. Music Hall will admit 10,000 people, enough to start a tidal wave of enthusiasm over the nation. The committees are all "hustling," and satisfactory arrangements are being made for the entertainment and profit of all who attend. For hotel accommodations address Mr. E. J. Morris, chairman reception committee, 10 West Third street.

False Economy

Is practiced by many people, who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

"Come, put away your silken thread,
Sweet Dorothy," the young man said,
And knelt before the maid.

He praised her snowy gown so fair,
Her lily hand, her shining hair,—
"Whence comes their charm?" he said.

The maid replied with laughing tone,—
"Nature's been kind to me, I own.
A secret for your ear alone—
It will not fill you with surprise,
In Ivory Soap the magic lies."

COPYRIGHT 1891, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

Buy inside the
RED LINES.
WORK FOR ALL.
Send for our NEW PLAT.
Just out—FREE—of
Harvey.
WALTER THOMAS MILLS & CO.,
161 LA SALLE ST., CHICAGO.

GRATIS We will make you one of our superior large crayon portraits free of charge for a sample because we wish you to use your influence to assist us in securing orders. Send us a photo or other small picture of yourself or any other person. Will forfeit $5.00 for any photo we fail to return safely with crayon. Refer to First National Bank, Chicago, or any Mercantile Agency as to our standing and responsibility. Have received many testimonials among which is one from Gov. Fifer of Illinois. We are making a high grade genuine crayon portrait which must not be confounded with the poor article turned out by the so-called "Crayon Companies," "Portrait Societies" or "Copying Houses." Send photo and be convinced.
Kellogg & Mayer, Artists, 96 State St., Chicago.

CHICAGO INVESTMENTS Before risking your money write to me for the facts about values.
Address MRS. L. J. LANPHERE
with stamps 211 Wabash Ave.
Highest references. Chicago, Ill.

The "Little Beauty" A $5.00 Scale for $1.00
Capacity 1-4 oz. to 4 lbs. Steel Bearings, Brass Scoop and Beam. For Housekeepers, Offices or Stores.

1,000 Other Articles at Half Price.
A $45.00 Sewing Machine $10.00
A 900-lb. Platform Scale .. 15.00
A $125.00 Top Buggy 50.00
A 3 1-4 Ton Wagon Scale .. 40.00
A $25.00 Road Cart 9.00
A $15.00 Single Harness .. 4.95
A 240-lb. Platform Scale .. 3.00
Farmers, do your own Blacksmithing. Any tools less than Wholesale Prices. Send for Lists Free. Chicago Scale Co., Chicago.

$7.50 FOR A DAYS' WORK.
GOOD PAY! STEADY WORK IF DESIRED, Address
JAMES LEE & CO., 215 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.
Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town. Send for Catalogue.

THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB Co.
180 So. Canal Street, Chicago.

Between "QUITE" and "ALMOST"
LIES ALL THE DIFFERENCE IN THE WORLD.
INVEST IN HARVEY
IN HARVEY ITSELF! NOT JUST OUTSIDE OF HARVEY.
Deal direct with THE HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION, of which T. W. Harvey, after whom the town is named, is President—the Men who made Harvey possible, who created Harvey, and who stand at Harvey's helm to-day.
For maps, price lists, full and late particulars, send to
The Harvey Land Association,
825 ROOKERY BLDG., 217 LA SALLE ST., CHICAGO.

FREE.
BEAUTIFUL BOOK ON THE CARE OF THE TEETH.
ADDRESS
E. W. HOYT & CO.
LOWELL, MASS.

ORIGINAL DRESS REFORM ROOMS.
(Established 1875.)
Complete lines of Equipoise and Delsarte Waists, Jenness-Miller Bodices, Bust Supports, Jersey-fitting combination suits, etc., etc. Send stamp for free Illustrated Catalogue.
MRS. S. W. PIKE,
75 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill

A Cyclopedia of the Sabbath Question.
CRAFTS'
SABBATH for MAN.
New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, just issued. 672 Pages. 12mo., Cloth, $1.50.
Descriptive Circulars mailed on application.
Sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price, by
The Baker & Taylor Co., 740 Broadway, N.Y

YOUR NAME on 25 Lovely Cards, 1 Ring, 1 Lace Pin, 1 PATENT FOUNTAIN PEN COMPLETE, 1 FORGET-ME-NOT ALBUM, 400 Album Verses &c. All 10c. Laure. Card Co., Box 13 Clintonville, Conn.

AGENTS WANTED FOR OUR NEW BOOK,
Onward, Christian Soldiers,
By Mary Lowe Dickinson, General Secretary "The International Order of The King's Daughters and Sons," Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., Editor of "The Golden Rule," Rev. Joseph F. Berry, D. D., Editor of "The Epworth Herald," Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, World's Superinten't of "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union," Miss Kate F. Kimball, Executive Secretary "The Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle," Rev. J. M. Coon, D. D., Editor of "The Loyalist," giving a Complete and Authentic History of the Origin, Growth, Objects and Accomplishments, together with the Constitutions, By-Laws, Forms, etc., of the Grand Army of Organized Christian Workers comprised in "The International Order of The King's Daughters and Sons," "The Christian Endeavor Society," "The Epworth League" of the Methodist Episcopal Church, "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union," "The Chautauqua Circle," "The Baptist Young People's Union of America," With Portraits of the Officers and Leaders of the several Societies and Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, TOGETHER WITH SEVEN Beautifully Illustrated Hymns,
Handsomely Bound in Pure White Silk Cloth, Embellished with Gold, Silver, and the Colors and Emblems of the several Orders.
Every Member will want a Copy of this Valuable Book.
SOLD BY SUBSCRIPTION ONLY.
Send for our Confidential Terms and Circulars. Write To-Day.
Published by The Brodix Publishing Co.,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Four Books
YOU MUST NOT MISS READING

John Remington, Martyr. By PANSY (Mrs. G. R. ALDEN) and Mrs. C. M. LIVINGSTON. 12mo, $1.50
This forceful story is all alive with eloquent pleas for prohibition. Its hero is one of those earnest, conscientious ministers who can see no half-way steps in the great work to which he devotes himself in the pulpit, the lecture-field, and in private life. The malignant hatred of his opponents culminates in a cowardly attempt on his life, but though a physical wreck he carries out the grand purpose of his ministry and exerts a wonderful influence for good. Strong, impassioned, pathetic, the story is one to move all hearts interested in true temperance work.

Men and Events of Forty Years. By JOSIAH B. GRINNELL. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.50.
It might well be glory enough for one man to found a town in which not one drop of intoxicating liquor was allowed to be sold. His personal influence was used, however, not only for prohibition, but for all the great reforms of the day. It was Mr. Grinnell's parlor which sheltered John Brown and his company when they were running off fugitive slaves to Canada. He was the friend of Phillips, Sumner, Lincoln, Whittier and many other of our great men; the founder and supporter of Grinnell University, and one of Iowa's most valued and most famous citizens. His book is crowded with interesting incidents.

Jack Brereton's Three Months' Service. By Mrs. MARIA MCINTOSH COX. 12mo, illustrated, $1 25.
This is a vividly realistic story of the Civil War as seen through the eyes of a boy whose soldier-father bound him to home-service during his absence It will give the young people who have grown up since the war, some idea of the heroism, the suffering and the self-sacrifice that marked the struggle, both at home and in the field. The heroism of the wives and mothers left behind by our brave soldiers, the nobility of character wrought out in their children, are touchingly and beautifully shown in this story of real incidents and events.

Looking Out on Life. A Book for Girls. By Rev. F. E. CLARK, D. D. 12mo, 75 cents.
Dr. Clark's "Danger Signals" and "Our Business Boys" have been of immense benefit to boys and young men. His new volume consists of informal talks to girls, and abounds in crisp, bright, wholesome suggestions about their health, habits, tastes, work, playtime, and many other important matters. Dr. Clark has drawn freely on the wisdom and experience of others to supplement his own good counsel.

D. LOTHROP CO., Pubs., Boston.
Send for New Catalogue, free.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, June 9, 1892. Number 23.

Ursula Dietrick 2419 19th St 9292

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The eruption of Mt. Vesuvius is increasing in violence.

Mrs. President Harrison is seriously ill from nervous prostration.

The Revolutionists of Venezuela win a victory over the government forces.

Philadelphia will have a model of the Centennial at the Columbian Exposition.

The American Medical Association convened in annual session at Detroit on Tuesday.

Over six thousand men were employed on the Columbian Exposition grounds during May.

It has been decided to place two memorial windows in Westminster Abbey for the late Minister Sewell.

Bills admitting Arizona and New Mexico into statehood passed the lower House of Congress, June 6.

Our National President has been made delegate-at-large to the National Prohibition Convention, with but one dissenting vote among six hundred delegates.

The Wisconsin World's Fair Commissioners have adopted a proposition to erect two statues to typify the culture, energy and progress of the women of that state.

J. Sloat Fassett, of New York, was elected temporary, and Governor McKinley, of Ohio, permanent chairman of the Republican convention in Minneapolis.

The National Republican convention opened at Minneapolis Tuesday morning. Aside from the two leading candidates, President Harrison and Ex-Secretary Blaine, the names of McKinley, Alger, Sherman and Rusk are prominently mentioned for the Presidential nomination.

The awful combination of flood and flames along Oil Creek in Pennsylvania devastated the towns of Oil City and Titusville on Sunday, June 5. One hundred and and twenty-three bodies have been recovered up to date and the search is still being prosecuted. The catastrophe is second only to the Johnstown flood of two years ago.

INSTEAD of our usual advertising cover pages this week, we issue a twenty-page paper, devoting more space to reading matter and less to advertisements. Correspondence will be found on pages fifteen and sixteen, and book reviews on page thirteen.

THE national reformers are to hold a meeting for council in the parlors of the Palace Hotel, Cincinnati at 10 a. m., June 28. We believe that such a conference will be most helpful to clear ideas and brave purposes for the people's sacred cause.

ALL manuscripts and subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL should be sent to The Temple, corner Monroe and La Salle streets, Chicago, and not to Evanston, Ill., as much time and expense are involved in forwarding them from Evanston to the city.

IN response to many inquiries, let it be understood that every number of THE UNION SIGNAL contains editorials, paragraphs or other contributions from the pen of Lady Henry Somerset, and that the series of character sketches which has awakened so much interest is interrupted for a few weeks only, by the exigent duties attending our English editor's participation in the temperance work of the oncoming parliamentary elections.

MISS MARY ALLEN WEST sails on the steamer Alameda for Honolulu, July 22. On the 16th of August the Oceanic sails from San Francisco to Yokohama, Japan, and will touch at Honolulu a week later, taking Miss West to Japan about September 1. After many weeks of helpful work in Northern California, Miss West has returned to the home of the friends whose guest she is, in Tropico, Los Angeles county, Cal., and will remain there until the Pacific Grove school of methods, which occurs July 14th to 20th, near Monterey.

THE National Temperance Hospital moved into its newly rented quarters on the North Side the first of June, the address now being 1619 Diversey avenue, Chicago, instead of 3411 Cottage Grove ave., where it has been for several years. The new building is a most convenient one for hospital purposes and delightfully situated for health and sanitation, being near the lake and on elevated ground. All friends of this most worthy institution are urged to contribute towards furnishing the new rooms, as the present building is much larger than the old one and necessitates a large outlay for equipments.

THE World's Parliament of Religions will be, perhaps, the most remarkable gathering the world has ever witnessed. While loyal Christian men are its sponsors and organizers the representatives of all religions will be warmly welcomed and expected equally to present their views and reasons for the same. As a mountain peak gains rather than loses by having grouped around it hills and mountains of less altitude, so Christianity has nothing to fear and everything to hope by this comparison of other religions with its own over-topping glories. We earnestly suggest that in view of the fact that the religions of the world include the women of the world more generally than they do the men, women leaders in religion and philanthropy be included on the program of this parliament. To do less than this would be to ignore the steady momentum of eighteen centuries of the equal gospel of our Lord.

THE Presbyterian General Assembly adopted, with shouts and hat waving, resolutions calling the attention of ministers and students to the evils of the tobacco habit. The United Presbyterian Church at its General Assembly in Pittsburg, Pa., decided that women attached to mission work are independent of any "board," and responsible only to the General Assembly. An order was given by the Moderator that the women's board had the right to send a regular delegate to the assembly. The Theological Seminary connected with this church voted unanimously to admit women. Three distinct steps along the shining path of justice have thus been taken by a great denomination of Christians. Meanwhile the Presbyterian General Assembly has sent to its presbyteries the question, "Shall we establish the order of Deaconesses?" a very progressive movement for that very conservative body. These advances were all made in the same week that the Methodists voted to regard women as laymen, and Cumberland Presbyterians agreed to let them be "ruling elders." Indeed, that last week in May was the most significant in the history of church administrative annals in modern times. Now let us mildly ask our Congregational and Baptist brethren, whose form of church government lends itself so naturally to equality in the Household of Faith, if they will not be so good as to invite the women who lead their missionary societies, to seats in all the meetings, including the "A. B. C. F. M.," and places on the programs wherever men holding analogous offices have seats and places. We believe this has only to be asked in order to be done.

RUSKIN never said a better thing than when he advised the man and the woman who would be successful, "to prepare themselves for good society and then—keep out of it." Whoever has taken for his companions the best books cannot have failed to become really refined, and whoever is refined is ready for good society; and those most ready for good society are quite likely to keep out of it. They have the best thoughts of all the ages in their books; this they know, and go directly to the root of the matter in the quiet and restful privacy of their own homes, gathering their best thoughts to give to the world either in words or the finer poetry of action. They are not unsocial; they have simply found a better way than what Wordsworth called:

"The greetings where no kindness is,
And all the dreary intercourse of daily life."

By which we mean that the conventionalities of the reception, party and great entertainment of whatever kind are a weariness to the flesh and do not uplift the spirit. The best society is enjoyed by those who, as Emerson has aptly said, "Take their pleasures like poppies in the corn." This was a reminiscence of his trip among the great golden fields of France, brilliant with poppies, but planted for grain; the flowers being only an incident. Whoever goes into the harvest field of the world will find plenty of flowers, but they will not interrupt the reaping of the golden fruitage of the year, which is to be human nature's daily food. If this be treason, make the most of it—and point out a better way.

THE question having been broached, it might be well to mention that our missionaries are not expected, by the executive committee of the World's W. C. T. U., to remain long in one place, unless explicitly appointed for that purpose. They are heralds of a better time; they go to look over the field and bring us word; to strengthen the things that remain, as well as to lengthen the cords already drawn. We believe that in this way they best serve the enterprise we have on hand; but we expect soon to be able to send scores where we now send one, and when this large number can be furnished, they will remain in certain assigned localities. Indeed, we are already sending out Miss Palmer to a fixed field—South Africa—and we expect our British and Canadian sisters will send one each to India and China. Christian ministers and good women from Australia bring word that Miss Ackerman has been indeed a gracious pioneer in organizing the W. C. T. U. all through Australia, and that the society has become the greatest power in that country for philanthropy and reform. Going out young, unbefriended, and without a penny in her purse, Miss Ackerman has wrought that which should fill all our hearts with gladness. It has caused her dangerous illness, and brought her to gray hairs, though she is hardly thirty years of age. She should have our sympathy and prayers. Mrs. Leavitt, Miss Ackerman, Dr. Bushnell, Mrs. Andrew, Mary Allen West, and Miss Alice R. Palmer, are now our surveyors of new fields and organizers in the most distant parts of the earth. Let us hope that the habitude of lifting up our hearts to God for them is becoming deeply graven in mind and heart, so that we cannot see the hands approach the noon hour on the dial plate of watch or clock, and cannot hear the striking of the noon bell from any steeple without at once thinking of them in the uplift of faith, and prayer for Divine guidance in their perilous journey and heroic deeds.

CAN SHE SERVE?

BY DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

They say she should not govern,
For man was made the head;
First strength, and beauty after—
And thus the two were wed.
And all along the ages
He in the master role,
Has lifted o'er his consort
The scepter of control;
But what of the beginning,
When God gave this command,
"And let them have dominion—"
Not him with single hand?

And when the Lord of Glory,
Of men the kingliest,
Came down to earth so lowly
And brought a new behest—
He pricked the splendid bubble
That glittered in men's eyes,
And brought the reign of service
And throned it from the skies,
While eager feet came pressing
To reach the golden stair,
And climbed to feats of duty,
By courage, love and prayer.

Are ye alone the chosen,
My brothers, in the race?
If service be the greater
Then give her service place!
A hand of bronze or lily
May bear the standard where
The heart alone makes answer—
God honors those who dare;
And if ye fail of duty
The prophetess must come—
Not less a soul heroic
For love at home, sweet home.

Less rule and more of service
Is earth's great human cry;
Open the courts of duty
And love and merit try;
The soul hath but one measure,
Not always seen or told,
'Tis love and will united,
And more than power and gold;
If service be the greater,
Then, brothers, fear not ye,
But take the throne together—
And love the crown shall be.

Cazenovia, N. Y.

NURSE WESTGATE'S INSUBORDINATION.

BY MARIE J. HESSE.

At the clang of the bell of a great hospital in the city the door opened. Through the open portals was borne a man suffering from an advanced stage of disease. He had been discovered alone in a small, bare room of a tenement house, too sick or indifferent to care. The landlady, accustomed to his prolonged spells of absence thought nothing of it, and John Martin had few friends who were concerned.

"He looked sick-like some time ago," said Mrs. Gowan, who kept the rooms. "He war drunk so much that it war a chance of his gettin' in once a week. So long as he paid the rent it war all the same to me whether he came or went." In justification of herself she garrulously added: "I has a hard lot enough, and Lor' knows what would become of me if I went ferritin' round in folks' rooms to see whether they be sick or well!"

As the ambulance rolled away from her door, Mrs. Gowan stood with her hands upon her hips watching it down the street. Her stout, red face reflected a strange mixture of gratification to be rid of what might prove a troublesome tenant, and a bit of real sympathy for the sufferer, both more or less subdued by the reminder of the rent which would no longer swell her weekly proceeds.

At the hospital the practiced eye of the house physician took a mental inventory of the sick man. He seemed to be a man of forty years. In spite of the marks of dissipation brought out strongly by disease, there was that which told of a noble nature, a manhood hidden away under the debris of a wrecked life. His better nature, crippled early in life, went maimed through the unequal struggle.

Dr. Farnham raised his hand in his own; the man was suffering from an advanced stage of typhoid fever. "A severe case," said he, "with little or no constitution to warrant a cure." Something won the physician who was accustomed to see suffering in all its stages. He felt an unusual interest in this case as he was borne away to the fever ward.

While he sat waiting for Miss Westgate, the nurse to whom he would consign this patient, his mind was filled with speculations: "Some poor fellow who has been downed; this life has been hard on him—he evidently began to unravel its mystery at the wrong end and got into an awful snarl;—wonder who he is? Strange that the billows that lift one man on their crests shou[illegible] another down in the trough and keep [illegible] there." His thoughts flew over his own life—his youth, so fortunate, so bright, made a fine background for the rest of the picture. His college days, his almost astonishing success since in his chosen profession—surely he had lived on the crests, while John Martin had been held down in the under-tow.

The chain of his reflection was arrested at the entrance of Miss Westgate, a tall, lithe, fair-haired person, with a sweet, thoughtful face and serious gray eyes; in her nurse's cap she was the embodiment of a gentle, ministering spirit to the sick and suffering.

"You sent for me, Dr. Farnham?" she asked.

"Yes," he answered, and in a short, professional way explained to her the seriousness of the case. "He is a very sick man, there is little or no hope for him, but you must do your best, Miss Westgate."

"Oh, doctor," pleaded she, "my last patient was such a hard one, and I am not rested. Do not send me. I might not be able to do the case justice."

"I am sorry, Miss Westgate," insisted the doctor, "but I must have some one whom I can trust implicitly. You must act; I cannot trust this case to an incompetent nurse."

"But, doctor," urged Miss Westgate, "you know my training."

"Oh! that's all right, that's all right!" smiled Dr. Farnham. "I must have you any way."

An earnest expression overspread his face: "That fellow interests me. You must let him talk to you—if he will—though I fancy it's little enough of his history he will give."

As Miss Westgate disappeared he sat thinking a moment. "He will tell her his story, I'll warrant; she has such motherly, reliable ways that I've seen many a poor fellow brought in here who meant to die unknown, but ended by confiding in her. She always helps them"—and the vision of the tall, womanly nurse flitted across his mind; but with her came a disturbing element also, which caused the good doctor's brow to cloud. He was so sure, however, of his ground, that he dispelled the thought of any difficulty he might have with this young woman who held ideas not down exactly in doctor-books, and smiled again at the thought of the serious gray eyes and the firm lips. He had heard of her "asserting some opinions she had learned at her training school, rather uncomfortably with other physicians of lesser note; but with him—well, at any rate the patient would have the best of care, for Nurse Westgate was one of the most proficient he had ever met, and her care, alone, was worth more than the medicine," as he had smilingly confessed on several occasions.

The doctor's diagnosis was a correct one. John Martin lay for weeks sick unto death, unknown and moaning his life away. Whatever of weariness the nurse felt had apparently been forgotten, for her sympathies had gone out to the sick man, and she spared herself no effort for his comfort and recovery. Her gentle hand soothed the heated brow, her earnest eyes were ever on the watch that no change escape them. To John Martin, who had long been an alien from home and gentle influences, she seemed like an angel, and through his fevered brain ran the words, "And He shall give His angels charge concerning thee." Her quickperceptive faculty enabled her to read his desire. She hastened to his side, "What is it, Mr. Martin? Do you wish to speak to me?"

His lips moved in uncertain response.

"Do you wish me to write to your mother?" vouchsafed she.

A shadow crossed his spare face but for the tear that escaped from the closed eyes she would have thought her question unheard. At length he opened them and faintly responded:

"Nurse, if I die, you may write, but if I live, forget what I will tell you." Then followed a sad story of his life—a life so full of hope and promise, so joyous, wrecked on cruel rocks. He was the son of wealthy parents, who had given him a liberal college education which he had sown with a generous supply of wild oats. After college, a hasty marriage, which proved to be more fortunate than most marriages of the kind, in that the wife realized the danger to her husband and did much to stay his downward course. Old companions and habits were no match for his will-power or his wife's persuasion. After years of gradual debasement the wife died, broken-hearted, leaving John Martin like a ship without an anchor. The descent became more rapid, till, cast from friends and home, he was left to live out his miserable life alone, and die—God knows how!

One dark, rainy night he reeled along the street, miserable, cold and wet, and staggered into a mission, more to breathe its warmth than to escape the police or receive any benefit from the service in progress. A woman with a strong, pure face pleaded alternately with God to have mercy upon her weak, erring brothers, and with the motley, dethroned manhood before her to accept His mercy. Her face glowed with the fervor of her plea; her words came quick and burning; her whole being swayed with the emotion of the hour. At last, clasping her hands wildly before her she cried with a voice trembling with tearful intensity, "He will save you. He will save to the uttermost! He will save you!"

Somehow through the mist the burning words sank into John Martin's mind. He staggered into the air, no longer drunk. The words kept repeating themselves over and over in his ears. The noises of the street, the tumult of business, the hurry of the throng all said, "He will save you to the uttermost—to the uttermost, to the uttermost!" He could not escape them. Almost crazed, he hurried to his room, where he might shut them out, but it was useless. His own footsteps re-echoed them as he walked the floor. Hour after hour passed—the words had fastened themselves upon him. He fell beside the bed and God looked upon a stricken soul. He prayed as he had never done before. At last, weak and exhausted, he rose and threw himself upon the bed, watching till the dawn looked in with friendly eyes through the small and not too clean window. From that bed John Martin rose, still a shattered wreck, but with a determination to gather the scattered fragments of his ill-spent life.

Two months had passed. His system, undermined by the old habits, became a prey to disease. When first confined to his bed he hoped that he might die; he found the struggle too hard. Beset on every side to return to his old life, he hardly dared leave the narrow little room for food lest he be overtaken.

"Oh, nurse," panted he, "no one but God knows what a struggle it has been."

Her sympathetic eyes filled again and again as she listened to the story of the awful conflict; again and again she begged of him to cease speaking that his strength might be hoarded; but no command could stop the floodgates of confidence in this man who was hungry for a true friend. As his strength began to fail him, he faintly whispered, "If I die, write to mother about my struggle for liberty; perhaps she can forgive for all the sorrow I have caused her—but—if I live—you are to forget what I have said—remember! If I succeed, I'll go back to her—if I fail—well—no matter," and his voice failed.

Chicago, Ill.

(To be Continued.)

LOUISE MICHEL.

BY RILLA NORTON.

Strong-minded women are not purely a nineteenth century product. Such is the variable quantity which we call propriety that what is right and natural in one age becomes, in another, unnatural and improper, in the eyes of society.

When Catherine Sforza used against her enemies the arms and courage of a heroine of the sixteenth century, resisting Alexander VI., enduring insult and imprisonment, all Italy applauded, and men wrote Virago crudelissima e di gran animo. Let any woman to-day fight, not for personal interest, but for public good, with the same fearlessness, dignity of purpose and unflinching stoicism, and she does not, by any means, receive from her contemporaries the same encomium. In modern times the world looks askance at the woman who, for reforms, social or political, takes up the weapons which men's hands are too weak or too indolent to use.

Certain personalities become, even during their life time, legendary. Such, often among the most human, by some freak of fortune assume in the minds of others a most inhuman shape. Pronounce their names and what a phantasmagoric image presents itself, an image which has been shaped by the malicious whisperings of enemies, the noisy calumny of the press, or the silence of so-called friends.

Louise Michel is one of these. She is a woman, a fanatic, but not a monster. We owe her the respect due to all who, however misguided, have lived for a noble purpose, suffering for it hunger, insult, imprisonment, and in its defense braving even death.

She is by birthright the friend of the sinned against, and her inheritance has goaded her to action as no philosophical maxims, no political watchwords could do. She is one of the poor; she has eaten their bread and tasted their misery and shame, and with them been taught by their only teacher, adversity. She can speak for the people, not as some dilettante reformer who seeks to drown the ennui of a life of pleasure in the new sensations of philanthropic work; not as those whose charity covers a multitude of sins, sins of greed and personal ambition; but as one who has suffered as the poor suffer, who has felt all their agony of despair, and has given her life to their service.

Louise Michel was for years a teacher, and it was during the agitation and wretchedness arising from the siege of Paris that she became prominent as a socialist. Ever since, by pen and speech, she has been an uncompromising prophet of socialism.

In her opinions, as in her methods, she is original. She is not a blind adherent of any of the numerous sects of socialists, nor a fanciful theorist, and she has escaped one nightmare of the reformer, the questioning of her motives. Her life speaks for itself. Most of her efforts tend toward tearing down. She is essentially an iconoclast, and her words are often bitter and incendiary. "Others must build," she says. She sees ever before her what ought not to be. With every energy of her nature she cries out against oppression and misery. She foresees a change in the social order, and believes it impossible without the shedding of blood. What that society is to be which future generations shall raise on the ruins of the present, she does not know, and she claims that the upbuilding is not her work.

This valiant woman has not grown rich in the service of her master, misery. By her busy brain and pen she manages to supply her most primitive necessities. In the midst of the luxury of Paris, to a sensitive nature the most alluring in the world, as it is the most refined, this Spartan has lived apart, with suffering and poverty as her companions.

Just before the memorable first-of-May labor demonstration of 1890, in company with a friend, I visited several noted Parisian socialists, among them Louise Michel. On that bright April afternoon there was a sharp contrast, not agreeable to the senses, between the bewildering charm of the Champs Elysees just left, and the flat, dreary faubourg of Paris, Levallois-Perret, where, in one of the interminable, commonplace streets, Louise Michel lives when not en voyage, in exile or in prison. In a very ordinary looking apartment house we climbed several flights of ill-kept stairs, with not over buoyant spirits, and reached at last a landing where unpleasant odors were pervasive. We began to suspect that the prophetess of socialism was not a good housekeeper, and were not disappointed when a slatternly individual opened the door and we entered at once the sanctum sanctorum of the oracle. Bad repairs, a bare floor, disorder and dirt were what we took in at a glance. My journalistic friend remarked aside that to her mind a revolution was needed at once. In this unique study we awaited our hostess, a parrot on a perch by the window meanwhile screaming the name of the hated minister, "Constans." A cat, one of the odious, roaming city cats, was lapping milk from a dish near our feet, and before us was a table buried in manuscript, books and dust. There, too, lay the scattered sheets of an unfinished article. Louise Michel soon made an abrupt appearance, received us in a nervous, brusque manner, and immediately began to ask questions in a decisive voice.

She had work enough for one day to finish before night, and we realized that she had generously granted the interview before she had counted the cost. Little by little her sharp, defensive manner left her, and we could see that this armor, the armor of so many who fight life's battles, once laid aside, she could be kind, and even tender.

We talked of the coming May-day for which she had been at work and was to speak that evening.

"Yes," she said, "I hope there will be a revolution, but I do not expect it; there is so much division in the ranks. What do you want to know of my life? There is nothing to tell. Every one knows what I am and what I have done." Speaking of a fellow-worker, a clever woman and a brilliant writer, she said earnestly, "Yes, yes, she is a good woman, a good woman."

Shall I give you her portrait as we saw her that afternoon—the portrait drawn by one of her distinguished compatriots, a poet and an artist?

"The upper part of this strange, poetic, thoughtful head is like that of a man. The lower part does not accord with it, but expresses aspirations and violent desires which may be those of an unbounded charity. The thick hair is rebellious; the forehead, very high, is receding and narrow through the temples, and flattened as if by an imperious finger, to arrest the impatient flight of thought. The cheeks are large, the nose strong, but a little too far from the wide, thick mouth, slightly protruding like the chin, showing obstinacy rather than will. High cheek bones denote indomitable spirit. The neck is long, firm, virile, and carries, without bending, the head full of indignations and dreams. The eyes, protected by heavy lashes, look fixedly and seem to interrogate. Without doubt the future trembles under those lids."

Louise Michel lives with a young man and his wife, the latter the shuffling individual who opened the door for us. In this small room, surrounded by disorder, annoyed by interruptions, she writes her fiery polemics with the screech of the parrot and the mewing of the cat as accompaniments. What wonder if some harsh notes spoil their harmony?

Everything about her, gesture, glance and voice, speaks of the nervous, sensitive nature which the internal fire consumes, and which bitter hardships render yet more imperious, more unconquerable.

Admire her fanaticism we cannot, but there is something about her personality that commands respect. The shadows are lengthening over this eventful, quixotic life, and time begins to lay its benediction on the brain of this virile woman, who still holds with unwavering tenacity the faith she has suffered for during so many years—a better future for the wretched and uncared for, to whose service she has given her all of love, of devotion and of sacrifice.

RAILROAD TIES.
XII.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead.—II. Cor. 1:9.

When your letter came asking of me a sketch for the "prison number," I said, "No! those doors are shut forever; I have opened my home and the graves of my sweet dead to the world, but the cells, with their racks and thumb-screws and sticky darkness need not, ought not be unsealed." But your petition will not let me rest. You have shut me up and made "three hundred words or so" of copy the price of liberty. In vain I say "I won't," and try to work on pleasant tasks long ago set, long promised, long undone; the cast-steel prosody of the rails scans the hum of the car-wheels into interminable spondees, "three hun-dred words-for SIG-NAL prisoners!"—which proves that prison bars and chains and damps are only coarse and clumsy figures of real things invisible, delicate as a baby's smile but powerful as grates and granite walls, and obdurate as death—that prisons are not punitive, but reformatory, and that one may be "locked up" and yet "have the run" of the whole world. And so, dear jailer, I accept the terms—I will.

I think I was born with a passion for freedom. I was utterly self-reliant from my babyhood, with actual genius for persistence. I do not remember ever "giving up," so when I sat upon the narrow plank "bunk," by the courtesy, that ran along the cell side and heard the click of the padlock, the retreat of the turnkey and the clang of the steel door at the "cage" entrance, and realized that I was in jail—like a rat in a trap, I thought awful things which, even to recall, sicken me with fright. I could feel the grip of the official brute upon my throat still, aye, and for many a day the prints of his fingers were there, but he had told me nothing and I could not pick up one thread of the event beyond the cell door. I think the awfulest thing a drunkard has to suffer is the blanks. Blessings on the poor drunk woman who was shut in the next cell: presently her cursings kept me from going mad that night. * * * * I saw an eye at the wicket and knew that I was watched. I spoke; no answer. I pressed close and begged for just a word; there was no word. I stretched my arms through the meshes of the door but touched nothing. Then sitting again I watched; there was an eye at every opening of the cross bars, a solid wall of eyes. Again I sprang up and thrust my arm far through the grate and seized a hand of the poor wretch next to me who was also feeling for something in the dark. She cursed me horribly and pulled away, but I'd have gladly held her hand the whole night through, it was so human and I was so alone, and the eyes ceased at a touch of a human thing. Many a time since then I have found the touch of a real hand an antidote for delirium. * *

When I betook myself to killing time by hating whomever 'twas had caused me to be there, and a suspicion seized me that my wife had done it—the hate scorched my brain to a mere shred—such fire love makes with the black resin of anger.

I heard my name as clear as a bell-stroke, and a quick hand at the lock—saw the door swing and my wife stood there and stretched her hands to me. I sprang up and caught—nothing but the oozy, reeking bars—hate blazed again till looking down, I saw my father in his coffin as I'd seen him last, with something like a smile on his dead face; and, with a cry that appalled the whole jail to silence, threw myself upon—a cross-iron of the door—the only thing God could find there to use as a lancet, and found sleep, sanity and life by blood.

That night cured me of the drink, you think? Not at all. For five years after that I walked the earth, as free, you would have said, as Alexander, but yet, in fact, a chattel slave of the saloon, and all the time I fought like a wild beast entrapped, but wherever I went there was a prison. Till, one black January night, crazed by pain and terror, stretching my empty arms to my wife and children that seemed lost to me forever, snap! went the mainspring of my hope and with a cry I fell—against the cross of Jesus Christ and—saved a second time by blood—was free.

N. B. This article was crowded out of Flower Mission number.

WHY STAND YE IDLE?

BY HELEN M. MASON.

"And they said, Because no man hath hired us."

(Concluded.)

In view of these things what shall the projected movement do?

1. It must, by strong co-operation with those now laboring for that end, insist and insure that all work shall be performed, the neglect of which condemns any portion of the population to physical discomfort and unhealthful surroundings, and that it be done in a thorough manner, with competent and faithful oversight. This can be effected only through holding up the hands of those who are already deep and conscientious students of the conditions to be overcome. The health departments of cities must furnish the experts to elaborate plans, and power delegated to these departments must accomplish the work.

2. It shall lay under tribute every serviceable source of knowledge in this country and the world, which pertains to the work done or to be done, persistently making more and more sources available. It shall place on a low shelf those repositories of intelligence collated by Hon. Carroll D. Wright and by others who see at like advantageous angles, and it shall learn methods of simplifying and illuminating this knowledge and making it every one's possession who will consent to know. Then one thousand will not learn stenography to fill two hundred places; and, supposing the wage system to remain in vogue, as perhaps for some time it may, the price of every class of work will be adjusted to a fraction, as are the rates of provisions through the methods of the board of trade; and there will be no middlemen, except those legitimately employed in keeping the system's machinery in order. Mercantile agencies are considered a necessity, and their scope is as wide as the continent, and through them dealers can look the field over and see just where to place their useful wares. Let there be a world-wide, active labor agency, in order that man's best possession, best and frailest (for more surely than any other perishable thing it daily perishes), may perish in use and not in ruin.

3. It shall approximate by careful calculation the average number of hours to each worker requisite to accomplish all needful work, and then shall discountenance and in the end prevent (with allowance for exceptional cases) the employing of any for more than such hours, thus insuring work enough for all.

4. During the earlier stages of imperfect adjustment, all work not previously under contract, which is to be done at public expense for the public benefit—work which calls for unskilled labor only, and of which the much-agitated street and alley cleaning, and the saving of wasted material are examples—shall be divided in equal parts among all who will take a share, thorough notice having been circulated and time given for registering all applications, and a carefully appointed and impartial committee shall decide on the rate of compensation.

5. A faithful registration shall be maintained of the quality of all public work, even of the less agreeable kinds receiving the lower grades of pay. At central and branch offices of the intelligence bureau, copies of such registration shall be kept, also open books for the voluntary entry on the part of any persons of an expressed choice of employment, together with such statements or references as the applicant may believe will be helpful to his case. This book shall be arranged according to kinds and classes of work, the applicant registering his desire under its proper head. The book will itself be a source of enlightenment to those wishing to make entries showing the excess of applications over appointments in either their chosen department or any other. The entry of an applicant's name will be also his signature to a pledge that he will report as soon as settled in accordance with his recorded wish, and have this fact also entered. The expense for registering shall be the lowest possible. Why need it be more than for mailing a letter? Employers consulting the books shall also register in proof of good faith.

6. When perfected, and in such degree as it approaches perfection, it shall pension (not imprison) all seriously disabled and all aged persons, not otherwise provided with a comfortable living.

7. By whatever means inaugurated, it shall steadily aim at becoming national, fostered and conducted by the general government and unfettered by state lines.

Incidentally it will fix a minimum that shall compel private employers of unskilled labor to pay wages that shall hold hunger and rags at bay, since they must pay at least what those they wish to hire are receiving from the city or the state. It will turn the attention of workers to the less crowded employments. It will increase wages in all grades of legitimate work except where already fair or exceptionally high. It will eliminate that class now always existing, with constituents always changing, the class from which the "submerged tenth" is recruited—of persons thrown out of employment and with pride and possibly credit remaining, yet not knowing where to turn for work. It will eliminate this class and render needless that most painful of all painful effort now put forth in a fruitless search for work, besides relieving from the terror that attends the thought of being unemployed. It will facilitate merited promotion and stimulate a worthy emulation to excel in quality of work.

The distinguishing feature of the movement will be the endeavor to promote by greater light directness in the search for employment, and in time to eliminate altogether the uncertainties of the pursuit; but the consciousness that this ultimatum cannot be reached until the neglected work for which the public is responsible is taken up and systematically performed, nor until government recognition in other essential points has been secured, will ally our movement so closely as, indeed, to identify it with others already strongly championed.

Possibly it may be discovered, taking the hint from the Salvation Army, how the standing army of the nation may be made to support itself in time of peace instead of being supported for years in idleness, awaiting the always deplorable occasion for making itself useful by killing people. Some one will say this will take the work away from those who need it for support. It would take the work away, but since the army already absorbs the fruits of work, why not let it share the sweat? If doing so would deprive any of the means of self-support there is wrong somewhere, but we do not rightly locate the difficulty if we suppose it would consist in requiring those who eat to work. Make the military department useful, and reinforce the military with those who need to be made useful. Then the work can be taken care of about which future mayors make pledges, which incumbent mayors neglect, and concerning which aspiring ex-mayors explain; and then marching and drilling in schools and juvenile societies will carry suggestions other than the now deprecated ones.

Ultimately this movement may help to make way for something better than itself; and it now declares that when we have evolved that better civilization which nationalism and other social movements have prefigured, it will hope to be absorbed therein, and thus attain Nirvana.

A few words should be said about the practicability of such a work, but only a few, for it is too late in this nineteenth century of progress and invention to call anything impracticable that is good, and too late to call those dreamers who believe it possible that a few years' time may change some of our established usages. A few years did that very thing not so very long ago, and had the hand of the reformers been strengthened the destined change might have come, perhaps, without the desolation. This work is practicable if some active newspaper, some well-grounded association or a few resolute individuals possessing business wisdom and a competency, will say it shall be done. That there should be knowledge for all and employment for all, and that all should come up and possess this knowledge and this employment, is as feasible as that there should be state, county or city institutions to provide a roof and a crust for the utterly destitute; and it is applying the remedy where the disease begins. To relieve of enforced idleness and call it right, is far better than to relieve of abject suffering and call it charity.

What methods shall this movement not pursue, and by what spirit not be actuated?

It shall appeal to no clan or class, nor war on any. It shall aim to avoid negatives, and disparagement of schemes and theories, and to fraternize with everything that means helpfulness and uplifting. It shall not contrast its own with other plans of helping, but only, where needful, show that this fills a place which just now those do not. It shall even, as far as can be, eschew condemnation of those who represent systems and customs furthest from what seems right, possibly, which some believe to be responsible for the direst suffering. Often they who represent these systems are in a net as are their victims. The very systems are themselves but incident to an imperfect civilization, mistakes of immaturity. As such must we treat every evidence of a perverted social state, and meet it as a wise parent would meet the crudities of childhood,—with proper leniency, yet with an unyielding purpose to direct the outcome. The present conditions will not last, as all know. What we have to deal with is the question, Which way shall the movement trend? Shall panic be prevented, the people be led gently into a larger place, and danger be averted? Must recklessness end in wreck? The work is constructive, endeavoring to aid by light more than by law in securing to all the inalienable rights our fathers recognized; and if incidentally or even from the nature of the case, some structures succumb and are taken into the current, it will be such as are harmful only; and in the transition a right and good thing must in all cases come as direct compensation to those in whose hands a wrong thing crumbles. The ripeness of this evolution, taking the world into its confidence, will be tenderness towards every kind of fault,—charity stripped of all definition save as related to wrong doing; all will be producers and all sharers of the fruits. But these things will not come by prophesying, they must come by doing.

WOMAN AND TEMPERANCE IN THE METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.

BY REV. C. H. ZIMMERMAN.

Readers of THE UNION SIGNAL are most interested in the reports, debates and action on temperance, and on the admission of women to the General Conference. Prof. Samuel Dickie was chairman of the sub-committee on temperance, and wrote the report which was finally adopted just as it came from his hands.

The report reaffirmed all former deliverances; declared the Word of God enjoins total abstinence for the individual; sympathized with all organizations whose object is the overthrow of the liquor traffic; denounced license of it as a sin; declared that "no member of the Methodist church can consistently by voice, vote or influence perpetuate and protect that traffic; denounced the complicity of the United States government with it by taking its wicked revenue; in refusing a national commission of inquiry to investigate and report upon the influence of the liquor traffic on the material and moral welfare of the country; and for prostituting its powers, at request of brewers, in using the machinery of government to promote the sale of American liquors in South America; and recorded as its "deliberate judgment that no political party ought to receive the support of Christian men so long as it stands committed to the license policy, or refuses to put itself on record in an attitude of open hostility to the saloon."

Judge Lawrence, of Ohio, said the above report was partisan, in the interest of a certain political party, and intended to reflect upon the Republican party. He offered the following substitute:

"The attitude of the Methodist Episcopal church toward the manufacture, sale, importation and use of intoxicating drinks is sufficiently shown in the 'General Rules of the United Societies,' and in the address of the bishops to this General Conference as follows:

TEMPERANCE.

The attitude we hold toward the drink habit and the saloon remains unchanged. Drunkenness and drunkard-making are alike offensive to God and ruinous to man. Moderate drinking, so-called, is the bane of society and the chief support of the nefarious traffic. We hold, with unabated tenacity, to the oft-repeated statement that total abstinence is the only safety for the individual, and that complete legal prohibition of the traffic is the urgent duty of the state. We rejoice in every step of progress toward the attainment of these ends. In our judgment the saloon is an unmixed evil, full of diabolism, a disgrace to our civilization, the chief corrupter of political action, and a continual menace to the order of society and to the peace and purity of our homes. We exhort all our people to encourage every repression and limitation of the business, and to keep a steady eye to its total extirpation.

POLITICS.

With regard to politics, the attitude of our church is strenuously non-partisan and non-sectional. It acknowledges no allegiance to any political creed or association. It urges all its members who have the right to vote to discharge that duty; but it leaves every voter absolutely free from ecclesiastical interference to determine for himself for whom his ballot shall be cast. The right of suffrage, or the franchise, we regard as a great and responsible trust, which should in all cases, ecclesiastical and civil, be exercised conscientiously, but in absolute personal freedom. When moral issues are before the public, our people are invariably found on the side of the highest standard; but even then they choose their own party affiliations, and refuse to be dictated to as to the matter of their votes.

"The principles so announced are indorsed and reaffirmed."

After a motion to lay on the table, which was lost, and various motions to amend, under call for the previous question on the substitute, Dr. J. G. Evans, chairman of the committee, spoke. He denied that the report was partisan, and said "We propose to place ourselves as a church on gospel ground—on the truth. We should have breadth enough and manhood enough to rise above all party considerations and speak the truth about this murderous traffic, fearless of all criticism and regardless of all political prejudices. Judge Lawrence says that the selling of liquor is a natural right. That is unfortunate for the Judge or for the supreme court of the United States which says that 'no citizen has an inherent right to sell liquor.'"

No more eloquent or effective speech was made during the whole conference than that of Dr. Evans. He was frequently applauded, and seemed to have turned the tide against the substitute which, after an ineffectual call of certain ministers for a vote by orders, was lost by a vote of 200 to 246. The vote was then taken on the adoption of the report of the committee which, after another ineffectual call, this time by the laymen, for a vote by orders was carried. The applause by the friends of the report was great and protracted. Men clapped their hands, waved handkerchiefs and papers, or threw the latter into the air, in token of their delight at the adoption of this truly great report. Dr. C. J. Little then moved that "it is the sense of this conference that this report does not indorse any political party," which was adopted.

THE WOMAN QUESTION.

The question of the eligibility of women to the General Conference was introduced early in the session by Dr. A. J. Kynett, who presented a resolution asking for an interpretation of the terms "lay delegate" and "laymen," as found in the Discipline. It was referred to the judiciary committee which reported that those terms mean men only. Their report, which will be historic in the church, is known as "Report No 2."

The next direct reference to the "woman question" was the greeting of the Woman's National Council, congratulating the conference "on the majority vote of ministers and laity in favor of the equal participation of women in the councils of the church." It was signed by May Wright Sewall and Rachel Foster Avery. It was sent to Bishop Fitzgerald and presented to the conference by Dr. H. B. Ridgaway, both noble champions of woman's rights in the church. The courteous thing would have been to refer their letter to a special committee for answer, but as Dr. Buckley had gained the floor as soon as the paper was presented, and a debate seemed imminent, it was referred to the committee on equal representation.

Readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will remember that the majority spoken of in the paper was not large enough to make women eligible by that method, the Discipline requiring that three-fourths of all ministers in all the annual conferences favor it; therefore, Dr. J. H. Potts, editor of the Michigan Christian Advocate, offered a resolution to resubmit the question in the same form as in 1888. He and his paper are able advocates of the admission of women to the General Conference. He spoke eloquently in support of his resolution, but it was not satisfactory to others who believe that women are already eligible, and that there is not now and was not in 1888 any need of submitting the question to a vote of the conferences. One of these is Dr. D. H. Moore, editor of the Western Christian Advocate, who, for his courageous, persistent, faithful advocacy of their cause in this conference, in that of '88 and during the last four years, deserves the gratitude of all the women of the world. He offered a substitute to Dr. Potts' resolution to the effect that women are now eligible under the constitution as it is, and moved a suspension of the rules in order to act upon his substitute. As it required two-thirds of the votes to suspend the rules, they were not suspended, and the whole matter was postponed. Two days later Dr. Moore made the same motion to suspend the rules with the same result. The votes on this motion indicated that the conference would not pass the substitute, which would also require a two-thirds majority. There seemed to be a disposition and considerable filibustering, on the part of certain leaders, to put off the question and secure an adjournment of the conference without considering it; but during the last hour of the session it came up in "Report No. 2," of the judiciary committee. Dr Moore again offered his resolution as a substitute for that report. He and Dr. Kynett made strong speeches in favor of the substitute. The latter seemed to be unanswerable.

Then came the surprise of the conference in the resolution offered by the brilliant and masterful Dr. J. W. Hamilton, which provides for the submission of the question to the ministry and laity in a form exactly the reverse of that in which it was submitted in 1888. Then a three-fourths majority of all the ministry, and the concurrence of two-thirds of the General Conference were required to make women eligible. By Dr. Hamilton's amendment it will require only a little more than one-fourth of the ministers voting in the annual conferences, with the same concurrence, to secure the admission of women. In briefest form the proposed amendment is as follows:

That we submit to the annual conferences the proposition to amend the Second Restrictive Rule by adding the words, "and said delegates must be male members," after the words "two lay delegates for an annual conference," so that it will read, "Nor of more than two lay delegates for an annual conference, and said delegates must be male members," and that if the amendment so submitted does not receive the votes of three-fourths of the members of the annual conferences and two-thirds of the General Conference, the Second Restrictive Rule shall be so construed that the words "lay delegates" may include men and women, and thus be in harmony with the legislation of previous General Conferences.

It will be seen that if one less than three-fourths say that only males shall be members of the General Conference, then the amendment will prevail in the annual conferences, or in other words, if only one more than one-fourth vote "No," the amendment will carry. As in 1888, provision is made for an advisory vote of the laity.

The Hamilton measure passed by a vote of 241 to 160. Great outcry is made against it as "a trick," "submitted at the last moment and railroaded through when the conference was in too great a hurry to understand its import," etc., etc.

It was entirely germane to "Report No 2," which was then before the house, declaring that "lay delegates" mean men only. It was an appeal from this decision of the judiciary committee to a higher court, viz., the only constitution-making power of the church, which certainly has the supreme right to interpret the meaning of its own enactments. Predictions are already made that, though the annual conferences may carry the amendment, it will be vetoed by the next General Conference. Delegates will not desire to veto the action of the conferences that will elect them.

If all goes well, it will be only eight years until the women, who constitute two-thirds of the membership of the Methodist church, will be represented by their own sex in its highest legislative council. And for their enfranchisement in the church the women of Methodism will have to thank not only Hamilton, Moore, Kynett and Potts, but also Drs. Hughey, Benjamin St. James Fry, Riggin, Ridgaway, Edwards, Crary, Parkhurst, and others as leaders, and many more in less conspicuous position, who have wrought according to their ability, to give to women that place in all departments of the church which its Divine Founder intended they should take.

Evanston, Ill.

PUNGENT PLEASANTRY.

BY SIR WILFRID LAWSON, BT., M. P.

[The following is part of a bright address made at the recent annual convention of the British Women's Temperance Association in London, to sustain the resolution to which this speech refers, and which was carried unanimously.—EDS.]

Lady Henry Somerset, I feel it a great honor to be allowed to come here to lend my humble assistance to the British Women's Temperance Association. I have heard lately, on high authority, that women are so good that it would be dangerous for them to be associated with men in any public work [laughter]; and I was afraid when I thus heard that men were so bad the women would not allow their association with them in any public work. But I think they are wise in permitting us to co-operate after all. I remember a story told by Dean Ramsay in his book, where he says that a minister coming into his church one day, was surprised to find the pulpit occupied by an idiot who was gesticulating violently. And the minister said: "Come down out of that pulpit, you idiot." "No, no," said the idiot, "come you up here, minister; it is a perverse generation and it will take both of us to do it any good." [Laughter.] It is my judgment that it will take all that can be done by both men and women to overcome the great drink curse which afflicts this country. And in my humble opinion women are even more in their place in this work, because men get, I suppose, some pleasure from drink—or else they would not drink—but women get all the misery.

Now, this afternoon I read of Justice Grantham having a case before him yesterday in which some poor woman had been trying to kill her child, and it turned out that she was driven to desperation by a horrible brute of a drunken husband; and Justice Grantham said, alluding to this man, "He is more to blame than the woman; he is a disgrace to civilization." I do not think so at all. I do not think anybody can disgrace civilization; but I think it was a disgrace to the people who manage matters in this country and who fail to manage in a civilized way. And I agree with Archdeacon Farrar, whom I heard say last Sunday, that "there are at this day caused by drink in this so-called Christian country of ours, more horrors, more enormities, more iniquities than disgrace Ashantee or Dahomay."

Then they call me a fanatic! Well, I never used words as strong as that. But the odd thing is, that whenever men look into this question for themselves, they use stronger language than I do. What did General Booth say the other day? He said that nine-tenths of the misery, squalor and wretchedness in this country arose from drink. And he said more; he said that nobody disputes it; and he called these people "the submerged tenth." What are they submerged in? Not in water, but in beer and brandy and whisky. And the good General is carrying out a plan now for keeping these poor creatures away from the drink. That is all right, but if the drink remains it will submerge all those who are left and those who come after. Therefore I say that while the good General is taking the man away from the drink, I will do all I can to take the drink away from the man. But that is putting it too strong. I do not want to do anything arbitrary or tyrannical; all I say is, let the men and women—yes, the poor, despised women—have the power to put away the drink from themselves. [Cheers.]

What system can be more cruel, more cowardly, more contemptible than the system which is supported by so many of the upper classes of this country, who spend their time putting temptations in the way of their weaker fellow countrymen. Ah, these magistrates who have the power of licensing these places! I have nothing to say against them; they are worthy men in themselves; I am one myself [cheers]; but these magistrates have already in their power what is called the "direct veto," not the popular veto but the magisterial veto, and they take care to exercise it. Did anybody ever hear of a magistrate who voted for a drink-shop being set up next to the place where his family lived? I never did. Mr. Raper is on the platform, and he goes about a good deal, and he carries a sovereign in his pocket, and he says to people, "I will give this sovereign to any one who will tell me of a magistrate who has voted for a drink-shop being set up next to where his family lives." He has that sovereign in his pocket still, and I believe he will have to exchange it as "light gold," for it is getting worn out! A man wrote to us once and said, "Ah I know where there is a case of a drink-shop next to where a magistrate lives." And we said, "Did the magistrate vote for it?" That question was not answered, and we never shall get an answer to it.

But is it not abominable that magistrates should be allowed to go on as they do? What did Mr Montague Williams say the other day? He said that the drink-shops were scattered about the poorest districts of London as if they were showered out of a pepper-box. Why is this done? Why are these places set there? The Rev. Mr Horsley wrote a book on temperance, and whenever he had to mention public houses he did not call them public houses but he called them "public curses." Now why are these public curses to be inflicted on the people? Just for the same reason that slaves are kept to benefit their masters, just for the reason why people in this country, thirty or forty years ago, were starved to enrich the great landlords by the price of corn; just as the women are not allowed to vote because men think it will do them some harm. These places are kept up simply to enrich a small class of the community who hold the licensed properties. [Laughter.]

I again thank the British Women's Temperance Association for proposing such a resolution as this, which declares their intention of helping us in getting rid of legislation so injurious. I have nothing to say about woman suffrage; it would be very wrong—I never get into hornets' nests if I can help it—but still if it does come (all sorts of things do come, and we cannot prevent it—all kinds of evils come upon us!) there will be some consolation for all of us in what Mr. Courtney said last Wednesday week in discussing this matter. He said, "Be sure if this measure passes it will help on the measure of Sir Wilfrid Lawson more than anything else." Some day the women will be able to give us efficient assistance in this matter; and I for one do not believe for a moment that by doing so holy a work they will lose one jot of the delicacy, refinement and elevation of their nature. But you women can encourage us, and that is a great thing. I read some time ago of the women in America getting axes and crowbars and battering down the drink saloons; and the report I read said that while they were doing this their husbands and brothers climbed into the trees and looked on encouragingly. Your resolution is a strong resolution. You say that only such members as will support temperance measures are to be voted for.

But everybody will support temperance measures. I do not think you could find a man in the House of Commons, or out of it, either, who would declare he was opposed to temperance, or to temperance reformers. Some are enlightened and some are unenlightened. Mr. Goschen and Mr. Ritchie are absolute fanatics on this subject. You remember two years ago Mr. Ritchie brought in a bill which he said was entirely in the interests of temperance. It was intended to pay some millions of your money to brewers and publicans; that was Mr. Ritchie's idea of promoting temperance. Then Lord Hartington was fanatical, too. He came back one day from Ascot—tore himself away with a strong sense of duty—and voted for this compensation—indeed, it is on record, I believe, that the police actually saw him running through the lobby, a thing never known before or since [loud laughter], so zealous was he for temperance reform.

The brewers themselves are temperance reformers. Ask Mr. Cosmo Bonsor or Mr. Seager Hunt, two of the leading brewers in the House of Commons, and they will tell you there is nothing in the world they hate like a drunken man. That is what the publicans and the brewers always say. They act upon the text, "If thine enemy thirst, give him drink." [Laughter.] Well, why do you laugh at me? That is our English idea; the idea of the policy under which we live at this moment is this, that the way to keep the nation sober is to go on supplying it with drink. I defy anybody to contradict that statement. That is our English way in all things. We say we want peace, so we get up an army to fight with anybody and everybody; we say we are against gambling and bring in a bill against it, but we adjourn the Commons over Derby Day; we say we are in favor of liberty and keep half the people of the country, the women, from having any power.

And the licensing system, as I have told you, is nothing more than the embodiment of the national belief that the way to keep the people sober is to supply them with drink. Now, your resolution strikes at all that. It is a very extensive and comprehensive resolution, and you do what they say in Scotland, you condescend to details; you are definite; you go for the grocer. Well, all right. I will go for anybody who sells drink. I have never heard, and have never got any evidence to prove, that the grocer is worse than the publican or beer-shop man. He may be; he is bad enough. I know that, because you cannot sell drink on right principles. The Bishop of Chester not long since said he would like to keep a public house on right principles. What is the use of that? It is like the Scotch minister who wanted a cook; somebody wrote recommending a cook, and said she had good principles. "Hang her principles," said the minister, "can she cook collops?"

What is the use of principles? Principles won't prevent a man who drinks from getting drunk. If a man sells intoxicating drink he cannot prevent it from having a tendency to intoxicate the people who drink it. Mr. Chamberlain, good man, said if he thought, by taking a public house and putting on an apron and serving behind a bar he could help to promote temperance, he would think it the most religious thing he could do. He has never done it, because he is a sensible man and knows it is all nonsense, and knows that if Mr. Gladstone or Mr. Balfour or anybody else sells drink, that drink will have a tendency to make the people who drink it drunk. [Applause.] I am with you; down with the grocer! And when the licensed grocer is down we will say, "Come on, you grocers; come with us and we will have the publicans down!" Your resolution goes on to advocate Sunday closing. I am not going to waste time by talking about that, for if there is a member left in the House of Commons who is opposed to Sunday closing, he is nothing more than an antediluvian, fossilized old dodo. [Laughter and applause.]

Then you come to the real thing after all. You say you are in favor of stopping the sale of drink, not only on Sundays, but by the direct veto on the liquor traffic. Now, there may be people here who do not know what the veto is. I will explain it. There was a man who, whenever he was invited to go anywhere, used to write and say he would come —"W. P." His friends could not make out what he meant and said, "What do you mean by 'W. P.'? Do you mean 'weather permitting'?" "No," he said, "I mean 'wife permitting.'" [Laughter.] The wife had the veto. Well, I want to give the people the veto. Let the publicans and beer-shop people only set up their public houses and beer shops P. P.—people permitting. [Applause.]

The veto means this: In some districts marked out by Parliament no brewer, distiller, publican, beer-shop keeper, grocer or anybody else shall be allowed to set up what Mr. Horsley calls a public curse if the people say, "We do not want to be cursed." [Applause.] You may say, Well, how will that do? Will it be any better? I do not know; I am not a prophet; I have given it up long since. In ancient days I believe the old men were prophets; now it is only the young who are prophets. But all I say is that I think I have reason to hope that when the people stop the beer-shops drunkenness will substantially cease, because I judge by experience. There is, I believe, on this platform to-night, and I hope she will speak to you before long, a lady who is the daughter of one of the best men who ever lived in Ireland. I mean Mr. Richardson. [Applause.] He said that over the territory where he had property, in the town of which he was the principal proprietor, he would not have any drink shop; and I believe Miss Richardson will tell you to-night how that policy was the greatest success, and how pauperism and crime and misery decreased, and the town got on without a beer-shop or a policeman. [Applause.] And that is Ireland!

Talk about the Irish question! Why, this is the Irish question! [Hear, hear.] Get rid of the drink and you will do more good to Ireland than Lord Salisbury and Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Balfour and Mr. Sexton all boiled together.

Oh, I think the women of this country are engaged in a noble work. They are co-workers with those women in other parts of the globe wherever the English language is spoken, who are working in this cause, and I would say to you—

God bless you, sisters; in the fight
You are waging now ye cannot fail.
Oh, stronger is your sense of right
Than Error's triple coat of mail!
The truths ye speak are spread abroad
By every wind and every tide;
The voice of nature and of God
Speaks out upon your side.

"Of one of our most faithful pastors it is said, 'He filled his church by filling his pulpit.'"

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.
AMERICAN—Chicago, Ill., The Temple, La Salle St.
ENGLISH—London, 57 Gordon Square, N. W.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. OFFICERS.

President—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large—LADY HENRY SOMERSET, 13 Memorial Hall, Farringdon St., London, E. C., Eng.
Secretary—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, O.
Assistant Secretary—ANNA A. GORDON, Evanston, Ill.
Treasurer—MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS, 26 Chomedy St., Montreal, Can.

"Every truth-seeker is a God-seeker."

It is now apparent that Willard Hall cannot be completed before the middle of August, and Mrs. Carse is very much in earnest that we shall own the Temple by that time. If our members, generally, would put mite-boxes in the hands of children, if they cannot give the matter attention themselves, letting the children go forth exhibiting and explaining these pretty models of the Temple, asking for five cents among their friends, it would not be long until the three hundred and sixty-five cents requisite for each box would be secured. Nobody would be the worse for it; on the contrary, everybody would be the better. It is the universal lift that causes best things to come to pass. It is the many hands that make light work. Every one sending for a mite-box and returning it with $3.65 will receive the photograph of Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse and the editor-in-chief of THE UNION SIGNAL, with their autographs. Each one of these white-ribboners has been sending her photograph and autograph to the extent of not less than one hundred dollars a year for many years. Is not a turn-about fair play? Will not every one whose eye falls on this urgent paragraph say in his heart, or in her heart, as the case may be: "It costs but a postal card and a minute of time to send for a mite-box." If every one of our subscribers would do this, and return those mite-boxes before the middle of August, we should own the Temple outright, and it would be the greatest single stroke of work for the temperance reform that the world has ever seen; because with the income accruing from it we could "stop the mouths of lions, quench the violence of fire, out of weakness be made strong." We say this reverently, because God works by means, and in these modern days money can be turned into everything. Therefore, help us to get the next-to-nothings that make the nickels and the mites that make the mickles, and then when you come to the World's Fair, ask for the Temple—everybody can tell you where it is—and take a good, square look at the House Beautiful that you have helped to build, and that belongs to you as much as to anybody living; for though it is a poem in brick, marble and stone, the greatest beauty of it is that it belongs to no individual, but is the local habitation of a great loving-hearted reform as wide as the world, as high as the hopes of the saint, and as deep as the depths of the drunkard's despair.

***

The following letter is from one of the brightest journalists in this country, for whom we have been angling many a year, but who has proved to be a shy trout and not yet landed, as the letter shows. There is great beauty in her note. Its nicety and winsomeness must strike every one with pleasure and hope.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, May —, 1892.

MY DEAR F. E. W.:—I think you will be glad to know this; at last I see my duty clear to sign a pledge or oath against the use of all intoxicants except for purposes of medicine. Heretofore the subject has been preached to me, hammered into me, with and without arguments, but it has never touched me or presented itself to my mind or heart as a subject of personal import or practical duty. Last night it came to me suddenly, swiftly, powerfully, as a present duty of my very own. So please send me a pledge of the simplest form you have, with the above conditions, which go as far as I am yet led. If ever I see further I will go further.

Yours always,

_____.

How profoundly we wish that ten thousand other bright women of the Bohemian, artistic, literary and society order would set their seals to a pledge as true.

***

We don't deny the soft impeachment. No invidious distinction—Methodist or Baptist—should have been made, even if Mollie Snell and Frances Griffin left their respective communions because in the one to which they went they found "more elbow room." The ecclesiastical situation should not have been referred to at all, and hereby I meekly "stand corrected."

Frances E. Willard.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace.—Heb. 11: 31.

How the "littles" are earned for the Temple is always interesting reading, no doubt because love and self-denial so enter into them. Mrs. I. Rich, Hammond, Wis., writes: "You will find enclosed $2.52 for Temple fund; I have wanted for a long time to add my mite to this most worthy cause, therefore have laid aside one-tenth I have earned with my needle for this special purpose, besides doing the work for a family of three during the past year. I hope to do more the coming year." Rebecca B. Hall, Stockton, Mo., writes: "I enclose draft for $5, the contents of my mite-box for the last year. This is my third year for the same amount, and I am truly glad I can do even a little toward building our Temple. My heart longs to be able to give a large amount—but the Father knows." If but one-half the members of the W. C. T. U. had adopted Mrs. Hall's plan of giving, every dollar of the capital stock would be owned by our organization to-day. Hattie A. Johnson, of the Roger Williams University, Nashville, Tenn., writes: "We, the girls of the R. W. U., are very thankful for THE UNION SIGNAL. Being desirous of a few bricks in the Temple, we enclose $1.80 to show the warm sympathy of the R. W. U. girls." Mrs. R. L. Wright, Quasqueton, Ia., writes: "Enclosed find $1 for the Temple fund, partly the result of butter and sugar saved for several weeks past, and the rest added by my husband, who wishes to have something in the Temple."

***

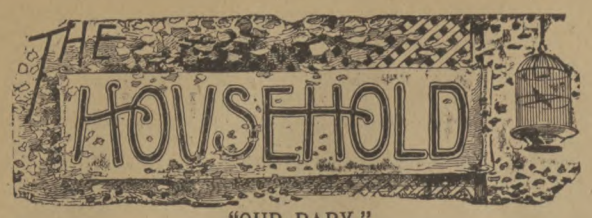
Mrs. Ida W. Kays, Manchester, Iowa, sends $3, contents of mite-box, and says: "I regret that I cannot do more for the Temple, but I fear this will be my last temperance work, as I am afflicted with chronic rheumatism, which the physicians say is incurable." A dollar, coined in 1818, has been received from Meadville, Mo., with the following history: "Twenty-five years ago K. W. K., of La Porte, Ind., gave a German dollar to a young lady friend as a keepsake. After all these years she sends it to the Temple, with the hope that the giver may be led to consecrate his life to Christ and the temperance cause." Ida H. Hewitt, Wilmington, Del., sends $3; she writes: "My baby was one year old this week. I send $3 for a birthday offering." Ten dollars come from Mr. David Sharp and wife, Eight Mile, Mo. He says: "I am a poor hand to collect pennies for a mite-box, but we have secured the enclosed amount." We think he is a pretty "good hand," and only wish more of our good brothers would follow his example. Nannie Sayle Britton, Oklahoma, sends $1.20. She says: "It is a very small amount, but it takes the littles to make $1,100,000, and though small, my prayer is it may help to open wide the gates of temperance and drive intemperance from the land." We have received such a sweet, pathetic letter from Mrs. Alfa V. Freeman, Latona, Wash. She writes: "The mite-box, the contents of which I sent you in the winter, we are again laboring to fill. It seems to replenish so slowly these dull times, when we must forego all but life's very necessaries. We hope to get the picture of the group, as THE UNION SIGNAL has made you all so dear. We expect to get much more than the required $3.65. 'Temple 'Beautiful' is 'Temple Delight' to me and my babies three."

***

Mrs. E. L. Wood, of Brooklyn, N. Y., is superintendent of the L. T. L. work in King's county, N. Y. She writes: "I thought it would be a good thing to place a mite-box in every Legion. I have promised a present to the child in each L. T. L. who brings the most money for the mite-box in three months. I want ten pictures of the Temple. I think it would increase the children's interest to see the picture." We wish all superintendents of L. T. L. work would take the same interest in the Temple as Mrs. Wood. We will be glad to send to each L. T. L. who will work for the Temple a large picture of it without charge—and mite-boxes at the cost of transportation. Think what our 350,000 L. T. L. children might accomplish for the Temple if the superintendents would only inspire them. Fifteen dollars come from the Boonville, N. Y., L. T. L. The Hoquiam, Wash. L, has sent $5. Company H., L. T. L., of East Weymouth, Mass., sends $5. The Stevensville, Mont., L. T. L. sends $16.25; $1.50 comes from the Juvenile Templars of Huntington, Ind.; $6 comes from the Ceres Band of Hope, of Ceres, Cal. The Sleepy Eye L. T. L. has sent $4—which by mistake was credited to the W. C. T. U.

***

A two cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box, descriptive card and bulletin; remember all who fill a mite-box ($3.65) before next April will receive a photographic group consisting of Lady Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple. All drafts should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh. All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.



"OUR BABY."

BY KITTY THOMPSON.

Adown the stairs that day
He rode astride—
Our boy, our pride—
And then to climb again
The baby tried.

And grandpa with a smile
Stood ready quite
To catch the sprite
In loving arms, the while
To hug him tight.

That night beside his bed,
On lips so sweet,
And rosy feet,
Kisses we pressed, and said
The prayer so meet.

Next day a shadow came—
At first so small,
No fear at all
With him—now death's his name,
And fear's on all.

Now death his seal has set
On lips so white,
Stilled rosy feet,
And Heav'n and earth are met—
But oh, the night!

The velvet cheek no more
To press 'gainst mine,
Or arms entwine
About my neck—oh, sore
This heart of mine.

But then I prayed, you know,
That God would care
For baby fair;
And shall I fret that so
He heard my prayer?

The rather will I pray,
Dear Lord, for this—
I may not miss
In that sweet coming day
My baby's kiss.

Longmont, Col.

THE WIDOW'S "EXPERIENCE" DOLLAR.

BY ADA PROVINE DEAN.

Little Mrs. May was in trouble. The ladies of the W. C. T. U. had, at their regular semi-monthly meeting, pledged themselves to each earn a dollar for the treasury; she was extremely anxious to do her part, for she had a warm place in her heart for this same W. C. T. U. society. Had it not been the means of inducing her late husband to sign the pledge, and helped him to keep it faithfully for a year before he died? And had they not befriended her since, showing ever ready sympathy with her struggles for self-support and for her little boy by woman's regulation method—keeping boarders?

So she went home from that meeting inwardly determined to "raise Cain" to raise that dollar. But how was it to be accomplished? was the question. She studied about it several days without striking any feasible plan. She had neither the time nor means to devote to fancy work; she could not leave home long enough at a time to canvass as a book agent. Her hopes were at a low ebb, when one morning, about ten days before the date fixed for the "experience" meeting, she noticed Dr. Grubb sweeping out his office, which was just across the way, a very unusual occurrence, for he kept a boy for such duty.

This physician was a childless widower, a wealthy man, having a fair reputation as a consistent church member and honest citizen. Hard-working Mrs. May had for some time cherished a secret "liking" for the fine-looking, somewhat pompous doctor; her blue eyes had brightened and her face worn its sweetest smile when they exchanged the greetings of the day. This morning the sight of his unusual employment put an idea into her head, on which she was quick to act. Snatching her hat, she ran rapidly across the road and accosted him at his own door.

"Good morning, doctor; have you turned 'help'?"

"For this morning I have," he answered in rather a vexed tone. "My office boy is sick and I have not yet found any one to take his place; but I must before another day."

"Then I am just in time," answered Mrs. May resolutely; "wouldn't you let me have the place for a week, doctor? I could do the work well, I know, and that without neglecting my own, and perhaps by the end of a week your boy will be able to return."

The doctor looked at her in great surprise. "My dear Mrs. May, do I understand you to want to do my office boy's work for a week?"

"Yes, just that. You see it is this way. Our W. C. T. U. ladies have each pledged themselves to earn a dollar this week and donate it to the society; and though I earn every dollar I have myself, I could not afford to give so much now out of my regular income. I thought if you would permit me to do this work and pay me what it is worth, I could earn the dollar. What wages does the boy receive per week?"

"One dollar exactly. But I fear, madam, that you would not want to perform all of his duties, and in that case I would be obliged to have other help, though of course I will be glad to give you the opportunity to earn this money you are so anxious for."

"I think I could fill the place," she answered. "Will you please tell me his exact duties that I may be sure to earn my money?" Her eyes were fixed intently on the doctor's face, and he seemed a bit embarrassed as he replied:

"Well, they run about like this: open the office in the morning, sweep out and dust and fill the lamps. You won't need to make any fire, as it is so warm now, though of course if the weather should turn colder, as it is likely to so early in the spring, there will have to be a fire; and I always like to have the stove kept nicely blackened,"—the doctor was the perfection of neatness—"and then, ahem! my shoes have to be polished two or three times a week, oftener if it is muddy."

The little widow's cheeks were quite pink, for she had not counted on performing a valet's duties, but she answered meekly, "Anything more?"

"No, nothing particular; of course my overcoat has to be brushed occasionally, when I come in from a ride, and there are errands sometimes; but," magnanimously, "I'll try and attend to those myself."

"Well, I will take the place. And shall I commence my duties to-morrow morning?"

"Yes, yes, by all means," and the doctor turned to meet an incoming patient, while Mrs. May almost flew home, her heart thumping queerly and her face—untranslatable.

She commenced her work the next morning. The office had never before looked so bright and clean; the lamp chimney was clear as crystal, and the stove had not a red or dusty spot upon it, while the worthy doctor's shoes shone from tip to heel. But her duties had not proved the lightest in the world. It happened to be a very rainy week, and the doctor had a good many calls to the country. It seemed as if scarcely a morning passed that a muddy overcoat and a still muddier pair of overshoes did not greet her eyes when she entered the office. The first day she left them untouched and the doctor stopped at her door before dinner and told her he "would want his clean overshoes and coat by two o'clock."

The end of the week and pay-day came at last. The doctor arrived before her work was quite done and stood around in a fidgety way, but not saying anything until she had finished and had her hat on to cross the street. Then with a few prefatory coughs and ahems, he said:

"Mrs. May, I believe your week is up this morning."

"Yes, I hope I have pleased you and earned my money."

"You certainly have pleased me very well, indeed; so well that I must tell you that never since I lost my poor, dear wife has any woman delighted me so much. Indeed, my dear Mrs. May, I am constrained to say that I think we would do admirably as life companions. You have a neat little home just across the way that we could occupy, my office is convenient here, and in that case," with a tender smile, "you could still continue to care for it. Such an arrangement, of course, would relieve you from the necessity of keeping boarders, and your work would be much lighter, as you would have no one but me to wait on—and your boy to care for, of course. I should try to do my duty by him. I see already he would be benefited by a little paternal authority. Now, what do you say? Yes, I hope?"

"No, sir!" The widow's negative was explosive; the doctor fairly jumped; she continued, her blue eyes corruscating, "You do me too much honor. I have learned something this past week as well as earned something, and it is that a woman may have a harder task to do than take boarders for her living. I no longer wonder that your wife died young. May she rest from her labors in peace, and have no successor. Now I believe my work is done, and I want my dollar." She got it.

Lyons, Kan.

A MEMORY! SPURGEON!

BY MARGARET BOTTOME.

Nothing so sanctifies a name as to be written "dead!" How many will recall sermons, and prayers, and expositions of Scripture that they have heard from the eloquent lips of the wonderful preacher that none of us will ever hear again. Spurgeon has gone. I have been thinking since I laid my morning paper down of the first time I heard him. The sermon marked a period in my life nearly thirty years ago. We had been sight-seeing in London, and I was tired, and I was so glad of a day of rest, and especially glad that on that day of rest I was to hear Spurgeon, and I wondered whether I should not know more of the "certainty of the words of truth," as I should listen to the great preacher, for I had hid in my heart a word that I felt God had given me for a New Year's gift. It had been my custom for years to ask for some special word at the commencement of the new year, that I might have it as a sort of motto, and this I had felt was given me: "Have not I shown unto thee excellent things in wisdom and knowledge, that I might make thee know the certainty of the words of truth, that thou mightest have an answer to them that send unto thee?" And I had been hoping that I might know what God wanted to teach me. So when Sunday morning came we were in the Tabernacle and occupied the front seat in the gallery, and that voice and that prayer I shall never forget. When he read Romans 8, my husband whispered, "Prepare yourself for a Calvinistic sermon." You can imagine my surprise when he gave out his text and turned, and I am sure to this day he looked at me as he said, "Have not I shown unto you excellent things in wisdom and knowledge, that I might make thee know the certainty of truth, that thou mightest have an answer to them that send unto thee?" And the certain truth he preached that morning was God's fore-knowledge and fore-ordination. In that hour, as I listened to the voice now silent, I apprehended the truth of God's fore-knowledge, and it seemed like a pillow where I could rest my weary head. I little dreamed how I should need it all in a few hours. In the next morning's mail came the sad message that had been on its way so many days, telling us that the only little daughter, who had been so carefully committed to the Father's care, had been taken to the Shepherd's arms. Our Mamie was gone! Then the sermon of the day before all came back. God knew it all. When I bade a friend good-bye at the steamer I had said, "You will ask God for us to take care of our children?" And she had written by the mail that brought us the sad news, "God has taken good care of your Mamie, He has taken her to live with Him." And from Edinboro', from a friend came the word, "Your Mamie is with Jesus; keep close to Jesus and you will be near to Mamie." "Oh, years gone down into the past, what memories ye bring!" So much comes back when the one that spoke to you will never speak again. How indebted I am to Spurgeon, as so many thousands of my countrywomen on this side of the Atlantic are. London will not seem quite the same when we cannot hear Spurgeon of a Sunday morning. But one turns from their loss to his gain. He sees the Lord Jesus he loved so much. It will be well for us to remember his last words; they might well be written in letters of gold: "My time is ended, although I had much more to say. I can only pray the Lord to give you to believe in Him. If I should never again have the pleasure of speaking for my Lord upon the face of the earth, I should like to deliver as my last confession of faith, this testimony: that nothing but faith can save this nineteenth century; nothing but faith can save England; nothing but faith can save the present unbelieving church; nothing but firm faith in the grand old doctrines of grace and in the ever-living and unchanging God, can bring back to the church again a full tide of prosperity, and make her to be the deliverer of the nations for Christ; nothing but faith in the Lord Jesus can save you or me. The Lord give you, my brothers, to believe to the utmost degree, for His name's sake. Amen."

New York City.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President Board of Directors.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

So will I sing praise unto thy name forever, that I may daily perform my vows.—Ps. 61:8.

A NEW POSSIBILITY.

All reformers hailed the advent of the Australian ballot in so many states with joy, believing that it would result in great good to the cause of reform. This expectation has been fully realized; from all directions come reports of quiet elections where mob rule had before prevailed, of ballot stuffing and vote buying both being banished from the polls and something nearer an approach to the free expression of the people's will secured at elections than existed before.

It has also removed one strong objection to women's voting, by banishing bummers and political "heelers" from polling places. Their occupation is gone, and it is to be hoped that the places which knew them will know them no more, forever.

A suggestive possibility of usefulness for the Australian system has just presented itself, viz.: securing a vote on the question of license or no-license, without the expense of a special election. Under the peculiar liquor laws of California this case sometimes arises: the constitution vests the entire power to "regulate and control" the sale of liquor outside of incorporated circles in the county supervisors; in response to petitions of the people, supervisors have occasionally offered to abide by the will of the people concerning the granting of license, expressed at a special election, provided the temperance people would bear all the expense of this election, usually several thousand dollars.

This sum is not easily raised, but cannot the will of the people be ascertained without this outlay? A quick-witted Prohibitionist thinks it can, through the Australian ballot. That provides that the name of candidates, not nominated by the great parties, can be placed on the ballot, if a certain per cent of the votes so petition, this per cent varying from three to five in different states. It has been decided that the name of measures as well as men can be placed upon the ballot on the same condition. There seems nothing to hinder any precinct or county wishing to test this matter from doing so without cost either to the county or to the friends of temperance. The method is to circulate a petition among voters, asking that the ballot used at the next election shall contain these words, "For licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors," "Against licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors."

It would be a hard community indeed, in which the necessary three per cent or five per cent of voters would not sign such a petition; their signatures secured and presented to the election commissioners, they would have no option about granting the request. Thus the matter would be brought directly to a vote of the people, no matter how much opposed the officials might be, and without any extra cost to the county,—a point always made much of when a special election is asked for. There would still remain the work of canvassing for voters and working up public sentiment to vote on the right side, but some very serious obstacles would be removed and the way opened to do this work successfully. Try it.

DECORATION DAY.

Our flower mission number had to be out last week, hence appropriate allusion to Decoration Day demonstrations was reserved. They did not fail to occur in the homes of our white-ribboners throughout the nation. This goes without saying, and we declare it without any special knowledge of how they spent the day, except that we well know of what manner of spirit our comrades are. It occurs to us that the single family with whose daily doings we are most familiar furnishes in its general conduct of life a type of many W. C. T. U. homes, hence we jot down some account of its Decoration Day observances.

It is a general custom with us to observe times and seasons, patriotic and religious, for while at all times we should remember these things forever memorable, it remains true that thus to unite with others in great national and religious holidays and holy days, is to confess a common tie that binds our hearts in Christian love and is to do and get a great deal more good than those who isolate themselves or say, "to us all days are alike."

At prayers in this home that we knew best, after reading the 18th chapter of Matthew—as it is our custom to take the New Testament in course—each member of the family repeated a patriotic passage of Scripture; one who is the center of our group and on whose head rests the mingled benignity and glory of well-nigh eighty-eight well-spent years, gave us this: "Fear not, O Land, be glad and rejoice, for the Lord will do great things."

Another said: "Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good, and our land shall yield her increase."

A third: "And all nations shall call you happy; for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of Hosts."

A fourth: "And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker worm and the caterpillar and the palmer worm, my great army which I sent among you."

We then read in our little book, "Daily Strength for Daily Needs":

"And thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage and a memorial of virtue not only unto young men but unto all his nation." II. Maccabees, 6:31.

"Zebulon and Napthali were a people that jeoparded their lives unto the death in the high places of the field." Judges 5: 18.

"Though love repine and reason chafe,
There came a voice without reply;
'Tis man's perdition to be safe
When for the truth he ought to die."
—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

"Some say that the age of chivalry is past. The age of chivalry is never past so long as there is a wrong left unredressed on earth, or a man or woman left to say: 'I will redress that wrong, or spend my life in the attempt.' The age of chivalry is never past so long as we have faith enough to say: 'God will help me to redress that wrong; or if not me, He will help those that come after me, for His eternal will is to overcome evil with good.'

"CHARLES KINGSLEY."

"Thus man is made equal to every event. He can pass through danger for the right. A poor, tender, painful body, he can run into the flame, or bullets and pestilence in duty for his God."—Anon.

We then sang from Anna Gordon's advance pages of the White Ribbon Hymnal, Dr. Rankin's song: "Long Live, Long Live America," to the tune of Die Wacht Am Rhein. The song was like a prayer to us:

America, so proud and free,
My song, my heart, I give to Thee,
Full high thy brave, strong wing has won,
Thine eagle eye is on the sun;
Still upward be thy heavenly flight,
Still upward mount till lost in light;
My song, my heart, I give to Thee,
America, so proud and free.

From land on land whate'er their birth,
Men flock to thee o'er all the earth;
With every breeze, on every wave,
Thy winds confront, thy tempests brave;
No perils do their hearts appall,
For thou art mother to them all.
My song, my heart, I give to thee,
America, so proud and free.

Dear native land, so fair and great,
Thee many conflicts still await;
To God and thine own self be true,
Rise up, fresh girt, for labors new.
Till wrong, dark-dyed, on earth is stemmed,
And right, by God's hand diademed;
My song, my heart, I give to thee,
America, so proud and free.

America, so proud and free,
I give my song, my heart to thee.
Still, let that heaven-born symbol fly
In every clime, 'neath every sky.
Still rise a yeoman race, to stand
For God and Home and Native Land!
My song, my heart, I give to thee,
America, so proud and free.

Full of a holy patriotism as is this song, we could not fail in loyalty to the great time-honored hymn, "America," and as the dear aged one tried to repeat it for us, her voice faltered on the lines,

"I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills."

She was thinking of her native state, Vermont, that Switzerland of America, with its fragrant and restful mountains; she was thinking, too, of the delectable mountains that she is so soon to see, and though gladdened by the outlook, the tear was a contribution to this country that has been so good to women,—has so built up the home and remembered and loved the child in the midst.

As we poured out our hearts to God in memory of those sacred days when our first impressions of any world beyond the walls that sheltered us, and the landscape of prairie and river that surrounded our forest home, were impressions of loving, patriotic loyalty, it seemed a good and holy thing to live and to build as best we might to make America a greater land than she has ever been. We thanked God that He had given us such a country, and let us live at such a time. We thanked Him for the good men and true who stand by the cause of God and home and native land, for the great advance that this year has witnessed in the progress of every good cause, and most of all, that what the Declaration of Independence said, is coming true:—that women, as well as men, are "born free and equal, with certain inalienable rights, and that among these rights are those of liberty and the pursuit of happiness." We pledged ourselves anew as soldiers in the great fight for a clear brain, a brightened home, a purified nation, and, joining in the Lord's prayer, we felt that indeed the inspiration of "Our Father who art in heaven" came into our souls. Thus, in one home, we began our Decoration Day.

THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION IN ENGLAND.

All great reforms pass through four stages. They are ignored, ridiculed, abused, and then recognized as, at any rate, of vital importance. When the latter stage is reached, the promised land is in sight, and the warriors who have fought their way through the previous conditions can raise a note of exultation.

Slowly and laboriously the temperance movement in England has held its own: it has had many times to fight not only the powers of the liquor traffic, but the Giant Despair in its own ranks. In early days the odds were desperate, the battle well-nigh lost, when but begun, but like all causes where the Divine is working out eternal principles through the human, the end must be victory. At this hour the hearts of all those good and true men and women who, in the midst of chilling discouragement and fierce opposition, have borne the brunt of the fight are jubilant with hope. On the eve of a general election, when questions long at the front would seem to warrant the undivided attention of statesmen, when the difficulties surrounding the future of the relations of England and Ireland are multiplying, when the complications of the labor question are thickening on all hands, the theme of every political speech, the plank on every liberal platform, the hot question at the elections, the burning subject of the hour is temperance reform. Mr. John Morley, who occupies next to Mr. Gladstone the foremost rank among Liberal politicians, speaking recently said, after dealing with the Irish difficulty, labor problems, and the eight hours bill: "I am not quite sure that the temperance question is not the greatest of all. It is the greatest moral movement since the movement for the abolition of slavery."

Among the Liberal leaders the discussion on the fitness of candidates for seats in Parliament is constantly spoken of thus: "Is he right on the temperance question?" To those who have fought long against the awful odds of the influence that has upheld the liquor traffic, and the absolute apathy of public opinion, this language calls forth first a smile of joy and then fervent thanksgiving. We ask ourselves, however, what has produced the change and the answer is, "The great masses of the people have spoken." The North—strong "and true and tender" have with a sturdy persistency demanded reform legislation, the voice of that stronghold of liberalism could not be ignored and has caused an arrest of thought at Westminster. The foundations of all edifices lie hidden from sight, the tapering spire or the stately tower rest on the unseen strength of masonry that is buried beneath the soil. Public opinion built during patient years of toil into the thought and conscience of a nation will at last always produce solid results. For this the white ribbon army have worked long and one day they will see reaching upward toward heaven the great edifice of a pure government whose "first concern" is to protect humanity.

WORK IN THE ALLEYS.

The W. C. T. U. of Washington, led by Mrs. La Fetra, its untiring president, has taken up a work which involves deeper subsoiling than anything of which we have record. It is done in the alleys of the capital of the nation. Simply to give the names of some of these is to tell the story of their condition: Blood Alley, Fighting Alley, Chinch Alley, Pig Alley, Old Louse Alley, Cabbage Alley! We doubt if the grave and reverend legislators who drink "cold tea" under the golden dome are so much as aware that in the city for which they legislate, degradation had reached such a pass as to furnish forth a nomenclature which we hesitated some time before we dared to intrude upon our readers.

Nothing is more unsavory, we are informed by those who have been there, than these purlieus of humanity. The first mission of the ladies is to try literally to "clean them out." Cart-loads of dirt, old tin cans, filth and garbage were hauled from the premises, while the air was filled with the vilest odors. An unstinted quantity of lime inside and outside of the buildings in which they opened their mission, besides soap and water in abundance, with some paint, improved the order of exercises. Mothers' meetings have been established, the ladies providing the mothers present with pieces of cloth and other material, for which a few pennies were charged and credit given, the women being instructed how to cut and make presentable clothing for their children. The white-ribboners have set to work teaching them how to live. Later on they will probably tell them something about how to die. A mass-meeting is to be held in some of the city churches, when the ladies will describe as much as can be told of their experience and observations in the alleys. Good people are giving money, and there is a prospect of regeneration.

The W. C. T. U. and other religious organizations were attracted to this alley work by two sisters who began it in one of the noisiest and most discouraging alleys in the northwest section of the city. They rented a little house, cleansed it thoroughly, moved into it, and thus became a daily object lesson by their neatness and cleanliness to the squalid inhabitants around them. They endured the inefficient drainage and sewerage, the sickening atmosphere, insufficient gas light and unpaved ground, that they might show forth the cleanliness that is next to godliness and the godliness that is sure, first of all, to make people clean. We wonder if there are not some forgotten alleys in the cities, towns and villages of those who read these lines that it might be well to look into; and we earnestly hope that a word to the wise (Y's) and their elders will prove to be sufficient.

We have all been greatly interested in the work of Miss Kate Marsden, the English lady who went by sledge to Siberia, seeking to find an herb that was said to be a cure for leprosy, and also seeking to mitigate the condition of the lepers themselves. The following letter has recently come from this intrepid and heroic woman. We give it to our readers, knowing that they will greatly enjoy words from her own pen:

BERLIN, April 12, 1892.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—Forgive the liberty I take in writing to you, but as our whole hearts are one in the cause of humanity and of the sick and suffering, I venture to hope you will not be offended.

This morning Mrs. Willard and I have had a long talk as to what is the very greatest use we can make of the work God has enabled me to do in Siberia and Russia. My first object is to show every one how even the most unworthy instrument can be used by God, and that no one need despair of being able to work for Him if only we do, day by day, the little tasks He sends with all our might and for His glory alone. Then to show the whole world the fearful privations and hardships that a woman even can endure, and keep in really wonderful health considering all to which she has been subjected, if she takes no stimulant whatever, and that to this fact principally, I owe my life. Then to show how belonging to a definite society assists and helps you in your work, such as the White Ribbon society and the King's Daughters, whose very name nerves one to all dangers, and how their prayers are a strength and support to the weary worker; and now, dear madam, you will understand how my heart longs to be at work on these three subjects: and in order to see how we, as women and as Christians, can accomplish this, I am coming to see you in America in about a month's time.

The above three facts I have stated as an introduction, but if you will not be tired I should like to tell you somewhat of the work for my poor, outcast lepers. A more horrible state of misery and suffering it is not possible to conceive. I have traveled altogether 21,000 versts in order to reach and help them, having ridden out of that number 3,000 through dense forests and marshes where the lepers are hunted and driven by the yatrutsbrs without any kind of help or comfort. Now in Moscow we have collected enough money to start a colony for them, but this being a year of famine we are unable to get sufficient funds, only having about $15,000. The colony will consist of ten houses, two hospitals, workshops, a little school, a church, sisters to care for them, a doctor and two assistants. In fact, it will be a small village where all these poor outcasts can receive every help and comfort. At present they think that God and man have both forsaken them, but we wish them to know that neither God nor man has done this, and that no means will be spared to make them happy.

With kind regards I remain,

Yours sincerely, KATE MARSDEN.

We should have presented this plea much earlier except that Miss Marsden's letter was mislaid. We hope to see, to welcome, and to send her on her way rejoicing.

LATER.—By post, from Berlin, we received, June 3, the following from Mrs. Mary B. Willard:

It will be good news to those of our readers who have followed Miss Kate Marsden in her work for the lepers in Siberia, that she is going to America in September, and will lecture there on her Siberian experiences during the coming winter for the benefit of the leper fund.

Before leaving Russia, Miss Marsden succeeded in organizing a leper colony in the neighborhood of Veluisk, consisting of twelve or fourteen houses, a church, and two well-appointed hospitals. The money for buildings has been nearly all raised in Russia, and the synod has undertaken the support of the church and the nuns who will be attached to the church work. Five Red Cross sisters started from Moscow for the leper neighborhood the last of May, their expenses on the way amounting to 5,000 rubles, having been provided for by the Czarowitch from his own purse. These noble women will be four months on the journey, but will arrive in time to care for the lepers through the long and dreary winter, and it is hoped the colony houses will be ready for them all by another spring. It is to sustain this colony, and to establish still another on the eastern coast in Kamtchatka that Miss Marsden makes the effort to lecture through England and America, though much worn and enfeebled by the exposures and privations of her last year's travel. Miss Field, her invaluable assistant and traveling companion, will be with her in America, and is herself a most interesting speaker, as well as devoted worker.

THE plan adopted in Washington one year ago by the Woman's Council, and reiterated by its executive committee within a few days at its session in Chicago, is one which we believe might be advantageously followed in all capitals of the states and territories, and, indeed, in every town and village, namely: That the women who are in organized societies in all these localities should let their presidents be an executive committee to draw up such ordinances for the municipal council (which is the city legislature), as seemed most advantageous to the public good, and should then, in a respectful manner, present those ordinances to the men who, up to this time, are the only finality in government. The moral influence of such action, helped on as it would surely be by the well-nigh overmastering power of the press, could hardly be ignored. At any rate, an immense amount of thinking would be done by the people and the officers; public opinion would be educated, and there is reason to believe that the result would more than justify the wear and tear of the endeavor.

WE have on hand at the headquarters of the National W. C. T. U., the Temple, Chicago, copies of the National Minutes for 1874, 1875, 1876 and 1877. This pamphlet gives the origin, early history, basis, method and spirit of our organization. It is historically of great value, and will not be reproduced, so that whoever does not get it now will be apt not to receive it later. This pamphlet ought to be on file in the office of every state president, every National superintendent and organizer, and all local presidents who desire to be well informed and qualified. So many questions are asked about our society, how it commenced, why it began, what its basis was, etc., that we feel sure our subscribers will thank us for bringing to their attention this opportunity, which will not last long, of securing this history, by sending fifty cents to Mrs. C. B. Buell, at the address herein given. Speak soon, and if you all speak at once, it will but prove the universal wisdom of the great constituency that we have the honor to address.

A list of 4,122 individual signatures to the World's Petition is just received at World's Headquarters, from Adelaide, South Australia, through Miss Hannah Chewings, corresponding secretary of the colonial union.

***

Gladstone has found out his mistake in putting forth an opinion opposed to woman's parliamentary ballot, and realizes that he has lost the sympathy of many of his best friends. Mrs. Gladstone has decided to remain president of the Women's Liberal League, even though it will be almost entirely composed of Progressives. They issued their new paper recently, and are pledged for the first time to the temperance policy of the British Women's Temperance Association. From their ranks we may look for some strong women, as new recruits in the white ribbon army.

***

Our mother country must now admit that her daughter is moving right up alongside, for it has "come to light" that the sun never sets on American soil, that when it is six p. m. in Attoo Islands, Alaska, it is 9:36 a. m. the next day on the eastern coast of Maine.

***

Harvard university is worth twelve millions; Cornell, six million five hundred thousand; the University of California, over six millions; Stanford Jr. University, five millions, with a prospect of twenty millions. Harvard has an income of one million five hundred thousand; Yale over half a million; Columbia, over four hundred thousand; Michigan, four hundred thousand; University of California, nearly two hundred and fifty thousand, Chicago University, now being founded by John Rockefellar, has already three million dollars endowment, and probably will have treble this amount. All the institutions named are wide open to women except Harvard and Yale; and recently Yale has opened all its post-graduate courses to women; while Harvard still follows in the rear of the procession with the "annex."

***

Mrs. Lathrap said playfully at her last convention: "Oh, my brothers, you are the powers that be; but are you the powers that ought to be? your voting these days does not look like it."

***

Our English friends are inclined to make sport of their American cousins because we are so apt to put the word "well" at the beginning of all our sentences. It seems to be the head and front of our offending. The use of the phrase "all right" is condemned in the same quarter as a national characteristic. We do not deny the soft impeachment. We think it would be better if we did not work these words quite so heavily, but we call upon John Bull, Brother Jonathan, and all their host to witness the proof furnished by these colloquial peculiarities of our universal good-nature as a people. All's well! All's right! What better phrase could fall from the lips of a sentry on duty? All's well! What finer spirit or temper could any one be of than to feel in the heart that this is true? What better thing could Robert Browning say than what he did say in the words: "God's in His heaven, All's right with the world!"

***

Mr. William Dean Howells, editor of the Cosmopolitan, has invented and defined the term "hen-minded." Here is his introduction to it in his new novel entitled, "The Quality of Mercy": "Mrs. Northwick was one of those hen-minded women who are so common in all walks of life, and who are made up of only one aim at a time, and of manifold anxieties at all times." We must confess the characterization hard to excel. But we could not permit Mr. Howells, who has had many flings at women-folks from the beginning until now, to make such an indictment with safety to himself had he not, with wise discretion, added in the same breath: "There are hen-minded men as well as women." With this qualification, On Duty quietly lifts his phrase on the point of her pencil into the thoughts of her half-million readers, and suggests that they pass it along until it becomes a smooth worn pebble of woman's speech, and helps to shame every one of us out of "hen-mindedness," if we are afflicted with such distemper. ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

GREETING FROM BRAZIL.

I congratulate myself that at last I am writing to THE UNION SIGNAL in regard to the inauguration of the W. C. T. U. work in this country by Mrs. Leavitt. From a variety of causes and ill health my letter has been delayed; but it has given time to hear from the various points she visited, consequently will be more interesting.

I sent a translation from one of the papers of Sao Paulo, the capital of this state, giving a description of the reception there. Though no "organization" was effected, she did not fail to agitate. Her bold presentation of the subject awakened many persons heretofore indifferent. Ministers who have been calmly unconscious that their own country as well as others is in imminent danger from the increase of the drinking habit, are taking a more decided stand on the question.

One of the most talented native preachers followed Mrs. Leavitt's lectures by a very pointed sermon, but said it was only the United States that seemed to be in the dreadful condition described by her. Brazil was in no peril from moderate drinking! The social purity lecture was, I am informed, much valued by the young men of the city.

In Piracicaba we were favored with two lectures in the M. E. Mission church, one in the Republican Club rooms and one at the school. The attendance was good considering all things. There is such a prejudice against the Protestants, the people thought it only a plan to have a religious discussion. In our church the result is very satisfactory. On February 22, an organization was effected, consisting of six members, all of whom were elected to office. Since that time they have held two large and enthusiastic meetings, resulting in twenty-nine regular members and five honorary.

The first man to sign the pledge of the W. C. T. U. in Brazil was a youth of twenty, in jail, sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment for killing his father while intoxicated. We trust he will wield an influence for good over his fellowmen for total abstinence.

The first union in Brazil is now in good working order and very enthusiastic. Nearly every member has paid the dues. Now the best informed need to be better informed on various points and questions that come up in foreign countries.

Shall we admit in full fellowship Unitarians, Universalists, Second Adventists, Church of England, no church at all, and the Catholics of this country who are unmodified by Protestantism, and have no saving knowledge of Christ as a Saviour?

Some excellent workers may be found among the latter, and we need them. This and other important questions relating to the work face us and must be decided ere we proceed further in organization.

We feel the importance of keeping the subject before the people in presenting petitions to various bodies and securing a hearing, before the constitutions of the states are considered complete and while laws are being discussed. Now is the time to legislate on temperance, and we cannot begin too early to agitate the question.

The unfermented wine department is at work, and next year we hope to have it on every Lord's table in the mission. All articles on temperance must be translated into Portuguese, so we will need a press department. MRS. E. E. BRELSFORD,

President Brazil W. C. T. U.

Collegio Piracicabano, Piracicaba, Brazil.

INDIA'S NEED.

The following resolution was adopted by Christian women, largely missionary workers, who came from various parts of India last fall to attend the annual religious meetings held in Lucknow at the time of the great Hindu festival of Dasehra.

WHEREAS, The evils of intemperance in India are appalling and the drink habit rapidly increasing.

RESOLVED, That we Christian women in attendance upon the Dasehra meetings at Lucknow, representing the Christian women of India, earnestly urge upon the consideration of the World's W. C. T. U. the advisability of sending to India at once, a W. C. T. U. missionary to remain a number of years in India to thoroughly organize the work.

Our own local W. C. T. U. indorsed this resolution and requested me as secretary to forward a copy to the home authorities.

This morning as I was looking over a late copy of THE UNION SIGNAL, my eye fell upon the encouraging item that efforts were being made to send out those who were "to strengthen the things that remain" in foreign lands. We need help sadly in India; some one who can take up, not only a superintendency of the work in general, but who will do work for which the missionaries have no time. This same meeting above referred to passed another resolution calling for the presentation to the Queen, the House of Commons and the Christian women of Great Britain, of petitions on the subject of the opium traffic in India and China. The editor of the Bombay Guardian has taken charge of the preparation and circulation of this petition.

Our W. C. T. U. in Lucknow was organized by Mrs. Leavitt and though we have lost some of our best and most active members and are beset with difficulties, there is still a little band that meets to read and hear of temperance news and cheer our hearts with the good work in England and America, praying for the time when all the world, loving God with all their hearts, shall love their neighbors as themselves. FLORENCE M. PERRINE.

Lucknow, India.

THE WHITE RIBBON IN SUNNY GREECE.

Mrs. Frances W. Zaraphonithes writes: "We began the temperance work in Greece thirteen years ago with some good results, but the enemy is so strong that we have to fight very hard. There in every house even the children drink. They use every kind of drink, but especially wine, for they raise the grapes and make the wine themselves. The only difference is that a great deal of water is put in which weakens it, but when they drink too much as they often do, it makes them drunk. We expect to sail from Boston the 4th of June. I shall be very happy to introduce the white ribbon in Greece. Our headquarters have been and will be on the Island of Andros, Greece, where my husband was born. Though, God willing, we shall travel on the main land and among the many islands of the Ægean Sea, spreading the gospel and the white ribbon wherever we go. My husband is a medical missionary and preaches the gospel in that way. We need your prayers and your sympathy also for we go out independently, depending only on God for our support. Pray for the Greek mission and for us and for the nation that God may remove that great enemy from Greece."

THE WORK IN HOLLAND.

I was deeply interested in the opening of the Temple in May. It is the crown of the Crusade, and in a deeper sense even, the crown after a painful cross.

I believe the dawn of a better day is to be seen in this country. The people are awakening to the value of our cause, and Rev. von Burch can do much good after the years of painful sowing. We hope to arrange with him for the coming of Mrs. Elizabeth Selmer, of Denmark. Our greatest need is the gathering of well intentioned Christian ladies to a union.

Miss Mary von der Goes is still laboring among the men and young men that need her motherly care, even by caring for their homes and families. She has a wonderful influence on old and young.

I have translated Lady Somerset's sermon on Heb. 11, to which I joined a report on the preaching by ladies in America. This has my thorough approval as a move in the best direction. I Cor. 11:5 compared with verse 4, show that both men and women are teachers in the fullest sense, speaking as prophets.

Miss von der Goes, while at the new village at the entrance of the new canal from Amsterdam to the sea, visited the fourteen drinking places which entice the pilots and the sailors to drink. By her loving influence ten of the twenty pilots became teetotalers, and fifty others, men and women, formed a total abstinence society, now a branch of our Mission hall, King William's house. Wishing to give her work a firm footing I wrote the little shilling book on John Ploughman for getting the funds for a Sailors' Rest and Home. Unhappily total abstinence is not favored, rather abhorred by our rich people and merchants. Even the friends that so loyally help me cannot understand that total abstinence is a necessity and not misplaced zeal. Wine even in this way is "a mocker" that it makes its friends unwilling and unable to see the truth and to realize the deadly power of the drinking customs. If American friends can help Miss von der Goes in starting this Sailors' Rest, the assistance will be most welcome.

C. S. ADAMA VON SCHELTEMA.

Arnheim, Holland.

A Y UNION OF FRENCH WORKING GIRLS.

A very interesting meeting was held on Sunday, May 8, at the residence of the Rev. Wm. Gibson, St. Cloud, near Paris. For some time past a dear friend, Mademoiselle Renaud, has been working amongst the poor of Suresnes, a village near St. Cloud; by means of her great efforts, ten confirmed drunkards of that village had been induced to sign the pledge. The question then arose, what to do for these men, who are for the most part bricklayers, etc. It was suggested that the young women of Suresnes should be gathered together and asked to form a temperance union, and that these converted men be invited to become honorary members.

Through the energy of our dear superintendent, Miss Isabel Gibson, all this was effected at the meeting mentioned above, which was held in the garden and opened by the singing of a hymn. The devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Gibson, and a few words were spoken about intemperance in France; some statistics were given, and the young women present were exhorted to sign the promise of abstinence, join in forming a union, and work in unison with all Christian women for our loving Master.

Miss Isabel Gibson then gave a short account of the work of the Y. W. C. T. U. in America, telling us the story of the Crusade, and so aroused the interest of all, that many were ready to follow in the steps of those Christ-like women. About twenty signed the pledge, a Y union was formed, officers were elected, and the work chosen was that of evangelization. Mademoiselle Renaud was elected superintendent of evangelistic work, and we have very great confidence in her, knowing how well she will fulfill her duties as such.

This meeting will always be remembered by many of us who were present as a gathering of great blessing and encouragement, and as one on which our Heavenly Father allowed us to testify for Him and His cause, and to do His work. May the bright sun of France shine down on many more such gatherings. F. B.

Acting Pres. Paris Y's.

A DEMOREST MEDAL CONTEST AMONG THE HINDUS.

The third Demorest medal contest held in Poona occurred on Monday evening, April 25. The first and second took place in the M. E. English church. The one on Monday was held in the native general library in the city proper, and was composed of nine students from the Poona Native Institution.

The attendance was large, many of the well-educated native gentlemen being present. No ladies were in the audience excepting a half dozen from our English church. The recitations were given in English and were well delivered, especially the "Prohibition Life-Boat," which won the medal. This speaker showed marked ability as an orator, warming up to his subject and feeling the influence of his enthusiastic audience.

It was a fine looking set of young men. They all wore their little embroidered caps while speaking, and one even kept his umbrella in his hand. Their striking costumes of flowing white, and the audience in oriental garments and "pugries," or head dresses of pink, blue, red or yellow, all in the fitful glare of a few candles, made a novel picture to us Americans.

The judges were two native gentlemen, with unpronounceable names, and an English lawyer. The lawyer awarded the medal, pinning it on the front of the winner's cap. At the close of the entertainment over thirty pledge cards were circulated and signed.

Mr. Bhave, the principal of the school, was very much pleased with the success, and is eager to hold another contest in June or July, when, as he says, he hopes Lord Harris, Governor of our Presidency, will be present.

As we drove home through the crowded bazar, we felt well pleased with our first medal contest among the Hindus. The next morning the whole nine, accompanied by one of the teachers of the Institute, drove up to the parsonage to have their photographs taken. We hope to send a copy to Miss Willard soon. MARGIE B. DENNING.

FROM REMOTE MADAGASCAR.

We are deeply interested in temperance work and many of us labored in the cause at home before coming out here, but it is only of late years that there has been anything for us to do in the matter, in the central parts of this large island. When we came, more than twenty years ago, there was scarcely any drinking going on here, so strict were the laws against it, but, sad to say, a great deal goes on these last few years. The traders from the Old and New Worlds have penetrated to this remote island and brought intoxicants. And, although the Queen and the Prime Minister would be thankful to do away with it, they are powerless, for the treaties made with Germany, France, America and England allow the importation of goods at ten per cent. If the Queen (who is a moral lady) were to forbid the importation of these body and soul-destroying drinks, all the traders would immediately be up in arms, and this defenseless baby amongst nations (now struggling against crafty French intrigues) would be crushed.

As president of our little branch of the W. C. T. U., I, with the other officials, recently presented to the Prime Minister a petition which we have drawn up (in Malagasy, of course,) suggesting certain details which we have thought might be considered by him with advantage. We were granted a personal interview and were most graciously received, given an assurance that our petition should be considered, and that we should have a reply. Almost immediately after, the Prime Minister was taken ill, very ill, and has not been able to do any work, so we have as yet heard nothing from him.

I was in England, on furlough, when Mrs. Leavitt was here, and have never had the pleasure of meeting her. Her name is held in affectionate remembrance by some of the many natives who heard her. Two grandchildren of the Prime Minister attended one of Mrs. Leavitt's meetings and signed the pledges, and now if wine is handed to them anywhere they refuse it.

Miss Clark, who is thoroughly acquainted with the language, is our press superintendent, and has been diligent in writing and translating various articles on teetotalism which we circulate as widely as possible. Of course, we bear in mind the temperance work in connection with all our efforts to evangelize and elevate the people.

I ask you to pray for Madagascar, that our loving Father in heaven may be pleased to overrule all for this country's good and to restrain the evil counsels of those who are selfishly working her harm.

R. M. CLARK,
President Madagascar W. C. T. U.
Antananarivo, Madagascar.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

The address of the National British Women's Temperance Association is 25 Memorial Hall, Farringdon street, London. The address of the W. W. C. T. U. in Great Britain is 57 Gordon Square, N. W. London.

The British women would gladly have still larger headquarters for their ever increasing work, but their purse says "nay."

In the English issue of the Review of Reviews, January, 1892, Lady Henry is styled "President of the W. C. T. U., England," whereas it should have been "President of the British Women's Temperance Association (B. W. T. A.)" This, to a superficial observer, may seem a small matter, but the individuality of a society as of a person is to be revered.

Dr. Zaraphonithes, who will aid in spreading the white ribbon movement in Greece, long ago met some American missionaries in the city of Smyrna and was converted. This resulted in his coming to America to be educated for a missionary, after which he married an American young woman and returned to his native land to preach the gospel. He signed the temperance pledge twenty-two years ago in Wheaton, Ill., while in the home of the late president, J. Blanchard. Since then he has traveled much in America and has fought the saloon wherever he found a chance. He has spoken in many temperance meetings in Brooklyn during the past winter.

At the meeting of the executive committee of the South Australian W. C. T. U. the declaration of principles and plan of work of the World's W. C. T. U. were read and it was decided that a bureau be established in accordance with paragraph two of the plan of work. THE UNION SIGNAL and Oak and Ivy Leaf are read and much appreciated, over fifty copies of each being taken. At their last convention it was decided that for the better prosecution of the work, the colony be divided into districts. Since then nearly all the proposed districts have been organized and the result has been most satisfactory. Fresh interest has been awakened; flagging zeal rekindled and everywhere the women are more determined to work until prohibition entire and universal shall have been obtained.

NEW HAMPSHIRE NEWS.

"Every action has a purpose,
Love can conquer every foe;
Led by God's indwelling spirit
We shall on to victory go."

Our state seems to be waking up to the good resulting from the silver medal contests. Warner W. C. T. U. holds its fifth one this month and a gold contest is soon to come off in Manchester.

Contests have been held and medals awarded at Francestown, Warner, North Haverhill, Hampton, Nashua, Franklin Falls, Whitefield, Manchester and Hillsborough Bridge.

The National superintendent's offer of a hand-painted banner to the Sunday-school showing the best record for the coming year is arousing great interest among our hills and valleys. Had there been a like offer last year, the banner would now be floating in New Hampshire. Massachusetts and New York have come in ahead leaving our state third on the list.

The Grafton county convention held at East Haverhill was one of great interest, closing with a Demorest medal contest in the evening, Ida Moore, winner. During the afternoon session, among other good things, Mrs. W. A. Layne, superintendent of work among lumbermen, gave a report worth printing if we had space to give it. Mrs. E. H. Thompson, of Lebanon, read a paper upon "Temperance Literature."

Wilton Congregational Church threw open its doors to the Hillsboro county convention. Many interesting papers were read; thirteen resolutions were passed, and the convention closed with remarks from the state president. The tenth quarterly meeting of the Strafford county convention was held at Farmington, at which time the subject of scientific instruction in the schools was fully presented. The Farmington union did all in their power to make the convention a success.

The zeal with which the various conventions throughout the state are carried on cannot fail to prove the active interest the white-ribbon army feel in the work. Keene entertained the Cheshire county convention in real motherly fashion, and all went away benefited. The subject of scientific temperance instruction was so well agitated that resolutions were passed pledging the Cheshire county W. C. T. U. to do all in their power to secure suffrage for women in school matters, and to enforce the scientific temperance instruction law.

The Nashua W. C. T. U. held an "experience" social during the week of self-denial, each member bringing a dollar which she obtained either by work or self-denial. The room was prettily decorated with potted plants, bouquets of flowers with ferns and drooping vines. The experiences were varied and interesting; all were worthy of notice, some few we venture to give. Two denied themselves new spring bonnets, one denied herself an evening of social enjoyment that she might earn her dollar by mending a coat for her son; one made sweeping caps and sold them to her friends; one wrote an article for the press, another wrote a temperance story for which a friend paid her a dollar. Many who lived some distance from church walked instead of riding on the cars, thus saving their dollar. One elder sister (seventy-five years) said she had a desire to paint and thinking it was never too late to begin a good work, set herself about it, and earned her dollar in that way. These experiences all served to show how dear to the heart of every white ribbon woman is the cause for which she labors. The exercises were interspersed with music and recitations. The reading room of the union where the social was held was full to overflowing, a number of outsiders being present. The sum of fifty dollars was realized; several new members were added (making the roll-call one hundred) and a number of honorary members.

Evangelistic services are held every Sunday afternoon at the rooms of the Nashua union, and mothers' meetings the first Sunday in the month. The pastors of the several churches have given addresses and taken collections for the benefit of the union. The union has also been invited several times to take charge of the Sunday evening service at the Reform Club which has been done with good results. A police matron, a Loyal Temperance Legion, an employment bureau and woman's exchange are among the means employed by this active union.

I quote the following from a letter from the superintendent of Sabbath observance at Durham: "Our little union here is prospering and we have an L. T. L. The petitions to Congress and to the World's Fair commissioners have about 3,000 names. I have sent my annual circular asking that the week of prayer for Sabbath observance be kept."

The president of the Salem union sends the following report: "Our Salem union has over forty members, who are so widely scattered that we alternate our meetings between Salem Depot and the Center. Mrs. Gleason lectured in both villages early in the winter. Rev. Mr. White, pastor of the M. E. church, Salem Depot, gave us a lecture a few months ago, and the collection was sent to the 'Mercy Home,' which is doing so much good in our state. By the removal of Rev. F. E. White and Mrs. White to Dexter, Me., we lose two earnest temperance workers; the former has given many lectures in this county and in different parts of our state. Mrs. White was our faithful secretary and superintendent of temperance instruction for the schools in Salem. Miss Ellen Kimball, superintendent of literature and of press work, has distributed thousands of pages of leaflets in our town the past year, and is agent for THE UNION SIGNAL. She walks miles every year in this work of love, and is one of the charter members, having joined when our union was organized.

The last lecture in the W. C. T. U. course in Hopkinton was delivered by Rev. H. E. Thayer, his subject being, "An Evening in Darkest Africa." It was illustrated and was well attended.

MRS. F. H. BAILEY,
State Reporter, Hopkinton.

MARYLAND.

"And when the strife is fierce, the warfare long,
Steals on the ear the distant triumph song,
And hearts are brave again, and arms are strong,
Alleluia."

Interesting reports from various counties have been received recently.

Hartford county.—The president, Mrs. Woodrow, writes of the visit of the state organizer, Mrs. Haslup, to this county this spring. Mrs. Haslup and Mrs. Woodrow together visited various local unions, addressed public meetings in different places, and organized two unions, one at Aberdeen, and one at Carsin's Run. Thirteen meetings were held in all, and at some of these addresses were made by ministers of different denominations. At least sixty new members were received into the different unions during this trip, and many signed the pledge who did not join. Another visit here will be made by Mrs. Haslup shortly. Frequent socials by the union at Havre de Grace, and excellent work by the temperance society of the M. E. Church of the same place are also noted. Mrs. Bailey, corresponding secretary, writes of two Y's organized by her, May 10, with the assistance of Mrs. Milligan, president of Cecil county union, one at Level, the other at Glenville.

Kent county.—Mrs. Stewart, press superintendent, writes of much active and valuable work by this union. Chestertown Y gave a Japanese tea for financial needs and realized forty dollars. "Heart of grace," Mrs. Stewart writes, has been taken by the Y and the W of this place, noted for its conservatism, and the county union invited by them to hold its annual meeting there, June 2. A Demorest medal contest in Union church near Chestertown, and a cantata, "The Water Fairies," by the Kennedyville union, are also noted. Choice selections, good attendance, and much interest characterized the former, and an interesting address on the general work of the W. C. T. U. and the plan of work for the union of Kennedyville, the latter. Monthly public meetings with attractive exercises are held by the Kennedyville union with excellent results. The "phenomenal growth" of the "United Y's" in the neighborhood of Fairlee, is most favorably noticed in this letter. A membership of sixty, and weekly meetings, with an average attendance of from eighty to one hundred and twenty, are features of this organization. The union at Sassafras also reports encouraging meetings.

Wooster county.—Mrs. Strickland, president, sends a full and graphic report of work here. The union at Snow Hill has kept on bravely with the work, notwithstanding much sickness among its members. Jail and almshouse work are specialties with this union. The Y. W. C. T. U. organized here by Mrs. Helen G. Rice of Boston, last fall, has charge of parlor work principally. The union among colored people in this place is also doing well and has organized a Band of Hope. Of the union in Pocomoke City, Mrs. Strickland writes: "Very cheering it is to mingle with our sisters here. One cannot fail to gain encouragement from their bright faces and determination of purpose. Fourteen departments of work have been taken up by them and that untiring worker, Mrs. J. D. Long, wife of the Rev. Mr. Long, who, though in her seventy-fourth year, succeeds in getting a column of temperance matter every week in the Peninsular Ledger, which is friendly to our work. We organized a Y. W. C. T. U. in this city a short time ago, and there is also a good Band of Hope here."

Stockton union, though "low" for the last two years, has wonderfully revived. Two of the workers canvassed the town for new members, and the Loyal Temperance Legion, having been reorganized, gave a successful entertainment at which fifteen pledges were taken, and through which much public interest was created. These same young people gave a donation to a poor mother and children who were suffering through the drunkenness of the father, and truly the faces of the little band expressed that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Stockton is greatly "blessed" in having such devoted workers as the Rev. Mr. MacQuay and wife. The unions at Girdletree and Connors are also progressing favorably. Public entertainments were given at both places recently with much success. The Rev. E. H. Derrickson of this circuit is a staunch advocate of the W. C. T. U., and gives admirable aid to the work. The little village of Klej Grange, the home of Mrs. Strickland, has a prosperous Loyal Temperance Legion, and the entertainments are always good, generally drawing crowded houses. A Band of Hope was organized recently in the village of Goodwill, and is doing bravely under the earnest care of its superintendent.

The union at Berlin which appeared "dead" for a long time has revived wonderfully through the efforts of some who are striving to keep it moving. A public meeting was held there recently in which all the ministers of the town united. Interesting addresses were given by each, pledges were taken and a fair collection made. From part of the collection suitable literature was bought for general distribution.

A visit from the organizer, Mrs. Haslup, is on the program of future work for this county. Literature freely distributed all over the county prior to Mrs. Haslup's visit, is a feature in this connection, well worthy of adoption in other places. Superintendents of petition work have been appointed throughout the county, and considerable has been accomplished in that line also.

Queen Anne's County.—Mrs. Nelson, president, writes of work by various unions. Piney Neck has bought a lot and will build a hall for headquarters as soon as the money can be raised. The L. T. L. of this place is doing earnest work. Mrs. Nunam, the widow of a minister of the M. E. church, has offered the Centreville union a lot for headquarters. A floating bar-room" in Chester river was a unique form of evil that troubled this local option county for some time. The keeper on arrest claimed through counsel that the federal tax protected him from prosecution under the local laws of the county. The final result of the matter has not been reported to me.

Carroll County.—Union Bridge Y, Mrs. Ruth H. Little, former president, in response to a letter of inquiry, writes of active juvenile and social work. Tickets given the children for attendance and for new members, and five of these received in exchange for a pretty card, was the device adopted for attracting the children. The results were excellent, between fifty and sixty children being in attendance at some of the meetings. Several socials have been held by the union, and a novel and delightful feature of one of these was that the Y's of Westminster, a neighboring town, were the special guests of the occasion. Recitations, music, both vocal and instrumental, and a brief address from Mrs. Herr, the county president, composed the program, and after this refreshments were served. An amusing and suggestive souvenir of the evening was given each one present. A most encouraging element in the work here is that there are four churches in the town, all, by the way, using unfermented wine, whose doors are always open to the union for meetings, and whose pastors are in sympathy with the work and give it their assistance in any possible way. At a recent meeting here in the M. P. church, Mrs. Haslup, state organizer, gave an address, and the World's Petition was circulated, securing quite a number of signatures. Miss M. L. Thompson, superintendent of press work in the Westminster Y, writes of the work of this union organized at the close of the state convention in this city, October last. Two receptions have been given by the union, both pronounced successes. Miss Thompson writes of the visit to the Y of Union Bridge, stating that "a large representation went by special car on the Western Maryland Railroad, and were most cordially received, and treated with a literary program to feast our minds, and delicacies to regale our palates." Pleasant rooms have been secured by this union for headquarters, and every effort will be made to have them attractive and profitable. With "every member resolved to make the influence of the Y in this community potent for temperance," a successful future for the Westminster Y may be safely predicted.

The College Y in the same place, organized also at the close of the last state convention, reports, through its press superintendent, Miss J. P. Barnes, active and interesting work. The young men of the college have taken a lively interest in the union, and a great majority are enrolled as honorary members. Social entertainments are held monthly, and given alternately by the Y's proper and by the honoraries. Miss Kate C. Jackson of Cambridge, this state, and Miss Grace Phillips of Laurel, Del., are officers of the union.

Baltimore.—A social for the benefit of the work for newsboys was given by the East Baltimore Y at the Memorial building, May 9th. The newsboys, under the direction of this union, meet on Friday evenings at the building, where lessons, games and exercises of various kinds are engaged in. A Y conference, combined with an afternoon tea, given the city Y's by Mrs. Baldwin, state president, and Mrs. Robinson, president of the city union, must be noted among recent events at the Memorial Building. Interesting and most suggestively helpful papers on the admirable work of several of these unions were read by members of the unions, and the afternoon was a decided success in every respect. A charmingly illustrated lecture "From Lucerne to the Heart of Florence" was given, May 9th, by Mr. P. M. Reese, for the benefit of the state work.

The annual meeting of the Maryland State Temperance Alliance was held in this city May 2–5. Mrs. E. A. Boole, of New York, Mr. John R. Clark, Rev. Dr. Wharton and Dr. Billingslea were among the speakers. Devotional exercises were conducted by the W. C. T. U. on the morning of the 4th. An address on the "Work and Educational Character of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union" was made by Mrs. S. K. Morey. A lengthy and animated discussion was aroused by a resolution presented indorsing the W. C. T. U. and trusting that "the day is not far distant when woman shall be clothed with the franchise and like her brothers exercise her right to vote." The arguments pro and con covered wide ground, the Declaration of Independence, the constitution, social economics, the Bible, Great Britain, China and various other sources being drawn upon. The resolution finally carried with few dissenting votes. A request to Congress to make no appropriation for the World's Fair unless the Fair is closed on Sunday and the sale of intoxicants on the grounds forbidden was also among the resolutions passed.

The executive committee of the state W. C. T. U. met in the Memorial Building, May 17, to consider plans for the annual fall meeting, which will be held at Elkton, Cecil county. Resolutions commending the determination and courage of the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, of New York, in his recent crusade as president of the society for the Prevention of Crime, were passed by the Presbyterian ministers of Baltimore at a late meeting.

M. A. L.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A LIST of signatures to the World's Petition, secured by a blind lady, comes from Oreton, Ohio.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY, of Mississippi, is engaged for the coming year to organize unions in Louisiana.

MRS. MARY J. TELFORD, one of our National organizers, recently invested eight days' work in Rochester, N. Y. She is now on her way west, and expects to visit Oklahoma before the next convention.

IN the death of Rev. Dr. Gilbert De La Matyr, at Akron, Ohio, recently, every good cause has lost a champion, capable, generous and vigilant. The doctor was a Methodist minister and a Christian politician. May such be multiplied!

MEMBERS of the W. C. T. U. who have good gospel or temperance reading matter can make no better disposition of it than by sending it to Rev. J. B. Mitchell, colporteur of the American Tract Society, Medina, Mich., for use in home missionary work.

IN Cattaraugus county, New York, department work is being pushed vigorously and the program of the annual meeting is being arranged. Helen M. Gougar, Elizabeth U. Yates, Mary J. Weaver, and Emily M. Burgess are in the county lending a helping hand.

MISS O. S. BURNETT, so long state organizer for Ohio, is passing through deep waters as her mother has "gone home." For three years she had been a great sufferer and longed for the rest that awaited her. Miss Burnett has returned to her work in Farmington College.

THE evangelists, Major and Mrs. E. T. Scott, are doing valiant service for temperance under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of California who have engaged them for the year. All of their appointments are made by Mrs. B. Sturtevant Peet, state president, also superintendent of the lecture bureau, through the state secretary, Mrs. H. E. Brown. The work of these evangelists cannot be too highly commended.

AN enjoyable entertainment was held recently in the interest of temperance by the ladies of Eddyville, Dawson county, Neb., at the instance of one or two members of the W. C. T. U. visiting there. This was to be the first of a series of entertainments with the two-fold object of establishing a branch of the W. C. T. U. in Eddyville, and of fighting the saloon that is trying so hard to find an entrance. Success to the undertaking!

EACH year since the admission of South Dakota into the sisterhood of states, the colleges and universities of that state have held an oratorical contest for the possession of a chalcedony slab. Each school has a preliminary contest in which eight of its best orators take part (the orations to be original productions), and those obtaining highest honors go to the state contest. Miss Nellie Barker took the second place in the preliminary contest at Dakota University, situated at Mitchell, S. D., being but one-sixth of a mark behind the winner. Her subject was "Woman, Man's Equal."

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

Dr. Dickinson, of the Temperance Hospital of London, was a recent pleasant caller at the hospital. He has become much interested in non-alcoholic medication.

The following is an extract from a letter received by our treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Bigelow:

"Inclosed please find one dollar for the National Temperance Hospital. Though this is a very small sum, yet it may help a little, and my heart would rejoice if I were able to give a larger amount. I think this is one of the most important branches of our temperance work, and may God open the hearts of our wealthy people, and lead them to do something for this cause."

Mrs. M. E. Andrews, of South Bend, Ind., who was authorized several years ago by the board of the National Temperance Hospital to represent its work to the people and interest them in its behalf, was one of the welcome callers at headquarters this past week. As usual she left donations in money that had been entrusted by temperance friends to her keeping for the hospital. This will be used to further the work of proving that the diseased body can be more safely treated with non-alcoholic medicines than by alcoholic medication. Mrs. Andrews pleads for a worthy cause, one that will be more fully understood and observed by coming generations.

The board of the hospital are not only spending time and energy in devising plans and means for the existence of the hospital, but are helping it to make ready for its work. The care and responsibility of guiding such an institution in its work is not small by any means, but the hearts and purses of these women have been opened, and several of the members of the board have selected rooms which they will furnish. Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, the vice-president, supports an endowed bed, and has chosen a large, pleasant room in the new hospital, and will make it one of the most cheerful rooms in the building. Mrs. Bigelow, our treasurer, has selected a large, sunshiny room, which she will furnish. Mrs. Ralph Greenlee, who has lately become a member of the board, shows her interest in the cause by choosing one of the pleasantest rooms to furnish. Other members and friends have signified an interest and promised to lend aid. Friends at a distance, remember that one set of hands cannot accomplish all that is necessary to be done for the work of this institution, which, when its principles are understood, will benefit all humanity. Open your hearts and purses.

With much interest we read the following in the Independent:

"B. W. Richardson, M. D., F. R. S., of London, a leading physiological and chemical scientist and experienced practitioner, speaks thus: 'I have learned purely by experimental observation that, in its action on the living body, this chemical substance, alcohol, deranges the constitution of the blood; unduly excites the heart and respiration; paralyzes the minute blood-vessels; increases and decreases, according to the degree of its application, the functions of the digestive organs, of the liver and of the kidneys; disturbs the regularity of nervous action; lowers the animal temperature, and lessens the muscular power. Such, independently of any prejudice of party, or influence of sentiment, are the unanswerable teachings of the sternest of all evidences, the evidence of experiment, of natural fact revealed to man by experimental testing of natural phenomena.'"

Any one desiring to correspond with the matron, Mrs. Sarah Hornby, or the house physician, Dr. Linnie M. Ousley, can do so by addressing them at 1619 Diversey Avenue.

In December the following donations were received: Avon, N. Y., W. C. T. U., thirty-eight cans fruit, six glasses of jelly, two pairs sheets, four pairs cases, six towels, one blanket, old cotton. Streator, Ill., Y's, box containing bananas, nuts, cakes and grapes. Mt. Palatine, Ill., W. C. T. U., twelve cans fruit, twelve glasses jelly. Naples, Ill., W. C. T. U., eighteen cans fruit, twelve glasses jelly. Coat's Grove, Mich., W. C. T. U., one-half bushel potatoes, six cans fruit, six glasses jelly, old cotton. Pawlet, Vt., W. C. T. U., four sheets, four cases, one spread, one old blanket, four towels, one pin-cushion. Winnebago, Minn., W. C. T. U., thirty-six glasses jelly, one can fruit, five yards toweling. Table Grove, Ill., W. C. T. U., two towels, six cans fruit, two glasses jelly. Lake City, Ill., W. C. T. U., eight chickens. Malvern, Ill., W. C. T. U., thirteen glasses jelly, two cans fruit, five pounds of butter, cake, bread, one chicken, four towels, old cotton. Geneva, Ill., W. C. T. U., six cans fruit, seven glasses jelly, three towels, three bars soap, one scrap-book, one comb. Jacksonville, Ill., W. C. T. U., six glasses jelly. Waterbury, Conn., Y's, ten nurses' aprons.

ELLEN SNYDER, Sec.

Official Communications.

BOSTON MINUTES.

The entire edition of the National minutes of the Boston Convention is exhausted. We have some of the reports of superintendents and if there are any who received the minutes without the reports, we shall be glad to supply them if application is made very soon, giving name and address.

CAROLINE B. BUELL.

Room 1114, The Temple, Chicago.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

Our Library Table.

A KNIGHT THAT SMOTE THE DRAGON, by Edward A. Rand.

Young people love stories of knight-errantry, and boys and girls alike find a thrill of joy sweep over them as they read of brave battles fought and won. Edward A. Rand has written a story that has the merit of being true throughout; a story of a knight who met the "dragon" when only a lad, against whom the battle went sorely, but who rose at last victorious, and then buckling on his hardly-won spurs, grasped his sword in his hand and went out to fight for others whom the mighty wicked one was persecuting, and fought as heroes fight until death came and he was forced to leave the battle to others. This true knight was none other than John B. Gough. The author has given Gough's boyhood and young manhood to the world in a volume that must stir the love and admiration of the young. Every day some anxious mother or sister asks for a "good temperance" story for the boy or girl whose decision has not yet been finally made against King Alcohol. Here is one book to meet that demand.

Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price 90c.

PEBBLES AND PEARLS, by E. Cora De Puy, is a sketch of Mrs. Agnes L. d'Arcambal's work for prisoners in Michigan—principally for those confined in the state prison at Jackson. Her work began in 1872 when she was interested in collecting books for a library to be presented to the prisoners, gradually extending, until in 1890 a beautiful Home of Industry for Discharged Prisoners was erected, with Mrs. A. L. d'Arcambal as founder. For eighteen years this brave soul had worked without office and without salary, her sole incitement being love and sympathy for the needy ones. The volume is full of vital interest, and will of a surety serve to arouse for prisoners in other states the sympathy and practical aid of those who read it

Review & Herald Pub. Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Paper cover, 50c., cloth, 75c.

"The time of the singing of birds has come," and with it one of the most delightful volumes about these feathered heralds of the spring that could well be written. LITTLE BROTHERS OF THE AIR, by Olive Thorne Miller, is more fascinating than a story, and brimming over with delicate humor and exquisite description. It reveals a patience and keen persistence in the study of these inhabitants of the air that could only be given by one who loved them with a true appreciation. We who only smile at the robin hopping along in the grass, the noisy sparrow flying from before our approach, or the woodpecker climbing up the tree-trunk, know little of birds. To become familiar with them we must do as this bird lover did—watch them early and late in their home life, follow them warily to their hiding places, humor their shyness, and woo them with cautious care and gentle determination. Such a glimpse into real bird-life and character as this book gives, must win over many staunch friends and admirers to these bewitching little inhabitants of wood and field and roadside.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York. $1.25.

THE LIFE OF MRS. S. J. C. DOWNS, edited by Rev. J. B. Graw, D. D., is a volume that will be dear to those members of the White Ribbon Army who knew the brave, bright spirit that for ten years led the work of temperance in New Jersey as state president. The strong, kindly, sunny face that greets one on opening the book is a fitting introduction to the story of a life that was characterized throughout by its broad helpfulness, and the steady focusing of strength and interest upon the temperance question. Frances E. Willard, Mary T. Lathrap and other leaders in the work have contributed to these pages their testimonials of love and respect. An appendix contains brief sketches of the lives of "Mother" Hill and Mrs. Mary R. Denman.

131 Federal St., Camden, N. J.

THE KALEIDOSCOPE is a book containing eleven charming cat-stories for little folks. From one picture,—a little girl and her flower-decked pussy, eleven well-known story writers have each written a cat story, and the group of eleven is very delightful. Pansy, Faye Huntington, Emily Huntington Miller, and others equally well known, are the authors. It is just the thing for those dreaded rainy days when "outdoors" is forbidden ground.

D. Lothrop Company, Boston, Mass.

GIRLS: FAULTS AND IDEALS. A FAMILIAR TALK WITH QUOTATIONS FROM LETTERS, by J. R. Miller, D. D. It is a hopeful sign for the world that the standard of character for girls is being elevated, and the horizon of their usefulness widened, surely and not slowly. Dr. Miller gives in the above little volume some terse expressions as to the highest ideals of girl life, dwelling first and last upon the need of the indwelling of that Christ-spirit without which none can reach the true goal of worth.

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., 46 East Fourteenth street, New York City.

GLIMPSES OF HEAVEN, Rev. W. H. Munnell, Louisville, Ky. A series of plain, practical discourses on heavenly themes, written in terse, strong language, making a thoroughly restful and helpful book.

John V. Huber Co., publishers, Ridge avenue and Eleventh street, Philadelphia, Pa. Price, $1.

"I searched for God with heart-throbs of despair,
'Neath ocean's bed, above the vaulted sky;
At last I searched myself—my inmost I—
And found Him there."

This quotation on the title page of GOD'S IMAGE IN MAN, by Henry Wood, the author of "Edward Burton" and "Natural Law in the Business World," is the admirable key-note to a work which is soul-refreshing through all its pages. It is far from being a theological treatise; throwing off as it does, the trammels of dogma, it reaches into the realms of truth, and brings so near to "our grossness" the white light of spirituality that we can look into that "inmost I" of the soul and gain wonderful glimpses of God. In the chapter on "Man's Dual Nature," Mr. Wood says: "True life comes through openness toward God. The traditional far-away God is not a 'Present Help.' The fact must come into human consciousness that the soul is in God and God is in it. Dwelling with such a Presence the world becomes a living Theophany, the soul substantial rather than the body, and nature so transformed that it seems ready to melt into spirit. Character is a solid entity, while wealth, power and pleasure are ephemeral appearances. Communion with heaven is through inward states, and not by way of tidings and messages from without. We are not souls imprisoned in fleshy tabernacles, but egos possessing powers of expression from within and without. The highest proof of immortality comes not from external evidence, reason or analysis, but from the fact that man can become thoroughly emancipated from the dominion of the body while still using it. 'Our conversation is in heaven;' and that is an internal spiritual life and illumination, rather than a distinct locality."

Articles by this author in four recent numbers of the Arena have attracted wide attention, and been highly commended. Lee & Shepard, publishers, 10 Milk street, Boston. $1.

Frances E. Sparhawk is the author of a strong story of life among the American Indians of the present, entitled ONOQUA. It depicts the struggles that go on in the mind of this native American, between his ambition to be like the white man in the power and wealth of the latter and the not unnatural desire of remaining in his untutored state of freedom; the painful perplexity he experiences when he hears the fair words of the white agents on the government reservations, but finds the fulfillment of their promises of advancement and help always in the future; the eagerness with which the Indian boys and girls grasp the opportunities to attend schools, the hopes with which they return again to their people that they may be able to teach them in turn of the better ways of the civilized world, and the baffling hindrances that meet their zeal, because of the failure of the white man to do his part on the reservations, and aid the Indian toward independent and intelligent American citizenship. The story is characterized by a simple pathos throughout, a pathos that careful observers cannot fail to read when they look past the grave stolidity of the Red Man's features and see depicted there the sorrow of a race without a nationality—a people without a home.

Lee & Shepard, publishers, 10 Milk street, Boston. Paper 50 cents.

FROM THE USHER'S DESK TO THE TABERNACLE PULPIT, the Life and Labors of Charles Haddon Spurgeon. By Rev. Robert Shindler.

"Men are helpful through the intellect and the affections. Other help, I find a false appearance. If you affect to give me bread and fire, I perceive that I pay for it the full price and at last it leaves me as it found me, neither better nor worse; but all mental and moral force is a positive good. . . . I cannot even hear of personal vigor of any kind, great power of performance without fresh resolution."

One thinks of these words of Emerson, having laid down a book in the reading of whose three hundred pages one walks beside the great Spurgeon awhile, as from childhood to the grave he steadily advanced "in grace and in the knowledge and the love of God," preaching the Word with marvelous power and doing a work whose extent cannot be made known until the books of the Kingdom are opened.

The author of the above named work takes his readers back to the time of Ferdinand Alvarez, Duke of Alva, who upon his deathbed in 1589, boasted that he had "sent to the executioners no less than eighteen thousand persons, . . . actual martyrs to the faith . . . Besides there were very many thousands who had been driven into exile, large numbers of whom found a home in England. Among those were the progenitors of the English Spurgeons." Sweet waters are rarely traced to a source of bitterness, and a sturdy, sterling, noble character like Spurgeon can, in nine cases out of ten, trace its life-stream back to some clear well or spring up among the mountains of pure and holy living. Spurgeon belonged to the people, and there are none who heard or read his earnest words, but will welcome this book of which he is the hero. Its chapters are full of reminiscence and incident, making more prominent than all else Spurgeon's fidelity to truth, the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. The closing paragraph of the volume may not be out of place:

"The night of 31st January, 1892, will be 'a night to be much remembered,' as that in which the greatest preacher of his age passed to his rest and reward. May it prove an eventful night to many who have hitherto slighted, neglected, or refused the 'great salvation' he proclaimed! May the earnest pleadings of him, whose mortal lips are now silent in the grave, come back to them with a thousand-fold energy and emphasis, and with the power of the Holy Spirit; that, as Samson slew more at his death than in his life, so now the blessing resting on the testimony of the lips sealed in silence may be manifold more abundant than on the living utterance of the great soul-winner!"

A. C. Armstrong and Son, 51 E. Tenth street, New York City.

The brute creation has warm friends among men, and the latter are making determined attacks upon the work of those who in the name of science inflict suffering almost beyond belief upon innocent animals. A book has recently been published in England, the perusal of which must arouse the hot indignation of every individual whose heart throbs with any touch of human kindness. The odd name of the book is "THE NINE CIRCLES OF THE HELL OF THE INNOCENT. DESCRIBED FROM THE REPORTS OF THE PRESIDING SPIRITS. A few extracts from the preface, written by Frances Power Cobbe, will explain the naming and the nature of this volume.

"The imagination of one of the supreme poets of the world exhausted itself in the effort to conceive of a variety and intensity of torment which should seem the fitting divine punishment for human guilt. . . . . The Inferno was the nightmare of a dark and pitiless age; and has vanished with the dawn of brighter times. But what explanation shall we offer for the fact that—not in poetic fiction, but in literal truth—the variety and extremity of tortures imagined by Dante are paralleled, if not outdone, by those inflicted by men of our own age and country, not on guilty and condemned offenders against Divine and human laws, but on beings absolutely incapable of incurring any guilt whatever?"

The "nine circles" are the nine classes of tortures or experiments to which the victims are subjected. The book was planned by Frances Power Cobbe, and compiled by Mrs. G. M. Rhodes. It consists entirely and only of verbatim extracts from vivisection reports, dates, places and authorities, all accurately stated. The matter covers one hundred and sixty pages, and yet this is only a very small part of the tale of horrors that could be told. The book is hardly readable by those whose minds are untrained to the contemplation of such things. Yet it should be read to make the heart tender toward man's dumb friends, and to arouse just anger and active opposition to such practices. It is surely a strong, if unvarnished plea.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Paternoster Square London. Price, one shilling.

JUNE MAGAZINES.

The Review of Reviews. 13 Astor Place, New York City.

The Forum. The Forum Pub. Co., New York City.

The Atlantic Monthly. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. Philadelphia, Pa.

Historia, an illustrated Monthly Magazine of Historical Stories for Young People. Chamber of Commerce Building, Chicago.

The Chautauquan. T. L. Flood Pub. House, Meadville, Pa.

The New England Magazine, Boston.

The Arena. The Arena Pub. Co., Boston.

The Californian Illustrated Magazine, San Francisco, Cal.

The Popular Science Monthly. D. Appleton & Co., New York.

The Homiletic Review. Funk & Wagnall Co., New York.

Good Form. 217 La Salle St., Chicago.

Our Day. Woman's Temperance Pub. Association, Chicago.

OUR CHILDREN

SING A SONG OF SIXPENCE.

BY MRS. MARY L. WYATT.

CHARACTER.—A girl in pretty costume.

Sing a song of sixpence,
A pocket full of rye,
That's a funny song, I think,
For a temperance girl to try,
For I have heard that whisky strong
From grains of rye is made
And those who drink it seldom have
A sixpence, I'm afraid.

Four and twenty blackbirds,
Baked within a pie,
I think I know the song they sang
As soon as they could fly,
"Long live the king and his good queen,
Who drink cold water clear,
And when they dine,
Refuse the wine,
May they live many a year."

The maid was in the garden,
And heard the blackbirds sing,
And she laughed a silly little laugh,
And mocked the temperance king;
And while she had her hands upraised
A-hanging out the clothes,
A little blackbird served her right,
By nipping off her nose.

West Medford, Mass.

THE TEMPERANCE SHOW.

BY MRS. GEORGE ARCHIBALD.

Chapter 1.

HALF A DOZEN.

Now there are a great many half-dozens as you know. I need not enumerate them, nor attempt it. I will simply say that this half-dozen were a half-dozen girls.

Names? Yes, they had names,—namely: Rachie Perry, Josie Conner, Mamie Harvey, Lizzie Logan, Maggie Meade and Jane Jones. An "ie," you see, for every little girl except one. Perhaps she would have been Janie if her mother had not been too busy to think of it.

But Jane's mother had all she could do to keep her children in food and clothes without spending any extra time or thought on pet names. Even your own dear mother would not, maybe, speak so sweetly if she had three boys, one girl and a husband to support. Another half-dozen, you see, counting herself.

The half-dozen girls were a class in Sunday-school. They were called the "Pansies" and it was a most appropriate name until you came to Jane. They were especially flower-like in the summer time,—white dresses and the gay hats of warm weather are so airy. Even Jane improved then, for she had two white dresses, a little old-fashioned, to be sure, having fallen to her from some big girl who had outgrown them, and rather thin at the elbow, but always white as snow (Mrs. Jones was an excellent washer) and as smooth as glass (Mrs. Jones was a capital ironer).

The class was a small temperance society by themselves. Their teacher, Miss Robie, had organized them. Not that any of the girls had no temperance training. All but Jane were members of families prominent for church and temperance work, and Jane herself had heard many a precept, and listened to many an exhortation from her mother's lips while that mother steamed over the wash-tub, full of finery or necessity from other households. To the precept, and example, too, were added often a bitter sentence, dropped before the poor woman realized it, on the ears of her child.

The two brightest girls in the class were, strange as it may seem, Maggie Meade, the daughter of the richest man in the church, and Jane, daughter of miserable "Jones," not in the church at all.

These two always could answer the most questions on the lesson, and could understand the instruction of their teacher "without half trying," the other girls said.

The other girls were not dull, however, but they were more what we call "average girls," both as to ability, appearance, and motives of action. Maggie was above the average in these things, and, if we except appearance, so was Jane. But as for her looks—no one of the class thought Jane as good-looking as the rest until,—but never mind! Wait till the "temperance show."

There was one charming thing about the half-dozen. They all liked each other. Jane liked the other five and the other five liked Jane. So it was all the way around. Not that I can say there were never any small differences, and now and then a brief cool spell between this and that one. There is no perfection in this world, even among little girls. But the "Pansies" were certainly kind and sensible among themselves, and it does my heart good to say that they were especially kind to Jane.

I don't know just why it is, yet I am always pleased more than usual when a poor girl gets fair words and honest friendship. And I am never more nearly "mad" than I am when I see a poor girl hurt in her feelings or snubbed, simply because she is poor.

The half-dozen were so beautifully taught at home and in Sunday-school that I dare say they knew the principle, if not the exact words of such truth as this: "The Lord hateth a proud heart." "The rich and poor meet together, the Lord is maker of them all." And they were growing every day according to the promptings of the Golden Rule. Oh, what a rule is that! Why, if anything could give us a faultless world it would be doing to others as we would be done by. But none of us do, exactly. I cannot claim it even for the dear half-dozen.

(To be Continued.)

I KNOW A THING OR TWO.

"My dear boy," said a father to his only son, "you are in bad company. The lads with whom you associate indulge in bad habits. They drink, smoke, swear, play cards and visit theaters. They are not safe company for you. I beg you to quit their society."

"You needn't be afraid of me, father," replied the boy, laughingly; "I guess I know a thing or two. I know how far to go and when to stop."

The lad left his father's house twirling his cane in his fingers, and laughing at the "old man's notions."

A few years later and that lad, who had grown to manhood, stood at the bar of a court, before a jury which had just brought in a verdict of guilty against him for some crime in which he had been concerned. Before he was sentenced he addressed the court, and said among other things, "My downward course began in disobedience to my parents, I thought I knew as much as my father did, and I spurned his advice; but as soon as I turned my back on my home, temptation came upon me like a drove of hyenas, and hurried me into ruin."

Mark that confession, ye boys who are beginning to be wiser than your parents! Mark it, and learn that disobedience is the first step on the road to ruin. Don't take it.—Selected.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

Once a little boy came to a city missionary, and holding out a dirty and well-worn bit of printed paper, said, "Please, sir, father sent me to get a clean paper like that."

Taking it from his hand, the missionary unfolded it, and found it was a page containing that beautiful hymn of which the first stanza is as follows:

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come!"

The missionary looked down with interest into the face earnestly upturned to him, and asked the little boy where he got it, and why he wanted a clean one.

"We found it, sir," said he, "in sister's pocket, after she died; and she used to sing it all the time when she was sick, and loved it so much that father wanted me to get a clean one to put in a frame to hang it up. Will you give us a clean one, sir?"

The little page, with a single hymn on it, had been cast upon the air, like a fallen leaf, by Christian hands, humbly hoping to do some possible good. In some little mission school, probably, this poor little girl had thoughtlessly received it, afterwards to find in it, we hope, the gospel of her salvation.—Selected.

TEACHER. "Hans, name three beasts of prey." HANS: "Two lions and a tiger."—Texas Siftings.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Before this paper reaches you the great Republican convention will have met in Minneapolis and have named a candidate for the highest position in the Nation, that of President. Later, the Democratic party will meet in Chicago, and during the last days of June our Prohibition (the "Home Protection") party will gather at Cincinnati for the same purpose. Then the campaign will be "on," and the air will be full of the notes of preparation for the presidential election next fall.

I wonder how many of you remember the names of the presidents in order? The following is a useful rhyming list written by Miss Willard. Won't you all commit it to memory? And then please write and tell me that you have done so.

OUR PRESIDENTS.

First Washington, the chieftain, who conquered our foe;
Next Adams and Jefferson; after Madison, Monroe;
Now Adams the younger, still counseling the nation;
Then Jackson and Van Buren filled the President's station;
Next Harrison and Tyler, making ten that are past,
To leave room for James Polk who presides as the last,
Until Taylor the hero of Mexico's war,
Who, dying, makes room for Millard Fillmore.
Next comes Pierce, next Buchanan, the imbecile man,
And then we have Lincoln, who now leads the van.
Then comes Johnson, then conquering Grant
Who never knew how to pronounce the word "can't."
Next Hayes came with Lucy, who never drank wine,
Then Garfield, whose brow with our laurels we twine.
Then came Arthur, and Cleveland, and Harrison now,
To whose scepter in fealty Republicans bow.

To which I will add:
Now the man who to temperance his influence has lent
Is the one whom we want for our next President!

Yours, for our native land,

Aunt Jane

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

51.

HIDDEN FLOWERS.

1. Said Oscar, "National holidays are jolly."
2. Impromptu lip-service is not devotion.
3. Ida is yet absent.
4. I've taken all, but still I lack a few.
5. A gigantic roc ushered us in.
6. Fetch a pan, Sylvia.
7. Stop in Kentucky.

52.

DROPPED LETTER PUZZLE.

J*n*-9-h-b*r*h*a*-o*-J*n*i*-C*s*e*a*-i*-c*l*b*a*e*-a*-f*o*e*-m*s*i*n-a.

53.

DECAPITATIONS.

1. Behead a scepter and leave a unit.
2. Behead an herb and leave the latter part of life.
3. Behead a fish and leave an animal of burden.
4. Behead a winter sport and leave a girl's name.
5. Behead to squeeze and leave a measure of length.

LOIS ELDRIDGE.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MAY 19.

43. Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up.

44.
C
T I P
C I D E R
P E N
R

45.—1. Luther; 2. William Penn; 3. Fulton; 4. Bryant; 5. Wanamaker; 6. Edison.

Correct answers; Elizabeth Wood; Maud Manville; Eleanora Miller; Schiller Lovett; C. H. Pool; Virginia Paul; Laura B. Gates; J. Leonard Hancock; N. Marion Irwin; Mary A. Fish; Clara L. Baright; Charlie G. Fulton; Royal J. Davis.

CORRESPONDENCE

WORLD'S WORK IN SOUTH AFRICA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Soon after my last letter to you, Dr. Kate Bushnell joined me in England, and we had five months of delightful work together there and in South Wales—not only memorable because of the meetings held and the labor accomplished in private and public conferences with workers, but also because of rare opportunities of renewing association or becoming acquainted with some of the noblest and brightest people in the whole world—Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Josephine Butler, William T. Stead, Hannah Whitall Smith, Katharine Gurney, Professor Stuart, Hon. Mr Stansfeld, Helen Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Percy W. Bunting, Mrs. Sheldon Amos, members of the Booth family and other leaders in the Salvation Army, Hugh Price Hughes and his delicate, intellectual wife, and many more like-minded. It was a great privilege to attend and take part in Mrs. Bramwell Booth's holiness meetings in Exeter Hall, where so many souls have found Christ in His fullness, and to visit her Rescue Homes, where such wonderful work is being done for the uplifting of degraded women; and a privilege to really witness for ourselves the great "May meetings" in London of which we had read and heard from afar; anniversaries of religious and philanthropic bodies, crowded with people, the platform groaning with its burden of speakers and friends of the cause represented.

We sailed for South Africa from London, July 18, 1891, and were nearly three weeks on the ocean, reaching Cape Town, August 5th, and being received most cordially, holding ten meetings in that city. Both the W. C. T. U. and the Y's were strengthened in spirit and numbers. In Cape Town we had an interesting interview with Olive Schreiner, the author of "A South African Farm" and "Dreams." We were told that she was in hiding, writing a new book; they say that she leaves her pretty cottage at Matjesfontein, farther north, in her adored Karroo, where she has throngs of visitors, and buries herself in the city when she has ambitious work in hand. Her brother was one of the committee who arranged for our meetings in Cape Town, and is a leading temperance worker in the colony; it was through his kindness that the interview was arranged, and Miss Schreiner welcomed us with bright cordiality, being, as she declared to us, exceedingly interested in American women and proud of their achievements. She spoke with special honor of Miss Willard, whose photograph we showed her, and said she hoped to know us all some day, for she should certainly come to America. We referred to certain of her prophetic "Dreams," and asked her whether in the new writings on which she was engaged, she would touch on the "woman question." She answered, "How could I help it? It is always here, within me, and must have expression. I could not write without it." She begged us to plead the cause of womanhood wherever we might go.

She spoke of the mystery of death thus: "I do not fear death; I never have; he is a friend who comes at the right time." These words seemed unusual from one who was evidently so full of the love of life and rejoiced in its currents of activity. She is a little above medium height, swift in motion vivacious and magnetic in speech, with wonderfully expressive brown eyes.

In all our experience we have never seen a building decorated with such taste as was the town hall at the old Dutch town, Paarl. The letters "W. C. T. U." of immense size were formed of calla lilies on a background of green, and these made a banner over our heads as we stood on the platform; calla lilies were strewn in profusion at our feet, along the whole front of the platform; they were wreathed in the chandeliers, and draped the window seats; the whole effect was exquisite. Here we found a goodly band of Y's, and a union was formed during our stay.

At Wellington we seemed suddenly to have discovered a new America—such a large band of our own countrywomen greeted us, as teachers in the seminary, with Miss Ferguson of Maine as principal. A flourishing W. C. T. U. exists here, and two Y's. It was a lovely sight, that feasted our eyes — the assembled company of nearly sixty youthful white-ribboners and as many fluttering snowy emblems—for our older and younger members in South Africa are wonderfully faithful in wearing the badge. The Huguenot Seminary is a fountain of blessing for all this country, with its grand corps of teachers and its trained graduates who return to their homes to form new centers of good. We met these girls all over the land, and they all had received that same impetus toward the noblest things. Many of them are either the officers of Y societies or working with the mother unions. The teachers, both Americans and those of other nationalities, are enthusiastic in W. C. T. U. lines. Out of the faculty, Miss Ferguson is the superintendent of evangelistic and social purity work for Cape Colony, Miss Palmer, of scientific instruction, Miss Cummings of the Y department, and Miss Spijker, a devoted German lady, of colonial work for the natives. Too much cannot be said in honor of these teachers both at Paarl and Wellington, carrying such heavy burdens, yet full of zeal, and ready to make great sacrifices to further the cause of the W. C. T. U.

The next place visited was Stellenbosch, which, as well as Wellington and Paarl, is in the very center of the wine-making district, where the Dutch farmers generally are intensely prejudiced against total abstinence teaching, as affecting their financial interests, but some are being awakened by the spirit of God to see the truth and put away the evil. In Stellenbosch we held the first public temperance meeting in the history of the town. It is an educational center; here the Theological Seminary of the Dutch Reformed Church is situated; also two other large schools for young men and young women. We obtained a hearing through the loyalty and courage of Professor Hofmeyr of the Theological Seminary, and gave a full message, including the argument for prohibition, and the proofs as to the benefits secured through it, receiving applause more than once from the young people.

At Port Elizabeth, a seaport city, we had crowded meetings in the immense town hall and resuscitated a suspended W. C. T. U., gaining a score of new members and finding a good leader. We also formed a union of nearly forty members among the Kaffir women. Two native women asked to speak, after the names had been enrolled, and any Anglo-Saxon speaker might have envied their unconscious dignity of manner and perfect modulation of voice. The pastor interpreted their words to us. One expressed the thanks of all that we had come to them; said they had been holding a temperance prayer-meeting for some time, asking God to tell them what they, as women, could do against the drink; they felt that God had sent us to tell them what to do. The other addressed herself to Dr. Bushnell, and begged her, wherever she had the opportunity of speaking to the native people on social purity, to urge them to give up their wicked custom of selling their daughters for oxen —sometimes into polygamous relations. She said, "Women ought not to be bought or sold. 'We are not our own; we are bought with a price.'" It was an impressive scene.

From Port Elizabeth we went to Grahamstown, and there succeeded in getting a leader for the W. C. T. U., and encouraging the dear women to try again. From Grahamstown to King William's Town, by two-wheeled, springless cart, was nearly eighty miles over rough mountain roads. We counted the houses and saw only twelve European buildings, but many Kaffir villages and scattered huts. A large part of this region is held by Kama —not the grand prohibition chief Khama who has enforced temperance among his people in the north for many years, but a less powerful chief, who desires to keep his subjects from the drink, but cannot, because the "canteens," as the saloons are called in South Africa, are built on the strips of land bordering his domains, land that the government has leased for this purpose. The question of prohibition among the natives is coming more and more to the front in public opinion and legislation throughout the whole of South Africa.

This journey was very difficult and fatiguing. We visited King William's Town, East London and Lovedale, the last a delightful mission station where we had the privilege of talking to Kaffirs, Fingoes, Bechuanas, Basutos, and other tribes, besides the poor little Galla boys and girls who were rescued from an Arab slave gang a year ago, by the English at Aden, and sent to Lovedale. They are unusually bright and learn English rapidly. We addressed the native girls at the seminary, one of their own number acting as interpreter. The one Father of us all seemed very near. Afterward we showed them photographs of Miss Willard, Mother Thompson, Lady Henry Somerset, Ramabai, and others, and they were greatly delighted. Nearly all the girls here were total abstainers and members of the Band of Hope. We had taken a cart journey of thirty miles to reach Lovedale, and another trip of the same kind of seventy miles lay before us to reach the nearest railway station, for we now turned our faces toward Wellington, to attend the Colonial W. C. T. U. annual convention. Forty-six delegates were present, beside a large local attendance. This is the home of the Rev. Andrew Murray, the author of these wonderfully spiritual books, "With Christ in the School of Prayer," "The Spirit of Christ," etc., which Miss Greenwood has so strongly recommended for the reading of our W. C. T. U. evangelists. He is a cordial friend to the white-ribboners, and offered the opening prayer at the first evening session of the convention. He and his family join in the noontide prayer with our forces every day, holding in the father's study a little temperance prayer-meeting. We had a delightful visit at his home, a quaint mansion set in the midst of trees, and I can almost hear now, as I write, Mrs. Murray's sweet voice leading in the song around the table after tea, "Oh, the peace my Saviour gives!"

There was a pervasive spirit of cheeriness in the deeply religious atmosphere that charmed every heart brought within that rare circle. We are hoping that this sweet-souled, holy man may visit our own shores sometime, and bless us with his presence. He assisted us in arranging all our plans for work in the colony.

The sessions of the W. C. T. U. Convention lasted two days and were full of interest. Eight departments of work were taken up or continued. Everything, under Miss Pride's efficient leadership, was done "decently and in order." The convention aroused enthusiasm and diffused intelligence regarding our work, which will all bear good fruit in the future. We were deeply touched by the frequent assurance that we were of real service. This is a blessed life. God is, indeed, as Mr. Murray prayed on our leaving Wellington, making our way "a track of blessedness."

A Y. W. C. T. U. already existed at Beaufut. At Kimberlay we visited the celebrated diamond mines and saw the precious stones literally in "heaps." We found devoted workers here, two unions and a grand Y at Beaconsfield, a suburb, under whose auspices we had one of the most successful meetings of our whole stay. The open-hearted hospitality and helpfulness of the temperance people of South Africa, in Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange Free State, and the Transvaal is unsurpassed. Our hearts are knit to them indissolubly.

Returning, we had a blessed evening with the white-ribboners of Port Elizabeth the one night of our stay, then sailed for Natal. We were welcomed warmly at Durban, and held four meetings there, all crowded. We found well-organized, zealous unions and Y's at Durban, Verulam and Pietermaritzburg and were delighted with the intelligence of the workers. We did not meet the beloved president, Mrs. Bridgman, being too far separated from us by a long cart journey, but she aided us by letters that seemed fairly to talk. At Ladysmith we organized a union, and left papers and instructions at Newcastle.

Then we started on our long journey, by coach, "up country" to Johannesburg. Friends who knew somewhat of my slight physique at home will be surprised to hear that I could clamber into the coach by the light of a dim lantern at three o'clock in the morning, munch a cracker in the dark, feast heartily on coffee, fried eggs and chops at eight o'clock, and go jolting and bumping along, hour after hour, and day after day, on those journeys to and from the Transvaal, with no headaches and no serious consequences. We shall not soon forget one day's program when we started at 3 a. m., stopped for breakfast at 9 o'clock and again at 11 for dinner; and when we remonstrated were told by the driver, "there's no other place this side of Pete Koontz's, and we don't get there till eight o'clock to-night." What argument was there against such logic? One's ideas of hygiene become disjointed in the course of such a journey, and one's constitution adapts itself to the law of circumstance with astonishing rapidity.

We rested a little while on reaching Johannesburg, where the great gold fields are, and then, by another coach trip, found ourselves in Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal or South African Republic, and cozily settled in the Presbyterian manse, with Mrs. Gray as hostess, the president of the Orange Free State, from which she has removed since Mrs. Leavitt's visit, and of the Transvaal also—one of the brightest, sweetest spirits we have ever met. She and her husband, the Rev. James Gray, were of the utmost help to us. We had an afternoon meeting with the W. C. T. U. and friends and two large evening meetings. The work seemed all alive with interest. At Johannesburg we held two evening meetings and an afternoon meeting for women only, and organized a large union of sixty members. Mrs. Gray prepared the way with great tact and wisdom, so that the work of organization was a joy. The people of the Transvaal received us cordially, gave royal collections, and were most responsive in sentiment. The dear Lord blessed us in helping hungry souls to find Himself all the way along.

And now another still rougher and harder coach journey, and we reached Harrismith, in the Orange Free State, and found an active union of which Mrs. Gray was formerly president, but now mothered by Mrs. James, a good and true woman. This was the last place visited in South Africa for work. We were in twenty-five towns, delivered 138 addresses, with an attendance of 18,775 people, and traveled, from the day we left England to the day we bade good-by to South Africa, 10,702 miles.

We were at Harrismith over Sunday, November 15th; then, on Monday were taken by private conveyance to the end of the new railway extension, where the authorities had kindly provided a first-class carriage, attached to the working train (the road being not yet open to the general public,) to convey us to Ladysmith. This saved us another long day of coaching over the mountains; we made connection with the evening mail-train at the station named just in time, reaching Durban early the next morning. Our kind hostess, Mrs. Haynes, welcomed us back with the information that there was no ship for Madagascar before Christmas time. Our hearts had been drawn more and more in prayer toward the plan of going straight on to India—especially as we had been earnestly urged by missionaries and other friends not to go to Madagascar at this special season, fever being so prevalent and so serious; we went immediately after breakfast to the steamer offices, found that a vessel was to leave that same afternoon, hastened back to write a few messages of farewell, and without unpacking our trunks went on board at three o'clock, said good-bye to the little circle of friends who had learned of our arrival, and at four o'clock sailed for India. ELIZABETH W. ANDREW.

Calcutta, India.

PROSPECTS OF TEMPERANCE IN THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Fifty years ago the Turks were the most temperate people on the face of the earth. If there was any exception it was among the diplomatic corps where intercourse with wine-drinking foreigners corrupted Moslem morals.

Fifty years ago the coffee shops were everywhere places of sober, quiet idleness and exchange of news. In Constantinople they were "too numerous to mention." The head cafeji was also a barber and a bleeder and a tooth puller and applier of leeches. The lancet, the leech, and the barber were the chief sanitary provisions against the many diseases that were rife. If man, woman or child died it was because the lance and the leech got in too late.

The coffee shops were chiefly places to pass away time, to smoke the chibouk or nargileh and sip Turkish coffee. They were strictly forbidden to sell wine or any other intoxicating drink. Among dense, Christian populations there were eating houses which were also wine shops and most of the drunkenness of the land had its birth in them.

Now the way they do things in Turkey is sadly changed. Every coffee shop, unless owned by a Moslem, has become a wine-shop. You can get drunk upon any liquor you are pleased to call for. The places of rest and recreation, of meeting friends and of transacting certain kinds of business are places of temptation to drink. It is the curse that goeth forth over the face of the whole earth. More than all the oppressions of the government, or the ruthless taxation, it is the cause of poverty and crime.

And wherever there is a large Christian population these traps of Satan are catching Moslems as well as Christians. So far as wine-drinking and drunkenness are Christian attributes, the Turks, after many centuries of firm resistance, are beginning to adopt them. If a Satanic drunkard is better than an honest Moslem there is some progress here. It is a progress, however, that oriental Christianity may well be ashamed of.

But how has this change come about? What can have induced the Turkish government, after more than four hundred years of absolute prohibition, to yield to the policy of license?

A simple fact will bring the whole thing before us. About the year 1848 the missionaries, wishing to open a chapel or conference room over in the great city of Constantinople, and finding it impossible to hire a house, bought one in a quiet street, every way favorable to their object. It was called Sepetgie street or basket-maker's street, in which there was then no industry whatever. A large Armenian population was in the neighborhood. A little conference room was fitted up for a possible audience of one hundred and fifty. It promised to be a most fortunate position. But soon to our amazement a coffee-shop was opened by a Maltese under English protection in one end of that street. Wine was evidently his chief article. Indeed, free trade in all intoxicants was practiced.

As it was at some distance from the chapel, no great annoyance was at first experienced, except that no woman would come from a direction that would lead her by that coffee-shop.

It was not long before a second cafe was opened, but really a wine shop. In a few months no woman and no man known as a Protestant could come to the chapel without insult. The end was the chapel was closed and the house sold at a loss. No native of Turkey, no Armenian or Greek, could have accomplished this disastrous change. It was done by the strong arm of England, who claimed that every English calling and occupation should be free in Turkey. Under her banner rum has gone forth into all the empire. England does many noble things but where money is concerned she has neither pity nor conscience nor common sense, as witness her opium trade. Intemperance is making fearful progress, but as a rule all the Protestants, whether Armenians or Greeks, are teetotalers. "O Lord, how long!" CYRUS HAMLIN.

W. C. T. U TEMPLE AT HARRIMAN, TENN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It was a proud and glad occasion for us and our hundreds of visitors when our tempie was dedicated recently. We had builded larger than we meant (even men make that mistake) and we found ourselves with a fixed loan of about three thousand dollars and a floating debt of equal amount that must be carried. So we took advantage of a land sale, which had been largely advertised, and planned for dedicatory assistance, hoping that the liberal spirit of Harriman's own people would be supplemented by the sympathy of those who might come from abroad. We believed it possible thus to raise one-half the floating debt, and then to arrange for the balance later on. Our faith was not so large as it should have been, as results wonderfully proved.

The temple was filled on Wednesday evening with a pay audience, and the dedication service began with prayer by Rev. Mr. Noyes, of the Congregational church. Mrs. Dr. Cory read the tenth Psalm. The famous Silver Lake Quartette sang an opening anthem. Then Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap made the dedication address, taking as her text the words, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." She spoke with rare appropriateness and power, and her words will be long remembered. Rev. C. H. Mead followed in an appeal to the people, which brought surprising response. There had been a trades' procession in the forenoon of that day; heading all the "floats" representing many industries located here, was one "float" on which were seated thirty-three prettily-arrayed young ladies, each personating the state from which she had come to reside in Harriman. After giving had some time gone on in sums from one hundred dollars down to one dollar, an Illinois visitor cried out from the gallery, "Here's five dollars for the girl in the procession to-day who came from Illinois!" Another said, "Here's ten for the girl from Pennsylvania!" Then state pride asserted itself, and every state found a voice in some visitor present; even Germany and Holland and Switzerland were heard from; Pennsylvania and Tennessee fell into active competition, and hundreds of dollars flowed in as a result. It was a scene exciting and unexpected, and everybody enjoyed it. When it was ended, nearly eighteen hundred dollars had been pledged! A beautiful dedicatory poem by A. A. Hopkins was read.

So ended our dedication service, but the generous interest in our temple did not cease. Next day, at its auction, held in the temple itself, the East Tennessee Land Company (which had at the outset given us the lots whereon the temple stands) donated to our union a fine lot on Lathrap street, in Fisk Addition, which forms the prettiest part of Harriman's large town site, and put it up for sale to the highest bidder, the proceeds to apply on our temple fund. Generous competition ran it up to $300—its list price was $225—and it was just about to be knocked down at that figure by Mr. George A. Bain (son of our George W. Bain, as white-ribboners call him), when "Five hundred dollars!" cried out some one; and our lot, associated with so many names dear to the work of "our women," was declared sold.

To the surprise of everybody its purchaser was Mr. Sol Simpson, a Jew, of Chattanooga, president of the Lookout Iron Company here, which owns the great rolling mills of Harriman. Mr. Simpson is a liberal business man, and when his name was announced all felt that he must have been willing to help out our union, because of the possible good work it may do for the rolling-mill men. We were more sure of this, and still more surprised, when that evening after another address from Mrs. Lathrap, and more songs from the Silver Lake Quartette, it was announced that Mr. Simpson had redonated the lot to the W. C. T. U., and that it would be sold again for our benefit at 10 a. m. on the day following. Because of this unlooked for increase of the temple fund, Mr. Frederick Gates proposed (and what he proposes he brings to pass) that the full amount of $3,000 be then and there made up, including the amount the lot should again sell for. And it was done! To the great joy of us all, subscriptions came in from some who had already made donations and from others who had not, until, with a moderate amount for the Lathrap street lot in Fisk Addition—happy conjunction of names, indeed!—our floating debt was provided for. When the lot was bid in on Friday morning, it went to Ferdinand Schumacher, before a liberal donor to our needs, whose name will always mingle in our thanksgivings to God.

We are glad to report that our temple services for the week ended with a crowded ticket meeting Saturday night, attended largely by the workingmen from our dozen mills and factories, at which the quartette sang as none others can sing, for the delight and inspiration of a great audience. Speeches were made by Mr. Mead and Mr. Hopkins which aroused unbounded enthusiasm, resulting in over seventy signers for the Million Agreement Pledge. Nearly all these were men who have formerly been active Democrats and Republicans.

MRS. W. T. SMITH, Pres.
MRS. C. T. CORY, Sec.

MRS. CLARA HOFFMAN MAKES A CORRECTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The associated press has sent out reports of my speech in Springfield, Ohio, May 5, that are utterly misleading and without foundation. I have never in my life uttered one abusive word concerning the Union soldiers—or any soldiers. Neither have I at any time criticised those that wore the blue or gray.

What I said was this: That at the beginning of the war there was no intention on the part of the government to abolish slavery—that if the South had accepted the overtures made to it, slavery would not have been abolished then. Is any one wise enough to tell when? Will not history confirm this statement?

I did censure the government for establishing grog shops in the National Soldiers' homes for giving to disabled, crippled veterans pensions with one hand, and taking them back with the other hand in exchange for drink furnished by the same government. Shame to the government that thus robs and debauches the men who gave life and health and strength in its defense. This is what I did say; but not one word of THIS did the associated press report. What dearth there must be of campaign capital, when scores of papers throughout the country catch at such item from the associated press as at a toothsome morsel.

The campaign draws near, and the old animosities and prejudices must be fanned into flame to light the way to the White House, because the real, live issues that touch every hearthstone—that affect every man, woman and child must be kept out of sight. Yea, verily! With the history of the past and the facts of the present confirming every utterance, I can only say, "If this be treason, make the most of it." CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

"QUICKSILVER catches out gold from the dross with which it mixes, as the molten stream runs past. Thus is the work of God's spirit in our souls, separates us unto Himself by the heavenly amalgam."

Kernels.

CLARA—"Is this the first time you ever proposed to a girl?" Jack—"Yes, Miss Clara. Is it to be the last?"—N. Y. Herald.

ETHEL—"I will wait until I find an ideal man before I marry." Clarissa—"Yes; but suppose he wants to marry an ideal woman?"—N. Y. Press.

SOME men get a reputation for bravery just because they are able to conceal how scared they are.—Somerville Journal.

PERISH discretion when it interferes with duty.—Hannah More.

THE condition which high friendship demands is ability to do without it.—Emerson.

A LAW that is not liked by influential citizens is apt to be unconstitutional.

TO BE accurate, write; to remember, write; to know thine own mind; write.

IF every man was as big as he feels there wouldn't be standing room in this country.

"WITNESS, did you ever see the prisoner at the bar?" "Oh, yes; that's where I got acquainted with him."

IF you desire to be great and good and efficient in God's cause, or in any good work, make the most of the capital in hand. Develop and train and prune yourself. The glory of manhood is its royal kingship over the realm of self. Make the kingdom of your own soul glorious, and real greatness will come to you.

THERE is in every true woman's heart a spark of heavenly fire, which beams and blazes in the dark hour of adversity.

AT a temperance meeting an honest German was asked to speak, and after some hesitation did so in the following exhaustive manner: "I shall tell you how it was. I put mine hand on mine head; there was one big pain. Then I put mine hand in my pocket, and there was nothing. Now there ish no more pain in mine head. I put mine hands in my pockets, and there ish twenty pounds. So I shall stay mit the temperance."

HOWEVER full, with something more
We fain the bag would cram;
We sigh above our crowded nets
For fish that never swam.
—Whittier.

A GENTLEMAN called upon a rich friend for some charity. "Yes, I must give you my mite," said the rich man. "Do you mean the widow's mite?" asked the solicitor. "Certainly," was the answer. "I shall be satisfied with half as much as she gave," said his friend; "how much are you worth?" "Seventy thousand dollars." "Give me then your check for thirty-five thousand; that will be half as much as she gave, for she, you know, gave her all." The rich man was cornered. Covetous people often try to shelter themselves behind the widow's mite.

GOD sometimes washes the eyes of His children with tears in order that they may read aright His providence and His commandments.—Theo. L. Cuyler, D. D.

AN exchange states a fact concisely: "A drunkard is a man who has failed as a moderate drinker."

EVIL often triumphs, but never conquers.—Joseph Roax.

A FARMER, whose cribs were full of corn, was accustomed to pray that the wants of the needy might be supplied, but when any one in needy circumstances asked for a little of his corn, he said he had none to spare. One day, after hearing his father pray for the poor and needy, his little son said to him, "Father, I wish I had your corn."

"Why, my son, what would you do with it?" asked the father.

The child replied, "I would answer your prayers."

Publisher's Notes.

FLOWER MISSION CARDS.

As announced already, we are now prepared to furnish you with Scripture text cards for flower mission work at very reasonable prices. The cards are of bristol board, punctured ready to affix to the bouquet. There are ninety-nine different texts selected for this purpose. The cards are put up in packages of thirty-three each, with different verse, and are for sale at the following rates: Per package of 33 cards, 10 cts.; three packages for 25 cts.

A large supply is now on hand and orders can be promptly filled by the

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

IT IS A BEAUTY.

What? Why, the new badge for the senior L. T. L.'s or graduates of the Loyal Temperance Legion. For a long time we have been trying to find just where we could have a badge manufactured of a metal that will not tarnish, but always show undimmed its brightness—as our boys and girls should. At last success has crowned these efforts, and we have a lovely button badge for the coats of the large boys and a pendant of the same design for girls, made of that beautiful new metal of which all are talking and with approval—aluminum or aluminium. The design is, of course, circular, with Maltese cross on it and the initials T. A. in monogram. These stand for Total Abstinence. We will print the cut of the design next week. The boys, of course, will wear the buttons on the coat collar as G. A. R. men do theirs. The girls can hang the pendant on their chain or fasten it to the breastpin by a small chain or a narrow ribbon.

And what is the price? The button is 25cts. or $2.50 per doz. The pendant 20cts. or $2 per dozen. We hope to see a whole army of temperance young people wearing them. Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

AUTOGRAPH PLEDGE CARDS.

As the time for the World's Exposition approaches the demand for the autograph pledge cards for the children's chain is increasing. These cards are in red, white and blue, with pledge on one side and place for the name on the other. They are punctured so as to make it easy to link them together. We can supply these cards in any quantity on short order at the following rates: Per package of 30, 10 cts; 3 packages for 25 cts. Let every child who will, have an opportunity to send an autograph to the World's Exposition.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

THESE ARE THEY.

Glimpses of Fifty Years,

By Frances E. Willard. An autobiography. Fifty thousand copies sold and still there is a demand.

Childhood, Its Care and Culture.

By Mary Allen West. Valued in every home. Agents hear nothing but praise of this helpful book.

Story of a Classic Town.

By Frances E. Willard. A necessity to every Methodist and a help to every temperance worker.

A Young Woman Journalist.

Edited by Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Helpful to all ambitious young women and of engrossing interest to all W. C. T. U. workers.

Agents Wanted

For these books everywhere. Send for circulars.

Address
SUBSCRIPTION BOOK DEPARTMENT
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

Spring time is Daisy time,
Nice things come together;
Summer time is Rose time,
Fair and golden weather:
Autumn time is frost time,
Forest trees a-flaming:
Winter time is bleak time,
Ice and snow a-reigning.

Would you have it always be,
Rose and Daisy time?
Always in your dear home nest
Have the bright sunshine?
Buy the Powder named below
And find without a doubt,
Daisy time and Rose time
Within if not without.

For all seasons Gold Dust Washing Powder.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers.
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

The 1892 Model Remington Typewriter

Presents many points of improvement which will readily commend themselves to all users.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
327 Broadway, New York.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR — COLD BLAST — NO DUST — NO QUILLS — CHICAGO

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

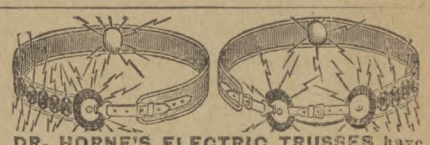
New W. C. T. U. and Prohibition Song Book. By the Silver Lake Quartette and W. A. Williams. Larger than their former books. 35c. Ready June 15. Advance orders, 30c. Also music chart 40x90 in. $1; Parliamentary Chart, $1. Address W. A. WILLIAMS, Warnock, Ohio.

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT
OR LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE
A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.
A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 remarkable illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 31st thousand. 5,000 more Agents Wanted,—Men and Women. $200 a month. ☞ Experience and capital not necessary, for We Teach All. Give Credit and Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF
Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.
We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.
GRAND TERRACE ADDITION.
For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association OF AMERICA
PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.
It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.
New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.
It will pay you well to write to us.
THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.
902-904 Royal Insurance Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.



DR. HORNE'S ELECTRIC TRUSSES have cured 10,000 Ruptures in 15 years. The only Electric Truss in the world. 60-page book free.
DR. HORNE, INVENTOR, 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.
Medtion THE UNION SIGNAL.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH Taken internally and used locally with Insufflator. At Druggists or per mail, $1.50. Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured. All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

MALE AND FEMALES MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N.Y.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed.) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, [illegible]

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

R YOU Looking for a [illegible] ment where you can [illegible] ELSEWHERE? The [illegible] of Chicago offers such. [illegible] LAND ASS'N, [illegible]

WHAT 10 cts. WILL BUY.

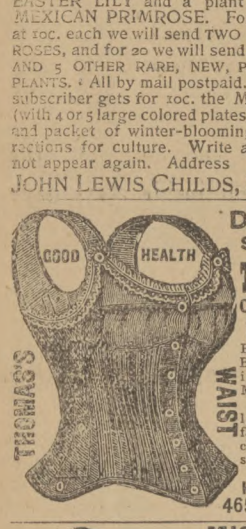
1 bulb Giant Bermuda Freesia for winter blooming. 1 pkt. Pansy Seed, for winter blooming, and a THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION to the MAYFLOWER, a 24 page Horticultural paper, each issue containing 1 or 2 large Elegant Colored Plates of some new flower, all by mail postpaid for only 10 cents.

The FREESIA is an improved strain of that lovely flower, bearing large spikes of beautiful, fragrant, white and yellow blossoms, unsurpassed for winter blooming. The PANSY is a strain especially recommended for winter blooming in pots, all colors mixed.

THE MAYFLOWER is well known as the best publication on Flowers, Fruits, Gardening and Home Adornment in general. It has over 300,000 subscribers, and goes all over the world. Each issue contains 24 or 32 pages, elegantly illustrated and bound with a handsome cover, and ONE OR TWO LARGE, ELEGANT COLORED PLATES. It is edited by John Lewis Childs, assisted by many of the best known writers and cultivators the world over—among whom are Wm. Falconer, Eben E. Rexford, W. N. Pike, E. S. Rand, Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher, etc. It has correspondents in all parts of the world, and its articles are the most interesting, instructive and valuable to be had. We send it for 3 months, together with the Pansy and Freesia for only 10c., that you may become acquainted with its merits.

Get two of your friends to accept this offer with you and we will send you free a bulb of the BERMUDA EASTER LILY for your trouble. For 5 trial subscribers, besides your own, we will mail you free the EASTER LILY and a plant of the CHARMING MEXICAN PRIMROSE. For 10 trial subscribers at 10c. each we will send TWO LILIES and TWO PRIMROSES, and for 20 we will send 2 LILIES, 2 PRIMROSES, AND 5 OTHER RARE, NEW, PERPETUAL BLOOMING PLANTS. All by mail postpaid. Remember that each subscriber gets for 10c. the Mayflower for 3 months (with 4 or 5 large colored plates), and a bulb of Freesia and packet of winter-blooming Pansy Seed, with directions for culture. Write at once, this offer will not appear again. Address

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.



DON'T WEAR STIFF CORSETS.

Thomas' Good Health Corset Waists BY MAIL. Ladies $1.50 Misses 1.25 Children, 60

Best for Economy, Health and Beauty. Buttoned or to clasp in front. Long or short waist. Material the very best.

Thousands mailed in the last year, with entire satisfaction to Patrons. Money cheerfully refunded if not satisfactory.

Agents wanted everywhere.

H. A. Thomas & Co., Manf's 465 W. VanBuren St. Chicago.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid.

Keeps the hair in curl for days Innocent as cologne. A toilet necessity. Not sent on trial.

30,000 Ladies Have Endorsed It

At druggists, or prepaid, 50c.

LADY AGENTS wanted.

DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (H) LaSalle St., Chicago. Ill.

DON'T YOU THINK

Your baby would look pretty in a carriage like that?

We have prettier ones.

Also cheaper ones.

All shown in our catalogue, which we will mail FREE if you write for it.

FREIGHT PAID BY

WALTER HILL CO., 218 Wabash Av., CHICAGO.

"DELSARTE" Corset Waists and Braces are the best selling goods made. Sold by Agents only. Exclusive territory. Agents Wanted. DELSARTE CORSET CO., 142 W. 23d St., New York. Also 111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.

St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.

YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to

E. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

SENSIBLE MOTHERS BUY GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAISTS for themselves and daughters

Publisher's Notes.

A TRAVELING MAN'S CRITICISM.

Is it possible that there is a shadow on the fair fame of the grand and noble W. C. T. U.? Yes, there is one thing that needs correction. I am a traveling man, and my business carries me to many states. In hundreds of railroad depots I find wall pockets for temperance literature, which have been laced there by the W. C. T. U. A most excellent idea. Occasionally I find them well stocked with good reading for the traveling public. This is admirable. As a rule, I might almost say that ninety-nine times out of a hundred, they are either empty, stocked with railroad or other advertising matter, or with pernicious literature, placed there by those who have found them not occupied by the owners. Why! I have almost felt like crying (only, you know, it isn't the thing for men to cry), to see such a grand opportunity lost, and such an object lesson, showing that in this one thing the W. C. T. U. have had a noble inspiration and have slept over its fulfillment. Can you not appoint one earnest, faithful woman (or young man if necessary), who will promptly attend to the matter of supplying the wall pocket constantly? Let the term of service be for one month or three months, and rotate, unless some one will consecrate themselves to the work for a year. Under the pocket should be a sign, painted or printed,

FREE TEMPERANCE LITERATURE,
TAKE ONE.

Perhaps it might be as well to omit the word "temperance" in the sign.

A TRAVELING MAN.

Is it not a pity that such conditions should exist when supplies to last a long, long time can be secured — assorted leaflets—in our wall pocket package for only 50 cts. Send for one or more to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

GROWING IN FAVOR.

Reports on all sides show that the book, "Childhood, Its Care and Culture," is growing in favor One of our agents writes:

"I have received the testimonial of one Catholic priest in the form of an order, two of our local pastors, one from our leading physician, Dr Davis, which reads, 'I warmly commend this work. On the care and culture of childhood depends the future of state and nation.' Am not discouraged with the outlook, for I know every book sold will become a center of light and blessing. Constant rainy weather has impeded the canvass, but hope for better weather in June. Have already sold eleven copies. Hardly a day without a pouring rain."

PLEASING TESTIMONY.

A young lady of Charlton, N. Y., says: "What a nice lesson! (Sunday-school Temperance lesson for May 22, published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.) I wish we had one like it every Sunday!" And another teacher said: "I was so thankful for a pleasant Sabbath. Had a full school and the lesson was enjoyed." This is the testimony from all. Prepare for a more generous use of the next we issue.

One of our workers writes from Pennsylvania: "Your L. T. L. pledge cards are the nicest I ever saw—a sermon in themselves." United effort to scatter them by hundreds and thousands for signatures should be put forth. Now for a long pull, a strong pull and a pull altogether.

Miss Annie M. Ray, 114 Dearborn street, Chicago, desires to sell one of her shares of stock in the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Price [illegible].

There is NO "SURE CURE FOR EVERY CASE OF ASTHMA" or "EVERY CASE OF HAY FEVER," but the worst cases, if uncomplicated by organic disease, can be

ASTHMA AND HAY-FEVER

CURED TO STAY CURED by constitutional treatment, and this at the patient's home.

We treat no one without a thorough knowledge of the case.

Incurable Cases Declined.

Examination free by mail.

We want name and address of every sufferer from Asthma or Hay Fever.

P. HAROLD HAYES, M. D., BUFFALO, N. Y.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.

NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

DO YOU KNOW That the PERFECTION FLOUR BIN & SIEVE Combines Sack or Barrel, Sifter Pan and Scoop, preserves flour from mould and mustiness.

Keeps out dust, vermin, etc. YOU OUGHT to HAVE ONE. Ask our agent or your dealer for them, if they cannot supply you, write to us Satisfaction Guaranteed.

Prices to hold { 25 lbs. $2.50 / 50 lbs. $3.00 / 100 lbs. $4.00 } AGENTS WANTED.

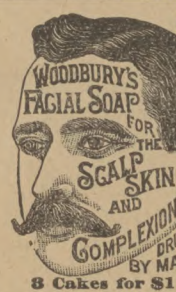
SHERMAN & BUTLER, 26-28 W. Lake St. B 136 CHICAGO, ILL.

There seems no better way to aid the cause of temperance than by placing Drinking Fountains on the streets of our cities and towns.

Special prices given to W. C. T. Unions.

Send for Illustrated Catalogue and full particulars.

J. W. FISKE, 21 and 23 Barclay Street, NEW YORK.



A Sample Cake of Soap and 128 page Book on Dermatology and Beauty; Illustrated; on Skin, Scalp, Nervous and Blood diseases sent sealed for 10c.; also Disfigurements like Birth Marks, Moles, Warts, India Ink and Powder marks, Scars, Pittings, Rednessof Nose Superfluous Hair, Pimples, etc. JOHN H. WOODBURY, DERMATOLOGIST, 125 West 42d Street, New York City. Consultation free, at office or by letter

8 Cakes for $1.00.

Send to 319 W. 45th St., N.Y., for Samples of

GARFIELD TEA Overcomes results of bad eating; cures Sick Headache; restores Complexion; cures Constipation.

HAY-FEVER A GIBBS' ORONASAL RESPIRATOR used at home, will afford absolute relief throughout the season. A wonderful invention, Convenient, Scientific, Infallible; thoroughly tested for many years. Costs but little—relief obtained is beyond estimate. Equally good for Catarrh. Sent postpaid. Pamphlet with testimonials free.

GIBBS RESPIRATOR CO., 36M La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

SAVE $40.00 ON NEW $140.00 BICYCLES New, Latest Pattern $140 Bicycles for $100. Cheaper grades in proportion; cash or time. Agents wanted. A. W. GUMP & CO., Dayton, Ohio.

BICYCLES, GUNS & TYPEWRITERS taken in exchange.

AGENTS Coin Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Every woman buys. Best and cheapest cooker sold. Big Profits to good workers, male or female. Sample's weight 12 oz. Adv'g matter furnished For circulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

FOR MANY LADIES THE KABO CORSET IS THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION. ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY OF THEM NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN CLOTHES BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL ALL GUARANTEED BY CHICAGO CORSET CO.

THE COBLENTZ CURE

Morphine, Opium and Whiskey habits cured at home. No pain, no exposure. Trial on Morphine free. One case in every county cured free. Address, COMPOUND OXYGEN ASSOCIATION, Fort Wayne, Ind.

HOME STUDY BOOK-KEEPING SHORTHAND

Each person sending us before July 1st $1 for HENDRYX'S COMPENDIUM OF BOOK-KEEPING and BUSINESS FORMS for SELF INSTRUCTION, will receive instructions by mail free. Special inducements also given during the summer to SHORTHAND students. F. H. HENDRYX, 178, Bath, N. Y.

WHEREVER THE ROCKER WASHER is used the Washboard becomes a Relic of Barbarism. It is warranted to do the washing of an ordinary family in one hour as clean as can be washed by hand. Write for full description and prices. Rocker Washer Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Agents wanted.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.

TAKE A COURSE IN THE SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW. (Incorporated.)

Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to

J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH. 523 WHITNEY BLOCK.

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR

Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one sending 10 cents for sample copy of The FREE St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish.

St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS

CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.

Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.

N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,

163-165 DEARBORN ST. CHICAGO, ILL.

New York. Boston.

DIAMOND DYES give the fastest, brightest handsomest colors, and make the old clothes look like new. They are the original and only reliable package dyes. Sample card free. WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

Wall Paper Retailed. Good Paper 3c. Gold Paper 5c. Send 10c for postage on samples, and his guide "How to Paper" will be sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 126-138 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City, 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths. Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

SEND for our list of 19 Catalogs of Music and Musical Instruments. W. STORY, 26 Central St., Boston, Mass

BORSCH-OPTIGIAN 103 E. ADAMS ST. CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

FAT PEOPLE You can reduce your weigh 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by DR. CLARKE'S Home Treatment. Proofs, Testimonials, Free F. B. CLARKE, M. D., Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, O., for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free. G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

WANTED Women to take Crochet work to do at home. Steady work. Write for particulars. L. WHITE & CO., 209 State St., Chicago, Ill

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St., Chicago

10 cents pays for the best ladies' paper published for three months. Ladies' Bazar, Chicago, Ill

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children Mrs. L. G. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

"Some Men are Born Drunkards, Some Achieve Drunkenness, and Some Have Drunkenness Thrust Upon Them"—Dr. Carpenter.

An eminent physician says: "The curability of drunkenness becomes a question of the application of scientific measures and means to conduct or assist back to health again. The condition to treat is that of progressive brain—and nerve—exhaustion, lowered vitality, with damaged and perverted functional activities. Enthusiastic appeals to the emotional powers and will are not curative, because the emotions and will are diseased; the higher moral faculties are perverted and cannot act normally. The drunkard has been switched off the main line of healthy life and living upon a side-track of progressive dissolution, the opposite of evolution."

One of the great difficulties in curing the drunkard of his disease is to convince him that he stands in need of help. Little by little the disease fastens itself upon a man so that he is never willing to recognize his true condition, and he is never willing to help himself or to be helped by others. Who among our friends are willing to be called a drunkard or a slave to strong drink? Man boasts of his will power: "I can take it or leave it alone," but man's will power, when his body and mind are enslaved by the demon of drink is as helpless and weak as a willow tree in the path of a cyclone. One thing is sure, the drunkard must be helped by his friends; left to himself, the end is briefly told—a drunkard's grave. Upon those who have drunken relatives and friends a grave responsibility rests when the virtues of HAINES' GOLDEN SPECIFIC are brought to their notice. This remedy in the hands of the drunkard's friend, administrated in his tea, coffee or food, will effectively do the work. A wife writes: "I received the package of GOLDEN SPECIFIC some time since, and I am now giving it to my husband, who is a hard drinker. He does not know he is taking it. Have heard him say several times since taking it that he is getting so that he does not care for whisky, for which I have to thank God and the GOLDEN SPECIFIC COMPANY." Mother, wife, sister, it is not necessary that your son, husband or brother should go to a sanitarium to die, while within your reach is an infallible remedy, guaranteed to cure. Write GOLDEN SPECIFIC CO., Cincinnati, O., for particulars.

Deer Park and Oakland.

To those contemplating during the coming summer a trip to the mountains in search of health or pleasure, Deer Park, on the dome of the Alleghany Mountains, 3,000 feet above the sea level, offers such varied attractions as a delightful atmosphere during both day and night, pure water, smooth, winding roads through the mountains and valleys, and the most picturesque scenery in the Alleghany range. The hotel is equipped with such adjuncts conducive to the entertainment, pleasure and comfort of its guests, as Turkish and Russian Baths, swimming pools for both ladies and gentlemen, billiard rooms, superbly furnished parlors and rooms single or en suite, an unexcelled cuisine and superior service.

The surrounding grounds, as well as the hotel, are lighted with electricity, have cosy and shady nooks, meandering walks, lawn tennis courts and grassy play grounds for children within full view of the inviting verandas. Six miles distant, on the same mountain summit, is Oakland, the twin resort of Deer Park, and equally as well equipped for the entertainment and accommodation of its guests. Both hotels are upon the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, have the advantage of its splendid Vestibuled, Limited Express trains between the East and West, and are, therefore, readily accessible from all parts of the country. Season Excursion tickets, good for return passage until October 31st, will be placed on sale at greatly reduced rates at all principal ticket offices throughout the country. One way tickets reading from St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Columbus, Chicago and any point on B. & O. system to Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia or New York, or vice versa, are good to stop off at either Deer Park or Oakland, and the time limit will be extended by agents at either resort upon application.

The season at these popular resorts commences June 22d.

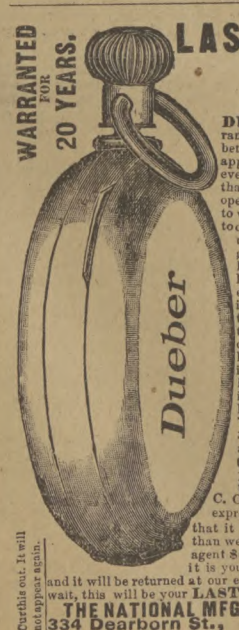
For full information as to rates, rooms, etc., address George D. DeShields, Manager, Deer Park or Oakland, Garrett County, Maryland.

CALIFORNIA.

California is the most attractive and delightful section of the United States, if not of the world, and its many beautiful resorts will be crowded with the best families of the East during the entire winter. It offers to the investor the best open opportunity for safe and large returns from its fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated, and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad.

Pullman Vestibule Sleeping Cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and go without change or transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line.

Write to John J. Byrne, 723 Monadnock Building, Chicago, Ill., if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.



WARRANTED FOR 20 YEARS.

LAST CHANCE

to get a $30.00 Watch for $5.50

DUEBER solid silverine, warranted to wear and keep its color better than coin silver, better in appearance, more durable, and in every respect far more serviceable than coin silver. Hunting case or open face, your choice, guaranteed to wear and retain its color equal to coin silver for 20 years. Fitted complete with our very highest grade imported movement, richly jeweled and damaskeened, lever escapement, double jeweled balance, all the modern improvements and guaranteed to run and keep correct time for ten years. Please state, when ordering, whether you want hunting case or open face. This is a watch that will last you a lifetime and you can easily sell it for twice your price after you have worn it ten years. GIGANTIC OFFER to everybody for 30 days only. Cut this out and send it with your order, (no money required until after you examine it) and we will ship the watch to you by express C. O. D. You examine it at the express office and see for yourself that it is not only equal to but better than we have represented it, pay the agent $5.50 and the express charges and it is yours, otherwise you pay nothing and it will be returned at our expense. Order to-day, don't wait, this will be your LAST CHANCE. Address

Cut this out. It will not appear again.

THE NATIONAL MFG. & IMPORTING CO.
334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

BOUND LEAFLETS.

For the convenience of persons desiring to keep samples of our leaflets on hand, a number have been bound in paper and are for sale at exactly the same price as the unbound leaflets. Here is the list. Send for sets and keep informed.

Timely Talks	$ .15
Signal Lights	.05
Gospel Lights	.03
Total Abstinence	.05
Teachers' Series	.10
Suffrage	.07
Temperance and Labor	.05
Mothers' Meetings (Purity)	.10
Home Leaflets	.25
Social Purity Series	.30
White Cross Series	.30
Loyal Leaflets	.15
Evangelistic Series	.10
Y. W. C. T. U. Series	.03
L. T. L. Series	.03
Local Union Helps	.15

From a little girl whose teacher read The Young Crusader aloud in school: "The paper was so interesting that we could not stop reading it."

Moral.—Let every child have this interesting paper.

Rev. Dr. John H. Barrows, leading Presbyterian pastor in Chicago and chairman of the World's Parliament of Religions, said recently to one of our leaders that no magazine coming to his table was so greatly prized by him as Our Day. This from such a source is high praise.

Send for sample copy.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Esther T. Housh, of Vermont, says:

"Our Miss Ames was an artist, penciling pictures of character that were never 'counterfeit presentments.' Her last work before the Boston Convention was the preparing of a little book with the sketches of World, National and state W. C. T. U. leaders. These personal paragraphs are comprehensive though concise, and of much value in themselves. Since her 'going home' Miss Hood made such additions as seemed suitable, Miss Willard furnishing a brief sketch of Miss Ames, which, with a fine engraving of the author, leaves nothing to be desired. The price is 30 cents, postpaid; the proceeds, after expenses of publishing, will be given to the Anchorage Mission in memory of Yolande, who bore it great love." Send to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

Still our Young Crusader list is growing. Nearly 1,200 were added to the number of subscribers last month.

Miss Fannie Griffin, the bright Alabama woman, writes concerning Anna Gordon's marching songs: "I heard the sweet voices of our southern children singing 'Saloons Must Go,' 'Rise, Temple, Rise,' and other lovely songs, and said to myself, 'I thank our Heavenly Father that He thought to send into the world one who so understood the spirit of our work as Anna Gordon does.'"

Put "Marching Songs" in the hands of every child in the country.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

The last number of the Library Series for the little folks (and exceedingly interesting it will be to grown-up folks) is "Child Life Abroad," containing a poem by Miss Lathbury, called, "A Spinning Song," and sketches showing how children live in Mexico, India, Turkey, Germany, Spain, Japan, Ireland and at different places in other countries, written by travelers and foreigners. Price only 10 cents in paper covers. Every child-reader should own it. Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) Chicago, Ill.

B. P. E. P.

This is a day of co-operation. Money is everywhere successfully used to make more money. Small amounts can be wisely invested to make large returns. I offer full-paid unassessable shares of stock at par—$10—each in the GARTEN REMEDY CO. I am prepared to prove the following good points:

1st. That the remedy is a successful one for alcoholism.
2d. That it leaves no bad effects whatever.
3d. That it builds up the whole system.
4th. That it is officially recommended by the Prohibition Party of Nebraska; and other temperance organizations.
5th. That it is indorsed by many physicians in good and regular standing.
6th. That it is a philanthropic remedy, affording poor men exceedingly favorable terms for treatment.
7th. That the Company has already sold over $400,000 in State rights, and has as much territory now pending sale, which means, when said sums are paid, dividends to stockholders aggregating OVER ONE HUNDRED PER CENT.
8th. That all the medicines must be bought from the parent Company, thus affording a large and constant revenue.
9th. That less than one-third of the Capital is for sale, and that for a limited period.

SURELY HERE ARE ENOUGH GOOD POINTS.

Having 5,000 or more stockholders, the GARTEN REMEDY will have thus an army of friends, who will be friends for two reasons:

1st. Because their money will be doing good.
2d. Because they will be the ones to gain the dividends.

Write for printed matter to fully corroborate all I have claimed. Address,

GEO. C. HALL,
280 Broadway, New York.

For Reference write
FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY,
18 & 20 Astor Place, New York.

Remit, if you desire time to complete payment, one-tenth the amount you wish to invest. The balance can be sent inside sixty days thus:

For one share, $10.00, remit $1.00 as first payment.

For five shares, $50.00, remit $5.00 as first payment, etc., etc.

3,000 Job Lot BICYCLES 20 to 50% off. Lowest prices on all '92 makes & 2d hd Easy payments. We sell everywhere. '91 Cush'n $85 Juno, balls. $65 | 40 in. $37 Victor Jr. balls. $17 '90 Crescent ('91 make) " $50 | '91 $135 Rambler " $90 '91 $145 Cush'n High Grade $90 | And 20 other styles as cheap. Largest stock & oldest dealers in U. S. Agts. wanted. Cata. free. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 E. St., Peoria, Ill.

Free-fishing & Bicycle Goods if you tack up circular for Rudolph Mfg. Co., Chicago.

CHICAGO INVESTMENTS Before risking your money write to me for the facts about values. Address with stamps MRS. L. J. LANPHERE 211 Wabash Ave. Highest references. Chicago, Ill.

MODEL LOCOMOTIVE ENGINES.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has just placed in service on its Chicago Division three new passenger engines, built at the Baldwin Locomotive Works, after new designs furnished by the Gen'l Superintendent of Motive Power of the B. & O. Company. The engines weigh 113,000 pounds, have driving wheels six feet six inches in diameter, cylinders 19 by 24 inches, and are without doubt the finest passenger locomotives running into the City of Chicago to-day. Companions of these new engines have developed wonderful power and speed in hauling the famous Royal Blue Line trains, which run between New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, over the Philadelphia Division of the B. & O. Railroad. The B. & O. has added over forty new, high class engines to its motive power equipment within the last sixty days, and others are under construction. While constantly adding engines of approved design and highest grade to its motive power, and passenger coaches of Pullman standard to its rolling stock, the B. & O. is also expending large amounts for additional second and third tracks and sidings, and improved facilities at terminal points. By the time the World's Fair is opened for the reception of visitors the B. & O. will be well equipped to handle, expeditiously, the large volume of passenger traffic which will naturally seek this picturesque route from the Atlantic sea-board to Chicago.

BEATTY Pianos, $175. Organs, $49. Want ag'ts Cat'lg free Dan'l Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J.

TO SARATOGA AND NEW YORK.

All those who contemplate going to New York or to Saratoga Springs at the time of the great meetings of the Christian Endeavor and the National Educational Association, taking advantage of the reduced rates made to those points, should not fail to consult the beautiful illustrated circulars upon the subject issued by the Michigan Central, the Niagara Falls Route. Address O. W. RUGGLES, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

FIRE!

AT 2 IN THE MORNING! Extinguished at 4! Insurance adjusted at 7:30! Started up the machinery at 12:30 in the lower stories of the building that had the top burned off! All this occurred Saturday! Monday, every department working as usual, though not in the old quarters! And there was no delay to business!

A fire costing a few thousand dollars is hailed by every Aermotor employee with a smiling countenance as affording an opportunity to show what he can do. What caused the fire is not known, but everybody among our hundreds of Aermotor workers has such an enormously rapid move on him, made necessary by the enormous demand for Aermotors, that we should not be surprised if it were due to the friction caused by one of them in his herculean endeavor to get out his portion of the work. We do not assert this to be the fact. We only assert that we have worked night and day to supply the demand, and that we have the largest and best equipped factory on earth for that purpose, and we now hasten to assure you that the recent fire will cause no delay.

Lest the thousands of dealers in Aermotors should overwhelm us—kill us with kindness, so to speak—by sending too many and too large orders, all at once, as an expression of appreciation of energy, enterprise and pluck, we suggest that you send in yours at once—now—and let others send theirs a little later.

AERMOTOR CO.,
12th, Rockwell and Fillmore Sts.,
Chicago.

Signal Notes.

In Damascus drunkenness is known as the "English Disease."

The woman board of commissioners for the World's Fair, through their president, Mrs. Palmer, have indorsed closed gates on Sunday, and no liquor.

At Cheyenne, May 25, the state of Wyoming was organized for prohibition, by Rev. James P. Pinkham. Nine of the twelve large counties of the state are already organized.

M. Pasteur, the famous Paris specialist, is authority for the statement that men who habitually use intoxicating spirits are more difficult to cure if bitten by a mad dog than temperate men.

A plan for pensions of five shillings a week for all persons over sixty-five years of age is receiving the attention of well-known statesmen and journalists in England. It is proposed to levy a tax on all alcoholic drinks in order to raise the fund necessary, and as the drink traffic is the cause of so large a portion of poverty and want, this suggestion is exceedingly appropriate.

The New Century Club building, recently opened by the enterprising and gifted woman in Philadelphia who organized that club years ago, and the appointments of which are so complete and beautiful, has given out the following rule for the renting of its elegant drawing room: "No intoxicating beverages shall be served at any entertainment given therein." Clubs of men should note this progressive step on the part of representative women in the "City of brotherly love."

The British Consul at Wenchow gives, in his report, a shocking insight into the extent of the opium trade in China. He says that of late years no proclamations have been issued, as was formerly the case, restricting the growth of the poppy, or the opening of opium dens. There are over six hundred opium dives in the city and suburbs, of various sizes, some possessing three to four lamps, others ten to twelve; also that about ten per cent of the adult male population have opium craving.—The Christian.

Mr. James L. Gordon, secretary of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, has done a wise and manly thing in introducing to the young men, by the way of "Terse talks on timely topics," the general subject of Vitality, characterizing these talks as "Confidential and Conversational," the general theme being the dangers and temptations peculiar to youth and early manhood. This is, of course, for men exclusively, and among the subjects which will receive attention with full permission for questions and suggestions, are the following: The Use and Abuse of the Imagination, Impurity in Art, Literature and Theatricals, Social Usages and Personal Conversation, Physical Irreverence; its Cause, Consequence and Cure, Character and Unreliability of Certain Advertisements in the Daily Press, Promising Examples and Cures practically certain not to be realized, The highest Degree of Health consistent with the highest Standards of Morality, One Code of Morals for Manhood and Womanhood, The Sacredness of the Home, The Womanhood and Manhood of America, A Protest and an Appeal. Mr. Gordon has placed on the tasteful little card which he sends out with this announcement a quotation from one of the addresses of our National President as follows: "The manhood of America is the noblest and most masterful on earth, because it is most masterful of itself." We wish more of the pastors and Y. M. C. A. secretaries would take the line of teaching so wisely hinted at in the foregoing.

Good Cooking

Is one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc., use Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk. Directions on the label. Sold by your grocer and druggist.

What makes the glass in your windows so dull? What gives it that grayish look? It was washed only yesterday. Examine a little closer. You see it has a thin semi-transparent coating over the surface, which gives it the appearance of poor glass. This is the effect of resin in the soap. Never mind what kind you used. Every laundry soap but one contains resin. Ivory Soap is that one exception. Just wash the window with Ivory Soap and tepid water, rub dry with chamois, and your plate glass window will disappear seemingly. You can touch the pane but you can not see it. It is so startlingly clear that it deceives you.

Copyright 1890, by The Procter & Gamble Co.

IN THE WILDS OF AFRICA.

TOKOLOGY, a complete Ladies' Guide in health and disease. A missionary agent writes: "I have sold TOKOLOGY in various parts of South Africa; it gives universal satisfaction, and is pronounced a God-send."

Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison-st. Chicago.

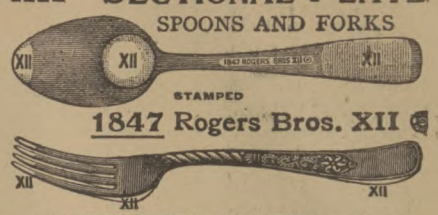
VOSE & SON'S PIANOS
EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

BAKER'S COCOA.
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used

How to Dress in a Stylish and healthful manner described and illustrated. One department devoted to infants and children. 50c. per year; 15c. per copy. Gertrude Quarterly Box 1088, Chicago.

Lake Erie Seminary
FOR WOMEN.
PAINESVILLE, OHIO.
Early application necessary for September, 1892.

"XII" SECTIONAL PLATE
SPOONS AND FORKS



Are plated THREE TIMES HEAVIER on the three points most exposed to wear as shown above, adding correspondingly to their durability. The extra cost on Tea Spoons is 75 cents, and on Table Spoons and Forks, $1.50 per dozen.

SOLD BY FIRST-CLASS DEALERS.

X TWO I | "XII" | X-2-I.

PERSONAL—THE BEAUTY OF THE ROMANS was largely due to Anointing and Dr. O. P. Brown's celebrated HERBAL TISSUE BUILDER, made from an old Roman Oil formula, has a wonderful effect on the skin, acting as a tonic. It feeds the tissues, fills up wrinkles, plumps the figure, beautifies the complexion and hands. Most skins, hungry for nourishment, absorb it as thirsty plants do water. Send 10c. for SAMPLE and Lady's paper illustrating WOMAN'S LIFE. The Dr. O. P. Brown Med. Co., 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J. ALL DRUGGISTS.

FREE SILVER SPOONS We will give any lady One Dozen Silver Plated Tea Spoons of Extra quality, warranted to wear, who will sell among her friends one dozen boxes of "Star Pills" at 25 cents per box. Cures Headache, Constipation, Nervousness, and all disorders of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels. NO MONEY IN ADVANCE. We send the Medicine to you postpaid; when sold you return the amount, $3.00, to us, and we send the spoons. If you sell but half a doz. we give you half a doz. spoons. If you can't sell medicine we take it back. We take all risk. I. M. Association, 265 Dearborn St., Chicago.

HEADQUARTERS for LOW PRICES

We save all our good cash customers from 25 to 75 per cent. on a large variety of useful articles besides 400 Kinds of SCALES which we manufacture, Send for Circulars and Prices, The following are among the Articles we sell: Bicycles, Watches, Organs, Pianos, Safes, Sewing Machines, Carriages, Wagons, Road Carts, Sleighs, Buggies, Harness, Portable Forges, Anvils, Vises, Feed Mills, Bone Mills, Cider Mills, Etc. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago.

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.

Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town. Send for Catalogue.

THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB Co
180 So. Canal Street, Chicago.

BABY CARRIAGES

Shipped anywhere to anyone at WHOLESALE PRICES,
Latest Styles. | A $5.50 carriage for $2.95 | A$12.50 " " $6.95 | A$18.50 " " $9.75
Send for 40-page illustrated catalogue free.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 362 Dearborn St., B 27 Chicago, Ill.

The Tendency
of the age is toward artistic effects. We are abreast of the times in our particular line—wall papers. 100 samples mailed for 8 cents. Prices 5 to 50c. a roll.
A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St., Phila.

EYES tested free by mail. New method. Send stamp for test card. KEENE OPT CO., 1301 Washington-st. Boston, Mass

THE WOMAN'S LAND SYNDICATE

OVER 2,000 BONDS ALREADY SOLD.

Another Large Factory just located at South Waukegan, Ill.—The Morrow Bros. Mfg. Co. They will erect three large factory buildings at once, and will employ a large number of workmen. This makes two large factories that have located here since we purchased over $500,000 worth of lots. All property in the town will advance in price June 15th about 12 1-2 per cent on account of above factories.

THIS ADDS $62,500 TO THE VALUE OF OUR PROPERTY.

Every woman that purchases one or more of our PROFIT-SHARING INVESTMENT BONDS before June 15th, will share in these enormous profits. To illustrate: If, on June 15th, we have sold $50,000 worth of Bonds, one-half of $62,500, or $31,250, divided equally among the purchasers of said $50,000 worth of Bonds, will be $6.25 for each and every Bond. When the property advances in value again, one-half of the profits are divided equally among all purchasers up to the time it advances, and so on.

BONDS ARE $10 EACH, and are SOLD ONLY TO WOMEN.

This affords women an opportunity to invest a small or large amount of money in SOMETHING THAT IS UNQUESTIONABLY RELIABLE and that will bring a large profit to every bondholder, because SOUTH WAUKEGAN is certain to become the greatest manufacturing town in the West on account of low freight rates and other advantages. THE WASHBURN & MOEN MFG. CO., the largest concern of its kind in the world, employs 4,000. The U. S. SUGAR REFINERY have invested $750,000.00 in buildings. They employ 550. THE STARCH WORKS, with a capacity of 14,000 bushels of corn daily, will give work to 250. THE LANYON ZINC OXIDE CO., with their seven large steel buildings, will employ a vast number, and the MORROW BROS. MFG. CO. will employ 300 workmen. These large plants will open very soon, and many more will locate here. These five alone will bring

40,000 PEOPLE TO LIVE IN SOUTH WAUKEGAN.

Our lots are all within ten minutes' walk of all of the factories, so that just as soon as the works open up, our property will be in great demand and the increase in value, which means profit for our bondholders, will be rapid and great.

The deed to our property and all money are held by the Commercial Loan and Trust Co., of Chicago, as Trustees for the purchasers of these bonds, thus affording ABSOLUTE SAFETY.

GENERAL SINGLETON, Pres. Total Abstinence Life Association, 902 Royal Insurance Bldg., Chicago, says: "I have investigated the WOMAN'S LAND SYNDICATE, and have advised my wife to invest in their bonds, believing it will be very profitable."

All Who Investigate Our Plans Buy Bonds.

If you want a share of this $62,500, you must secure the Bonds you want before June 15th. You can send a deposit, NO MATTER HOW SMALL, say how many you want, and we will consider it a sale. You can pay for them when convenient.

Our pamphlet, telling all about our plan and the town, is sent FREE.

BUSINESS MANAGER: Mrs. R. A. EMMONS.

MAKE CHECKS, DRAFTS OR MONEY ORDERS PAYABLE TO

THE WOMAN'S LAND SYNDICATE 161 La Salle Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 — AND EVERY LAND

Vol. XVIII. CHICAGO, June 16, 1892. Number 24.

Mrs. Ursula Derrick
9419 Lowe St.

PRACTICAL TEMPERANCE.

AN EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITY.

There is no question in the minds of those who have given the subject most thought, that the application, by modern methods, of the Bichloride of Gold to the cure of Drunkenness, is the greatest remedial development of the Nineteenth Century.

Call it what you will—a disease or a habit, a sin or a misfortune—no curse with which fallen man is afflicted is so widespread, so deep-seated, and so far-reaching as Inebriety. In some climates Consumption is unknown; there are countries in which Cholera and Yellow Fever have not appeared; whole races have been free from Cancer and Scrofula; but Alcoholism claims its victims in every land, and from all sorts and conditions of men.

The universal prevalence of such an evil, combined with the unspeakable misery which it causes, makes unnecessary any argument to prove that if a safe, practical remedy has been discovered, the demand for such a remedy must be without any conceivable limit.

Fortune after fortune has been accumulated from the sale of medicines simply because they were so advertised as to make people believe that they would cure common diseases, and the commoner the disease the greater the demand, the larger the fortune. But for Drunkenness, commonest of all, there was no cure in which people had faith, or any reason to have faith, till success with Bichloride of Gold became a subject of world-wide importance, and the "Gold cure," as it is called, is to-day the best advertised remedy in existence—the best advertised because most of its publicity has been commanded, rather than bought. It is of more interest to most people than the affairs of nations. The newspapers can no more ignore it than they could a war in Europe. It has been criticised, of course; the most effective ally of the temperance movement the world has ever known is not going to sweep onward to victory without arraying against it the cohorts of King Alcohol in most determined and embittered opposition.

The rumseller can afford to laugh when a poor drunkard signs the pledge with a hand trembling from that terrible craving for stimulus in his system; but he does not laugh when that same man turns with loathing and disgust from the cup which once fascinated and destroyed him. Then, indeed "our craft is in danger."

So the cry has gone up all over the land, that the Bichloride of Gold, instead of curing the patient, kills the man; or, if he escapes death, he soon goes back to drinking, so that it is "poison probably, and a fraud anyway."

Alleged instances have been cited to prove these statements. And while, no doubt, there has been much exaggeration and considerable downright lying in such stories of suicide, insanity and re-wallowing in the mire—they carry with them a warning which simply emphasizes the overwhelming importance of establishing such a system of treatment as has been adopted in the National Bichloride of Gold Institute in Chicago, under the personal supervision of Dr. Mark M. Thompson, where not a shade of harm has resulted from the treatment of hundreds of cases.

For it should be distinctly understood that the "Gold cure" in itself is simply a means to an end—powerful means, by the way, and, like all other powerful agents, in the hands of the unscientific or the careless, dangerous.

To be lasting and radical, the changes produced in the physical constitution must be supplemented by reform in the moral nature. This is also sought to be accomplished at the National Institute; and this is what has brought to its support many of the leading clergymen and temperance workers in the land.

The work in this and other directions is more fully set forth in a pamphlet* to which you are referred for proof that the cure in Dr. Thompson's hands, supplemented by methods peculiar to the National Institute, is

First—Safe.
Second—Scientific.
Third—Sure.
Fourth—Lasting.

This is no new thing with Dr. Thompson. He has given his attention to the study of Inebriety for seven long years, during which period hundreds of cases have been treated by him with the most gratifying results. His system is no longer an experiment, either in immediate effect or lasting benefit. It has been tried, and stands approved by the best judgment of those who have watched it with the most intense anxiety.

THE FINANCIAL SIDE.

DO GOOD AND MAKE MONEY.

Born of a deep-seated and earnest desire on the part of temperance workers to bring to their assistance every known means to save the perishing, the first aim of the institute was philanthropic, as it will continue to be; but it was quickly discovered that it could also become the source of a large and rapidly accumulating income.

Capital was needed to extend the work. A stock company was formed, and it was resolved to offer 4,000 shares for sale, at $25 each, paid up and non-assessable, and to scatter them as widely as possible, on the theory that wherever there was a stockholder there would be a worker for the institute, and wherever there were workers they would find patients; the good to be accomplished, of course, corresponding to the number of brands thus plucked from the burning.

The plan is working so well that it is about decided to sell no more than ten shares ($250) to any one person. This is found advisable because of the great prospective value of the stock, which has only to be fully realized to lead to its purchase in large blocks, and this would, to a certain extent, thwart the object of the undertaking.

*Brochure No. 1 of the National Bichloride of Gold Series.

The first weeks the institute was open settled the question as to its patronage. The handsome and commodious mansion on Monroe street and Hoyne avenue was filled to repletion, and another building near by had to be rented as an annex. The necessity for accommodations for a large number of patients has become imperative, and will be met by the company. It is for this purpose the money to be paid in by stockholders will be used. The investment will therefore be in Chicago realty of the most valuable character.

The fee of $100 for four weeks' treatment and board, while it provides everything of a perfectly satisfactory quality, leaves an ample profit to the institute. Multiplied by the number of patients now under treatment, and those which will surely come to us, the net income to be divided among our stockholders will be very large. But this is not all: Branch institutes are to be established in all parts of the country—some already established—which for each patient treated, will pay into the Home Institute a handsome royalty on the use of Dr. Thompson's remedies and system. This will go direct and entire into the fund from which dividends are paid.* Although the institute has been in operation only since the 9th of last April, the Board of Directors feel fully justified in declaring dividends quarterly, and the first to be paid, July 1, will not be less than three per cent. The second, and those to follow, will undoubtedly be larger. It is an interesting fact that among the most enthusiastic stockholders we have are patients themselves, who, to a man, are hearty workers for the cause. A National Bichloride of Gold club has been formed by "graduates" and incorporated under the laws of Illinois for the purpose of extending the blessings of the institution in all directions. Many of our stockholders are women, and they, of course, are among the most devoted workers, as are many clergymen of all denominations. To meet the wishes of some who have not much money to spare at a time, payments of $5 a month will be accepted on each share.

This is no common undertaking. In every respect it is exceptional—in its character, its aims, its inducements, its prospects. Everything in the way of management, location and influence conspires for its success. And if ever there was a business enterprise upon which the blessing of Heaven could be invoked with all sincerity, it is one which has for its object practical salvation from a drunkard's life on earth and a drunkard's eternity hereafter.

It is for you to say whether you will take a personal interest in the enterprise, or not. The opportunity will not long be open. Our only concern is to have the stock widely scattered. It will sell itself. Such an institution, with auxiliaries in various parts of the country paying in a steady stream of royalty; supported and championed by the most active temperance workers in America; making a grateful and enthusiastic volunteer agent out of every patient who leaves its doors; animated by principle; working for the good of humanity; managed by practical men; crowned with success at the outset; paying a handsome dividend to start with—if you cannot see a little of what is in store for our stockholders—there is no use in saying another word.

Bear in mind the fact that those who purchase stock before July 1st will share in the quarterly dividend.

Correspondence and the fullest investigation solicited by

THE NATIONAL BICHLORIDE OF GOLD CO.,
17 to 21 Quincy Street, Chicago, Ill.

* A definite and even more favorable exhibit will be furnished to prospective stock-takers by personal letter, as well as testimonials from patients, and names of well-known citizens to whom we refer. The statements in all our printed matter are more than made good by the actual facts and figures in our possession.

Washburn Springs ASWESEEIT

Four for One

Careful estimates show that every adult factory employee has an average of FOUR people dependent upon him for patronage or support.

5,000 EMPLOYED MEN Make

A CITY OF TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND.

That is what you will see at South Waukegan before long. THE FACTORIES ARE THERE! THE MEN ARE COMING! A few months will turn corn fields and pastures of last year into the homes of a well-paid, satisfied community. Do you see what this means in regard to land values? It offers you an opportunity you cannot afford to let slip.

WASHBURN SPRINGS THE KEY TO THE SITUATION.

Our lots (50x150 feet) at $300 and upwards, are unequalled for LOCATION, IMPROVEMENTS and PRICE.

Send a deposit of $5.00 to secure best unsold lot, and we will send you our little pamphlet, "Asweseeit" free, showing our selection. If you are not satisfied after investigating, you can select any other unsold lot of same price, or we will return your money. Those who do not invest now will be trying to do so a few months later at two or three times the prices now ruling. Come now and enjoy the increase from an inside point of view.

WHY YOU SHOULD INVEST at WASHBURN SPRINGS

1. The value of the lots does not depend upon future possibilities, but upon factories already established.
2. These factories are so strong financially, that failure or depression in business is next to impossible.
3. Convenience to churches, schools, depot, and the proposed electric street car line, insure that Washburn Springs will be the center of the new city and ultimately the most valuable business and residence property.
4. The undersigned firms, who handle the property jointly, are concerns of such standing that their representations can be relied upon. Ask any Chicago friend to investigate and see if this is not so.
5. The property is not under contract, BUT IS OWNED WITHOUT ENCUMBRANCE, and perfect titles thus insured. An abstract is given FREE to each purchaser.

Plats, maps and pamphlets giving full descriptions free upon application. Address either

FRANK I. BENNETT & CO., 100 Washington Street, Chicago.
or
DUNLAP SMITH & CO., 170 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

See Here.

JUST THE THING FOR YOUR PUBLIC MEETINGS

—IS—

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS.

With Its Stirring Music.

IT WILL HELP IMMENSELY.

Young People Like It.

The Children Enjoy It.

Old Folks are Interested.

Price, 35c. Per Copy.

Send for sample to

Woman's Temp. Pub. Ass'n,
THE TEMPLE,
(Rooms 1102-1110.) CHICAGO.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
A Prohibition Quiz 8, 9
THE WATCH-TOWER 9
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Trailing Arbutus. By Florence M. York 2
Nurse Westgate's Insubordination. (Concluded.) By Marie J. Hesse 2
Cardinal Newman. By A. H. Pollen 2
An Interview With Lady Henry Somerset 3
Railroad Ties. By John G. Woolley 3, 4
Side-Lights—For Workers 4
ORGANIZERS' ITEMS.
The President of Australia Helps the Virginia Work. By M. M. Love 4
West Washington. By Mary Bynon Reese 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
The First Temperance Education Statute by Act of Parliament in the British Empire 5
Letter from Mrs. Nichols 5
Mrs. Leavitt in South America 6
PRESIDENT'S COLUMN 6
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Drop Your Bucket Where You Are 7
A Story that Requires no Name 7
Nervous Prostration 7
The Great Moral Issue 7
QUEEN'S GARDENS:
Commencement. By Harriet Francene Crocker 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Indiana—Nebraska—North Dakota—Mississippi—Indian Territory—Kansas Zephyrs—Montana Letter—News in a Nutshell—The Southern Assembly—Temple Receipts 10, 11, 12, 13
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Maid Margaret's Mission 14
The Temperance Show 14
Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner—Soft-Shelled Nuts 14
KERNELS 15
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT 15, 16

Our Library Table.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

CATALOGUE OF THE NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, 1891–92.

NATIONAL DANGER IN ROMANISM, by Rev. I. J. Lansing, A. M., Arnold Pub. Ass'n, Boston.

DIRECT LEGISLATION BY THE CITIZENSHIP THROUGH THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

A CONCEPT OF POLITICAL JUSTICE. Twentieth Century Pub. Co., New York City.

NATIONAL LIFE IN THE SPIRIT WORLD: A SOCIOLOGIC ESSAY by Edward H. Rogers, Chelsea, Mass.

THE LITTLE LADY OF LAGUNITAS. A Franco-Californian Romance by Richard Henry Savage. The American News Company, New York City.

A STRANGE VOYAGE, by Pruning Knife. The Monitor Pub. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Satire is a weapon that, like nearly every other instrument of defense or wounding, is in danger of not being wisely used. But under the direction of one whose judgment is calm and free from selfish bias, it can be made to do good work. W. W. Satterlee, in a pamphlet entitled, A DEFENSE OF THE JERICHO ROBBERS, has presented one of the keenest arguments against the system of licensing that has ever been uttered. He cleaves to the heart of all the sophistries of license advocates, and lays open to the broad light of reason the hollow rottenness therein. It is a book to be scattered broadcast in the enemy's fields, that it may bring forth good fruit.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago. Price 20c.

Harriman, Tenn., "beautiful for situation," free from the taint and blight of the rum traffic, rich in natural advantages, and filled with a spirit of industrial zeal made holy by the sobriety that characterizes all its enterprises, celebrates its second anniversary by the issue of a beautiful volume, TWO YEARS OF HARRIMAN, TENNESSEE. This state may well be proud of the young city, that has kept herself free from "the trail of the serpent," and has open doors for those who will take their lives in their hands and flee the baneful influence of the saloon. Other cities have had wonderful "booms" and great accessions of wealth, but hail to the one that has done it without degrading the days of her infancy and thus her whole history!

The book that tells the inspiring story, whose end is not yet, was designed, illustrated and printed by the South Publishing Co., 22 College Place, N. Y.

DONNELLIANA: AN APPENDIX TO "CÆSAR'S COLUMN." This interesting book consists of "excerpts from the wit, wisdom, poetry and eloquence of Ignatius Donnelly, selected and collated with a biography, by Everett W. Fish, M. D."

It is hard to say how Ignatius Donnelly is best known—as author, orator, statesman or law-maker. His life, compassing a little over sixty years, has been lived to its fullest capacity, and Dr. Fish in culling the material for DONNELLIANA that was fitted to give the best to its readers, has had a great accumulation from which to select. The keen, quick wit, the clear perceptions, the firm grasp of complicated questions, the profound insight into perplexing problems, the power of oratory possessed by this man, are well portrayed in the biographical sketch and carefully made selections from his works. It is always a satisfaction to read of great men's lives while they are being lived; and in whatever capacity Ignatius Donnelly may have appealed to friends or critics, no one of them can fail to find a full measure of interest in this volume.

F. J. Shulte & Co., 298 Dearborn street, Chicago.

OUR FLORA is the title of a lovely memorial tribute to the daughter of Wm. E. and Sarah L. Blackstone of Oak Park, a sweet Christian girl who lived a sunny, unselfish life, which it is now a joy for those to remember who must tarry here a space longer. She was to have graduated at Oberlin College, but disease fastened itself upon her, and she wore her graduating dress in her last earthly resting place, having been called to join the alumni in heaven. Her friends will welcome this white booklet, a fitting emblem of her fair, white life.

Blanche Fearing, the author of "The Sleeping World," a book which won for itself unsolicited and genuine commendation from such men as Oliver Wendell Holmes and John G. Whittier, has given to the world a second production that is winning high praise. IN THE CITY BY THE LAKE is composed of two long, blank verse, narrative poems. The author has true, poetic genius since she can take our unaffected, work-a-day prose and touch it into lines of musical sweetness. Aside from beauty and perfection of construction the book is replete with profound truths, touching with unswerving directness and inherent delicacy upon some of the gravest social questions that are before the thinkers of the day. Prof. David Swing has awarded Miss Fearing a measure of the praise which is justly hers, saying at the close of his letter of appreciation to her, "Your poem carries the picture of a soul full of good thoughts and the power to express them."

Searle & Gorton, publishers, Chicago. 12mo., cloth, $1.25.

A book, the reading of which creates thoughts of repose and relaxation, is Emily M. Bishop's AMERICANIZED DELSARTE CULTURE, i. e., "the Delsarte art of expression broadened so that it may be of general benefit to all, instead of being only of special benefit to a few." An oft-repeated sentence prefacing the lesson exercises in this admirable work is "Hold some thought," thus preparing the body for the beneficial exercises which are prescribed, by putting the mind into an harmonious attitude. The nervous activity of the American citizen is but the outward and visible sign of an inward lack of grace, an internal commotion of ambitions and desires. It is a hopeful fact that a realization of this condition of affairs has created a demand for a work such as that above named. Its closing quotation is rife with suggestion:

"Shun passion; fold the hands of thrift;
Sit still—and truth is near."

—Emerson.

Published by the author, Washington, D. C.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Heb. 11:6.

Last week I prepared my copy as usual for "Temperance Temple Items." There were many gifts recorded in it from children and unions. After I had finished the article, as is my custom, I threw the data from which I copied into the waste basket. The article was lost, it is supposed, through the carelessness of a janitor. Not being able to duplicate my first manuscript many gifts from unions and children will have no mentior in the "Temple Items," which I deeply regret.

***

It was with a feeling of unbounded pleasure that we received a few days ago a letter from Mrs. Louise Downs Quigley, daughter of our loved and lamented Mrs. S. J. C. Downs, late president of the W. C. T. U. of New Jersey, stating that before the first of September she will send $500 for a memorial window in Willard Hall in honor of her mother. This is as it should be; no woman who has been in our ranks deserves this distinction more than this brave and royal leader of white-ribboners. When faith in the Temple enterprise, on account of its colossal proportions, was at ebb-tide among the few who rallied around the founder and never doubted its entire success was the broad-minded, far-seeing president of New Jersey. Mrs. Quigley writes with great truth in regard to her mother, when she says: "The Temple never had a truer friend; her faith in the ultimate success of the plan was unbounded." We are therefore thrice glad that this noble woman's name will go down to posterity, not only on the New Jersey tablet in Willard Hall (the money for which was received a short time ago from her state associates) but also on one of the beautiful memorial windows as a loving tribute from a devoted daughter to the mother whose life was a benediction on all who knew her.

***

The Massachusetts W. C. T. U. is composed of broad-minded, liberal women who are always foremost in every good work. They have shown their usual appreciative and generous spirit by sending $100 to have the name of their able and talented state president, Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, placed on a tablet in Willard Hall. We trust that their well-deserved admiration for their present leader will not cause them to forget the noble woman who bravely brought them to victory by her hard and unselfish work for many years, Miss Elizabeth S. Tobey. Will not the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. see to it that $100 is raised so that Miss Tobey's name shall glow with the luster of her deeds on the Temple walls?

***

Africa is doing bravely. The W. C. T. U. of Harrismith, Orange Free State, sends $50 which completes their gift of $100. The following unions are all pledged to raise $100. The amounts which we give below have just been received on these pledges. Pittsburg, N. Y., $30; Osage, Iowa, $45; Lawrence, Kan., $21.45; Providence, R. I., $10; Central union, Troy, N. Y., $15; Cortland, N. Y., $14; from Collins, N. Y., W. C. T. U. to apply on Erie county pledge, $5; Charlotte, Mich., $11.50; Quincy, Ill., $10; Warsaw, Wis., $15. Mrs. Olin Gifford, treasurer of the Oakland, Cal., W. C. T. U. sends $100 to place the name of the Oakland union on a tablet. This money was raised all in one day by this wide-awake union. They gave a reception at their coffee rooms, lasting from "early morn to dewy eve," for the benefit of the Temple. Mrs. Pitt Stevens gave one of her brilliant and characteristic addresses on the Temple with the above result.

***

Mrs. Sarah J. Cooking, Jacksonville, Ill., has pledged $100 for the Sunday schools of the thirteenth district, She has just paid $22.18. Her last installment was credited by mistake to the Sunday schools of Jacksonville, when it should have been credited to the thirteenth district. The Union Park Congregational Sunday-school, Chicago, Ill., has given $100 for the Temple; it showed its deep interest in temperance by raising the entire amount from the collections of two Sundays. The first collection, amounting to $62, was taken on Temperance Sunday in May. The Sabbath before Mr. R. E. Jenkins, the superintendent, invited a white-ribboner to address the school on the subject of the Temple in order to get them properly aroused. We recommend this plan to all our corps wher ever they find a Sunday-school superintendent in sympathy with our work. The Erie Street Chapel Industrial school, Chicago, sends a collection of $5.45. The little children of the Plymouth Kindergarten, Chicago, send $2.11. The money from both these schools came from the children of the very poor.

***

The children of Mazon, Ill., gave a concert for the Temple under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. and sent $8.18. The children of Willow Creek and Pleasant Ridge district school, in Webster Co., Nebraska, sent an Easter offering of $2.64 to the Temple. Mrs. L. E. Baily told them all about the Temple. Her daughter writes that many of these dear little ones gave on this occasion their first penny for any cause. May this, their "first fruits," be the means of interesting them in temperance all their lives. Miss Tillie K. Fitch, Stanton, Pa., has adopted in her school a method to interest the children in temperance which we wish all white-ribboners who are teachers would imitate. She has a picture of the Temple framed and hung in her school-room. She sent the first of January for thirty-five mite-boxes, and distributed them, and is going to appoint a day this summer in which to open them. Miss Fitch truly says: "I think if we can get the children interested in the temperance work, we can look forward to a day when the temperance cause will triumph."

***

Mrs. N. H. Knox, president of the W. C. T. U., of New Hampshire, writes: "The Temple inkstand has come, and I cannot express my pleasure. It is marvelously beautiful, combining with its silvery sheen a constant object lesson. I think every one who sees it and possibly can buy one, will be sure to do so. I will speak a good word for the silver models wherever I can." Let our friends who are contemplating making wedding or birthday presents not forget the lovely models of the Temple. No. 1 is arranged for a bank, price $1.75. No. 2 in the form of an inkstand, price $2.25. No. 3 is a jewel case lined with purple, yellow and light blue velvet; price, $2.25.

***

Mrs. L. H. Morris, of New Jersey, writes: "In order to earn money for the Temple I have undertaken to raise a club of subscribers to the Mayflower, a paper published by John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, New York. A premium of one hundred dollars is offered for the largest number of subscribers. If I can win this prize I shall send fifty dollars to Mrs. Carse and devote the other fifty to a cherished private charity. The Mayflower costs but thirty-five cents a year (club rate); it is a monthly paper, devoted to floriculture. It has recently consolidated with The Daisy, which was published in Chicago. Among the contributors to the Mayflower are Henry M. Stanley, George Kennan, Louis Boehmer (The Mikado's Gardener!) Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher and Eben Rexford. Each subscriber will receive fully fifty cents worth of bulbs and seeds, as premiums, and all will be delighted with these and with the paper. I urge immediate action. Send name and money by postal note, money order, or coin securely wrapped, to address given below. The offer is not good after this month (June) so a prompt response is imperative. Remember the words of Nehemiah: 'So built we the wall: and all the wall was joined unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work.'

"The role of club raiser is not an easy one, but you can make it triumphal, perchance. Now, I hope a hundred, at least, of THE UNION SIGNAL readers will send thirty-five cents for one year's subscription to the Mayflower. Address Mrs. L. H. Morris, Box 194, Moorestown, Burlington Co., New Jersey."

***

A two cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box, descriptive card and bulletin; remember, all who fill a mite-box ($3.65) before next April will receive a photographic group consisting of Lady Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple. All drafts should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh. All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE, THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, June 16, 1892. Number 24.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Another cargo of food left New York on Saturday for Russia.

Many of the leading colleges throughout the country are holding their commencement exercises this week.

The trial of twenty people charged with conspiring against the government is in progress in Honolulu, Sandwich Islands.

An explosion of shells in the Mare Island navy yards, near Vallejo, Cal., on Monday, killed ten men and seriously wounded two others.

Mr. S. B. Cobb, of Chicago, has given $150,000 to the Chicago University. This is the most notable educational gift ever made in Chicago.

Lady Henry Somerset has addressed letters to the heads of all religious denominations in England asking them to support the vote on the closing of Sunday taverns.

The Minneapolis correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says, "The receipts during the Republican National Convention at the bar of West's Hotel footed up $10,000."

President Harrison was re-nominated by the Republican National Convention at Minneapolis, Friday noon. Whitelaw Reid, of New York, was named for vice-president.

Flower mission day, June 9, was very generally observed by W. C. T. Unions all over the country. At Joliet, Ill., 1,520 bouquets were distributed at the state penitentiary and county home.

Mrs. Potter Palmer, president of the women's board of the Columbian Exposition, has returned from Europe, and reports all the women's committees of foreign countries well organized and eager to help.

The souvenir appropriation bill, which passed the Senate last Friday, provides for the issue of a silver half-dollar which shall serve as a memento of the coming great historical event,—the World's Fair.

A frightful storm of wind and water swept over Chicago, June 13, fatally injuring several people and doing immense damage to buildings and trees. The Temple stood the test bravely, a few broken window lights being the only damage experienced.

Col. L. L. Polk, of North Carolina, chief of the National Farmers' Alliance, died in Garfield Hospital, Washington, D. C., June 11. He was for prohibition and woman's ballot; presided at the great labor convention in St. Louis last February, and was a great-souled leader who will be sadly missed and mourned.

THE Temperance Temple Items will be found this week on the first inside cover page.

OUR brilliant correspondent, Arthur Pollen, B. A. of Oxford University, whose sketch of Historian Freeman was much admired, has in this number a fresh, incisive character-study of the great author of that greatest modern hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light."

HENRY LABOUCHERE says that General Booth's farm colony at Hadleigh is a success. There are three hundred acres of land under crops and 1,200 acres being reclaimed from the sea by dumping London refuse. The brickyard turns out thirty thousand bricks per day, and six hundred chairs is the output of the chair factory. To work is a moral tonic to the slums and their people.

AGAIN a new type greets our readers' eyes. This change is due to the fact that our dress so lately adopted was cut a little too generously to allow "the cloth to go around," or, in other words, the large type was so extravagant of space that it could not accommodate the pressure of reading matter upon our columns. While this type is smaller than any previously used on our paper, it is remarkably clear and presents an unusually attractive face.

WHITE-RIBBONERS everywhere will be glad to know that Mather Dean Kimball, who for six years was an attaché of this office, and one of our breeziest contributors, has found his proper sphere as editor of a new magazine in Chicago, entitled Goodform, where he has the opportunity to branch out according to his own brilliant and versatile fashion. We wish him every joy of his new alliance, and predict a growing literary success, for we have always known that he was "to the manner born."

THAT was a unique scene in the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church when, through the influence of Dr. Melroy, of Chicago, Mrs. H. C. Campbell, the leading woman in the missionary work of that denomination, was invited to speak. Her address was brief and to the point. Later in the day it was voted that the corresponding secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society be accorded the same representation hereafter in the General Assembly as the secretaries of other boards.

COL. GEORGE W. BAIN, of Kentucky, is one of the noblest characters of this age. He would make an unexcelled candidate for president except that he has written no letter declaring that his name "will not come before the convention." Kentucky has just held its first delegated convention of the home protection party. Col. Bain, Prof. Dickie, Mrs. Joseph K. Henry and Dr. Smith spoke at the mass-meeting. When the committee appointed to nominate delegates at large to the National convention made its report, Col. Bain's name was first, and no woman's was on the list at all. Immediately our "knight of the new chivalry" rose in his place and, in one of his speeches as mellow and matchless as a full blown rose, withdrew his name, and urged that "the sex truest to the home, to tempted manhood and defenceless little children should be first represented upon the list of delegates." Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, than whom we have not a more capable white-ribboner in Kentucky, was thereupon appointed amid much applause. Bourbon soil nurtures some rarely perfect blossoms of humanity, and Bourbon whisky's blight shall yet be banished from that flower garden of God.

SOME of our honored leaders ask: "What would become of the Prohibition party if it should head its ticket with the name that stands first on the ticket of the People's party in the pending presidential campaign?" The answer is not far to seek: The Prohibition (Home Protection, Reform, Independent, Whig, Columbian, or some better name) party would remain in full force, with its autonomy complete, its platform, its committees, national, state and local, and its constituency, as we believe, largely to be increased this year. But if the other reform party should nominate, in Omaha, July 4th, as there is reason to believe it will, a man thoroughly committed to our principles of prohibition and woman's enfranchisement, why not put his name on our ticket and thus mass the reform vote of the country? Meanwhile, at our own convention, we shall, as a matter of course, nominate a complete ticket, but the lack of leading candidates this year renders it practicable to have an understanding that if such a candidate as we describe is chosen in Omaha, our presidential candidate would give place to him rather than retain the empty honor of holding on with a divided vote among reformers. If the question is asked: "Why not let the People's party take our candidate instead of we theirs?" our answer is, "Because that party would not do this;" and if the question then occurs, "Why would it not?" we must in all candor reply, "Because it is not so well schooled as ours; it is younger and less way-wise; it is not made up of veterans, like ours, and is less skilled in patriotic strategy than ours is . . . . or ought to be."

All of which is humbly offered for what it may be worth, with unalterable loyalty to what our clans and chieftains may see fit to do in Cincinnati, June 29th.

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, commissioned by our general officers, attended the International missionary conference at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 8, where she was invited to speak and afterward to lead in prayer. Dr. Robinson of India then offered the following which was unanimously adopted with heartiness: "Resolved, that we have listened with great interest and pleasure to Mrs. Woodbridge, the honored representative of the World's W. C. T. U., and hereby express our hearty and unfeigned sympathy with the efforts of the W. C. T. U. toward the abolition of both the liquor and opium traffics, pledging ourselves that in our respective fields of labor we will lend whatever assistance may be possible and proper to rid the world of these twin gigantic evils, fully assured that their abolition will powerfully tend toward the establishment of Christ's kingdom. Resolved, further, that we hereby most heartily indorse the petition which has been presented by Mrs. Woodbridge on behalf of the World's W. C. T. U. and request our president and secretary to sign the same in our name."

On June 10 Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, whose motto is, "The star of hope hangs over the school-house," spoke before the same body and held a scientific temperance instruction conference with excellent results. This, following so closely Mrs. Woodbridge's work, makes a strong forward movement for the World's W. C. T. U.

WE watched the great convention of the Republican party last week with intense interest. No spectacle on the American continent is comparable to the gathering up of a thousand delegates who represent the august millions devoted to the party in power. The drama was acted in Minneapolis, but "We, the people of these United States" were the intent spectators. Never perhaps were comedy and tragedy nearer their height. From "Mrs. Carson Lake's white Blaine umbrella" rotating wildly to the music of "whistles, cow bells and fog horns" to the flounder ing fall of a great name rang the deep diapason of that mighty throng. For ourselves, "outsiders" though we are, the instinct of fair play made us profoundly glad when the President was renominated. As trustworthy Chauncey Depew said, it was a tribute to the clear record, the manliness, the remarkable ability and the pure home life of our chief magistrate. We are not of his party, though once we loved it with all our hearts; we deplore his defection from the temperance movement of his times, but we are patriots before we are partisans, and we thank God that the solid good sense and good feeling of the people procured the defeat of the "magnetic statesman" whose character is the enigma, and whose fame the miasma of politics. We rejoice that the good sense of the people backed up the nomination of the man who killed the Louisiana lottery snake; signed the bill that cleared saloons out of a large part of our capital city, and the bill raising the age of protection for women to sixteen, wherever the national government has jurisdiction; also the bill giving women full suffrage in Wyoming as a state. We believe in the President who does not travel on Sunday; in the Presbyterian elder who has family prayers at the White House—(so far as we know, alas! the only President who ever did this), and whose wife does not wear décolleté dresses nor drink wine. We rejoice and thank God that the heroic church, home, and school people of the United States compel parties to put clean men forward as chieftains in these better days. We wish the Democrats would give us Gov. Pattison, of Pennsylvania, and the People's party, Gen. Weaver, of Iowa. The Republicans have set a good keynote for better public ethics. In Harrison we have a leader who tells the truth, fears God, loves his country and has given us as good an administration as any old régime party can possibly concoct. But, for the larger evolution that he represents, the newer hopes, the nobler brotherhood, we believe in our hearts that the least among Prohibition and People's party presidential candidates is greater than he!

TRAILING ARBUTUS.

[A Song for White-Ribboners.]

BY FLORENCE M. YORK.

Though winds of March blow chill and drear,
No sign of spring is seen,
Though wood and field look brown and sere,
Nor leaf, nor bud of green—
Beneath the frosted, withered leaves,
And ling'ring drifts of snow,
In fairest, sweetest loveliness
These tiny flow'rets grow.

CHORUS:—

Arbutus sweet, our emblem meet,
The whole round world entwine;
And ribbons white, our hearts unite,
And bind them, Lord, to Thine.

Oh, sisters true! This world of ours
Is full of withered leaves;
O'er liquor's blight and sin's chill night,
The heart in sadness grieves.
But courage take! No frost can kill
Our temperance vine so fair,
The blossoms of its glorious hope
Are blooming ev'rywhere.

Where poverty or sin is found,
We'll train the vine we love;
The withered leaves of blighted joys
With patient care remove.
From out the drunkard's palsied hand
We'll snatch rum's deadly weed,
And place instead arbutus sweet,
The flower of hope, indeed.

Pure, emblematic flower, to-day
Oh, teach us how to grow
In smiling, patient happiness,
'Neath frost and wind and snow,
To bloom for God all gratefully,
Where'er He calls apart,
Until He clusters us at last
Above His loving heart.

NURSE WESTGATE'S INSUBORDINATION.

BY MARIE J. HESSE.

(Concluded.)

John Martin lay days and weeks, content to accept whatever came. The fever had reached its height and Miss Westgate, realizing the crisis at hand, called Dr. Farnham who came quickly. He asked in a low, expectant voice:

"Have you gotten the man's history? I believe he has confided in you."

"Yes, Doctor, he has; but it is a sacred trust. I can give you only what will aid you in prescribing for him."

The doctor's countenance fell. Then followed a number of professional questions which she answered. A personal examination proved Miss Westgate's fear to be well-founded.

"Watch your patient closely; the end may come at any time," said the doctor, as he rose to go. "If there is an increase of faintness, administer stimulant freely; it may tide him over."

Miss Westgate made a quick motion and stood beside him.

"Doctor," said she firmly, "I have never been insubordinate to your slightest wish, concerning your patients—every order has been carried out conscientiously, but to-night you trespass upon my principle and I must absolutely refuse to obey you. I will not give this man alcohol in any form!"

"What! you refuse to obey the order of a physician?" demanded the doctor; the changing color of his face showed how agitated and astonished he was.

"Yes, sir, I do," firmly. "And what is more, I mean to be this man's friend now that he lies helpless, and see that he doesn't get the drug in any shape."

"Then I must discharge you at once, Miss Westgate!" hotly persisted the doctor.

"Very well—that you may do—but, doctor, that will not hinder my staying by this man—as his friend!" said Miss Westgate in a firm, womanly way; with a face aglow with her purpose, she added in a quiet, tremulous voice: "Doctor, that man has made such a struggle for liberty from the curse of drink as only God knows, and I will not aid in his defeat!"

"But," said the doctor with alarm, as he looked upon this determined young woman, "he will die, his life will be on your hands!"

"Then I accept the responsibility—with God's help! His soul shall go back to his Maker clean and pure; it will not insult Him by being soaked in poison."

"Miss Westgate, have you counted the cost?" urged the doctor now thoroughly alarmed.

"Yes, sir. With God's help I will fight for this life," said she, with bowed head.

Dr. Farnham turned from the room, determined to return and convince this obstinate girl of her error.

Nurse Westgate, without wasting precious moments, bent all the powers of her being to saving this man's life, which hung on so slender a thread. In her heart was a prayer as she worked untiringly, applying all the arts of her profession known to the nurses of the non-alcoholic training school. Dr. Farnham returned, with a face full of concern.

"Miss Westgate, listen to reason—give that man stimulants—don't you see he is failing?"

"No," said she firmly and sadly, going on with her work.

The doctor went out with an unuttered prayer on his lips, not so much for the dying man as for this young woman who dared so much for her principle, which she held more sacred than life itself. Through the long watches of the night there seemed times when life was almost extinct, but as the gray dawn came through the window, Miss Westgate saw a change which made her heart leap for joy. The crisis was past and John Martin lay sleeping like an infant. She fell upon her knees in glad thankfulness for the victory which had come through divine grace.

Dr. Farnham came to No. Eight expecting to look upon death, but to his great astonishment found the change had come and his patient had a new lease on life.

"Why, Miss Westgate," said he, his face full of gladness, his humanity breaking through the stern, professional exterior, "he is better! I am so surprised! You are a brave woman!"

Then he noticed for the first time how pale and weary she looked. Taking her cold hand in his, he said kindly,

"You must go and rest now and I will watch till you come."

"No," said she wearily; "thank you, doctor, but I cannot leave him yet."

"Grace," said Dr. Farnham, still holding her hand, "can you not trust me?"

She gave him a quick, searching glance. She saw something which she had never dreamed before, and it caused her to drop her eyes and the faint color to come to her pale cheeks. She silently bowed her head and slipped from the room.

Alone with his sleeping charge he came to ponder the principle for which this young woman had dared so much. "Could there be anything in this new way? Was it possible that the profession had stumbled on in ignorance? Was it true that alcoholic medication whetted a dormant appetite? Could life be sustained by other means as effectually?" All these and other questions marshalled themselves before his mind in quick succession. "If he had given the alcohol, would it have been a link in the awful chain that was dragging this man to hell? Clearly he was worthy to live; the finely shaped head, the noble face on the bed bespoke it." Dr. Farnham asked himself, "Could it be that I was mistaken, and that I, who meant only to bless this man, would have aided in damning him?" A revulsion of feeling came over him and he saw clearly where his practice, instead of being a blessing had been a curse in many cases; and when Miss Westgate came in refreshed from her rest he was well out of sorts with himself and rose to go at once, saying, as disgust and doubt warred in his face, "If there is a change, call me. Good-morning!" and stalked from the room.

Mr. Martin's recovery was a slow one, and with Miss Westgate he enjoyed anew the delights of Thackeray or Dickens. Sometimes she read from the dear old book that he had so long neglected, and therein he found new strength for his inner life. When he came to leave the hospital, it was with new courage and hope; with tears and a voice choked with emotion, he bade good-bye to Miss Westgate. He stood before her feeling that words were empty of the gratitude which he would express.

"Promises from a man like me amount to little or nothing; when I have established my claim to your respect I will come again; till then, good-bye."

She laid her hands on his bowed head and said, smiling through her tears, "'May the Lord make His face to shine upon you'; good-bye, good-bye."

. . . . . .

Ten years went by. Dr. Farnham rose from one success to another. He was now acknowledged to be an authority in his specialty. He had made for himself a name which was honored the world over. The profession thought him rather radical, and often heaped censure upon his head, but severe criticism only brought him into greater prominence. His office was thronged with men and women seeking relief. Among the number, one day, was a man who certainly looked the picture of health, a staid, well-to-do farmer. He waited his turn to interview the great doctor. When it came, his face brightened with happy expectancy. Holding out two strong, steady hands he grasped the doctor's.

"How do you do, Dr. Farnham? I see you do not know me, but I know you, and you haven't grown a day older!"

The doctor's face was a study. Something about this man recalled a memory. Rubbing his hand through his shaggy hair as though to aid his truant memory, he said: "Well, my dear sir, I seem to know you and yet I don't! Your face is so familiar—where have I seen it?"

"Let me help you," said the man. "Do you remember a severe case of typhoid fever at the C——— hospital, when you thought my chances were about gone and you ordered the nurse to give me brandy, and she refused point blank?"

The light was breaking in a burst over the doctor's clouded mind, and the two men had a good, hearty laugh.

"Yes, yes," replied the doctor, "and wouldn't you like to see Miss Westgate now?"

"Yes, indeed; that's what I came to the city for. I promised her I would come again."

The doctor took down his hat and cane, and turning to the office boy, said: "John, say I've been called out and will not be back again to night. Come, Mr. Martin," and he led his visitor out at a side door, up the steps of a fine stone mansion. "Be seated and I will call her," and the doctor disappeared. In a few moments he returned leading a matronly, comely woman.

"Wife," said he with mock severity, "this man is the fellow who is to blame for all the contumely heaped on my poor old head! Because of him I'm called a crank and who knows what not!"

The light of recognition flashed across her face—"Mr. Martin!" she exclaimed breaking from her husband with extended hands. "Oh! Mr. Martin, how glad I am to see you so; where have you been all these years?"

That night, by cheerful fireside, he told them of the hard road he had traveled, but from the day he left the hospital he had never been tempted to return to his old life. Three years ago a good woman, consenting to be his wife, had made his life happy and a peaceful home for him, where there was a dear little daughter who bore the name of Grace Westgate. At the family altar each day was breathed a prayer for the true woman who had saved him from his worst enemy.

"Mrs. Farnham," smiled John Martin, "my wife has great curiosity to see a woman who dared defy a great physician!"

"I'm making her pay for it!" retorted Dr. Farnham with a laugh.

Mrs. Farnham looked as though she enjoyed the retribution: but her eyes grew dark and deep with a sweet light that brought a tenderness into the voices of these two good men and a deference in manner toward her that was worth a lifetime's service and waiting.

Chicago, Ill.

CARDINAL NEWMAN.

BY A. H. POLLEN.

It sometimes happens when we come to the consideration of the life and work of a man of superlative gifts and holiness, that we turn from the exercise with a paralysis of powers that makes imitation hopeless. Genius inhabits a sphere into which we cannot enter, and we ask with some impatience, What good can we get by the study of models so far beyond us? Perhaps it is the biographer who is as a rule at fault, robbing his hero of that human touch which the reader craves; for just as there is nothing human so small or mean but the philosopher finds it food for contemplation, so there can be nothing human so great but the least may be shown something in it that he can profitably follow.

I account it a rare privilege to have known Cardinal Newman from the time I was twelve years old; to have lived under his roof for six years; to have been admitted to his friendship and whatever intimacy a difference of nearly seventy years would allow. It seems a wonderful thing to have known, in the evening of his days, one who for years did the thinking for thousands in this country, who without question holds the most prodigious place in the religious history of England—and to what profit, I often ask myself, beyond the legitimate boast?

Certainly on looking back I can recall no single occasion on which a saying of his gave special direction to my life, no particular inspiration which I owe to him. Perhaps his more notable dicta were for those whose greater interest elicited them. With me his talk was of the affairs of the hour, of Oxford and its memories—of which he never tired—and kindred subjects. It seemed as if it were a condition of the familiarity of my intercourse with him that it should be uneventful; but surely there is a compensation in the vivid, personal memory that stays with one as a constant counsel to better endeavor that gives a living voice to his written word, and puts a dearly revered friend on the stage of life's history.

Newman's great simplicity of nature was what made his friendship such a treasure. As Superior of the Oratorians he had always been called the "Father," and after he was Cardinal he would have no change; there was something in the magic of that endearing name that fitted him well. As boys, we had an immense reverence and a certain awe of him, but no fear, for a genuine affection overbore all other feelings. Towards the close of my career at school the Cardinal had a long illness and we did not see him for months. One day during his convalescence he came through the quadrangle between the oratory and the school buildings to a room he had on the school side. There were a score or so of small boys playing near, and no sooner did they see him than there was a rush to kiss his ring and ask after his health. Others seeing that something was up left their games to join, and soon the school surrounded him. I happened to be passing when the throng was at its thickest, and shall never forget the scene. A crowd of jostling boys, some with rackets, some with cricket bats and balls, all eager and ostentatiously delighted at seeing in their midst that familiar figure, slight and bent, in a red-edged cassock and gold chain, his head bowed forward as if the neck could no longer hold erect that marvelous brain with all it knew; a face of infinite sweetness, yet of startling strength, the strange fascination of his gray-blue eyes, the wondrous beauty of a lifetime of loving service in God's sight. What a picture it was in those picturesque brick cloisters, with the sun shining down on the daisies in the quadrangle and town sparrows chirping on the acacia tree in the center!

When he was in health we saw a great deal of the Cardinal; he took the keenest interest in the school. Every summer we acted one of the Latin plays of Terence or Plautus which he had edited for the purpose, and it was to the Cardinal that we always looked for the final hints before the last rehearsals. On one occasion he took exception to a courtesy I made (I was an Athenian matron, very ill-used) and at once got up and showed me the correct method.

On leaving school I joined Trinity College at Oxford, where Newman had been an undergraduate, and which had, in 1877, elected him to an honorary fellowship—an honor that I think gave him almost as much pleasure as his Cardinalate, for Newman was very English and essentially an Oxford man; he prized the appreciation of his countrymen highly, the more because he never sought it. When he first joined the Catholic Church the prejudice against those who professed that faith was at its height; the universities were closed to them, and many professions though legally open were practically shut. This unreasoning obloquy Newman set himself to destroy, and delivered the famous lectures on the "Present Position of Catholics,' in one of which he incorporated his historic attack on Dr. Achilli. This wretched Italian, formerly a priest, had been unfrocked on account of his irregular life and imprisoned for many disgraceful crimes by the civil authorities. He came to England on the completion of his sentence, and in the existing state of anti Catholic bigotry got a ready hearing as a victim of the Inquisition. His success was phenomenal. His lectures were crowded; scores of most eminent men gave him the support of their names. Newman's attack on him—which consisted of nothing beyond a record of his crimes in Italy, eighteen separate offenses—was made the subject of a libel action. One of the eighteen items could not be maintained owing to the official record being lost in a fire that destroyed the Italian court house. Sir John Cockbourne ruled a newspaper report to be no evidence, and Newman, in spite of seventeen charges, proved true, was found guilty of the libel. It was a scandalous miscarriage of justice, but Achilli was never heard of again. It should be said to the honor of Lord Shaftesbury that so soon as he knew his real character he withdrew his support from this unfortunate criminal as publicly as he had supported him. The event threw discredit on that method of controversy, and to Newman more than any other man it is due that religious polemics are conducted more rationally and with less of that bitter and unfair prejudice that once disgraced them.

In his own quarrels it is singular how studiously he avoided anything like personalities or unfair advantages. In his controversy with Kingsley he suppressed everything that could give pain to his opponent; and in the edition of the "Apologia pro Vitâ Suâ," published in book form the year it was written, Mr. Kingsley's name does not occur. About a year before his death, I was staying at the oratory, and, the Cardinal's sight becoming affected, was allowed to read to him for a few hours. He was correcting the proofs of some articles in reply to a somewhat ill-conceived attack on himself by a distinguished Nonconformist minister. A few personalities had been used in the discussion which the Cardinal had replied to with crushing dignity and moderation—and, it need not be said, in monumental English. His opponent, on being shown his error of taste, had made reparation as handsomely as he could, and in the reprint, whenever I came to a passage that referred to that part of the controversy—and they were passages of great personal advantage, so to speak, to a writer—I had to strike them out. Once I had the temerity to protest at this wholesale excision, but the Cardinal was inexorable. "It is not material to the reasoning," he said. Such generosity is rare, but with him was a part of that total oblivion of selfish interests which was one of his most delightful characteristics.

It is a curious thing that Newman, who was naturally of a most retiring disposition, should yet have been throughout his life, forced into a kind of personal publicity almost unexampled in the history of man. From his earliest years at Oxford he had been a recluse; in his most public days he was a recluse still. He never preached extempore; on the contrary, he read every word. His voice, though singularly pathetic and distinct, had little volume of tone and scarcely any modulations. He spoke almost without moving, and yet the testimony of his time is unanimous as to the effect. It was the eloquence of thought perfectly expressed. Newman's style is the hardest to define, because it is so absolutely the outcome of his mind. It was this intense identification of his writings with himself—the burning personality of his work that gave him his wonderful hold over those who shared his principles. They set their own opinions by his, as people do their watches by the town clock, and the famous saying, "I would rather be wrong with Newman than right with any one else," represented the mental state of thousands. It was this dependence of others on him that drove him to reveal his soul and mind to the whole world in the "Apologia," for he knew he owed to those that trusted him, to show that never for one moment had insincerity clouded that living intelligence that was his absolute guide.

There is no more striking tribute to this architypal

CARDINAL NEWMAN.

character of Newman's mind than the popularity during the last sixty years, of that wonderful hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light." I have heard good critics canvass the question whether there is a finer lyric in the English language; certainly there is none more classical. And yet it is the reflection of a state of mind in the writer that is historically definite, and refers, after a manner, to incidents equally peculiar and personal. It was written in the year 1833, and any one who will take the trouble to read the "Apologia" from the beginning to that date, will find that it is a singularly close synopsis of his life from childhood to 1845.

We have here a soul face to face with God; perfectly sincere in the faith he has, conscious of development, accepting the uncertainty of the end in a childlike confidence of the guidance,—"One step enough for me"—God, at His good pleasure, will afford him this; until ultimately he comes back to the simple peace of his childhood, when, as he tells us, the angels seemed to be playfellows, who, by a pleasant device hid themselves from his sight. "I was not ever thus," is equally true to his personal experience. In the "Apologia" he refers specially to a time when "an intellectual, rather than moral excellence" was his aim, until bereavement and illness awoke him from that delusion.

AN INTERVIEW WITH LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

"Livingstone," in a recent communication, says: "The Bloomsbury Squares to many people suggest quietness and leisure. But within not a few of these homes are to be found veritable hives of industry. Such a house is Lady Henry Somerset's. It required some temerity to intrude upon one whose hands are so full of actual and projected work. However, the busiest people have the most time, and it was natural that the conversation largely turned on Lady Henry Somerset's six months' visit in the states."

She said of the American women: "They are much ahead in executive ability. As workers they are more trained. In the aggregate they are better educated than English women, though the best intellectual women in England are unsurpassed anywhere. I think their executive excellence is due to the fact that during the Civil War the business of the country was virtually left in the hands of the women. To the magnificent public schools of America is undoubtedly due their educational position. It is the early training and discipline that tell through life. The educational system of America provides these, and makes solid women. This discipline is especially noticeable in public meetings of women; they do not wrangle as in England, and show personal feeling, but debate as men debate in the House of Commons.

"To-day the temperance cause is making the nation one; nothing tended to break down the feeling between northern and southern women after the war more than Miss Willard's visits to the South on behalf of the W. C. T. U. The states are politically in an appalling condition in every form and department. But at the same time the Americans hold the great future in their hands; when America opens her commerce to other nations she will become the center of the English-speaking races. Dr. Parkhurst's experiences remind me that, in spite of all the corruptions, there is a national conscience that is more easily appealed to and which is touched to a deeper point than in England. American audiences are more thoughtful and less demonstrative than English people. Points which here are simply lost sink deep with American hearers.

"I do not think the Americans really as democratic as we are; they allow themselves to be led. The President has much more power than is supposed; their ministers do not sit on the front benches to be fired at; they are all protected; during their term of office they are absolute; leaders have more personal influence; they are not hampered on all sides by committees and stumbling blocks. On the other hand the best people in America are striving to prevent the upbuilding of the class and caste feeling of England and older countries.

"The temperance work in America is wonderful. First, because of its leader, unique as an organizer; then, because it is federated. Different branches are not associated with names of various persons who act independently. So the work is continuous and strong; is not narrowed to one phase, but embraces the whole area of the subject. The Prohibition party is very strong. The great question now is whether the industrial organizations will unite with it. There is no doubt in my mind that an alliance will be made between these two powerful parties.

"It is a mere question of time when the women will have representation in the Methodist conference. The Methodist church in America confirmed my opinion that it is the church of the English speaking world. It will soon be the greatest church in England if it takes a true attitude toward women, and has the courage to break out of the bonds of conventionality and false scriptural teaching on this question. The note which the Methodist church sounds upon all the great social questions, notably temperance, will vitalize or deaden the national conscience."

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

Speaking of that case where "the King of France marched up a hill and then marched down again," I have always agreed with the crowd that it served him right whatever "it" was, but I desire to change my vote and to extend, across the years and any little social obstacles, my hand, and say to him, "Your Royal Highness,"—no, he might be sensitive about "highness" at any rate—substantially this, "Old man, I'm sorry for you." . . .

I have done it myself—I tried to get down in time to catch the Fishkill ferry-boat but missed it and had to take the "Erie accommodation" and here I am at Greycourt waiting for the down train for New York. . . . .

I knew at the first meeting that I was "a good man gone wrong," for aside from the noble army of martyrs with me, the audience was parenthetical. . . . .

That is to say, the body of the church was flanked by two enormous empty alcoves like the two limbs of a parenthesis and the people seemed as if they had "just happened in" and were "not necessary to complete the scene." . . . .

I only saw one "likely" man; he occupied the rear seat, but I learned, almost immediately, that he was a clergy man. At the distance across the empty benches he seemed to me to lack "sand" for desert and to be too "dry" for oasis, and I put him down, in my mind, as mirage, and so he turned out.

The pastor and another minister were in the pulpit, but I knew nothing of them except that they were young, scholarly and gentlemen—that last is a very becoming quality in a preacher.

I have once only spoken in a church by invitation of its young people where the pastor failed either to call upon me or be present at the meeting or even offer excuse. London prize ring rules require better manners. . . .

It is hard to do temperance work where the slums begin at the top. . . . .

But I want right here to raise my Ebenezer to the bravest W. C. T. U. I have ever seen: Through sixteen hyperborean meetings they hoped and helped and held—pastorless, husbandless, but dauntless to the end. Two husbands stood by their wives—sometimes three, but otherwise the gallant little band was—for purposes of their temperance work—widowed, orphaned, unbefriended and unchurched. . . . . I wonder how a man is put together who is "a temperance man" but lets his wife "go it alone!" Thank the Lord! my Mary can testify that throughout the old, bad past, if I was sober, I was with her, out of business hours.

. . . . . .

It gives me a sense of great fatigue to see the W. C. T. U. tolerated by preachers who "lag superfluous" behind their own parishes and would not recognize a conversion if they should see it, which they are in no danger of doing at home; and I think it is time for our women to compel the attention of the churches to our cause by speaking about it in the prayer-meeting and requesting the use of the churches for temperance meetings. . . . The church is the sole hope of the temperance cause and her ministry is, in large proportion, noble, but some of them must tighten their belts and report for duty or "lag superfluous."

Erie Dépot, Greycourt.

SIDE-LIGHTS—FOR WORKERS.

"GOD'S ANGELS" IN STATE PRISON.

One day last fall the convicts in Auburn prison were marching in lock-step around the prison yard. In the ranks was the writer; immediately behind him was a young man who had had an eventful life. As we were marching near the prison door there came out a long procession of lady visitors to the prison; the young man behind me, Willie, whispered in my ears, "There come God's angels." At first I thought he was joking, but presently a gust of wind blew the lapel of a lady's unbuttoned sealskin sack aside and there I saw pinned to her dress a bit of white ribbon and the cross. They were holding the New York W. C. T. U. convention. The earnest manner in which Willie called them "God's angels" impressed my mind. I asked permission of the keeper when we returned to our cells to visit Willie; when I looked through the bars of his door he was sitting on his cot sobbing as if his heart would break. I said, "Willie, what did you mean by saying the ladies were God's angels?"

"Well, Sam, I do not mind telling you; now you know they used to say I was the biggest tough that ever came into prison, but you see how changed I am. The change came about in this way. I am only twenty-eight years old yet I have spent sixteen years of my life behind the bars. I never knew who my father was, my mother was a confirmed drunkard, and the earliest recollection I have was being sent out into the streets to beg. If I came home without enough money to buy a pint of whisky I would be beaten most unmercifully. Starving in such a wretched home I ran away to New York City. I slept in vans, or under lumber piles on the docks; all I had to eat was what I could pick up round Fulton market. I have been so hungry I have eaten fish heads thrown into the ash barrels. One starving day I stole a coat and was sent to Randall's Island House of Refuge. Ever since I have been hounded by the police; no sooner out of jail than I would be landed back; nobody ever spoke a kind word to me.

"Two years ago in the prison hospital I lay ill; I thought that I was dying, when one morning a kind lady of the W. C. T. U. came and knelt by my bedside and prayed for me; she told me tenderly all about Jesus and gave me some fruit; her kind manner broke me all up. I tell you, that moment I began to mend in body and soul. I got fresh hope of being a better man. Do you wonder then that I call them God's angels? Had my mother been one of these angels I would have led a better life and probably never have been in prison."

'Tis strange but true that the convicts as a class lack faith in "the cloth;' they look upon many chaplains as George Eliot in Adam Bede says: "Jail chaplains are the fag end of the clergy." But the earnest, loving way in which women work to tell the story of how "Christ receiveth sinful men" and their readiness to write to friends, interceding for reconciliation to the "black sheep of the family"—seeing such devotion on the part of refined, cultured women without any pecuniary recompense, has produced in the minds of the convicts unbounded confidence in the W. C. T. U. We would urge "God's angels" to go on in their noble work of rescuing men, who like poor Willie have been "more sinned against than sinning." I know many instances where the members of the W. C. T. U. have been the instrument in God's hands of saving men from going to perdition, men who now have respected places in the world. I have talked with some of the most abandoned who have become so depraved that it seemed impossible to find one good thing in their hearts, and yet I never knew one who was not amenable to the loving hand and heart and voice that spoke words of comfort, did acts of kindness and felt with them human infirmity. In the name of hundreds of poor fallen humanity we would send words of gratitude and blessing to "God's angels."

Auburn, N. Y.

Organizers' Items.

THE PRESIDENT OF AUSTRALIA HELPS THE VIRGINIA WORK.

BY M. M. LOVE.

After the Boston Convention I commenced a mission in Virginia at Hamilton. I met the ladies of the W. C. T. U. in the afternoon and spoke in the evening to a large audience in the Methodist church; also spoke in Lincoln. The earnest workers in both of these places have much that is discouraging, in the apathy of the churches, which do not seem to realize that any effort is necessary toward the overthrow of the drink traffic. I also visited Leesburg and Hillsboro'.

New year's day found me on the wing, Fairfax court house, Herndon and Leesburg being visited. The prevalence of la grippe and very inclement weather called me aside from my intended route, and I was unexpectedly led to the place of my birth, which I had not seen for forty-two years. I preached twice in the pulpit from which I had heard the gospel proclaimed when a child, or rather in a church which had been built where the old one stood, and was thus permitted to sow the seed of total abstinence and prohibition in a locality which had little knowledge of the great movement of the W. C. T. U.; a neighborhood where leading church members had their fruit made into brandy and wine, treated their friends to it, drank it habitually, and gave it to their children.

During this mission I found that it was necessary to do much private visiting, thus reaching a class who are too conservative to attend a meeting addressed by a woman. One minister (Methodist) candidly refused to encourage the mission by giving his presence, but after a little reasoning promised to attend; at the close of the lecture he invited me to address his Sunday-school, which I did, with the addition of many of his congregation. A Church of England minister declared, when I first spoke to him of my work, that he believed the drink to be a good thing used in moderation. When I proposed to speak on the subject of total abstinence to the united Sunday-schools, he asked me to deliver the address in his church, and invited the other schools to be present. These facts I mention, trusting that they may stimulate our women to more of this personal work. We must go to them, they will not come to us. Our war must be aggressive; we are the invaders.

February 4th found me in Grafton, W. Va., where after doing a little work in the churches, I visited Fairmont, Parkersburg, Buckhannon, then returned to Grafton to attend a district convention, which resulted in a protracted mission of two weeks, during which time we held two all-day prayer-meetings, one of them being conducted hourly by the ministers of all the churches.

In the meantime Col. C. J. Holt, of Illinois, finished a very successful meeting at Fairmont, and another at Grafton, where the mission resulted in the organization of a Law and Order League to work with the W. C. T. U. in the prosecution of unlicensed saloon-keepers. We should have such a league in each local option town to help the W. C. T. U. and then prohibition will not be a failure; for the officers of the law need the aid of good, brave men who insist on the enforcement of law. This will endue the "arm of the law" with courage, for it is much defied by the liquor men.

My women in Australia insisted that I should rest while in America, but how can I rest when there is so much to do, and so many need educating and stirring up to a greater zeal in the work? "The laborers are few," and I often wonder if we are not culpable in not more earnestly praying the "Lord of the harvest to send more laborers."

I am glad to see that our World's superintendent of W. C. T. U. missionary work has formulated her plan, and is systematically putting the unions to work in this department, and trust that the Australian colonies will contribute to the fund of the World's Temperance Missionary Society, already helping to support a missionary in India.

. . . . .

The latest item of Virginia news, just out, is the re-election of Mr. Fultz, the husband of our own Anna M. M. Fultz, as mayor of Staunton. Mr. Fultz represented the "dry," law and order, and it is said, never in the history of Staunton was there such persistent, determined opposition to the powers that be. The rum element had two candidates in the field, Democrat and Republican. They combined to elect on the "wet" ticket a man who was once high in the church and a shining light in the Y. M. C. A. and had been known as a "temperance" man! A spectator relates that just as Mr. Fultz appeared at the polls, a great, burly negro, who leads the lowest class of his race, shook his head at the mayor with the remark, "Yes, sir. We'll turn you down this time forever.' And they did fight like tigers—the rummies—but the "dry" won overwhelmingly, and every respectable colored man in town voted that way. Mrs. J. W. Newton, the W. C. T. U. state treasurer, and Sam Jones have been of late in the field in Virginia.

WEST WASHINGTON.

BY MARY BYNON REESE.

No year in our history has been so prolific in W. C. T. U. results as the present, beginning with January, 1892. All the work done has been wrought by our own women.

Mrs. Luema Johnson, president of the Seattle W. C. T. U., and a fine vocalist, has gone over a large portion of the state, accompanied by her gifted young daughter, Annie, and has organized at Edwards, La Conner, Burlington, Cosmopolis, Kalama, and added many new members to old unions.

I organized Marysville with a fine working force, added twenty new members at Mt. Vernon, and with Mrs. McDowell organized an L. T. L. with ninety members. This is a strong, alive auxiliary. At Bay View I weaned a Y from the "three-year-old" union which is the same age as the town, whose officers respond to every state call, pay fifteen dollars a year to the White Shield Home, and propose to build headquarters and pay one hundred dollars to the Temple.

Shelton, another of my "three year olds" is in fine condition, but its faithful leader, Miss Clara Ansorge, is laid aside by reason of overwork. Nearly one hundred signed the pledge, and nine new members were added. This union sends quantities of literature, weekly, to the lumber camps.

At the Skokomish Reservation, on Hood's canal, I addressed a very intelligent company of Indian children, whose pledge cards will gladden the heart of Anna Gordon at the great Exposition.

Eleven new members were added to the union at a delightful reception given the organizer at Elma. Hoquiam, on Gray's Harbor, is a live union. In the absence of ministers, its members observed the week of prayer in public services, and held meetings for nearly three weeks with great profit. Its president, Mrs. M. O. Murphy, is also superintendent of an L. T. L. The adjacent camps are supplied with literature, many lines of work carried on, and the union is a felt power in the community. Avon, on the Skagit river, has done fine work in keeping out saloons.

In a hard rain I reached South Bend, on Nillipa Harbor, Saturday night, unexpectedly, too, but the wide-awake pastors, Revs. Smith and Davis, organized a union service. We had a crowded house, three fine after meetings; organized a W. C. T. U. with twenty-two regular and a number of honorary members, and had a large ingathering of pledge signers.

The Shoal Water Bay country has scarcely been touched. Six years ago I reached it by boat and stage, riding many miles in sight of the breakers, with the surf rolling under the horses' feet. I found the little union at Bay Center alive and at work, and yet no woman has visited it in the long interval, and none of their number, because of distance, hard travel and great expense, have attended a single convention! No saloon in this place, but the union has done valiant service in unearthing the enemy in secret places.

Des Moines has a fine new union, with twenty-two members. I held three evening services, and gave the pledge to a majority of the people. It will never disgrace its eastern namesake. Buckley, another "three-year-old," holds the faith—with good works. A monthly gospel temperance service, a finely edited W. C. T. U. column, and distribution of literature, are among their lines of work. Their president, Mrs. Combs, weighing ninety pounds, with a young babe, has done heroic service in interesting and keeping her women together.

Had a fine hearing at Enumclaw, organized a union in the morning, walked three miles to Buckley, held an afternoon meeting with the ladies, and lectured that evening. These signal stations up toward the mountain tops will let their light shine far into the future. My work has been mostly confined to new towns, where no temperance work has been introduced.

On the evening of my arrival at one place, a barrel of cider was put off the boat for one of the merchants. The next week it was sent back to Seattle, the merchant remarking: "No good here since that old idiot has got everybody to sign the total abstinence pledge."

Two things our women have well done, advertised thoroughly and as thoroughly reported work, both absolutely essential to success. My work, only half of which is reported in this article, occupied six weeks, while Mrs. Johnson made flying trips "all over." Yet sixteen new unions are enrolled and more than three hundred members added. I go this week to the "round up" and expect to see four more auxiliaries and one county organized, while two more counties will come in later.

Seattle, Wash.

CORRESPONDENCE

THE FIRST TEMPERANCE EDUCATION STATUTE BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I had been urged to go to Canada in behalf of compulsory temperance education in schools. March 25 at twelve o'clock, "high noon," the campaign opened at Fredericton, N. B., with an address before the Provincial Parliament.

Lady Tilley and other W. C. T. U's were graciously given chairs on the floor of the house, the members of the two houses filled the seats, and friends of the movement crowded the galleries. The governor-general, Sir Leonard Tilley, prefaced his graceful introduction with an allusion to that feature of our tariff question just then of special local interest by saying:

I find the lady to speak to us from America believes in reciprocity; Canada also believes in reciprocity, our only difference with her countrymen on that question is—the terms. [Laughter.] But happily in this case we can take no exception to the terms, for at the recent great meeting of the World's W. C. T. U. held in Boston (and all the world seemed to be there), this lady as chairman of an overflow meeting held in Park street church, introduced me to a Boston audience; and now as an act of reciprocity, I present her to you, gentlemen of the two houses of the Provincial Parliament of New Brunswick, convened in this Assembly Chamber.

Then this true gentleman, with a tact as gracious as kind, entirely relieved me of the feeling of being an outsider, intruding upon "home rule," by saying, "The women of Canada are members of this great world's organization of women, therefore this lady chosen by that body to present the cause of compulsory temperance education to the Legislatures of the world is here as a representative of the womanhood of our own, as well as other lands."

Thus introduced, my plea for legislation that would insure a systematic, continuous, temperance education for every child in the public schools of the provinces from the lowest grade up, and for what such an education would bring to the future men and women of the provinces, was listened to with a cordial attention that was hopeful for results.

Abraham Lincoln once said,—"Under a representative government, if you can convince a majority of the people that a law should be passed and will provide that their representatives in legislature assembled shall know it in time, you will secure your statute." Here, it proved to be a question of time that was lacking.

The welcome a speaker most appreciates, a large audience, was met in St. Johns and the College Hall of Sackville, not forgetting Monckton, the new railroad center, growing after the rapid fashion of a western town, this side of what our Canadian cousins call the "imaginary line."

At these large and representative meetings, all without a dissenting voice sprang to their feet when the opportunity presented, in favor of the proposed educational method, as the fundamental, the wisest, and most far-reaching of all forms of temperance effort. But the closing hours of the New Brunswick Parliament were too near, as the campaign was planned, to do more than rouse a preliminary interest.

Halifax, the capital of Nova Scotia and of the next Province visited, is a garrison city, the military headquarters of the Dominion of Canada. I was told I should find it "very English" in its spirit and customs, and that being so, I found it good to be "very English."

First in order on the evening of arrival was an informal preliminary reception in one of the large committee rooms of Parliament House where the members of parliament from both Houses were presented to the local W. C. T. U., their guest, and other friends. The honorable gentlemen then escorted us upstairs to Assembly Hall or the House of Commons. The sea of faces there, from floor to galleries, waiting in expectant attitude, recalled similar scenes in my own country, but especially the first of the kind in one of our smallest states, Vermont, when the first compulsory temperance education law was enacted in 1882—a law that has been re-enacted by state after state and the National Congress until more than twelve million children in our land are now under temperance education laws. History seemed to be repeating itself. The little state of Vermont has thus led this republic—the Provinces of Nova Scotia might lead the British Empire in providing a similar education for the children of her millions against alcohol and other narcotics. The past and the future commingled until I seemed to be pleading for a warning education for the childhood of all English speaking people against the drink and narcotic habits that have been the blight of our race.

"The bill will pass without any difficulty," everybody said, commenting on the enthusiasm with which the idea of compulsory temperance education was there received but, back in the convolutions of my brain, experience whispered to memory, "such bills do not pass for the asking." "This kind goeth not forth but by prayer," and the self-abnegating labor of which fasting is only a type.

During the following days the bill was framed, and its essential points explained to the Parliament Committee on Education; the whole topic was more fully and generally discussed before a public church audience, and a talk given by request to the students of Dalhousie College on "The Student's Duty to the Moral Reforms of His Times."

Then I started for Prince Edward Island, a Province divided from the mainland by an arm of the sea which in winter is so filled with ice, driven in by ocean currents, as to be almost impassable in the coldest seasons of the year, and doubly difficult when, after the opening of spring, the polar ice moves down through the channel in large masses, as it was doing when I attempted to cross.

A steamboat made of strong, tough steel, after the Norwegian pattern of ice steamers, which cut their way by crushing the ice from above, makes the passage more endurable than in former times when crossing was done only in open boats, on runners, that served as sleds on the ice and as boats when the ice gave place to the open sea. Wrapped in warm furs that kept out the cold, there was a fascination in watching from the deck the ice through which we were plowing, as it came up from under the ship like huge, white leviathans shaking the water from their sides. Even when we were entirely blocked, or moving at a snail's pace, the study of the ice was full of interest. "Why are some of those huge masses of ice such a clear, almost blue white, and others so jagged, representing every fantastic shape?" I asked the ship's purser who was also watching the situation. "The blue-white, madam, is polar ice from the far North, the ragged shapes were frozen as the wind lashed the water upon rocky coasts," he replied. These silent witnesses of the awful, still cold, and the terrible storms of the sunless North, twice held us in their relentless clutch for more than an hour at a time, as the good steamer, Stanley, charged back and forth upon them like a huge battering ram.

"Have you ever been unable to get through on time?" I asked the purser. "Yes, sometimes the ice has held us four or five days at a time, and we have been obliged to float with the mass before we could break through. This whole stretch of ice, as far as we can see, is a floating mass, and it is taking us now out of our way," he replied. "I want to reach Charlottetown to-night at eight o'clock," I said, mentally thinking of the waiting audience there, and of the children of a hundred thousand people in that Province to be taught to abhor strong drink; hoping, and mentally praying, that the four days set apart for Prince Edward Island might not be spent on the Stanley, held in the grip of floating, arctic ice. "If we can get through this pack in an hour more, and I think we can, we are not likely to be held by another to-night, and if so, we shall reach Charlottetown not much after eight," the purser replied; but it was almost nine p. m. when I was rapidly driven from the Stanley to the largest church in Charlottetown, to find a waiting audience of one thousand five hundred people.

A ride the next day to meet the Summerside audience followed, and then the return to Charlottetown for the hearing before Parliament which the daily papers described as the "Unprecedented event of a woman before the Bar of the House, addressing both branches of Parliament, with the United States council seated with the members of the legislative council, all listening to this American woman." Halls, galleries and all possible standing places were packed, so great was the interest in the measure, and next came the presentation of the bill to the committee on education and to other individual M. P's. Then vainly wishing I could stay longer and help the measure over hard places, I returned to Halifax.

On arriving, I understood why the undefinable feeling that I must reach there as soon as possible, had haunted me for the last two days. The Nova Scotia C. T. E. bill had passed intact the first and second readings, but referred to the Committee on Education, had been there badly mutilated, shorn of its penalty, of its specification, of a given amount of temperance matter in text books, etc. Every engagement that would take me twenty-four hours from Halifax was canceled, including the promise to be present at the semi-annual Massachusetts W. C. T. U. convention. Days of intense activity followed in finding and meeting objections, correcting misapprehensions, and disproving the erroneous statements that led to the dismemberment of the bill; this work was organized and every point carefully covered.

For hearty co-operation in this, the cause of temperance in Nova Scotia owes a debt of gratitude to the local W. C. T. U's, to many a friendly M. P., to the supervisor of public schools in Halifax, to the champions of the bill in both Houses, and many others, not forgetting the horse, carriage and coachman of "mine host," which were ever, during those days, at the service of whoever must drive to any point for an important interview.

In addition to this, a large audience in Wolfville, an educational center in the land of "Evangeline," not only listened with interest to my story of the pending question in Halifax, but deputized a committee to carry the wishes of that representative audience of 1,000 people immediately to Halifax for the restoration of the bill to its original form and for its passage.

At three p. m. April 12 we, the W. C. T. U's and other friends of the measure, gathered in the gallery of the lower House of Commons, had the great joy, after listening to a debate of nearly two hours on the question, of seeing the bill pass seventeen votes for, to eleven against, with all the desired features restored.

Two days later it passed the upper House unanimously; and a telegram is just received from its champion in the lower House to the effect that "the governor-general has signed the bill which is now the law of Nova Scotia."

Thus was enacted the first compulsory temperance education statute by act of Parliament in the British Empire.

As I write, the news comes from Prince Edward Island that the Parliament of that province has also passed a temperance education law.

It is but just to add that for several years there has been some temperance education in the schools of the various provinces of Canada, on the recommendation of the ministers of education or superintendents of public instruction; but in many cases this has been made largely inoperative for lack of the prescription of a series of well graded text-books adapted to the capacities of all classes of pupils.

The new statute of Nova Scotia makes it the duty of the council of education to prescribe "text-books on this topic that shall be as well graded to the capacities of all pupils as other text-books are;" and further makes the use of these books compulsory by pupils able to read, with penalties applying to the various school officers who shall fail to enforce them and the other provision of the act.

In closing, I would add my appreciation of the kindness and beautiful hospitality received during this trip at the hands of our Canadian cousins.

Dorothea Dix, to whose heroic labors Halifax owes its well equipped insane asylum, was often cited as a precedent for my mission.

Seldom has it been my fortune to meet more intelligent and thoughtful audiences. Many of the courtesies were no doubt extended because I came from the republic; as when it was insisted that I should speak from the oval canopied platforms in the parliament houses called thrones where they said "no woman but Princess Louise, Queen Victoria's daughter, had ever stood before."

In the beautiful council chamber of House of Lords, in Halifax, at the right of this throne is a life size portrait of George the Third, and on the left one of Catherine, the Queen consort, painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds and sent by King George to his subjects in Nova Scotia in appreciation of their loyalty. In that presence, the past seemed to touch the present, and the blended shadows of both to forecast that future upon which we are entering when "the battle flag shall be furled in the federation of the world," and the truth shall make us free. MARY H. HUNT.

Hyde Park, Mass.

LETTER FROM MRS. NICHOLS.

[The explanation of any seeming discrepancy is that the World's W. C. T. U. was informed that it should have space in the Woman's Building, but not outside for a separate building.—EDS.]

DEAR EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The statement sent by me to your paper, that the World's W. C. T. U. had been refused space in the Columbian Exposition grounds upon which to erect a building, was official. Application was made for such space more than a year ago, and was among the first on file. Since then different applications for privileges connected with the exhibit have been sent in. The reasons assigned for declining to give space were that "It was needed for other purposes," that the "Isabella Association and similar societies had been refused space," and that "the proper place for all women's societies was in the Woman's Building."

In arranging for the funds to erect the building (the plan of which was reduced in size after the National W. C. T. U. of the United States decided to go into the Woman's Building) and to carry on the work, it was understood fully that the money was not to be taken from the World's union treasury. Several countries had promised donations for that special purpose. A number of states had offered to pay into the fund for the opportunity of having the special exhibits there that were not allowed in the Woman's Building. The National Temperance Hospital and W. T. P. A. had agreed to join in aiding in the work, as they were to have full exhibits in connection with it. Temperance societies, such as the Good Templars, etc., had agreed to join in the expense in order to have space there. Peace and other societies had also signified their willingness to join in the work as they did at Paris, where a large part of the expense was borne by such societies in England.

In a conference with the President of the World's union, and its first vice-president, Lady Henry Somerset, both decided that if possible there should be a pavilion for the World's W. C. T. U., and the same commissioner was to be sent to assist in the work that represented the B. W. T. A. at the Paris Exposition, and a fund collected in England, as there had been for that exhibit. There having been many inquiries made in regard to the matter, and some contradictory statements published, it is thought best to make this plain statement of facts.

JOSEPHINE R. NICHOLS,
Commissioner for World's W. C. T. U. at the Columbian Exposition.
Indianapolis, Ind.

MRS. LEAVITT IN SOUTH AMERICA.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE W. C. T. U.:—Early the next morning after my arrival at Buenos Ayres I went out in search of Dr. Drees and Mr. Milne. The agents of the American steamers had promised to warn them of my arrival, but changing to the English steamer, Clyde, at Bahia, disarranged their plans. Dr. Drees was to start for the States so soon that he could not do as much for the work as he had planned, had I arrived a month earlier, still, he gave most efficient aid. Rev. Mr. Milne, of the Bible Society, was ready and willing to help. Rev. Mr. Fleming, of the Scotch Church, obtained leave from his elders for me to speak in his church after the close of the morning service. Mrs. Stirling, wife of the English bishop, promised to come to one meeting, and Rev. Mr. Ogle, the curate, made the same promise, and both fulfilled them.

Dr. Drees invited me, on the first Sabbath morning, to his pulpit, at the close of the morning service. This was a concession to the feelings of his congregation, who would be willing to hear a woman speak, provided it were not in the regular service. I also spoke at evening in the Sailors' Home, and another Sabbath, at evening, to the Argentines, in their church, Dr. Drees acting as interpreter, and in the afternoon to the Y. M. C. A. Miss Armstrong did excellent service in calling a meeting of ladies, while Miss Le Huray gave me a comfortable home.

Beside the meetings already mentioned, a series of three evening lectures and two more meetings for ladies were arranged. The Band of Hope which was formed in Dr. Wood's time, composed of adults and children, had opened its doors to me at its monthly meeting. At this point I went away to Rosario, where meetings had been arranged by Dr. Drees by letter and telegram. On my return to Buenos Ayres I filled the program prepared, with the happy result of a W. C. T. U., which though not large is able and earnest. Mrs. Milne is president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Holder, secretary, and Mrs. Babbitt, treasurer. Mrs. Babbitt has recently come from the United States. She laughingly said: "I have come to Buenos Ayres to join a W. C. T. U. after having refused many times at home." There is a prospect of some growth in the large English and small American colonies, but it must be slow; and there is a hope that some of the Argentinian ladies will in time come to the ground of total abstinence, but none of the Spanish-speaking people are yet upon it, not even pastor or pastor's wife. A good work may be done with both English and Spanish speaking children.

Rosario is up the river one hundred and eighty-seven miles by train and much farther by steamer. The mercury stood at ninety-four degrees, but a strong wind made the heat more endurable. Never have I encountered such dust, or rather gravel, in a train. Rev. Edward Spangler met me at the train at seven o'clock. At his house I washed away some of the dust, drank a glass of water and raspberry syrup. I had supped in the train on rye bread and peaches, and at eight o'clock was in the little chapel before a small but excellent audience.

During the first night in Rosario, January 21, a violent storm of wind and rain occurred, cooling the air thirty degrees and making it dangerous for me. On the following day two lectures were given, and on the next a meeting for organization, and an address in the evening. Miss Mary L. Swany was elected president, Mrs. Anna M. Chute, secretary, and Mrs. Martha A. L. Spangler, first vice-president.

One evening lecture was to the Argentines, all of whom are Spanish-speaking people, though of various and mixed descent, Indian, African and European. Before leaving Argentine, I appointed Miss Swany provisional president for the country, to hold office until such time as a delegated convention can elect one.

The government of Argentine is very unstable, its predominant principle being the "grab game"; for instance: a large public building was in progress. The high official who overlooked the work built himself a house, one of the largest and most expensive in Buenos Ayres, using not only the material purchased for the public edifice, and the workmen also, but choosing the best of both for his own house, saying to the men, "Don't fail to have mine all right, the other is of less consequence." Nothing was ever done about it.

Revolutions in which a few score of men take part, last twenty-four hours, and in some of which two or three persons lose their lives, are of so common occurrence that nobody pays more attention to them than to a storm, unless one occurs in the next street. One took place in Mendoza while I was in Rosario, and another was said to be ready to burst all the while I was in Buenos Ayres.

The Argentinians are very proud of their schools, and believe their system to be the best in the world. The prominent error is developing memory alone, instead of all the faculties of the mind. Some of their regulations might well be adopted at home. Private as well as public schools must have a fixed and ample number of cubic feet of air for every child and this applies to sleeping apartments in boarding and charity schools as well as school-rooms. Filtered water must also be supplied in ample quantity, according to the number of pupils. Some school buildings are very fine. Protestant teachers complain that their schools are not properly rated at examinations.

Living, except in the matter of rent, is exceedingly cheap. A good horse may be bought for $5, a fair one for $2.50, and $10 will buy a fine one. These animals are hardy, strong, quick and enduring and thrive on indifferent food. Indeed, they are much like the mustang of our southwestern plains and California. A few wealthy people drive magnificent, imported animals for which very high prices are paid.

Tobacco smoking is universal and excessive. In all railway carriages, on all "trams"—a better word than its equivalent, horse-cars—in all parlors men puff away with the greatest nonchalance. On the trams my refuge was a corner of the front seat, but then sometimes the driver smoked and I was still forced to draw nicotine into my lungs.

Everybody drinks—English, Germans, Americans, Italians, Argentinians in the order named. Even the M. E. Church has but few abstaining members, besides the American missionaries, preachers and teachers. I am glad to say that I believe every one of these holds to the principle and practice of this church at home.

There is great need of purity reform work. The ideas and usages in regard to family life are those of the south of Europe. A married man who should attempt to be faithful to his marriage vows would be the laughing-stock of his companions. Women who go out or travel alone are liable to unpleasant treatment and remarks. Very frequently in stepping upon the open trams a man stands and looks every woman over before he takes his seat. He does this in the most open way, impertinently, wickedly. Some, however, are perfectly gentlemanly, never stare, and make way politely for one to pass.

Physically, the people are generally flabby, sallow, and they fail very early. There is no stamina, no endurance. Universal, though generally moderate drinking, immoderate smoking, early, constant and life-long departures from God's rule of purity are sufficient causes for this condition. The intellect of the more highly educated class is frequently keen and brilliant in youth, giving, perhaps, great promise for mature years, but just at the point where Americans enter upon the middle-age plateau of best work, these men fall off, or fail entirely.

Few ladies of the past generation could read. Men thought that reading and writing only helped women to carry on intrigues. Middle-aged women have these accomplishments, young women more, and girls may now take a somewhat extended course of study. The common practice is, however, for their parents to marry them off at too early an age to allow of a really good education.

There is still much seclusion. Upper class women never go away from home alone. Some man of the family or a servant is always in attendance. Veils and mantillas have disappeared among the upper classes who dress in somewhat exaggerated Parisian style. A few middle class women wear the mantilla as a shawl. A small silk or lace scarf is folded about the head in place of a bonnet by a few old ladies. Young women of the lower class go bareheaded.

The only advantage of situation that Buenos Ayres has is the magnificent river, so broad that one cannot see the opposite bank. One soon learns that this coffee and milk, sea-like stream, seen against the blue sky, and shaded on the hither bank by fine trees, is as beautiful as the blue sea. The country around Buenos Ayres is perfectly flat and uninteresting to the foot hills of the Andes. There are public grounds, botanical and zoological combined, but they lack the beauty which care and tidiness give.

There is a comprehensive but badly managed system of teams. The horses are worse harnessed and worse driven than any I have seen. No pole is used, so if the horse falls, which often happens, he is entirely underneath the vehicle. Conductor, driver and passers-by push the car back and the horse scrambles up trembling with fright, sometimes badly cut and lamed in the knees.

The population is half a million and as the city is not closely built, it stretches up and down the river many miles, around a sharp outward bend of the shore.

Complete religious liberty prevails, but Protestantism is much despised. Were all the twenty thousand English people here suitable representatives of their faith, everything would take on a different aspect. But the same old story must be told of this place as of coast cities all around the world, with colonies from European countries; ungodly lives of other foreigners are the greatest hindrance to missionary work. Some godly young man, stalwart and respect compelling, ought to fit himself to speak in Spanish and Portuguese, as well as in English, upon White Cross work and kindred themes, and devote his life to introducing the work into these South American countries. Not only the religious and moral aspects of the question should be studied and presented, but those connected with race deterioration, early intellectual failure and death. Who will undertake this work? Perhaps the son of a missionary to whom Spanish or Portuguese is a second mother tongue. What wealthy man will support him in the work? It is vain to hope that either the worker or the money to sustain him will arise among these peoples at present.

Buenos Ayres. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.
AMERICAN—Chicago, Ill., The Temple, La Salle St.
ENGLISH—London, 57 Gordon Square, N. W.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. OFFICERS.
President—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large—LADY HENRY SOMERSET, 57 Gordon Square, W. C. London, Eng.
Secretary—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, O.
Assistant Secretary—ANNA A. GORDON, Evanston, Ill.
Treasurer—MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS, 26 Chomedy St., Montreal, Can.

The penalty of untruth is—untruth.—George Eliot.

A little book which we warmly commend to all Christian people is, "The Present Tenses of the Blessed Life," by F. B. Meyer, B. A., one of Mr. Moody's chief coadjutors. It is to be had of Fleming H. Revell, 148 Madison St., Chicago, Ill., and is one of the most helpful little books that we have ever read—having done us so much good that we feel desirous of having all of our comrades know its power.

EXTRACTS.

In a true and deep sense, all who believe have already entered upon the eternal state. They have stepped across the frontier line into that glorious state of being, in which the changes of this mortal existence cannot affect the permanence of their life or blessedness. "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life."

And it is important for us to remember that our position does not depend on our experience of it, or on our emotions. These, alas, fluctuate perpetually, now waxing to the full, and again waning to a crescent streak. But we are independent of them on two conditions, which are fundamental to all rest and peace.

In the first place, we must learn to live in our will; and in the second place, we must accustom ourselves to realize —not what we are to God, but what God is to us,— unchangeable, constant, and in the fullness of a present blessing which was never less than now in the past, and can never be less in the future. "He abideth faithful." Thus we shall find a quiet habitation in the present tenses of God's dealing with us—the present tenses of the blessed life."

Difficulties are God's way of leading us to rely on His almighty sufficiency. They are none of them insurmountable. They are the triumphs of His art. They are meant to reveal to us resources of which, had it not been for their compulsion, we might have lived in perpetual ignorance; just as hunger has led to many of the most wonderful inventions.

We must always imagine that we hear God saying as Alexander did when his soldiers complained of the overwhelming numbers of the enemy: "How many do you count me for?"

Fire transforms. That poker lying on your fender is hard and cold and black; but if you place it for a few minutes in the heart of the fire, it becomes soft, intensely hot, and glowing with the whiteness of incandescence. Take it out again, and all its old qualities will re-assert themselves; but whilst in the fire they cannot be manifested, because the iron is transformed into the likeness of the flame in which it is bathed. Thus it is with ourselves. By nature we, too, are hard and cold and black; and the tendency of our nature will always be in these directions. waiting to re-assert itself when left to its own devices,

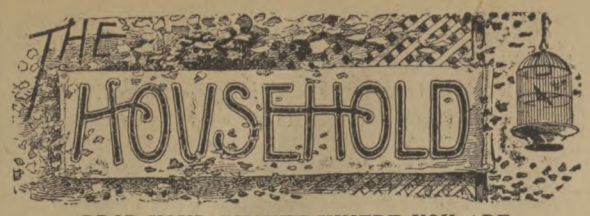
But if only we can forever dwell with the devouring fire, and dwell with the everlasting burnings of the love and light and life of God, a wonderful transformation will pass over us; and we shall be changed into the same image from glory for glory. No longer hard, we shall be moulded into any shape He chooses. No longer cold, we shall glow with love to God and man. No longer black, we shall be arrayed in the whiteness of a purity which is that of intensest heat. Too long have we shrunk from the burning, fiery furnace, which is not sorrow or toil or pain, but God. Let us get into God. Let us open our nature, that God, the Holy Spirit, may fill us. Then, we shall become like Himself; our grosser natures shall seem to ascend to Heaven in horses and chariots of flame. In God's fire, we, too, shall become fire.

***

Chaplain Cephas C. C. Bateman, of the United States Army, sends me from Fort Assinniboine, Montana, a pledge reading as follows:

I solemnly promise, God helping me, to totally abstain from the use of all alcoholic and intoxicating beverages of whatever name and kind, and by all honorable means to discourage their use, manufacture and sale. I also solemnly promise, God helping me, to totally abstain from playing any game of chance whatsoever when and where money or other properties are staked, won and lost, and to discourage the playing of such games by others. I take this double pledge freely, heartily, and without any mental reservation.

He asks me to sign the same, whereupon I become a member of the Loyal Temperance League of the United States Army, founded by the good chaplain, and he also asks me to wear the Loyal Temperance badge of the boys in blue, with the national colors attached. The pledge has been signed, the badge has been donned, a friendly letter sent to the chaplain and the soldiers under his care, and we think the exchange of courtesies will do good. We should be glad to have the chaplain write for THE UNION SIGNAL. He is the editor of a bright little paper entitled The High Private, devoted to everything good. We wish that every chaplain were of his way of thinking, for it would be of incalculable help to the tempted men on the far frontier.



DROP YOUR BUCKET WHERE YOU ARE.

BY S. W. FOSS.

"Oh, ship ahoy!" rang out the cry;
"Oh, give us water, or we die;"
A voice came o'er the waters far,
"Just drop your bucket where you are."
And then they dipped and drank their fill
Of water fresh from mead and hill;
And then they knew they sailed upon
The broad mouth of the Amazon.

O'er tossing wastes we sail and cry,
"Oh, give us water or we die!"
On high, relentless waves we roll
Through arid climates for the soul;
'Neath parching skies we pant for breath,
Smit with the thirst that drags to death,
And fail, while faint for fountains far,
To drop our buckets where we are.

Oh, ship ahoy! you're sailing on
The broad mouth of the Amazon,
Whose mighty current flows and sings
Of mountain streams and inland springs,
Of night-kissed morning's dewy balm,
Of heaven-dropt evening's twilight calm,
Of nature's peace in earth and star—
Just drop your bucket where you are!

Seek not for fresher founts afar,
Just drop your bucket where you are;
And while the ship right onward leaps
Uplift it from exhaustless deeps;
Dull not your life with dry despair
The stream of hope flows everywhere—
So, under every sky and star,
Just drop your bucket where you are.

—Yankee Blade

A STORY THAT REQUIRES NO NAME.

BY C. L. SPENCER.

"Very well, John, I'll try you again." Mr. Manton, the employer, was speaking; John, the employe, was listening. Mr. Manton leaned back in his office chair with a troubled countenance, John leaned against the desk with a discouraged one.

"I don't know as it's any use, sir; I've tried and failed, time and time again."

"Well, you are trusty, John, you know my ways. Here, give me your hand, and say no more about it."

"You're very kind, sir." The trembling hand of the young man met the firm grasp of the older one, and the compact was sealed.

It was a month after, at night—the night between Good Friday and Easter Sunday—that John locked the office door and stepped out into the dark. He followed his streets, poor fellow, with discrimination. He kept steadily, slowly, but unwaveringly, seeking those places best lighted, lingering nowhere, speaking to no one. Suddenly he paused—it was a wild night. The wind came in great gusts, the rain beat hard upon the walks, and the sky was rent with thunder. John wore a soft felt hat; he pulled it down over his forehead, thrust his hands into his pockets, and leaned against a lamp-post. The globe about the light was covered with moisture, the street was nearly deserted, a horse-car now and then clattered over the pavement; a policeman, walking his beat, came regularly into view, and as regularly disappeared. John looked at nothing but the sidewalk, saw nothing but his own life, and thought of nothing but himself.

"He was 'trusty,'" Mr. Manton said,—"trusty but could not trust himself. What was the best course to pursue? It was a nice world but he could never enjoy it—he had been discharged and taken back again three times already. He was only twenty-five, but he had wasted that length of time—no, he would not hesitate, he would not yield!"

He started swiftly down the block. There was a building on the corner which he must pass and then he would be safe. As he neared it his breath came quick and fast—he slackened his pace while endeavoring to hasten it—he had reached the place! Through the door came the sound of voices, his hand was on the latch—the odor of temptation stole out and enveloped him. Heaven be merciful! A car was going by; he screamed to it to stop, he sprang aboard and sat down, imploring the driver to enable him to catch the last ferry-boat.

The rain was coming down in torrents, the thunder crashed over the city. Alone by the dim light John wrote on a slip of paper, "Forgive me, I had to drink or die." He folded it carefully and addressed it to "Mr. Manton, Stark Building, Blank street, City,"—put it beneath the band of his water-soaked hat and left the car as it reached the ferry.

. . . . . .

It was Easter morning. The bells chimed out joyfully the resurrection hope. Flowers were in every church, even the oldest persons felt that life was beautiful and precious yet. None knew—none had heard that gurgle of water last night as if it had swallowed its prey. Down by the ferry, in the early dawn had been found floating an old felt hat, and in the band was a slip of paper which read, "Forgive me, I had to drink or die!"

Ithaca, N. Y.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

BY CAROLINE E. MERRICK.

I am busy now, going from sofa to easy chair, and interviewing a learned physician who is not a homeopathist. Listen to him when I denied being addicted to nerves.

"A person is said to be nervous when presenting a special susceptibility to pain, or exhibiting an undue mobility of the nervous system, as when one starts, or shakes, on the occasion of abrupt or intense sensorial impressions, thus showing an exalted emotional susceptibility. The heart itself under the influence of nervous stimulation, may in a moment change its customary order and rate of action, and in extreme cases, cease to beat. The whole mental processes, as well as the functions of organic life, may be seriously involved. Now in your case, madam"—

"Stop, doctor, I take in the fact," said I, "which is evident in your high sounding phrases, that nervous prostration is a killing complaint, and you are going to treat me for it."

"Perhaps so," said the doctor. "It often happens that an exaltation or diminution of activity in some one portion of the nervous system causes perverted action in another part, as when any unusual strain has been thrown upon you."

"For instance," said I, "when a lady friend came last Sunday and allowed me to carry upstairs her grip-sack with books in it"—

"Politeness should never require you to do such a thing," said the doctor, "but the strain may not be any personal exertion or overwork; deficient sleep, any sudden shock of joy or fear, especially terror, might prove fatal."

"I was much frightened last summer," said I, "by a stroke of lightning which destroyed an immense oak tree in front of the door. It was a worse panic than that which seizes one on seeing one's husband bringing three gentlemen to dinner, when there is only one good little porter house steak in the house."

"Allow me to say," continued the doctor, "nervousness characterizes females more than males. It sometimes comes on as a sequence of severe illness, some grave anxiety, some physical or moral shock, like the unexpected discovery of perfidy or disloyalty on the part of a friend. Then, too, nervous prostration is brought on by unremitting or monotonous duties, which keep the same paths of action from day to day."

"I was told," said I, "of a lawyer who came into his office the other day, and read upon his slate the statement that he would be back in half an hour; in a fit of absence of mind he took a seat, and waited for himself, and it was some time before he realized that he was in his own office, and that he was not one of his own clients."

"That," replied the doctor, "was no more than the reverend gentleman, who on going out one morning, gathered up an ordinary business coat and carried it around the whole day, thinking it was his overcoat, and being more surprised and shocked than anybody else when informed of his mistake. These examples are evidences and symptoms of nervous disorder. I never knew a man to hurt himself by mere bodily labor; but excessive mental toil is certainly capable of damaging the nervous tissues. Any calamity, misfortune, pecuniary loss, or accident is liable to bring on nervous prostration. What are the symptoms? Loss of sleeping power, incapacity and aversion to work, lassitude, languor, headache, an anxious and cross expression of countenance, heart disturbance, cramp, are indications of local nervous exhaustion."

"Doctor, how do you propose to extirminate this formidable enemy?"

"For the treatment of nervous diseases," said he, "we have at our disposal invaluable remedies, whose action is more or less special. There is strychnine, bromide of potassium, possessing the opposite properties of increasing and diminishing the reflex excitability of the nervous system, in addition to other beneficial modes of action. Then we have chloral and morphine, acting directly and indirectly as hypnotics, thus allowing the curative action of rest to come into play. For pain, we have opium, Indian hemp, subcutaneous injections of morphia, and the galvanic current. We have any number of drugs for influencing, relaxing, mitigating pain, reinforcing the nutrition of wasted muscles. Then there are nervine tonics, preparations of zinc, arsenic, iron, quinine, phosphorus, cod-liver oil, to say nothing of cold or tepid douches, and the massage treatment."

"Good gracious!" I exclaimed, "am I to swallow all these poisonous things?"

"There is no occasion for alarm, madam. I don't propose to prescribe all these things at once. The first thing I shall order is very important; it is a simple but nutritious diet. Eat plenty of ripe fruit, drink pure, distilled water, take plenty of gentle but regular exercise, and sleep as much as possible. You must be surrounded by agreeable society, have plenty of fresh air and excellent food, and with temperance, avoiding all excitement and mental exertion, I hope you will soon be well."

"But, doctor, suppose baby Laura falls down stairs, or the house takes fire?"

"You are to be kept oblivious of all such things. The medicine you need is perfect rest, for after all it is the most powerful therapeutic agent when you understand its nature, and the indications for its use. You rest your body in sleep, you rest your mind by looking on beautiful things, hearing good music, and thinking of nothing. Sleep is a preventive of disease, and the want of it, if carried too far, causes death. Sleep is balm to the careworn mind and over-wrought brain. In these days of emulation and worry, the waste of nerve force must be repaired by sleeping and cessation from all work. Now is the time to stop, lest you come to the door of the insane asylum. I repeat, absolute rest," said the doctor, striking his cane on the floor, "and no stimulants to excite rapid circulation. The brain recovers slowly and resents too early demands on it after any injury. The general health must be maintained at the highest possible standard, and you must not worry. You must be a philosopher."

"Doctor," said I, "I can do better than that; I can be a Christian. I can say, 'Yes, Lord,' to whatever God sends. That is the philosophy of Hannah Whitall Smith, and I have tested its efficacy."

"Yes, madam, I, too," said the doctor, "would recommend anything of a soothing, tranquilizing character. I shall call to-morrow; good-morning."

New Orleans, La.

THE GREAT MORAL ISSUE.

BY MARY T. LATHRAP.

[From Convention Address at Detroit.]

For years money has bought its will into the ballot box and legislation. It has opened the licensed saloon. The saloon has created a whisky serfdom by the debauching of the individual. This serfdom has been purchased and hurled in quantity into the ballot box, to control elections, and money has been king. But let the protest now in the country reach revolt, let the quantity change to individualism, the muttered curse to revolution, and where is the central grip of power to cope with it? In the civil war there was involved a great moral principle that swept like a breath from heaven over our people, and swayed even mean men to a nobler impulse. Where in this industrial contest as now arrayed, is the moral center? Where is the home of conscience in the fight between McKinleyism and the tariff reform? Is it in the nickel that divides the two? Where is the moral center of the battle between gold and silver, governmental or individual ownership of banks and railroads, or the control of wealth when it expresses its power in monopoly? There is a moral quality in all these questions, but as the present lines are drawn neither side would dare to uncover it lest it break the lines of their sham battle. So wealth that can afford a dress parade passes on with a smile on the lip. Gold is conservative, diplomatic, adhesive and imperial, and in the absence of a moral issue has the best of the fight. Agricultural industry is patriotic, virtuous as populations go, and American. City industry is at one end sober, skilled, self respecting and still American. At the other end it is vicious, drunken, idle and un American. These two extremes, however, are bound together by such law of organization as makes them one. Into this deepening struggle has come, in thirty years, 14,000,000 of foreigners and in the last two years more than 1,000,000 from across the waters, to say nothing of immigration from Mexico, Spanish America and Canada. What does labor in the contest? It meets, discusses, protests and divides, because agitation is not adhesive. Industry is American and foreign, shaded and white, patriotic and anarchist, intelligent and ignorant, and breaks like clay from iron. What is needed in the present stress of the battle? A great moral issue, deep enough to find the sounding where all souls unite, high enough to lift men from savagery to unselfishness, and a breath from the hills of God's morning, which shall scatter the fogs from before our vision, and usher in the days of justice and reform. To meet this gathering crisis we have politics without morals; parties without issues; a struggle without conscience. The need of the hour is moral conviction, an organization of forces on the basis of the ten commandments, and the golden rule; not to array industry against wealth, but to unite them both in a warfare on all that is wrong and dangerous to the whole country. Wanted, then, a moral issue. Where shall we find it? Four years ago the Republican party said in an appendix to its national platform: "The first concern of good government is the virtue and sobriety of the people and the purity of the home."

That statement is true, and is only another way of saying that in the nation's life the moral forces are imperial, and in our form of government these forces can only be conserved through the integrity of the individual citizen.

So long as boys are ruined and mothers weep; so long as homes are wrecked and the sob of unsheltered children finds the ear of God; so long as the Gospel lets in the light for the lost, and Christ is King, there will be a contest on the temperance question until victory. So long as this Christian nation sanctions the destruction of its sons for revenue, and sets on a legalized throne that "sum of all villainies," the saloon; so long as the "wicked are justified for reward" and cities are built with blood, there will be a prohibition issue, and one day the right will triumph.

Jackson, Mich.

The Union Signal AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President Board of Directors.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

W. C. T. U. COURSE OF STUDY.—JULY READINGS,

Bible.—Girls of the Bible. Mrs. J. H. McMinn.
Responsive.—True Patriotism. Mrs. J. C. Fernald.
Topical.—Timely Talks: No. 6, Songs of Home and Native Land; No. 7, The Silent Million: No. 34, Liquor's War on Labor; No. 36, The Coming Brotherhood; No. 37, Echoes from History. Glimpses of Fifty Years, pp. 201, 205, 451, 452. The Temperance Movement, pp. 218, 219.

For their Redeemer is mighty; He shall plead their cause with thee.—Prov. 23: 11.

A PROHIBITION QUIZ.

The following interview with General Neal Dow was had at his home, Portland, Me., March 30, by our senior editor at the request and for the information of Lady Henry Somerset, and we present it, as stenographed, to our readers as a valuable document in temperance history.

QUESTION.—General Dow, will you do me the kindness to tell the date and place of your birth and a little about the ancestry and early training that made you a man who cared for the bettering of humanity?

ANSWER.—I was born in Portland, in that house across the street—my father's house— on the 20th of March, 1804.

Q.—You were brought up in Portland?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Went to the public schools here?

A.—I went to the public schools and afterward to the Portland Academy; after that to the Friends' Academy in New Bedford, Massachusetts.

Q.—You were of a Quaker family?

A.—All of my ancestors so far as I know, maternal and paternal, were Friends; all farmers, well to do, and industrious, thrifty people, a sober, long-lived people.

Q.—Your father lived to be—?

A.—Ninety-five.

Q.—What was your mother's age?

A.—Seventy eight. My father, I think, would have lived to be a hundred years old but for his fall upon the ice.

Q.—Was he a temperance man?

A.—Yes, always.

Q.—Then you were not only born but bred to temperance?

A.—Yes.

Q.—How did it come about that yours were temperance people?

A.—The Friends have a series of what they call "Queries." They begin first at the Preparative meeting, which is a local meeting. One of these queries asks if Friends are careful to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors except for medicinal and mechanical purposes, and they are questioned in regard to this at all four of these meetings. It goes from the Preparative to the Monthly then to the Quarterly, and from the Quarterly to the Yearly Meeting, and if there is any member of the society who is known to use or is suspected of using intoxicating liquors he is visited by a committee whose duty it is to look out for those things. So you see all the Friends are trained from their childhood in that way.

Q.—When you left school you went into business with your father?

A.—Yes, into the tanning business.

Q.—He had a large tanning establishment?

A.—Yes.

Q.—On one of my visits here, General Dow, I think in this room or the library, you told me of a lady who came to you, who had known great sorrow through her husband's drinking. You got him out of the saloon. Will you be kind enough to give that recital?

A.—I received a note from a lady whom I knew very well whose husband was a periodical drunkard. He held an important public office here. He had been threatened with the loss of his office. He had a large family of children dependent upon his salary, and this note informed me that he was on one of his periodical drunks. The lady wanted to see me, and I went to her house. She told me that he visited one particular grog-shop, and that if that rumseller would not sell him any liquor she could get him home and get him sober so as to present him at the office next day. I went to this rumseller and inquired if Mr. —— was there. He said he was not. I heard voices in the back room and upon opening the door saw there Mr. ——. I took him by the arm and pulled him out. I said to the rumseller, "Here is this man who has a public office, and his family is dependent upon his salary. He has been threatened with removal if he does not improve his habits. His wife is in great distress for fear he will be removed. She says if you will not sell him any liquor she can get him home and get him sober. I beg of you not to let him have any more liquor." "But," said the saloon-keeper, "he is a friend of mine. I don't want to offend him by not selling him liquor." "Why," I said, "don't you see how it is? It would be a very great misfortune, a very great disaster to his family to lose his office. If you won't sell him any liquor we can get him home and get him sober." He said, "It is my business to sell liquor. I have a license to sell liquor. I sell liquor to everybody who wants it and who has the money to pay for it. I support my family by selling liquor, and I don't want any of your advice, either. When I want your advice I will let you know. Until then you can keep it to yourself." I said, "It is your business to sell liquor, is it? You have a license to sell liquor, you say. You support your family by destroying other people's families, do you? Heaven helping me," I said, "I will see if we cannot change all that."

Q.—Let me ask you if it is not true that he pointed to his license.

A.—He said, "There is my license," pointing his hand toward where it hung upon the wall.

Q.—Did you take the man out of a saloon, or leave him there?

A.—I took him out.

Q.—What became of that man?

A.—He became a sober man afterwards. The Maine law came out and shut up the grog-shops.

Q.—Do you know the fate of that saloon-keeper?

A.—He died many years ago.

Q.—Did he ever leave off selling?

A.—No. He died, I think, before the Maine law came. The Maine law did not come for ten years after that.

Q.—Am I correct in thinking and representing that while you were a thorough temperance man always, this scene gave what we call an "arrest of thought" to your mind that you would come out and work henceforth against the licensing of liquor shops?

A.—In my mind the first thing to be done was to change public opinion. The law is supposed to represent the public opinion upon any subject of which the law treats, and the license law was supposed to represent public opinion in relation to the traffic in liquors. In order to procure prohibition it was necessary to change public opinion upon that subject.

Q.—Did this scene that you have described give you that arrest of thought which made you determined that you would set about changing public opinion in relation to the liquor traffic?

A.—Yes. Every summer and winter I devoted myself to the subject a good deal. I drove in my own carriage and always had two men with me, sometimes three, appointing a series of meetings in all parts of the state, naming the day and the hour when we should be in certain localities, calling upon the friends of temperance in these several localities to arrange for the meetings. In winter and in summer it was the same; taking two and sometimes three, temperance men, who were good speakers, and so we went through the country. All the expenses of this missionary work I paid myself.

Q.—May I ask you, General Dow, if you had developed a reputation (we all know of your ability) as a speaker previous to this time in any other field?

A.—I used to go to political meetings and make political speeches.

Q.—So you had practice and were known in the state as a man who was a good speaker?

A.—Leave out that word "good." I was known in the state as one who was practiced in public speaking.

Q.—That was quite a point in your favor in going out as a reformer.

A.—Yes. Before it got as far advanced as that I used always to be attending temperance meetings in different parts of the state and making speeches.

Q.—You were known then as a speaker, not only on political, but temperance subjects when you started out as a temperance reformer?

A.—Yes, I was known through the state in that way.

Q.—May I ask what resources you found in the printed page in those days? The temperance literature of that time must have been limited.

A.—We found an immense advantage in it. We used to carry tracts in great quantities to distribute at the meetings which we held, and as we traveled to our meetings we passed school-houses and took them in and distributed them among the children to carry home, and oftentimes passing the children in the road when they were out at recess, or after they had been dismissed we would throw the tracts out by the handsful for them to carry home; and we threw them out to people we met on the road.

Q.—What society issued those leaflets?

A.—We had them from the American Tract Society.

Q.—But at this early day there must have been very little literature on the legal side of the question.

A.—That is true, but these leaflets and tracts were so written as to show the relation of the liquor traffic to the general good. We wrote some tracts and printed them ourselves on the legal aspects of the case. The drift of our speeches at those meetings to which I have referred, was to show that the liquor traffic was absolutely inconsistent with the general good; that it was at war with every public and private interest, that it was the direct and inevitable cause of the pauperism, suffering and crime of the country; that no good came from it and that it put the people down and kept them down. We kept harping on that.

Q.—That was a good tune to harp on!

A.—We tried to show the people that the liquor traffic was in bitter hostility to every interest of Nation, State and people.

Q.—How long did you harp on this string before you began to hear a twanging echo from the people?

A.—We saw the fruits of our work constantly wherever we went, but it was ten years after that before we got the Maine law. Our meetings were very large everywhere. In the summer the people would come from all the surrounding towns. They didn't have horses in the country so much then as they have now. Farm work was done by oxen, so they would come in farm carts and hay carts, carrying thirty or forty people in them, men, women and children, especially women and children. They would have the carts fixed up with evergreens, and they came from all the country round.

Q.—What was the attitude of the clergy towards this movement?

A.—Generally it was very favorable towards our work. Many of our warmest friends were some of the Episcopal clergymen. The Rev. Mr. Pratt was a very warm friend of ours. I am sorry to say that there has been a great change in this respect in the Episcopal clergymen generally.

Q.—May I ask to what you attribute this change?

("Witness declined to answer.")

GEN. DOW.—I wrote to Rev. Joseph Cook some time ago, saying we never could win until the attitude of the church towards this movement was changed. I don't know as the time has come to say this now. It would not be good policy to do it prematurely. I would like to have you tell me if you think the time has come to hold the church face to face with its responsibility?

Q.—Certainly, and it is a matter of interest to me to know why you think clergymen have degenerated. I am a christian evolutionist and think that the race is booming ahead.

A.—I do not care to say anything on that matter. We have one Episcopal clergyman here who is thoroughly our friend—the Rev. Dr. Dalton.

Q.—When you got around to make your assault on the legislature did you begin by petitions?

A.—Yes, we began that way.

Q.—How long did you petition before you got the law?

A.—Not more than three or four years. We used to put it squarely to the farmers and workingmen everywhere, that we never could overthrow the liquor traffic except at the ballot-box. This whole matter was one of public policy, and one that was to be accomplished only by votes. We must have votes in the legislature. We must have votes to put the right men in the legislative halls. We showed to the people that all these political squabbles that were raging every year in Maine at that time just as they are now, were of no importance to the people, directly or indirectly. They were only important to the office-seekers and office-holders, doing the people no good in any way, while the suppression of the liquor traffic was of extreme importance to the entire body of the people. I used to say to the farmers, "Now, look here; when you are breaking up your land in the spring, you yoke up your oxen and make them pull. When the job is done you turn the oxen out to grass. That is the way the politicians work with you. In election time the politicians make you pull under the lash. When you are done voting they take the offices and turn you out to grass as you do your oxen."

I had a meeting in the town of Hiram, once, and while I was speaking I noticed three ladies come in, an elder and two younger ones. During the meeting they went out. I was a little disturbed at that, fearing that we had said something that had hurt them in some way. But they were present at the meeting in the evening. When it was over one of them came up and said to me, "We went out of the meeting this afternoon; we keep tavern, and we have been selling liquor. I went to see my husband, and to say to him, 'Husband, the liquor must go out of this house or I will go out.'" Their house became a temperance hotel after that.

Q.—That was pretty good. It wasn't anything that had hurt her. It had hit her instead.

A.—I became very well acquainted with those people afterwards, and in making our missionary excursions about the country we frequently stopped at that house.

They were very nice, respectable people. There were very respectable people selling rum in those days, members of churches, many of them. But all that is ended. Nothing tends to make a business despicable like the consensus of public disapproval expressed in law.

Q.—Only three or four years of petitioning and then you got the law! That is encouraging. Was it from a Democratic legislature?

A.—Yes.

Q.—In the year 1851?

A.—Yes.

Q.—What month?

A.—It was in the House the last day of the session, on Saturday, the 31st of May, 1851. It passed through all its stages in that one day. There was a Democratic legislature, a Democratic governor, Democratic president of the Senate and Democratic speaker of the House. It was passed by a vote of eighty-six to forty in the House, and eighteen to ten in the Senate.

Q.—Who opposed it?

A.—Some of the Democrats and some of the Whigs opposed it. There were rumsellers in there with them. During all the passage of the bill through the Senate I looked after it myself. It had to pass back and forth several times from the House to the Senate. I carried it myself, resolved that it should not be stolen by any body. I carried it to the engrossing clerks. When it was passed through the House I sat by the speaker's side.

Q.—You sat and watched it as a mother would watch her teething child? It was indeed getting teeth!

A.—Yes.

Q.—Then when they had had it a year or two the people got tired of this law and went back. That has always amazed me.

A.—It was four years afterwards, and was brought about by an amalgamation of the rum Whigs and rum Democrats. At the very next annual election the rum party was defeated by an overwhelming majority, and the law re-enacted by a Republican legislature.

Q.—That was in 1857?

A.—The legislature that was elected in the fall of 1857 re-enacted it in 1858.

Q.—And the law has been on the statute books ever since?

A.—On the statute book ever since and has been improving ever since in its methods and penalties.

Q.—Getting more teeth into the machinery?

A.—Yes. We found difficulty in getting teeth into it. The legislature is very shy about putting in teeth as we want them. The whole movement was a very extraordinary thing, and the hand of Providence was in it, from first to last.

Q.—Were you a member of the legislature when the law was enacted?

A.—No, I was mayor of Portland. I went down to the legislature while I was mayor of Portland with that bill in my pocket, and it was passed precisely as I had written it. That was Thursday, in May, 1851. I had a hearing in the Representatives' hall on this bill. There was a special committee appointed to attend to it. That committee was made up of persons whom I indicated. I went to the speaker and said: "I want a special committee on this bill. I want such and such men in it." So we had a picked committee of temperance men. The Representatives' hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. I explained the bill to the committee, and after I was done—I was standing by the speaker's chair—the committee rose, and Noah Smith, of Calais, the chairman, a Whig and a very earnest temperance man, said: "I propose that we report this bill precisely as it stands." They all said, "Yes." The chairman said to me that unless the bill could be printed that night and on the desks of the members the next morning, it could not pass that session, so I said I would see to that. The state printer was the biggest rumseller in Maine, but the foreman of his office was a temperance man, whom I happened to know personally. It was late in the afternoon, but I went down to his office and told him the whole story. He said he would do it. The copies were upon the desks of the members the next morning.

Q.—That is one of the things that has made you succeed. You have never been an everlasting length of time in getting about what you had determined to do.

A.—They tried to make amendments to the bill, but none were suffered. It was adopted by the legislature precisely as I had written it.

Q.—Shall we go on to the time when the people, having had the law from 1857 to 1884, decided that the time to put this in the constitution had arrived and James G. Blaine didn't vote?

A.—That was the constitutional amendment. After having had the law from 1851 to 1884, with an interval of two years, the people put it into the constitution by a majority of 47,075.

Q.—Isn't that the largest that they have ever given for a constitutional change?

A.—Yes, and the affirmative vote was three times larger than the negative. The result of prohibition has been to make Maine one of the most prosperous states in the Union, while at the time of the enactment of the Maine law it was undoubtedly the poorest.

Q.—For what reason do you think it was the poorest?

A.—Excessive use of strong drink here. The people of Maine at that time consumed the entire value of all their property of every kind in drink, in every period of less than twenty years.

Q.—It went down their miserable throats?

A.—Precisely. We had many distilleries in Maine, seven of which were in Portland. Now there is no distillery in Maine and has not been for many years. We had two breweries in Portland, but they were suppressed long ago. Our share of the national drink bill would be now in proportion to population about seventeen million dollars, and the indirect cost would be about twelve million dollars additional, making twenty-nine million dollars in all. But one million and a half would more than pay for all the liquor now brought into Maine and sold in violation of law.

Q.—That is, it would be seventeen millions if Maine now were not under the prohibitory law?

A.—Yes. But one million and a half will more than pay for the cost of liquor in Maine annually, and this great saving is the reason that the people of Maine are so prosperous. Mr. Blaine, during the Garfield campaign, at a great meeting at City Hall, Portland, said that Maine was the most prosperous state of the Union. I don't put it as strong as that. I simply say that it is one of the most prosperous.

Q.—General Dow, the people down in Kentucky who advocate the liquor traffic say, "We have about the same population that you have in Maine, and we have not as many people in jail in proportion." What reply would you make to that very sapient observation?

A.—They let their people who ought to be in jail, run! We put them in. They never think of putting people in jail for selling liquor. They let them shoot people and lynch people and don't put them in jail for it. I mean, this is true in many cases.

Q.—Lady Henry Somerset has a droll expression. She says: "Now I am going to pick your brains" on such and such a subject. As I have "picked your brains" to my satisfaction, suppose you say whatever you wish to say to make this a complete interview. Give your opinion of the W. C. T. U. by way of variety. Do you not think that the W. C. T. U. in this state and country has been as active and able a factor as any in the last years?

A.—None more so. We could not get along without the women's movement now. I believe I told you once in a public meeting that when the W. C. T. U. first began I thought nothing would come of it, because I thought the labor would be so great, and the annoyances so numerous they would soon get sick of it and give it up. That was the impression I had at first. I found out I was mistaken. If the temperance societies of this country were half as earnest, active and efficient as the women are, we should have won universal prohibition long ago.

Q.—What do you think of the relation of the W. C. T. U. to the political movements in this country?

A.—It has been very influential. You see the politicians all over the country are afraid of you. They are not afraid of us Good Templars, they do not care for us Sons of Temperance. Sometimes on the platform I allude to this. The politicians are very much afraid of the W. C. T. U. They don't care for the others though they are excellent organizations, but as I often say we are nice people and honest friends of temperance. We don't drink, we make temperance speeches, sing temperance songs and pass temperance resolutions, but we do not work as you women do; we do not carry the war into Carthage. You hear a good deal said about the failure of prohibition in Maine. There is not a word of truth in that. In more than three-fourths of our territory, containing more than three-fourths of our population, the liquor traffic is practically unknown. An entire generation has grown up there, never having seen a grog-shop nor the effects of one. Liquor is sold more or less on the sly and in very small quantities in some of our cities and large towns. This is due entirely to the fact that our law contains some imperfections which will be corrected by and by, and to another fact that many of our officials are false to their duty and treacherously nullify the law.

Q.—You say something about imperfections yet in the Maine law and about amendments to it. Will you tell us what in your opinion these should be?

A.—Liquors are sold in violation of law for profit and not for fun. It will be seen then at a glance that a law suppressing the traffic must be so constructed as to take all the profit out of the business, and to make the violation of the law very uncomfortable to those who persist in it. This is to be done only by fines of such magnitude as to take all the money out of it, and of terms of imprisonment so protracted to as make conviction a very serious matter to every offender. All discretion as to the administration of the law should be taken from the courts so that the penalties may be certainly inflicted upon offenders for every offense, and provision should be made imperatively, so that trial, conviction and sentence should be prompt and speedy—not protracted as is too often the case at present.

Trust in God, trust in humanity, trust in yourself. These are the three sides of the triangle of enduring success. Obstinacy is selfishness. Firmness is heroism.

***

On the morning of the W. C. T. U. convention in Michigan, when the L. T. L. marched in the line of procession, some of us heard a little fellow, who was holding aloft a banner with the old device, "Save the boys," muttering to his square-shouldered comrade, "Save the girls, more like; they need it worse'n we do." Perhaps the admonition should be laid to heart.

***

No influence is at present so pervasive as that of printer's ink! As the grass on the hillside binds together the particles of earth and makes a unit of the summer's pageantry, so the press of these, our times, binds us into one great people, welds individuals in the weapon of party power, molds the members of the same denomination into one plan and purpose, and gives to every guild the point around which to rally.—Lady Henry Somerset.

***

The kettle already begins to boil. The leading minister of a progressive church was recently informed in the presence of a large number of influential laymen by one of the richest thereof, who had been elected chairman of a certain political convention, "We have heard of you, and we want none of your kind in any of our pulpits, neither will we have them. This prohibition movement is the most dangerous thing in the land to-day." That good brother will find the Prohibition party dangerous, perhaps, to his political aspirations and successes, before we get through.

***

In the time of the war General Sherman spoke thus concerning his great comrade: "Grant does not care where the enemy is. He only knows where he intends to be." Gladstone is said to be of the same way of thinking. He never reads the abuse that is printed about him, indeed, never looks into any of the papers of the opposite party, but draws up his own plan of campaign, and goes forward along the lines he has himself laid down. We think this is the correct way of doing, and are inclined to discount the English statesman only when we see him in our mind's eye ambling slowly down from Hawarden to the House of Commons loaded with years and honors, for the express purpose of voting against the admission of women to the Parliament which has the right to determine the laws on which their life or death depend.

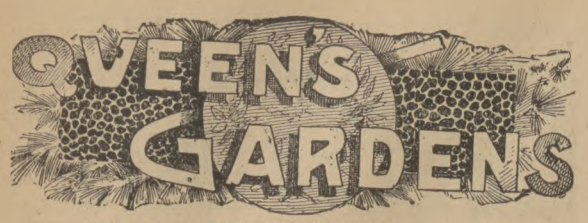
***

"After all it is the point of view from which we look that lends character to the object," said Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson in a recent talk to King's Daughters and white-ribboners in the Temple. She related the anecdote of John Ruskin's painting of a war ship to illustrate the point. "'But you have left out the port-holes,' said Ruskin's friend, after admiring the work of art. 'Oh, I painted it from Edgecombe Hill and no port-holes were visible from there,' quickly responded the great painter. So with the W. C. T. U., in the opinion of many she is a white-sailed craft, fair to view, but in reality she is a mighty war ship, loaded with 'big guns.' And in my opinion," continued Mrs. Dickinson, with a twinkle in her eye, "she is on an Arctic expedition—bound for the polls!"

***

A witty white-ribboner of New York state recently made a collection speech that had the merit of originality. She told of an enterprising frog that found itself by accident inside of a farmer's milk can, but resolving on life at any cost, it paddled so perpetually, that by the time the farmer reached town and took off the cover of his can, behold, there was the green jacket serenely seated on a pat of butter that it had churned by its own unaided efforts. The speaker said those in the presence of perils seen and unseen,—reformers, for instance,—save their lives and their cause by the perpetual motion of purpose turned into performance. She then asked them if they did not think that frogs and folks of so much heroism ought to be helped out financially. Then she rallied her forces anew, and told of a mule to which an electrician applied a shock from an electric battery that he carried in his pocket. Off went the pathetic quadruped, the colored boy to whom he belonged making tracks in pursuit as rapidly as possible, but, as need hardly be said, without overtaking the animal. Whereupon the diminutive owner chased back to the wicked electrician, saying, "Mister, put some of dat runnin' juice out of dat box onto me so I kin ketch dat mule." Money is the "runnin' juice" of great reforms.

ON DUTY.



COMMENCEMENT.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

"Sweet girl-graduates," come gather around me one and all for a quiet little talk.

What a lovely, laughing, bright-eyed group of girls you are! Dainty dresses creamy white, scented laces, fluttering fans, masses of hot-house roses, delicate ribbons, and girlish tendrils of sunny hair clustering around fair, open foreheads on which is written not a single care! What earnest, loving eyes,—blue, brown, black and gray; what tender, rose-leaf lips, unsullied by words impure! What faint, sweet flushes on fair faces, and what pretty, girlish hands I see!

My heart grows warm and warmer with love for you, dear graduates. Truly, it is a sight "good for sore eyes"! But come, enchanting though the picture is, we must not linger.

"Commencement" is an inspiring word! What does it mean? What is its signification? Why do we not say "Finishing" instead when a girl's school-days are over?

Commencement! Ah! it is commencement in very truth. Commencement of real life, of acting, taking part in the business of the world, commencement of new hopes, new usefulness, new experiences.

The school years have been quiet, sheltered, uneventful. The happy routine has ended in—Commencement. Life looks different to the "sweet girl-graduate" now. Her future is a deeper, sweeter mystery than ever it was before. What lies in waiting for her upon the road her young feet must travel? Perhaps a career. More likely than not, a career—a profession, a calling, a chosen avocation. Perhaps a quiet home, a manly heart on which to lean and sweet faced little ones to call her "mother." Perhaps a life of self sacrifice and devotion to some invalid friend. Perhaps an existence of patient, hopeless suffering shall be hers. Perhaps a life of affluence and ease with leisure and means to carry out her slightest impulse. Perhaps, even, her Father shall have early called her to surrender to Him her young life and "come up higher."

The future is as unknown to us as the inhabitants of those other worlds which appear to us to be but specks of brightness. It is useless to conjecture, then, what it will bring us. Let us take up the burden that is ours now, to day. Let us face the life of the present and live each day as though it were our last.

I am girl enough myself to know what dreams of after years arise in the heart, what hopes and plans and expectations for the dim, mysterious beyond are ever present with her. And it is right that it is so. She who cares nothing for the future loses the zest of life. Anticipation is often far sweeter than realization. What a spur to energy and increased effort is the thought of what may be!

"The beautiful, golden sometime" of which we sing, has irresistible attractions for us all. But what I would say is, dear girls, while you are dreaming your delicious day-dreams, and building your airy castles hung with rare tapestries woven of your sweet thoughts and fancies, never neglect the duties and responsibilities which to-day brings. Can you not see them standing mute and patient—the days? Each with its gift to you of golden opportunities and blessed privileges, waiting in silent patience and meekness your acceptance or rejection? Oh, they are precious—these days—too precious far for mere idle dreaming, wishing, hoping and longing.

I wonder what you have done during your school-days beside acquiring knowledge. Have you given kindly smiles as well as correct explanations of algebraic problems? Have you studied to do a kind act every day as you have studied and pored over your Latin grammar? Has the happy influence of a heart that loves humanity been with you in the class-room, in the halls, on the campus? There are so many beautiful opportunities for doing good at school! No better place! Lately it has been my privilege to attend the commencement exercises of various colleges and academies. June seems the very month for these bright scenes. Nature seems to rejoice with the young people, and brings her sweetest flowers to honor the occasion. The birds sing more rapturously, vying with the fresh young voices that carol the song of welcome. The skies are bluer, the clouds whiter, the whole earth more radiantly green at this lovely time. Simply to live is joy enough in June time! How much more joyful, then, to stand with honor as a graduate, fair and erect in youth's sweet prime, surrounded by loving hearts and dear, familiar faces!

At the college commencement which I attended yesterday I noticed that some of the young men who stepped forward to receive their well-earned medals and prizes were greeted with a hearty, resounding cheer and prolonged applause by their fellow-students. As the happy good will shone on those young faces, and as the applause grew more and more deafening to unaccustomed ears, I knew that the object of such a greeting had won far more than his diploma—the hearts of his companions. Few of these favored ones were handsome of form or feature, but in their plain, honest faces was reflected such a sympathetic fellowship, that it was no wonder they were greeted so uproariously. I noticed the same thing, only, of course, modified, in the girl's academy near this college. A pleasant flutter of fans, and smiling, attentive faces, proclaimed the universal favorites. A sort of girlish pride lit up those sweet, young faces, as the object of their love and admiration, often a plain-featured, plainly-dressed girl stood before them.

If I must envy any one let it be that boy whose friends receive him with a shout of hearty welcome, that girl whose school-mates love her despite her poverty and plainness!

How many of you, dear graduates, were greeted thus? How many of you were thrilled at heart looking into the loving faces of that crowd of girls who smile upon you like the glad sunshine of the early morning? Count yourselves rich, indeed, if it is you whom I have described! You have won more—inestimably more—than your diploma. You can never be poor with such friends and such loyal love as they lay at your feet.

Now the question is, What are you going to do with your life? To most of you the summer following graduation is a happy one replete with gayety and pleasure. To some of you it is perhaps as happy but filled with hard work and prosy, commonplace things. Perhaps you bravely set yourself to work in some country school to defray the expenses of your education. Possibly you have run in debt for your knowledge and are eager to pay it off and be square with the world. If so, you have begun the new life well indeed.

Absolute honesty is the best basis on which to build your fortunes. Such a girl will invariably command respect by her straightforward, honorable course.

But when autumn comes, and thousands of young women go to work again, how about you? Are you also to take your place in the ranks of bread-winners?

Perhaps your father is wealthy. If so, that need not deter you from seeking some profession according to your taste. One who has "great expectations" has also an almost unlimited power for doing good. With a thorough knowledge of some trade or profession, this power for doing good may be increased an hundred-fold. If you train yourself to be a physician, a nurse, or a housekeeper, opportunities will never be wanting by which you can do good. You will be of wonderful service to yourself and to your friends, even though you may never earn a dollar. If you had a dear, loved friend sick unto death, would you not rather your experienced hand and loving heart should minister than a stranger's? You may—yes, you doubtless will, sometime be able to save a human life by prompt, intelligent action. Oh, the possibilities of the rich and prosperous for doing good are so many and so beautiful!

But you are not all rich. To you whose fathers are what is called "well-off," the need is imperative. Learn some profession or art by which, if necessary, you can earn your own living. You will feel a sense of security in the knowledge of possessing some useful trade which may, in this country of sudden business reverses, stand you in good stead. Always be ready for emergencies. Did you never see a helpless young thing, always dependent upon her father or her brothers, even to the purchasing of a railway ticket or the checking of a trunk, in some great need, helpless still and powerless to lift her hand to labor for herself or for those she holds most dear? What a pitiful sight is such a girl. Self-reliance, independence, ability to care for herself at least, would be a priceless boon to her at such a time.

But you are not all "well-off." Poverty has always hung around your home, and seems to have come to stay forever. Discouraged, weary, heart-sick of life and life's failures, the father has, perhaps, lain down to rest, and you, my brave young girl, are the sole reliance of your family. What a privilege to care for those you love! What a joy to help the mother who all your life has cared for you with all a mother's tenderness, sweeter and dearer and nobler than which there is nothing in this world, unless, indeed, it be a daughter's devotion. Then it is, dear girls, that a useful trade or profession is your only salvation, your best friend, your guardian from evil and temptation. To such among you, with all my heart and soul I cry, "God bless you!"

My love goes out to such. You may not be brilliant, clever, beautiful or influential, but you will be good, unselfish, faithful, earnest; all that is best in you developed into perfect blossom by your patient, consecrated, hard-working life!

But to return to our subject—commencement! What a picture the word calls up before us! Can you not see it all again,—the dainty gowns, the roses, the lights and music, the crowd of friends that thronged about you, offering congratulations and kisses, promising eternal friendship after the manner of impulsive girlhood?

Thus let us leave the bright picture which at this season of the year is being duplicated in thousands of cities, towns and villages, and with a silent blessing on the dear old Alma Mater turn with resolute and hopeful courage to meet the inevitable battles of life.

Haymaker, Pa.

INDIANA.

HOOSIER DOINGS.

"Then forward all, hurrah,
We've joined the glorious fray,
We'll hoist our flag, and on to victory,
For right shall win the way."

Six hundred and twenty-five delegates representing 12,000 votes met in convention at the English Opera House, Indianapolis, May 25 and 26, and nominated Rev. Aaron Worth, of Jay county, for governor. Besides the delegates and their alternates, the opera house was filled to overflowing with visitors from all parts of the state to be present at this our largest and most enthusiastic state prohibition convention. Mrs. Gougar, Mrs. R. T. Brown, Mary E. Balch and Mary Hadley were made advisory members of the state central committee. Prof. Dickie, Sam Small, M. J. Fanning and J. S. Hughes were our visitors from abroad.

Indiana will make a gallant fight for '92. How does "St. John and Ritter" sound for our rallying cry? The platform, clear, ringing and true, was adopted with cheers. Our state president, Mrs. J. R. Nichols, Mrs. R. T. Brown, and other white ribbon women occupied seats on the stage. Dr. H. J. Hall and M. E. Shiel were re-elected chairman and secretary of the state central committee. Indiana Prohibitionists have so much "state pride," home devotedness rather, that they will stand for "God, Home and Country" though the heavens fall, and when the roll is called next November to the name "Who's yer?" 25,000 responses will open the eyes of would-be absorbers and real croakers.

"Wish I could vote in that crowd, don't you,
Who will count a million votes in '92?"

On the 14th of June our Alice R. Palmer starts for South Africa as W. C. T. U. missionary. We knew sooner or later "our Alice" would spread her wings, but we had not dreamed of such an extended flight. Still, knowing that her mother freely gives her child, whose life is fully consecrated to the Master for this work, we cannot withhold our consent. So, God bless thee, go, and He who leads thee forth will ever sustain thee. The Franklin union gave a reception to Miss Palmer, June 9th. Visitors from all parts of the state availed themselves of this opportunity to say farewell.

Since May 5th Mrs. Julia Trish has been at work in the mining sections of Indiana following up Miss Whistler's work. At Fontanet Mrs. Trish held ten meetings and had sixty three signatures to the pledge. She will return to this point about July 4th. For the West Side union of Terre Haute, Mother Trish held eleven meetings. Two meetings for the Total Abstinence society, one service at the poor farm and the jail. She made fifteen visits to the sick and one visit to the Old Ladies' Home. In the meetings for the union, eight new members were secured, also thirty-five signatures to the pledge. Mrs. Trish goes next to Clay county where she will visit Staunton, Newburg and Oxford.

Meridian union, of Indianapolis, gives a concise report of its doings through its press reporter, Mrs. O. L. Neisler: "The last two years have witnessed renewed life and activity in this body. Favored with a vigorous leadership, it has brought to a happy fruition some efforts long pending, and ventured on new lines of work with encouraging results. The introduction of a police matron at the station house is cause of special thanksgiving. Our union, through its untiring committee, procured the consent of the city council to try the experiment for a term of four months, the union assuming all the expenses connected therewith, and appointing the matron. The results were so satisfactory that public opinion added its weight to the petitions of the W. C. T. U., and the office of police matron was created by the 'Board of Public Safety.' Mrs. Annie Buchanan, formerly connected with the Indiana Female Reformatory, was soon installed as matron, her salary being paid by the city. Pleasant accommodations were provided for her by some changes in the station house, our union donating the furnishings of her room. The work of Mrs. Buchanan has given the greatest satisfaction to those coming under her care, to the police force associated with her, and to the benevolent public at large. Under diligent supervisors three Demorest medal contests were held in various parts of the city. Subsequently our zealous contest committee were encouraged 'to carry the war into Africa,' and their advances were very cordially met by the colored people. The first was so successful that five others, principally among colored pupils of the high school, followed in rapid succession. The competitors acquitted themselves admirably, and won golden opinions from their audiences. It is believed that this form of seed-sowing will produce good results.

"A year since two companies of L. T. L's were formed under the auspices of our union. They hold semi-monthly meetings and have a membership of one hundred and twenty-five. They are especially favored in the scientific temperance instruction given by their tutor, Dr. Anna Bryson, of this city. We supply the children with one hundred copies of The Young Crusader. A committee of young girls from their number furnish bouquets during the season to the inmates of the city hospital. A few of our ladies make frequent visits to the county jail, distributing religious papers and holding services with the prisoners. This work promises great results. Our union has a membership of sixty-five. Its semi-monthly meetings are held at the homes of its members, and are well attended. We desire them to be a source of interest and profit to all. Printed slips bearing the program for the year are distributed among members and friends. At the first meeting of the month the police matron reads her report. At the second meeting a paper on some timely topic is furnished by one of our members. These are varied by welcome visits and talks from some state superintendents or officers, also by recitations from members of the L. T. L. So we strive in the use of all legitimate means to further the cause, and promote in the minds of young and old a love for whatsoever things are 'pure' and 'of good report.'"

It was my pleasure to sit in a business meeting of the Terre Haute west side union a few weeks ago. I trust the secretary of that union will keep a strict account of their doings. Work, good deeds, money earned by hard work and freely spent, are among the items of those reports. God bless these active toilers and give them great increase.

Mrs. Clara Colby, editor of the Woman's Tribune, spoke in the Congregational church, Terre Haute, this spring, under the auspices of the Terre Haute unions. The Frances Willard union, at their regular meeting May 1, began to raise a fund of one hundred dollars to place a memorial tablet in Willard Hall, the Temple, in honor of Mary E. Balch, our faithful friend and co-worker.

Vigo county held her semi-annual convention at Riley, May 13 and 14. The action of the executive committee, appointing Mrs. R. L. Russel county president, vice Mrs. E. A. Gillette resigned, was confirmed by the convention, and Mrs. S. Tremaine was selected to fill the position of county corresponding secretary, the place vacated by Mrs. Russel. Clay county held its mid-year meeting at Cory, May 31 and June 1. The schools of methods have closed and a résumé of the work done will form a part of my next letter. Mary Hadley, our farm superintendent, writes encouraging reports of the farm, and when the rain ceases the foundation of our Industrial Home will be laid. Miss Jane Weeden is untiring in her efforts to help raise the funds. Miss Ayers lately organized a large union at Dillsboro.

Knox county held her convention May 26. Cass has become a link in our county chain. The Montpelier union has taken up L. T. L. and Demorest medal work. Covington union rejoices in the addition of sixteen new members. Mrs. Patterson organized a fine union of twenty-five members at Hoovers, May 7. Mrs. Rhone, our colored evangelist, has been at work in Seymour and Indianapolis. Mrs. Fields will give the month of June to organization in the southern part of Indiana. Miss Farley is quite busy at the north. Bluffton writes of active work done by their union. They have an L. T. L. and free use of a nice hall donated to them by John Studebaker, our stalwart prohibition brother. Harlan union are making quilts for the "Industrial Home," holding gospel temperance meetings and last, though not least, a Y of seven members has been organized. West Lebanon union has lately held a Demorest contest, Madge Swisher winning the medal. La Porte county reports successful work done by Mrs. Denny. Rensselaer has been having contests which netted them handsome profits. They have also been favored by a visit from our state president and N. F. Jenkins whose addresses were of great interest. Tippecanoe county held its mid-year convention in the spring. White county also met in semi-annual convention at Monon; Mary Balch was in attendance and made the address of the evening. The county union presented Mrs. Wirt a copy of "Glimpses of Fifty Years" as a token of their appreciation of her work for them. Mrs. Haggart spends June in Indiana, where she is always welcome. Mrs. Cowan spends a part of June in Eastern Indiana. Pike county convention, held May 19, resulted in the organization of a local union at Algiers, where the convention was entertained.

Miss Farley organized an L. T. L. of twenty seven, and Miss Hay organized a Y during their recent visit to Crown Point. The Mary F. Thomas Y union have completed their $100 fund for the Dr. Thomas' tablet in the Temperance Temple. Miss Dickson organized a Y at Logansport during the schools of methods held at that place. A Y was lately organized at Kokomo. The Smith's Valley Y reports active work. The Alexandria Y use Hannah Whitall Smith's Bible readings. They hold their meetings semi monthly on Sunday. Martinsville Y reports active work. Huntington young ladies have taken up our work and a Y of twenty members was organized there May 7. The Newcastle Y have opened a free reading room. Success to them.

Richmond has enjoyed a series of meetings conducted by Mother Stewart, superintendent of work among colored people for Ohio. Spencer county convention was held at Grandview. Mrs. Fields lectured for them. The Westfield union requested each of its members to earn fifty cents for their treasury. They had three weeks to do it in, and then assembled at the home of the president, Mrs. J. J. Baker, to relate their experiences. The meeting was highly entertaining as the experiences showed the sisters to be beggars, bottle-washers, cellar-sweeps, seamstresses, milk dealers, poultry-keepers, rag-peddlers, laundry women, bootblacks, hostlers, and professors of economics. Mrs. Nichols organized a union at Crawfordsville May 1 and lectured there again May 9. Mrs. Denny's appointments for the month are given up on account of the illness of her sister who lives in Missouri. Mrs. Balch reports a new union at Boswell, Tippecanoe county, and has organized a good union at Dayton. Luther Benson spoke at Spencer May 21 and 22. Garrett has an L. T. L. of 130 members.

Miss Whistler's work of two weeks at Coal City resulted in 184 signatures to the pledge, but voice failure caused her to suspend work for three weeks. Since that time she has been busy strengthening the work already gone over, and planning the future. At present she is in Riley and expects to go to Linton in Greene county next. Mrs. S. Tremaine of Terre Haute will go with Miss Whistler during July and August, thus dividing the burden of the work. Mary Balch is pushing the Demorest work. It will be a vote winner.

SADIE B. WHISTLER,
State Reporter, Terre Haute.

THE annual "Field Day" of the Boston W. C. T. U. will be held on Boston Common, July 4, this year, as it has been for ten consecutive years. There will be different speakers every hour. The exercises will consist of addresses from clergymen, business men, ladies, redeemed men, while others will engage in conversation with those desirous of joining the temperance band. This is a good idea for all our unions to follow.

NEBRASKA.

STATE EXECUTIVE MEETING AND OTHER NOTES.

The state executive committee held its semi annual meeting at Fremont, the home of the state president, this spring, with a good attendance. The absence of the familiar face of Mrs. Holmes saddened the hearts of all present.

Mrs. Ada M. Bittenbender, World's superintendent of legislation, was elected to fill the place of Mrs. Holmes as World's Fair commissioner for Nebraska W. C. T. U., a wise selection. A resolution was adopted recommending that the L. T. L.'s be given representation at district and county conventions, in conformity with the action of the state last fall, in giving them representation in the state convention. The superintendent of Sunday school work, Mrs. L. P. Hartley, of Lincoln, was requested to attend the state Sunday school convention in Kearney, next June, and present her work to that body.

Miss Annabel Lee, of Wahoo, who holds a grand gold medal, was invited to attend and participate in the diamond medal contest at the Prohibition convention in Cincinnati, next June. The three diamond medals already given are held by Nebraska girls. Shall we have the fourth?

The Union Worker, our state organ, reported a total circulation of one thousand three hundred and twenty-two, an increase of four hundred in one year. The offer of the Garten Ter-chloride of Gold Institute, to treat free one patient from each union until three free patients have been sent from one county and after that any number sent by the W. C. T. U. for ten dollars was gladly accepted. Dr. Garten is a Christian gentleman, and is doing a good work.

Resolutions were passed thanking Gov. Thayer for his kindness in exercising the executive clemency in cases of women in the state prison which were brought to his attention by the state superintendent of jail and prison work, Mrs. Angie F. Newman; in one case allowing a woman to be removed for a time, that her child might not be born in prison.

The department of physical culture was adopted. A committee of "Ways and Means" was appointed, consisting of Mrs. Mary Lantry, state treasurer, Mrs. C. H. Walker representing the district presidents, and Mrs. Dora V. Wheelock representing the superintendents, the object being to raise needed money for the state work.

May 8 was observed as memorial day for Mrs. Holmes throughout the state. Memorial services were held by the executive committee during its meeting for both Mrs. Holmes and Mrs. Harrison, president of the ninth district, who had died in the East, not having returned since the Boston convention. Mrs. Bigelow, of Lincoln, presided and Mrs. Henry's manual was used. Remarks were made by Mrs. Smith, of Lincoln, concerning Mrs. Holmes' suffrage work; by Mrs. Woodward and Mrs. Hitchcock, referring to her as state president; Mrs. Bigelow spoke of her as a tender mother, and Mrs. G. W. Clark, of Omaha, described the incidents of her funeral service and urged upon the sisters of the W. C. T. U. to always be kind and charitable, suppressing the harsh judgment and fault-finding words. "Let us say our good things of each other while we are here to hear them," said she; and all hearts responded "Amen." Kindest words in memory of Mrs. Harrison were spoken by Mrs. Jones, state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Hitchcock, state president, and Mrs. Brakefield, the new president of the ninth district. Earnest prayer was offered by Mrs. E. M. J. Cooley. A tablet will be placed in the Temperance Temple for Mrs. Holmes, and an offering for that purpose will be taken at the various memorial services.

It is worthy of record, showing as it does the estimate placed upon Mrs. Holmes by her own home people, that while the public schools and business houses were closed during the time of her funeral services, so also were the four saloons, and the wife of one of the saloon-keepers brought a beautiful bouquet to put upon the casket. Was it not wonderful and encouraging? It thrilled the heart of every W. C. T. U. woman in Nebraska and made us more determined than ever to stand firmly for the right.

The fourth district reports one of the best and brightest conventions they ever had at North Bend this spring, Mrs. C. H. Walker presiding. Of the seven counties included in the district six were represented. Mrs. Hitchcock, state president, and Miss Ripley, superintendent scientific temperance instruction, were present through the convention. Special features, most excellent and helpful were the Bible readings (which were extremely well prepared) the question-box and the mothers' meeting. Many carefully thought out papers were read and discussed. The last evening was given to the Y's who presented a very interesting and entertaining program. The district is contemplating building a W. C. T. U. Home on the Fremont Chautauqua grounds. Mrs. Walker writes: "Our conventions are growing more instructive and suggestive instead of simply being pleasant and entertaining."

Mrs. Hitchcock, Mrs. Walker and Miss Ripley were also present at the Butler county convention held in Surprise. The energetic women of this little town are always "surprising" us with their earnest doings, so when convention day came bringing one of the most dreadful winds even Nebraska has had for years, and the women came driving in from the surrounding country in the big wagons, bringing their provisions with them to serve lunch at the convention, all felt that Surprise was keeping up her reputation. Thirty-five delegates present, all but three unions being represented. The papers were good, the reports encouraging, especially so the work reported of the Y's and L. T. L.'s of Rising and Surprise. Memorial resolutions were adopted, deploring the loss of Mrs. Rose Mosher, of Rising; also resolutions of farewell to Mrs. Bennett, president of Rising union, and Mrs. Mary A. Jones, the county treasurer, both of whom are about leaving the state. A beautiful silver cup, with white ribbon tied in the handle, was presented to Mrs. Jones. An encouraging feature was the general attendance of the men of Surprise, and the interest they manifested.

Clay county W. C. T. U. institute was held at Fairfield this spring. "Mother Putnam" was there full of hope and cheer and inspiration to the younger women of her district. There was a good representation, and but one opinion seemed to prevail—"a peaceful, prayerful, unceasing warfare for National prohibition of the liquor traffic." Resolutions, condemning the opening of the Columbian Exposition on the Lord's day and turning the grounds into a beer garden, were adopted. The institute was favored by having with them Rev. Frances Townsley, former state superintendent of evangelistic work, who has been absent from the state on account of ill health for some months. Miss Townsley gave a Bible reading which showed that she retains her old-time strength and energy, spiritually, if the body is weak. The white-ribboners of Nebraska will be glad to know that Miss Townsley has accepted a call to the Baptist church of Ashland.

Mrs. Nevada Hereford writes from Kearney a most encouraging report. The union there was never in a more prosperous condition. A nice lot and building, valued at one thousand dollars, has just been presented them by a Sunday-school association, conditioned upon their paying a small encumbrance of one hundred and ninety dollars (which they gladly undertake) and that they always conduct a Sunday school therein. The union has at present a mission Sunday school of one hundred members held in the city hall, which they will gladly transfer to their own house. A coffee counter at which will be served sweet milk, buttermilk, tea and coffee at all hours, and refreshments if desired, is just started opposite the finest saloon in the city. Its success will be watched with interest.

The women of Kearney union have two liquor suits pending, having won one of nearly the whole amount the law allows. With a Prohibitionist for a police judge, and a city attorney favorable to them, they are going to push the Slocumb law "for all it's worth," which is not much. The law against selling tobacco to minors has been circulated, and every saloon and place where tobacco is sold has been visited, and dealers asked to pledge themselves not to violate the law. The city council was also asked for assistance in enforcing the law.

Tecumseh reports scientific temperance instruction in all the grades, with the Pathfinder series in use. Because the women turned out to vote, they have two women on the board of education, and all the men are temperance men. They have circulated petitions and hold public meetings frequently, besides asking the ministers to preach often on some phase of our work.

Hazel Dell union is a striking example of what a country union may do, though scattered, as they are, through two or three little neighborhoods, and at extremes of eight and ten miles. They have had headquarters at a central home for two years, and with eighteen members, have superintendents for nine departments. Last year they prevented the establishment of a saloon at one of the railroad stations near them, and "dose temp'rance vimmens" received curses as well as blessings. They conduct mothers' meetings and a flourishing L. T. L.

A modest superintendent of press work, Mrs. E. A. Jayne, writes: "I have been superintendent of press work for Holdrege union for six months. It is my first attempt in the work, but I have never failed to keep up a column every week in three of our local papers." Who does better? Mrs. Zara A. Wilson, of Lincoln, is the state superintendent of franchise. Her plans are well laid, and she has already begun work for municipal suffrage for women, which we are very earnest in hoping may be given us by our next legislature.

DORA V. WHEELOCK,
State Reporter, Beatrice.

NORTH DAKOTA.

WEATHER AND WORK.

Our dear old state has adopted the western fashion in weather this spring and has doffed her former robes of sunshine to array herself in the somber garments of mist and rain and fog. "Never saw the like," says the oldest inhabitant.

Fargo.—Woodford union holds two meetings per month, one for business, the other for studying North Dakota laws relating to temperance and prohibition and also the laws relating to women. A very wise and profitable course of study, we should say, is the study of our laws about which we women as a rule know so little.

The North Dakota White Ribbon is steadily increasing its subscription list.

Minto.—This brave union having only nineteen members has pledged $100 for the Temperance Temple. The county convention for Walsh county was held May 25, at Ardoch. A full account will appear in next report. The state president, Miss A. M. Kinnear, of Fargo, lectured on the Sunday evening following the convention.

Dickinson.—Still alive and working with courage never flagging. It is surely true, that our women, as the liquor men say, do not know when they are defeated. The jury, at a recent trial returned "Not guilty" in favor of the law breakers and the women were defeated in the eyes of the law, but not daunted in the cause of truth and justice. They have held an entertainment and a dollar meeting and high tea.

Grafton.—This union of twenty-three members holds quarterly public meetings, consisting of music, recitations, and readings. The house is crowded and often many are turned away for want of room.

Casselton.—They continue their essay and recitation contests on "Tobacco" and "Alcohol." The last one brought in twenty-five dollars. The best essay is to be read at the county convention in June, the two next best will be published. Mrs. Hoffman will address the county convention. They have pledged twenty-five dollars for the Home in Fargo. The union is small, but composed of members earnest and willing, and what they undertake they usually accomplish.

The Home.—However much North Dakotans may lack in spirituality, they are not lacking in humanitarianism. The Home is established and to be maintained by free-will offerings, and it is therefore surprising how the hearts of the people are touched by the call. W's and Y's, and non-temperance people all are responding generously. The Y's of Lisbon asked to furnish a room and maintain it. From unexpected sources mites come. Let all the people keep it in mind. It is not partisan, denominational or special, but fully and grandly humanitarian. It was the Lord's thought for His grieving and sin-suffering ones. The W. C. T. U's of North Dakota have materialized that thought. All the people of North Dakota will bear it on their hearts by free gifts of money, material and prayers.

Our state president, Miss A. M. Kinnear, of Fargo, is on a six weeks' tour, lecturing and organizing. The work seems to be prospering abundantly in her hands. May the Lord give her all needed strength and wisdom to enlarge the work, to lift up the hands that hang down, to encourage the faint-hearted—though we have but few of those in North Dakota—to rest the weary, and to be a living epistle, known and loved of all our W. C. T. U. women.

The writer was in Sanborn a few hours last week and found Mrs. Pierson, superintendent of Y work, full of enthusiasm and hopes for enlarging the work. And why should she not be with such an enterprising Y and its honoraries at home to give her courage and support? The state lecturer on purity addressed a very attentive audience in the First M. E. church at Fargo. She hopes the Lord may open the way so she can speak in June at several points in the Red River Valley, that have called for the lecture on purity.

We are grieved at the removal of our efficient state treasurer, Mrs. L. W. Gammons, to Minneapolis. She will discharge the duties of her office the balance of the year, however, and be with us, the Lord willing, at the annual convention to be held at Lisbon, in September.

The L. T. L., under the direction of the Central union of Fargo, is a delightful body of little folks to talk to. Your reporter had the pleasure of holding a conference with them on candy, gum and purity on a Sunday afternoon recently. Their leader, Mrs. Wiswell, is greatly consecrated to the work and is eminently fitted for it. Be with her in prayers.

Our loyal brother of the white ribbon, a commercial traveler, I. M. Adams, is aiding us by speaking on suffrage and tobacco, purity and temperance as he travels about the state. Let every man and woman who may, "lend a hand," and so shall the good work go on of building up our young state into a strong bulwark of truth, honesty, sobriety and purity for the nation and God.

Sargent county lost one of her ablest workers when Mrs. N. Linton left it. But she has still strong hearts left. Mrs. Emma Vail, county president, holds the fort at Forman against great odds.

We are climbing up the steeps of Time,
For God and Home and Native Land.
I think I see a dawn sublime,
When not a link of evil's chain
Shall any of his children bind.
Pray God it come, and that right soon,
When body, soul and spirit all
Shall know the ownership divine.
And knowing, will not dare defile
The gift that cost so great a price.

For we are truly not our own,
For we are purchased with a price.
That price was agony and blood.
The dearest friend on earth we know
Would not for us so much forego,
As did our precious Lord and Christ—
And yet we love them greatly more
And do for them in five-fold store
The things we grudge our loving Lord.
It is a mystery oft to me,
That we should so ungrateful be,
And give to those who give us not,
So great a wealth of love and deeds,
Giving out grudgingly and small
To Jesus, who so loves us all.

EMMA F. BATES,
State Reporter, Valley City.

MISSISSIPPI.

STATE CONVENTION.

It is difficult to conceive of a more delightful occasion than was that of our state convention which was held in Corinth, May 5–8. Having for years enjoyed the benefits of prohibition, our citizens were prepared to appreciate the presence of the large number of delegates and visitors gathered from all parts of the state; many of whom have done much successful, self-sacrificing work in the cause. This our ninth convention was not only a season of rare enjoyment, but also one of deep interest and real profit. It was our great pleasure to have with us Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama, National organizer, our devoted Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, National evangelist, and our own Miss Belle Kearney, National organizer of the Y. W. C. T. U.

On Thursday morning the convention met in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, our president, Mrs. L. S. Mount, of Greenville, in the chair. Mrs. Ervin, of Columbus, was fittingly chosen to conduct the opening devotional exercises. The report of the credential committee showed that the representation of unions was smaller than usual which was due to the fact that Corinth is in an extreme end of the state. The address of our loved president was full of helpful suggestions for future work.

In the evening a large audience assembled in the court house. Addresses of welcome were made by Mayor Henry, Rev. T. Y. Ramsey and Mrs. Wm. M. Inge for the local union. Mrs. Fannie Clark gave an earnest response for the state. Mrs. Dean, of Iuka, spoke upon "The Relation of Temperance to Labor." This address was so clear and forcible that we would be glad if it could be repeated throughout the state.

Much important business was transacted in a spirit of harmony which prevailed throughout the entire session. Mr. Henry Ware, of Pass Christian, was with us and the convention showed their appreciation of his strong friendship and substantial support by making him an honorary life member. As regarded the important issues of the day, this convention gave no uncertain sound. Strong resolutions were passed, returning thanks for our scientific instruction bill (so long labored for), also for the abolition of the Louisiana lottery. Earnest protests were made against the sale of intoxicating liquors at the Columbian Exposition and against the opening of the gates of the same on the holy Sabbath, it being resolved that the members of this convention pledge themselves to pray until the 15th of October, that God will so overrule the minds of our rulers as to bring about the closing of the Columbian Exposition gates.

A resolution of appreciation of Mrs. Harriet B. Kells and of regret at her removal from our state was unanimously passed. But few changes were made in the state officers for the coming year, Mrs. Mount was unanimously re-elected president.

Friday eve was devoted to the Y's, and wisely did they improve their opportunity. Miss Mamie Cunningham, president of the Corinth Y union, presided gracefully. Appropriate music was given from the Y song book. A letter of greeting was read from Mrs. Frances J. Barnes. Rev. E. McLellan, honorary member, and pastor of the C. P. Church spoke earnest, inspiring words. A beautiful recitation was given and several short addresses were made by members from Iuka, Corinth, Lexington and Columbus, all of which were bright, pointed and much enjoyed. A fine address by Miss Belle Kearney was the crowning feature of the evening. Miss Griffin followed in a short, humorous talk, and so captivated the audience by her wit and brilliancy as to be twice recalled to the stand. During the convention she presented the claims of the Waynesville Southern Assembly.

The most precious seasons were those of the noontide devotional hours, conducted the first day by Mrs. Fred Beall, of West Point, and the two following days by Mrs. Snell. Miss Anna Simonton, our superintendent of L. T. L. and Demorest medal contest work, a faithful and efficient worker, was unable to attend the sessions and much regret was felt. Her department was presented on Saturday evening, Mrs. Mary Inge Hoskins, another devoted worker, presiding. The beautiful marching songs and other selections by the L. T. L. were appreciated. Much interest was taken in the gold medal contest. The successful young lady was Miss Smith c Lexington.

Miss Frances Griffin gave the gentlemen a masterly address, logical, convincing and in her own inimitable vein which delighted all; she also spoke to the Sunday-school children on Sabbath morning. Mrs. Snell preached three times to crowded audiences; in the morning and at night. In the afternoon she spoke by request of the Y. M. C. A. Her gospel temperance sermon at night was a fitting climax to all that preceded it. It was attended with such power that at its close many came forward in token of their intention to support the prohibition cause, some of whom had before this been its avowed enemies. Several joined the local union. Farewells were then spoken and in closing we feelingly sang "God be with you till we meet again."

LAURA A. STOUT,
State Reporter, Corinth.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The fifth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union f the Indian Territory was held at Tahlequah, Cherokee Nation, on the 18th, 19th and 20th of May. Owing to the great overflow of our rivers and creeks two of our unions failed to be represented. We feel that much good is being done by the white ribbon women in the territory. It is true that the Indian Territory has always been prohibitory, but alas! our fair statutes are marred and broken by the foul hand of illicit selling. Our beautiful Indian Territory is infected with the beer man, the Jamaica ginger vender and the border introducer of the vile intoxicant. Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, of Vincennes, Ind., was with us. She is a gifted speaker, and with her motherly bearing did a wonderful work here. Truly, the love of the Master is in her heart, and she is working for Him. During the convention the Tahlequah union held a Demorest gold medal contest. A great amount of interest was shown and the Opera House was packed to overflowing. The contest was close, the medal being won by Miss Florence McSpadden, a beautiful Indian girl of eighteen, who personated "The Martyred Mother." Mrs. L. Jane Stapler, the president, was re elected by acclamation. Mrs. Stapler is much loved and honored, having devoted her entire life to her people. Her home is a refuge for all, and her ample purse is ever open to relieve the suffering poor and needy.

The above notes are by Mrs. Fite, of Tahlequah, and I wish to add a word about the terrible condition of affairs in Muscogee. One beer saloon has been clearing hundreds of dollars, and now four more have opened. We have petitioned the chief of this (Creek) nation, the judge and Congress, and we are praying without ceasing. Our jail is full, over eighty in six cells, and reeling men on the streets at all hours, because a judge has decided that beer is not intoxicating. One good is coming out of it. A leading merchant said to day, "I am a Prohibitionist." Strong party men are beginning to believe in the principles of prohibition. God speed the day when they will vote as they believe.

SARAH FORD CROSBY,
Territorial Reporter, Muscogee.

KANSAS ZEPHYRS.

The "gentle zephyrs" of Kansas are something more than a myth; they are a stern reality which must be endured as patiently as possible several months in the year, and occasionally they culminate in a cyclone, doing much damage to life and property. From the president of the fourth district comes an appeal to local unions to aid the W. C. T. U. of Towanda, which little city was recently almost totally destroyed by cyclone. But disastrous storms, I am glad to add, are not of more frequent occurrence in Kansas than elsewhere, although the prevalence of strong winds so constantly is very annoying until one becomes accustomed to them.

First district.—Mrs. Julia A. Chase, superintendent of work among soldiers, sends a letter concerning her department of work, which is of such general interest that I quote from it as follows: "There seems to be quite an awakening on the subject of saloons at the National Military Homes and a determination that they shall be abolished. Hon. E. M. Morrill, a member of the board of managers of national military homes, told me recently, that he was delighted to find another member beside himself who is in favor of a change in policy in this respect. This is a good-sized wedge for the inside, and the Senate bill, $8,888, is one from the outside. I received a letter from Hon. Case Broderich, saying he should introduce a similar bill in the House.

"The petitions with which our unions have been flooding our representatives were only for the suppression of the saloon in the Home at Leavenworth, but if a more general bill can pass so much the better. The matter was discussed at our last state convention, W. R. C., and though no action was taken there was a general feeling expressed that the 'beer saloon at the Soldiers' Home' was a shame and disgrace to the powers that be. I am receiving a great many letters in regard to the matter. There is also a bill now in the hands of the military committee which I am urging our congressmen to support. The purport of the bill is to increase the number of army chaplains so that there may be one for every post where there are two or more companies. For the one hundred army posts there are but thirty-four chaplains. Kansas is so fortunate as to have three of these—all good men—but the troops are constantly being changed. In connection with this should be a change in arrangement of barracks, so that not more than two men be compelled to room together, instead of an entire company as now. Forts Leavenworth and Riley are no exception in this respect. No privacy is possible. The well disposed are at the mercy of the vicious and vulgar, and it is no wonder if all find the same level. There are many good, true men among the enlisted men in spite of all this, and with interest shown them by Christian women they take heart, and do valiant service for the right. I receive most interesting letters from a young soldier at Fort Douglass, Salt Lake City, where there is no chaplain at all. He is working for God and already sees some results of his labors.

"The temperance work in the military prison is still very prosperous. Two medal contests have been held, and more will be. Mr. Demorest has kindly set aside many of the rules in favor of 'my boys,' and informs me that the report of the contests which I sent him is to be made the basis of an appeal which is to be sent into all the reformatory institutions of the country, in the hope of spreading the good work. So the boys in the United States military prison are doing a good work for others. The programs which the boys get up attract large numbers from the city and soldiers from the garrison; often ladies and other friends help. Many of them who have been discharged are now in useful and responsible positions. One is in the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., two are in the Salvation Army, another is at the Moody Institute preparing for mission work in Africa. These and scores of others saved is the direct result of the work begun with so much fear and trembling."

The soldiers at Fort Leavenworth publish a neat little paper, weekly, which contains among its contributions the regular programs of their temperance meetings.

Third district.—One of the most successful and profitable conventions ever held in this district met lately at Independence, and although a fierce storm was raging there was a good representation. All the district officers were present and seven out of the nine counties were represented. Four county presidents and seventeen delegates were in attendance. Twenty-four out of twenty-nine local unions were reported. There is a paid membership in the district of 479, with eighty-five honoraries, and five juvenile organizations; 157 copies of our state paper, Our Messenger, and 144 UNION SIGNALS are taken; $156.05 has been received for dues, and $240.85 was raised in other ways.

A special line of reformatory work has been taken up throughout the district, to protest against permits being issued to druggists, and assist in convicting violators of prohibitory law. The ladies have been faithful and vigilant. Our state president, Mrs. Grubb, was present during the convention, and gave a fine lecture, subject, "Our National Sin." She was given a small purse as a token of love and admiration for her, as our state executive. A collection was taken for the Temple.

Labette county reports a good convention, and a union at Oswego, reorganized by the state president. They have "stirred up" the jointists and have had six of them sentenced, their fines amounting to $1,650, or with jail sentence from thirty to two hundred and forty days. The druggists pleaded the "club room act," and paid $100 for the privilege. Druggists' permits were granted in Chetopa against the protest of the W. C. T. U., and many good "respectable" men. Judge McClure has made a late ruling and turned the prohibitory "jail birds" over to county commissioners for pardon. "The law is good if a man use it lawfully." The papers on "Why I am, and why I am not a W. C. T. U. woman," by Mrs. E. C. Read, of Parsons, and "How to become rich, and how to enrich," by Mrs. E. K. DeLong, of Arkansas City, were very fine. The quartettes by ladies and boys very enjoyable. Trios and solos were sweetly rendered. The hospitality seemed doubly precious because of the continued storm. Convention adjourned one session to hear the case of a druggist, Pugh, who appealed from the decision of the probate judge to the district court.

Fourth district.—The semi-annual convention of this district was held at Americus. The good sisters of the local union received the delegates cordially and entertained them royally. The United Presbyterians tendered the use of their church, and the ladies decorated it beautifully. Eleven delegates from abroad appeared in due season, accompanied by our state president, who was the speaker for the convention. At least three hundred people were present at each of the evening sessions to hear the addresses of Mrs. Grubb. The day sessions were crowded with the business of the district. Many visitors dropped in during the convention, manifesting much interest in our work, and offering kind words of cheer. The reports were more complete than heretofore, and were received from all the organized counties except Chase, and from all but five of the district superintendents. The committee on plan of work recommended that adopted by the state convention at its last session. The superintendent of the peace department made earnest efforts to awaken the interest of all in her work, and through the committee on resolutions introduced a very strong one on peace. A silver medal contest was recently held at Lebo, in this district, and we are hoping to organize a union there in the near future. Miss May Jaquith, of Americus, has been appointed district evangelist and organizer, and will go anywhere in the district where needed, asking only that her expenses may be met at places visited.

A report from the fifth district tells of the work done by Mrs. E. D. Carson, in Frankfort, holding three medal contests in two weeks. The ministers arranged for her to address three union temperance meetings. She drilled twenty-six young people, gave the L. T. L. children thirteen lessons in music and marching, teaching them prohibition songs. A Y. W. C. T. U. was also organized by her with fourteen active, and two honorary members. Frankfort has had a grand rally for the temperance cause, and hope to recall Mrs. Carson some time during the summer.

At the late session of the state executive committee all members were present except the president of the seventh district, who was detained at home by sickness. The subject of a home for aged women was deferred until the next annual meeting. The reports of state and district presidents showed activity all along the line. Mrs. Grubb reported having held forty-five meetings. A brief summary of all work done revealed much to encourage and much yet to be accomplished. A department of work among miners was established. The superintendent of work among railroad employes was authorized to invite Mrs. Woodward to accompany and assist her in holding meetings at different points. The resignation of Mrs. Merrill as state superintendent of prison work was regretfully accepted, and Mrs. Messenger, of Lawrence, was appointed to fill the vacancy. It was voted to continue the attitude of the state W. C. T. U. toward the home for aged and orphaned colored people, the money to be retained in treasury until the home is an established fact. The president presented program for school of methods to be held at the "Ottawa Chautauqua" in June. Mrs. S. A. Thurston was elected trustee of the W. T. P. A. stock owned by the state W. C. T. U. Invitations to entertain state convention were discussed, and a ballot resulted in the choice of Pittsburg.

I was informed by the state superintendent of colored work that through my appeal in THE UNION SIGNAL for aid in their work for a home for the aged poor of their people, some gifts have been received. They desire to raise two hundred dollars by June 1. Letters have come from sisters in different states asking for programs of "Baby show" and "Lullaby" entertainments mentioned in my last UNION SIGNAL letter, and I will try to procure an explanation from the Americus Union in time for my next.

Revs. C. H. and Eugenia F. St. John have been on a tour of the state, working for the W. C. T. U's and prohibition generally. They have met with good success. Miss Blanche Piper, formerly fourth district superintendent of foreign work, is now city editor of The People, a paper which is published at Paola. Mrs. Grubb has issued a ringing appeal to the membership at large.

MRS. S. S. WEATHERBY,
State Reporter, LeRoy.

MONTANA LETTER.

CONTAINS PROHIBITION SENTIMENT.

When I read the letters in "news from the field" I nearly always find accounts of district, county or state conventions, and I feel a little discouraged about writing when I have nothing of this kind to write about. We are not yet organized into county or district organizations, hence we have but one yearly convention, which is the state convention, and meets in the fall.

However, our local unions have not been idle this winter. Three of our unions had Dr. Kate Mitchell for one lecture each in the early spring, Miles City, Livingston and Bozeman; all were well pleased and wished we could have had her longer.

The Bozeman union has a coffee-house and free reading room. This was quite an undertaking, but so far is successful. A gospel temperance meeting is held in the reading room every Sunday afternoon, usually conducted by members of the union.

We have had an addition of one large new union at Anaconda. It has a membership of fifty and was organized by our state organizer, Miss Julia Darrow, and state evangelist, Mrs. S. A. Stout.

Mrs. Wylie, who was a delegate to Boston, has addressed the unions at Livingston, Helena and Bozeman telling them about that great W. C. T. U. convention. The state prohibition convention for electing delegates to the National Prohibition Convention at Cincinnati was held in Helena. The W. C. T. U. was allowed one delegate from each county. Five of our women were there and participated largely in the deliberations. Mrs. S. A. Stout made a rousing address at the evening session.

Our state president, Mrs. M. S. Cummins, of Helena, was made a delegate to the National Prohibition Convention. The W. C. T. U. of Montana will make a great effort to raise the funds for this object.

My sisters, the time has come when we must unitedly throw all the influence of our mighty organization with the men who have come out bravely in political action. This is pre-eminently the year for us to help our prohibition brothers. The Montana W. C. T. U. holds its annual meeting in Bozeman in September. We are planning to make it a season whose influence shall tell for good in this mighty new west.

MRS. W. W. WYLIE,
State Reporter, Bozeman.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A NEW union of twenty-two members has been organized at Ashland, Boone county, Mo.

THE postoffice address of Rev. I. Villars, is changed from Lake Bluff to Dakota, Ill., until October 1.

INDIANA stands far ahead of any other of the large states in the school of methods work. So says Miss West.

ANOTHER of "the best in the rank and file" has marched onward, Mrs. Mary L. Butcher, recording secretary, Montgomery county, Pa., W. C. T. U. A touching tribute in verse to her memory was written and read by Mrs. Sara L. Oberholtzer, county president, at the annual county convention held at Coshocken, May 19.

THE permanent address of Miss Lizzie M. Boyd, evangelist, is Wheeling, W. Va.; and that of her associate worker, Miss Anna Downey, is Evanston, Ill.

THE Boston W. C. T. U. has sustained a great loss in the death of Mrs. Grace Pierce, June 4. She was superintendent of evangelistic work and a consecrated and effective worker.

JOHN W. LYON, "Temperance Jack," who for a number of years has been a resident of Rico, Colorado, wishes his friends to know that he is now living at O'Neals, Fresno county, California.

REV. HENRIETTA G. MOORE has been working in Missouri and went on June 15th to Colorado for a campaign. No speaker is more acceptable or convincing than this true-hearted and quick-witted Ohio woman.

THE Ashland county Ohio W. C. T. U. convention will meet in Hayesville, June 22d, beginning at 10 a. m. Mrs. Monroe, the state president, will be in attendance; a gold medal contest will be held the evening preceding.

MISS FRANCES E. GRIFFIN, of Alabama, one of our best W. C. T. U. orators, will be in Chicago about June 18, and will hold two meetings during her brief stay. Miss Griffin possesses a fund of humor rarely combined with a depth of pathos, irresistibly carrying her audiences with her.

PORTAGE county, Ohio, held its semi-annual convention at Garretsville, May 13th. Reports from local unions showed that work is being pushed in many lines, notably narcotics and jail work. The papers were excellent, and the evening address upon prohibition was given by Mrs. Hoffman.

THE Michigan women had a new hint for us at their convention. Instead of the usual way of advertising it to passers-by, they hang out the national banner high and fair over the entrance door. Evidently Michigan white-ribboners believe that if anybody owns the flag, the white-ribboners do, an implication that is full of inspiration when one thinks about it.

ACTUATED by the belief that horse-racing is a sport demoralizing to a community and to all who participate in it, Mrs. Dr. Parker, of St. Joseph, Mich., refused a very liberal offer for property desired by the would-be purchasers for that purpose. The local W. C. T. U. voiced their appreciation of Mrs. Parker's unselfish interest in the good morals and well-being of the community.

MRS. EVA HIGGINS, president Colorado W. C. T. U., has just returned from a three weeks' trip in the western part of the state where she has organized five new unions and strengthened some of the weak ones, speaking twenty-three times in twenty days. She goes to Denver, June 22, to attend the conference of charities, representing the W. C. T. U., and will present to them the World's Petition.

MRS. EMMA P. WOOD, who passed away at New Orleans, May 9th, was an earnest, faithful friend of every good cause, and at the time of her sudden and untimely death was recording secretary of the Louisiana W. C. T. U. She felt for the sorrows of others, and her constant cheerfulness was combined with every feminine grace; virtues which endeared her to all who came near her and have made her death universally lamented.

THE SOUTHERN ASSEMBLY.

The Southern Assembly and School of Methods will open its third session on June 30 at Waynesville. Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin will be in attendance in charge of the department of Organization; Miss Frances E. Griffin of the School of Oratory; Miss Baer, of New Orleans, of Physical Culture; Miss Kearney of Y. Work; Mrs. Bateham of Sabbath Observance; Mrs. M. M. Snell, Evangelistic department. Rev. Geo. Armstead, editor of Nashville Issue, will preach on July 8, and Mr. Frank L. Wells of Chattanooga will deliver an address on Women in Law. A beautiful tract of land was donated this Assembly by the Love heirs, a family that has been to North Carolina as William Penn to Pennsylvania. Accompanying this splendid gift was $3,500 in cash from the good citizens of Waynesville and Haywood county. The corner-stone of the Assembly's permanent building will be laid with imposing ceremonies on July 4. There is scarce as beautiful a spot east of the Rocky Mountains as Waynesville, surrounded by mountains 6,000 feet high, with rushing water at their feet. The public are invited to see for themselves the beauty and advantages to be offered by this Assembly. Board is very reasonable, and most comfortable. There are sulphur baths for the sick, and free-stone and chalybeate waters for all. Address Mrs. M. J. Brauner, Waynesville, N. C., or the undersigned.

M. M. WELLS,
President.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

California—Oakland: W. C. T. U., $100; Mrs. W. J. Gardner, $3.66; Garden Grove: M. E. Hill, $3.25; Escondido: Unknown, 50 cents; Pasadena: Mrs. M. Rice, $3.65.

Connecticut—Hockanum: W. C. T. U., $5; Norwich: Mrs. Harmony Durfey, $4; Niantic: Mrs. S. K. Luce, $6; New Milford: Mrs. L. F. Curtis, $3.65; Greenwich: W. C. T. U., $25.

Florida—Melbourne: Ethel Stout, $4.80; Kissimmee: Mrs. A. B. De Voe, $2.

Georgia—Lithia Springs: Lily Reynolds, $3.65.

Illinois—Farina: W. C. T. U., $5; Jordan: W. C. T. U., $35.32; Englewood: W. C. T. U., $30; Mrs. M. B. Tolles, 50 cts.; Miss Kalloch, $5; Chicago: Mrs. Robert Greenlee, $8.53; Mrs. M. J. Stokes, $3; Mary Allen West W. C. T. U., $34; Mrs. M. W. Hatfield, $5; Springfield: Mrs. R. H. Beach, $3.25; Roscoe: W. C. T. U., $11; Knoxville: Mrs. B. B. Parrish and Mrs. E. D. Brown, $7.30; Henry: Y. W. C. T. U., $3.27; Summer Hill: W. C. T. U., $5; Ottawa: Unknown, $1; Chenoa: Mrs. Shelton and Mrs. Pike, 40 cts.; Moline: L. T. L., $1; Bristol: W. C. T. U., $25; Morris: W. C. T. U., $25; Evanston: W. C. T. U., $3.

Indiana—Lakeville: W. C. T. U., $7.08; Argos; Mrs. A. C. Rosenburg, $5.

Iowa—Scotch Grove: W. C. T. U., $43.16; Galva: Alice Hamerson, $3.65; Quasqueton: Mrs. R. L. Wright, $1; Osage: W. C. T. U., $45.

Kansas—Westphalia: W. C. T. U., $1; Lawrence: W. C. T. U., $8; Emporia: Mrs. Ella Langellier, 60 cts.

Maine—Caribou: Baby Band, $1.

Massachusetts—Wilbraham; Mrs. S. J. Steele, $5; No. Adams: Mrs. A. E. Babbitt, $5; Mrs. H. M. Hodge, $3.65; Wollaston Heights: W. C. T. U., $100; E. Weymouth: L. T. L., $5; Amesbury: Mrs. C. F. Hovey, $4; Brighton: L. T. L., $3; Wellesley: W. G. Tucker, $10; Upham's Corners: W. C. T. U., $100; Dorchester Y. W. C. T. U., $100; Boston: Julia Robinson, $3.65; State W. C. T. U., $100.

Michigan—Ionia: Mrs. O. Waterbury, $6; Bethel: Mrs. N. Bennet, $2.50; Keelor and Three Oaks: W. C. T. U., $6; Denton: W. C. T. U. $1; Flint: W. C. T. U., $5; Flushing: W. C. T. U., $5; Chesamung: W. C. T. U., $3.80; Kalamazoo: W. C. T. U., $17; Grand Blanc: Baby Band, 40 cts.; Coopersville: Mrs. E. J. McNaughton, 50 cts.; Hesperia: W. C. T. U., $3; Corunna: W. C. T. U., $10; Crystal Falls: $4; Saginaw: Lathrap W. C. T. U., $3.65.

Minnesota—Minneapolis: Central W. C. T. U. Coffee House employes, $5; Alma City: W. C. T. U., $25; Bethel: W. C. T. U., $150; West Duluth: W. C. T. U., $35.

Missouri—Edinburg: Mrs. M. B. Pack, $6; Mound City: W. C. T. U., $12; Hickory Grove: W. C. T. U., $3; Stockton: Rebecca B. Hall, $5; Maryville: Mrs. B. E. Wood, $1; Rich Hill: Alice Martin, $2; Meadville: W. C. T. U., $20; Clarksville: Mrs. M. M. Roberts, $1.75; New Point: W. C. T. U., $7.50; Excelsior Springs: Callie McIlvain, $4; Lamar: W. C. T. U., $10; Cairnesville: W. C. T. U., $5; Dudenville: Mrs. Cunningham and Ollie, $4; Bolivar: W. C. T. U., $5.40.

Mississippi—Columbus: Mrs. G. W. Cox, $3.65.

Montana—Jefferson City: Fulton family, $4.15; Stevensville: L. T. L., $16.25.

Nebraska—Arapahoe: Grandma Bathrick and Dora Boehner, $7; Lincoln: per Mrs. H. A. Stoner, $2; York: Mrs. John Paley, $4; Madison: Mrs. J. R. Thomas, $3.65; Blyville: W. C. T. U., $1; Wayne: W. C. T. U., $100.

North Carolina—Statesville: E. H. Billingsley, $1; Pollocksville: Hagar Murrell, 25 cents.

North Dakota—New Rockford: W. C. T. U., $4; Church's Ferry: Mrs. H. A. Noltimier, $5; Minto: W. C. T. U., $25; Kelso: E. J. Safford, $5.

New Hampshire—Wolfboro: W. C. T. U., $3.65; Lancaster: Emily Congdon and Mrs. L. More, $3.

New Jersey—Newark: Mrs. George Tomkins, $4.25; Passaic: W. C. T. U., $5; Haddonfield: W. C. T. U., $12.50; Children, $1; L. T. L., $5.

New York—Manchester: P. A., M. E. and E. L. Howland, $5 each; Angola: Ida L. Hazen, $3.65; Boonville: L. T. L., $15; Bradalbin: W. C. T. U., $6; Auburn: V. K. Beshgetour, $2; Troy: Central W. C. T. U., $15; Gloversville: Mrs. S. Sutliff, $5; Peoria: Roy Curry, $1; Georgetown: W. C. T. U., $1.52: White Plains: Mary Flood, 50 cents; Johnsonville: Dr. J. D. Van Wirt, $1; Savannah: L. T. L., $2.30; Malone: W. C. T. U., $100; Middleville: W. C. T. U., $1.

Ohio—Frankfort: W. C. T. U., $1; Conneaut: W. C. T. U., $1; Marlboro: W. C. T. U., $6.25; Hartwell: W. C. T. U., $10; Medina Co: W. C. T. U. $11; Berea: Mrs. H. U. Jordan, $1.50; Lucas Co: W. C. T. U., $74.

Oregon—Ashland: W. C. T. U., $25; The Dalles: Mrs. M. Poorman, $4.

Pennsylvania—Indiana: W. C. T. U., $71.90; Somerset: Miss Belle Kimmell, $100; Media: W. C. T. U., $5; Warren Co.: W. C. T. U., $100.

Rhode Island.—Portsmouth: W. C. T. U., $10.42; Providence: Miss Alice Earle, $5; W. C. T. U., $38.

South Dakota—Faulkton: Effie Loomer, $3.65.

Tennessee—Nashville: Roger Williams University, $1.80; Jas. Turner, $60; W. J. Cummins, $25; W. K. Phillips, $10; R. E. Page, $5.

Virginia—Winchester: Lizzie and Mattie Shunate, $2; Lincoln: W. C. T. U., $10.

Vermont—Craftsbury: W. C. T. U., $5.58; Rutland: W. C. T. U., $2.

Washington—Creston: Jennie H. Thrall, $3.50.

Wisconsin—Wausau: W. C. T. U., $15; New London: I. O. G. T., $2; Appleton: A. B. Colwell, $2.29; Hammond: Mrs. S. Rich, $2.52; Leon: Mary Joslin, $1.

Wyoming—Rawlins, Mrs. E. H. Parnell, Mrs. M. S. Wotring, Mrs. G. A. Gage, Mrs. G. Leonard, Mrs. J. Irving, Mrs. C. Plympton, Mrs. R. A. Smiley, Mrs. M. L. Jennings, $1 each; Miss I. L. Ege, $2.75; others, $1.25; Baby Band, $11.50.

New South Wales—Bathurst: W. C. T. U., $2.44; sales, models, $63.90.

Twenty-five dollars credited to Washington county, Ohio, should have been credited to Washington county, New York, also $7 Morley, Ohio, should have been Morley, New York.

ESTHER PUGH, Treas. Gift Fund.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N.Y.

MAID MARGARET'S MISSION.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

Down the long, dim hospital ward,
Stole wee Maid Margaret, silently;
Her dimpled hands with blossoms filled,
Her blue eyes gazing wonderingly.

"What makes them lie so still?" she asked,
"Oh, mother, are they here to die?"
The tears dropped from her great, grave eyes,
Like sudden rain-drops from the sky.

"Give them your flowers, dear child," I said,
"Perhaps they'll help them bear their pain,
For some are here whose tired eyes
Will never see God's fields again."

Dear little maid! Her tender heart
Was touched with sorrow at the thought,
And hastening with her burden sweet.
An aged woman's bed she sought.

"Do you like pansies? Mother says
Their velvet faces are so fair,
The angels must have kissed them all,
And left the smiles a-shining there."

"God bless the child,"—the sufferer's hand
Rested upon the sunny head—
"My mother had a garden once,
A garden with a pansy-bed!"

"She told me that God made the flowers,—
I've most forgotten how to say
My bedside verses,—little child,
Your posies, here, teach me to pray."

. . . . . .

"Here is a rose"—Maid Margaret paused,
The face upon the pillow white
Was strangely still—the sunken eyes
Were flooded with unearthly light.

"A rose? A country rose?" Her hand
Touched tenderly the lovely thing,
She raised it to the white, white lips
From whence her life was taking wing.

"I had a little baby once,
A wee, white rosebud, heavenly fair—
God loves the flowers—has He kept
My child-rose safe and sweet up there?"

"Your baby rose?" Maid Margaret's voice
Dropped to a whisper soft and low.
"I guess God planted it in heaven,
His angels help to make it grow!"

. . . . . .

Thus on her mission tenderly,
Maid Margaret passed from bed to bed,
While young and old in grateful love
Prayed tenderest blessings on her head.

And when the last bright flower was given,
She stood with one small hand held high,
As if her baby faith would point
Her quiet audience to the sky.

"God made the flowers—He made us all—
He's got a flower-garden up there
Where people grow—and angels bright
Of all His flowers keep tender care."

"I'm sorry"—how her sweet voice shook—
"You cannot see the fields and sky—
But then, up there, those other flowers
Are never sick, and—never die."

THE TEMPERANCE SHOW.

BY MRS. GEORGE ARCHIBALD.

Chapter II.

THE CONSULTATION.

Maggie Meade and Miss Robie had a consultation. It was very secret, and it was very exciting to Maggie. In fact, Maggie began it, and "Jones"—Jane Jones' father was the cause of it.

Maggie had often seen Jane's father and always shivered at the thought of the pity of it. The pity of the bright Jane obliged to call such a man father. Maggie rather wondered if Jane did so call him, or if, being an ingenious little girl, she did not avoid the precious word when she addressed him.

It could be done—the avoiding—by a little care. For instance, when Jane was obliged to speak to him she could begin by calling out "say!" Of course that would not be strictly good manners, but Maggie presumed some slips of good manners might be allowed in the Jones' household. Or she could say, "Sir," more polite, though rather formal. Even "Mister" would be preferable to "father" in Maggie's opinion. As for "papa," it was not to be thought of.

Maggie would have been surprised if she had known that Jane actually loved her wretched father. She would have been more surprised had she seen that father in his home in his sober moments, and realized from his good-natured, affectionate ways that he loved his children and their mother. But it was true. Though his love in no way lessened his wrong-doing. We can none of us make up for evil in one way by good in another. However, it was better for Mr. Jones to be a kindly-mannered, drunken husband and father, than a cross one.

But about the consultation! It took place the very day when Maggie first saw Mr. Jones stagger through the streets, a shameful sight, from the effects of liquor. Maggie was so shocked and horrified that her heart beat fast as a trip-hammer. (If you know how fast a trip-hammer goes, I wish you would tell me. For I must own I don't.)

It is good for us now and then to see the dreadful side of life. The dreadful side that sin causes. For only so can we be awakened to the needs of our fellow-beings. We may hear that a thousand people are suffering from the evil of drink, and it will not make us feel the awfulness of drink like one sight of the real disgrace and horror of it.

It was so with Maggie. She had heard much and seen little, and though she knew that Jane's poor life was poor because her father was a drunkard, she did not realize it until that day when she saw Mr. Jones drunk. If she had pitied Jane because her father looked dejected, dirty and lazy, how much more did she pity her now.

As it happened, Maggie met Miss Robie while she was fresh from the miserable sight and before the childish heart had stopped its swift throbs of emotion, half alarm and half anger.

"Oh, Miss Robie," she cried. "I just saw Jane Jones' father! He looked perfectly awful! Oh, Miss Robie, I should think they would put him in jail. He deserves to go to jail. I was fairly afraid of him!"

"Had he been drinking?" asked Miss Robie, taking Maggie's hand and turning to go her way.

"I should think he had! It's a perfect disgrace to his family and to Jane. And it's a disgrace to the 'Pansies.' But they can't help themselves."

"Poor Jane!" said Miss Robie, "I'm so glad she belongs to the 'Pansies.' It gives her a bit of nice company now and then and gets a little temperance teaching into the family. Jane reads the Crusader to the boys every Sunday and I send THE UNION SIGNAL to her mother."

"But they don't drink. It's Mr. Jones, and I suppose he couldn't be hired to read a temperance paper."

"The children do not drink, to be sure," said Miss Robie, "but they need to be taught to keep them from it. With a drinking father, and an over-busy mother, their chances for good are not many, and the reading rests Mrs. Jones, she says; she reads the paper Sunday afternoons when the dinner dishes are done."

"Jane is a nice girl," said Maggie. "In school she is the only girl that I am afraid will have a higher average than I have. I should think she would be ashamed to come to school though, or go anywhere. I would."

Miss Robie looked sad. She did not reply for a minute. The truth was, Jane's needs had been on her mind all day. Times were pinched in the Jones' family and how Jane was to be kept in school and Sunday school with cold weather coming on, Mrs. Jones could not see. There was rent, and fuel, and the food for half a dozen months, and there were clothes and books.

"If I only had another back when this is worn out," Mrs. Jones said, "or a few more pair of hands."

Mrs. Jones' grammar was not accurate.

As Miss Robie walked holding Maggie's hand, she turned the situation over and over in her mind, and the sentence Maggie had spoken in despair kept coming to her thought. "The Pansies can't help themselves." Probably not in one sense, yet in another they could. For those who help another help themselves, always.

As Miss Robie thought of it her clasp of Maggie's hand tightened. A bright thought came. She determined to invite her little Pansy home with her, and in her own room, a pretty room in a pleasant house, the two had their consultation.

What did they consult about? My dears, if you are as bright as I suppose, you will know without telling when you have come to the end of the story.

(To be Continued.)

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—These warm June days, with their bright sunshine and green things growing, make the school tasks seem very tiresome, don't they? How slowly the hands of the school-room clock move! Then come the thoughts of the "dreadful examinations," and the important question, "Am I going to pass?" These alone seem enough to make school life a burden even if it weren't so beautiful and inviting out of doors. But be patient a little longer till the lessons are learned, the examinations safely passed, the pleasant feeling of duty done will take the place of anxious thought, and then how you will enjoy the freedom, and the long, happy days of summer!

Patience and perseverance always pay in the end, dear little men and women, and that you may all be thus prepared to enjoy the pleasures of the summer vacation is the wish of your

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

You have requested all the children to send in puzzles, but I cannot make them or sometimes solve them, but I can write stories, and I will send you one which I hope, if you think it good enough, to have it printed. All of your large family must not be idle, but must help to fill up this column that you have given us.

I ever remain your niece. AVA M. ALLEN.

Mercer, Pa.

Thank you for the nice little story, Ava, which I will shorten and print in our column next week. Look out for it, children.

I have read the letters in this column with great interest, and thought you would be glad to hear from me. I send an enigma, and if you use it I will send more very soon.

Moravia, N. Y. RALPH C. F.

We are all glad to hear from you, Ralph, and I am sorry that your letter with so many others, has been delayed so long because of lack of space. Many thanks for the enigma.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

54.

DIAMOND.

*
* * *
* * * * *
* * * * * *
* * * * *
* * *
*

1, a consonant; 2, a contraction; 3, to outline; 4, the hardest of all stones; 5, to chide; 6, the close; 7, a letter from Fred.

55.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

I am composed of 14 letters.
My 11, 8, 13, 1, is a tiny flying insect.
My 14, 10, 7, 5, is the king of beasts.
My 2, 4, 3, is color.
My 9, 6, 12, is wrong doing.
My whole is the name of a paper we love.

CHARLIE FULTON.

56.

TEMPERANCE PI.

Het awr ycr sosdun,
Nikg lokcola sutm llaf,
Dan teh yocz rrneoc lofsk
Veah lleiadr ta eth lacl.

LAURA B. GATES.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED MAY 26.

46. Temperance.
47. Alcohol.
48. Decoration Day.

Correct answers: Jennie Greenhalgh; Ripley Fisk; Lee Smith; Blanche Sherman; Sara Addison; Vinnie R. Statler; Bertha F. Woodbury; Mary Gates; Clive Yeager; Grace Harrington; Floy Freeland; Robin and Thompson Bishop; Virginia Paul; Schiller Lovett; Meda I. Nunemaker; Cora Thomas; Flora Carson; Charlie Fulton; Hattie Payne; Estella McConnell; Royal J. Davis; Eddie and May Arrowsmith; Mary Marshall; Myrtle Cochrane; Angelia Hodgens; Harriet S. Howell; Rae Grove; Ernest J. Colby; Louisa Poole; Florence E. Cartland; Sadie Cliver.

Kernels.

HELP the weak if you are strong
Love the old if you are young;
Own a fault if you are wrong,
If you're angry hold your tongue.
In each duty
Lies a beauty,
If your eyes you do not shut,
Just as surely
And securely
As a kernel in a nut.

"WHAT have you learned to-day, Willie?" said the fond mother when her first-born returned from his first day at school. "I learned the difference between a horridicular and a perpizontal line."

"No, Johnny," said the Sunday-school teacher, "men do not salute each other by kissing any more as they used to in the Bible times. What would you think if you saw one man come up to another in the street and fall on his neck and kiss him?"

"Why," replied the practical young American, "I'd think he wanted to borrow a quarter."

BREATHES there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
"I'll not forget a single thing
That you've requested me to bring
When I come home to-night"—and then
Comes empty-handed home again.

ONE of the professors of the University of Texas was engaged in explaining the Darwinian theory to his class, when he observed that they were not paying proper attention. "Gentlemen," said the professor, "when I am endeavoring to explain to you the peculiarities of the monkey I wish you would look at me."—Texas Siftings.

SMALL courtesies sweeten life; the greater ennoble it.—Bovee.

MYSTERY would be another name for our ignorance; if we were omniscient, all would be perfectly plain.

MRS. J. was telling a story to a group, among whom was one who was very deaf. At its conclusion, observing that he did not laugh, she turned to the person next her and whispered, "He didn't see the point, and it's as plain as A B C." The whisper reached our friend, though the ordinary tone had escaped him. "Yes," he said, turning to Mrs. J.; "plain as A B C; but I am D E F."

FIRST OLD LADY.—Conductor, raise this window; I shall smother to death! Second Old Lady—Conductor, lower this window, or I'll freeze to death! First Old Lady—Conductor, will you raise Irate Passenger (interrupting)—Conductor, hoist that window, and freeze one of those old women to death; then lower it, and smother the other one!

PAT'S visitor:—"Well, Pat, have you had the grip?" Pat: "Indade I have, sor." Visitor: "Well, how did you get along with it?" Pat: "Badly, sor. Very badly; sure, your honor I was sick three weeks after I got well."

PATIENT old lady (to elevator boy reading dime novel): "How often does the elevator go up, boy?" Elevator boy: "It goes up at the end of every chapter, ma'am."—Time.

"COOL as a cucumber" is scientifically correct. Investigation shows that this vegetable has a temperature of one degree below that of the surrounding atmosphere.

IRISH time.—Pat: "Sure, toime was invinted in Ireland." Jeweller: "Why do you think so?" Pat: "Begorra! d'yez be afther thinkin' its name would be 'o'clock' if it didn't come from the owld sod?"—Jewellers' Weekly.

WHEN a man goes wrong, "There is always a woman at the bottom of it." When a man goes right, we never hear that there is a woman at the top of it, but there is.—Galveston News.

A NEW HAMPSHIRE woman, aged eighty years, when asked recently how she had kept herself so vigorous and healthy replied: "By never allowing myself to fret over things I cannot help; by taking a nap and sometimes two every day of my life; by never taking my washing, ironing and baking to bed with me, and by oiling all the various wheels of a busy life with an implicit faith that there is a brain and a heart to this great universe, and that I could trust them both."

MASTER BOBBY'S papa is the happy owner of a hatching machine. The other day as the former was watching a chick energetically breaking its way through the shell, he inquired, "I see how he gets out, but how did he go to work to get in?"

Publisher's Dep't.

THE VERDICT.

Much testimony has been taken and the verdict is that is one of the finest books to put into the hands of young women, and that it will be helpful to older ones. Just listen:

A Young Woman Journalist

E. J. Wheeler, Editor the Voice: A critic once remarked, "You don't need to drink up all of Long Island Sound to find out that the water is salt." I have had time for but a taste here and there, of he book entitled "A Young Woman Journalist," but it has made me eager for a few leisure moments in which I may read the entire book.

Prof. Sue M. D. Fry: The book has an indescribable charm. * * * It is a swift glance into the inner life of a steadfast, lofty soul working along the lines of reform and journalism which will bring new inspiration to all who read.

Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper, President Golden Gate Kindergarten Association: It is a book full of inspiration. Every young woman should read it. No one could follow the record of such a life and not feel moved to loftier attainment.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore: I am charmed with it. I am very proud of it. There is nothing to criticise and nothing left to desire in its mechanical execution. Its literary physiognomy is equally attractive—tender, true, loyal, lofty, spiritual.

Grace N. Dodge: Such books do good, and bring to us all a fresh inspiration for earnest living. Your book will help on the good work, I am sure.

Mrs. L. M. Barry Lake: In placing this memoriam in my hands you have conferred on me a favor for which I can find no words sufficiently expressive of my appreciation, pleasure and gratitude. It is a book every young woman should read.

Hester M. Poole: I have just risen from a perusal of "A Young Woman Journalist" with mingled tears and smiles. If the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association had issued nothing more than this it would pay for its existence. For women, young or old, it seems to me to be one of the best biographies published. . . . . It incidentally preaches a powerful sermon. It shows how funeral services ought to be conducted.

Edward W. Bok, editor Woman's Journal: If there is one single person in this country who can be influenced to buy a copy of this book through my indorsement of it, I wish you might tell her that she has a treat in store in the reading which I envy.

Sarah K. Bolton: Such a book will stimulate young women to usefulness, and should have a wide reading.

Is anything more to be added? The universal testimony is in its favor, and the verdict is pronounced accordingly.

You will be helped by it. Your friend will be helped by it. Purchase for yourself and induce your friends to purchase. Price per copy, $1.50.

Agents wanted.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

This has been unearthed from among back correspondence, but is so good it is worthy of attention:

"A thought has just occurred to me as I have been reading and pondering over The Young Crusader, Why cannot our Loyal Temperance Legion boys and girls (and Sunday-school boys and girls too) subscribe for the paper by bringing one cent to each weekly meeting for that purpose, the superintendent or some one whom she may appoint keep the names and the record and have the papers sent to her in one package to distribute at the meetings."

See, friends, if you cannot in this way double your Young Crusader list. Since the reduction in price, much less than one cent each week will pay for the paper. Who will lead in the effort? Let us hear from you about it.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Miss Willard writes: Mrs. Frances J. Barnes has issued Responsive Readings entitled, "Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" which ought to be read in every local union. These Responsive Readings are an aid to the president in opening the meeting in an orderly, instructive and inspiring manner. Thirteen copies for one dollar to one address. Every local union ought to have them.

Mrs. Barnes has also a Bible reading on the subject of "Wisdom," which any woman could use to advantage in evening meetings and which is intended for such purposes.

There is NO SURE CURE FOR EVERY CASE OF ASTHMA or EVERY CASE OF HAY FEVER, but the worst cases, if uncomplicated by organic disease, can be CURED TO STAY CURED by constitutional treatment, and this at the patient's home.

ASTHMA AND HAY-FEVER

We treat no one without a thorough knowledge of the case.

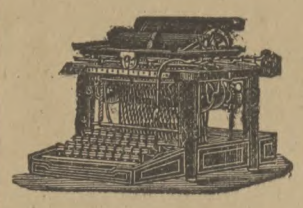
Incurable Cases Declined.

Examination free by mail.

We want name and address of every sufferer from Asthma or Hay Fever.

P. HAROLD HAYES, M. D., BUFFALO, N. Y.

The 1892 Model Remington Typewriter



Presents many points of improvement which will readily commend themselves to all users.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
327 Broadway, New York.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR NO DUST NO QUILTS COLD BLAST CHICAGO

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10cts. to intending agents, F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

EYES tested free by mail. New method. Send stamp for test card. KEENE OPT. CO., 1301 Washington-st. Boston, Mass

DON'T YOU THINK

Your baby would look pretty in a carriage like that?

We have prettier ones.
Also cheaper ones.

All shown in our catalogue, which we will mail FREE if you write for it.

FREIGHT PAID BY
WALTER HILL CO., 218 Wabash Av., CHICAGO.

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR
DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT
or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE
A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction
By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.
A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 remarkable illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 81st thousand. 5,000 more Agents Wanted.—Men and Women. $200 a month. Experience and capital not necessary, for We Teach All, Give Credit and Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

BUY A SUMMER HOME ON THE SHORES OF
Imperial Lake Geneva, Wis.
We offer in parcels of 100 feet and upward BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE SITES. All prices, all sizes and easy terms.
GRAND TERRACE ADDITION.
For plats and further particulars address PRATT BROTHERS, 508 Chamber of Commerce, cor. Washington and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA
PAYS ALL HONEST LOSSES PROMPTLY and in FULL.
It furnishes to Total Abstainers the Cheapest and Most Reliable Insurance to be had.
New and liberal commissions will be paid to experienced agents in Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Connecticut and Iowa.
It will pay you well to write to us.
THE TOTAL ABSTINENCE LIFE ASSOCIATION of AMERICA.
902-904 Royal Insurance Building,
CHICAGO, ILL.

WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE.

DR. HORNE'S ELECTRO-MAGNETIC BELT positively cures RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, LIVER, KIDNEY and exhausting chronic diseases of both sexes. Contains 23 to 100 degrees of Electricity. GUARANTEED the latest improved, cheapest, scientific, powerful, durable and effective MEDICAL ELECTRIC BELT in the WORLD. Electric Suspensories free with Male Belts. ELECTRIC TRUSSES FOR RUPTURE. 9,000 cured. Send 4c stamp for pamphlet.
DR. W. J. HORNE, REMOVED TO 180 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO
Medtion THE UNION SIGNAL

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH

Taken internally and used locally with Insufiator. At Druggists or per mail, $1.50.

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 103 STATE ST. CHICAGO.

DRUNKENNESS Or the LIQUOR Habit Permanently Cured.
All desire for Alcoholic stimulants quickly removed without knowledge of the patient, if desired. Treatise for home cure mailed free. Yale Hygiene Co., Box 1725, New Haven, Conn.

MALE AND FEMALES
MAKE $3 to $5 A DAY at home working for us. Send your name on a postal card for particulars and Free Sample Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

PILES Remedy Free. INSTANT RELIEF. Final cure in 10 days. Never returns; no purge; no salve; no suppository. A victim tried in vain every remedy has discovered a simple cure, which he will mail free to his fellow sufferers. Address J. H. REEVES, Box 3290, New York City, N.Y.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble, Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

R YOU Looking for a HOME or an investment where you can double your money? ELLSWORTH the new temperance suburb of Chicago offers both. Write to ELLSWORTH LAND ASS'N, Room 41, 81 Clark St., Chicago.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

FAT PEOPLE You can reduce your weight 10 to 15 lbs. a month at home without starving or injury by DR. CLARKE'S Home Treatment. Proofs, Testimonials, Free. F. B. CLARKE, M. D., Drawer 133, Chicago, Ill.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals
are used in the preparation of
W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa
which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

For Harness, Buggy Tops, Saddles, Fly Nets Traveling Bags, Military Equipments, Etc.
Gives a beautiful finish which will not peel or crack off, smut or crock by handling. Not a varnish Used by the U. S. Army and is the standard among manufacturers and owners of fine harness in every quarter of the globe.
SOLD BY ALL HARNESS MAKERS.

THIS MACHINE $12
You can give this elegant machine a thorough test before sending us one cent. TRIAL FREE. All attachments free. Every machine warranted 5 years. For catalog, full particulars, etc., cut this adv. out and send to us to-day.
ALVAH MANUFACTURING CO., Chicago, Ill.

A LOT FREE In order to advertise Cascade City, Washington and that you may become thoroughly acquainted with the great possibilities of this growing city, send for our printed matter, which we mail you free. To each of the first one hundred persons sending us their names we will give free a full warranty deed to one lot, 25x100 feet. Address
STATE OF WASHINGTON LAND CO.
119 La Salle Street. CHICAGO, ILL.

HAY-FEVER
A GIBBS' ORONASAL RESPIRATOR
used at home, will afford absolute relief throughout the season. A wonderful invention, Convenient, Scientific, Infallible; thoroughly tested for many years. Costs but little—relief obtained is beyond estimate. Equally good for Catarrh. Sent postpaid. Pamphlet with testimonials free.
GIBBS RESPIRATOR CO., 36M La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

FREE SILVER SPOONS
We will give any lady One Dozen Silver Plated Tea Spoons of extra quality, warranted to wear, who will sell among her friends one doz. boxes of "Star Pills" at 25 cents per box. Cures Headache, Constipation, Nervousness and all disorders of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels. NO MONEY IN ADVANCE. We send the Medicine to you post paid, when sold you return the amount, $3.00, to us and we send the spoons. If you sell but half a doz. we give you half a doz. spoons. If you can't sell medicine we take it back. We take all the risk. I. M. Association, 265 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

How TO MAKE A Fortune
WANTED—Salesmen; who can easily make $25 to $75 per week, selling the Celebrated Pinless Clothes Line or the Famous Fountain Ink Eraser; patents recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen to whom we give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without pins—a perfect success. The Fountain Ink Eraser is entirely new, will erase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-lists and terms. Secure your territory at once. THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., 184 Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.

SAVE $40.00 ON NEW $140.00
BICYCLES
New, Latest Pattern $140 Bicycles for $100. Cheaper grades in proportion; cash or time. Agents wanted.
A. W. GUMP & CO., Dayton, Ohio.
BICYCLES, GUNS & TYPEWRITERS taken in exchange.

FENCING
WIRE ROPE SELVAGE.

RABBIT & POULTRY FENCING.
Freight Paid. McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., CHICAGO

BEATTY Pianos, $175. Organs, $49. Want ag'ts Cat'lg free. Dan'l Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J.

Publisher's Notes.

BOUND LEAFLETS.

For the convenience of persons desiring to keep samples of our leaflets on hand, a number have been bound in paper and are for sale at exactly the same price as the unbound leaflets. Here is the list. Send for sets and keep informed.

Timely Talks	$ .15
Signal Lights	.05
Gospel Lights	.03
Total Abstinence	.05
Teachers' Series	.10
Suffrage	.07
Temperance and Labor	.05
Mothers' Meetings (Purity)	.10
Home Leaflets	.25
Social Purity Series	.30
White Cross Series	.30
Loyal Leaflets	.15
Evangelistic Series	.10
Y. W. C. T. U. Series	.03
L. T. L. Series	.03
Local Union Helps	.15

IT IS A BEAUTY.

What? Why, the new badge for the senior L. T. L's or graduates of the Loyal Temperance Legion. For a long time we have been trying to find just where we could have a badge manufactured of a metal that will not tarnish, but always show undimmed its brightness—as our boys and girls should. At last success has crowned these efforts, and we have a lovely button badge for the coats of the large boys and a pendant of the same design for girls made of that beautiful new metal of which all are talking and with approval—aluminum or aluminium. The design is, of course, circular, with Maltese cross on it and the initials, T. A. in monogram. These stand for Total Abstinence. The boys, of course, will wear the buttons on the coat collar as G. A. R. men do theirs. The girls can hang the pendant on their chain, or fasten it to the breastpin by a small chain or a narrow ribbon.

And what is the price? The button is 25cts., or $2.50 per dozen. The pendant 20cts, or $2 per dozen. We hope to see a whole army of temperance young people wearing them. Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE, Chicago, Ill.

THESE ARE THEY.

Glimpses of Fifty Years.
By Frances E. Willard. An autobiography. Fifty thousand copies sold and still there is a demand.

Childhood, Its Care and Culture.
By Mary Allen West. Valued in every home. Agents hear nothing but praise of this helpful book.

Story of a Classic Town.
By Frances E. Willard. A necessity to every Methodist and a help to every temperance worker.

A Young Woman Journalist.
Edited by Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Helpful to all ambitious young women and of engrossing interest to all W. C. T. U. workers.

Agents Wanted
For these books everywhere. Send for circulars.
Address
SUBSCRIPTION BOOK DEPARTMENT,
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE. Chicago, Ill.

AUTOGRAPH PLEDGE CARDS.

As the time for the World's Exposition approaches the demand for the autograph pledge cards for the children's chain is increasing. These cards are in red, white and blue, with pledge on one side and place for the name on the other. They are punctured so as to make it easy to link them together. We can supply these cards in any quantity on short order at the following rates: Per package of 30, 10 cts.; 3 packages for 25 cts. Let every child who will, have an opportunity to send an autograph to the World's Exposition.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE, Chicago, Ill.

THE DEACONESS AT WORK.

This is a new paper published monthly in the interest of the work of the M. E. Deaconesses, edited by Mrs. Jane Bancroft Robinson, Ph.D. Price 50 cents per year. We will send it and THE UNION SIGNAL for the price of one paper—$1.00 per year.

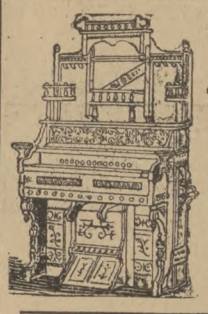
Send orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE, Chicago, Ill.

BE SURE "GOOD SENSE"
is stamped on your waist, there are many imitations but no equals
SENSIBLE WOMEN
all want FERRIS'
GOOD SENSE
CORSET WAISTS.
Best for Health, Economy and Beauty
BUTTONS at front instead of CLASPS. Clamp Buckle at hip for Hose supporters. Tape-fastened Buttons—won't pull off. Cord-Edge Button Holes—won't wear out.
FIT ALL AGES—Infants to Adults. Short and long waist. Made in
FAST BLACK, drab and white. Send for circular.
FERRIS BROS.
Manufr's and Patentees.
341 Broadway, N. Y.
MARSHALL FIELD & CO., Chicago, Wholesale Western Agents.
For Sale by ALL LEADING RETAILERS.

'DELSARTE'
Corset Waists and Braces. Send for Price List.
Agents Wanted. Also
DELSARTE CORSET CO.,
142 W. 23d St., New York.
111 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.
Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town. Send for Catalogue.
THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB CO.

180 So. Canal Street, Chicago.



BEETHOVEN
Pianos & Organs
Are the best in the world. We sell at less than wholesale price. Don't purchase until you have seen our Catalogue or you may regret it. Catalogue FREE TO ALL. Add.
BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO
Washington, N. J.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of
STEWART HARTSHORN
on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

SYLPH CYCLES RUN EASY
Hollow Tires.

Perfection of cycle manufacture; no need now to ride springless cycles or depend on tires alone for comfort. SYLPH SPRING FRAME destroys vibrat'n. Light, simplo, strong. Cata. free
Rouse-Duryea Cy. Co.
77 G St., Peoria, Ill. Agts. Wanted

The "Little Beauty" A $5.00 Scale for $1.00
Capacity 1-4 oz. to 4 lbs. Steel Bearings, Brass Scoop and Beam. For Housekeepers, Offices or Stores.

1,000 Other Articles at Half Price.
A $45.00 Sewing Machine $10.00
A 900-lb. Platform Scale .. 15.00
A $125.00 Top Buggy 50.00
A 3 1-4 Ton Wagon Scale .. 40.00
A $25.00 Road Cart 9.00
A $15.00 Single Harness .. 4.95
A 240-lb. Platform Scale .. 3.00
Farmers, do your own Blacksmithing. Any tools less than Wholesale Prices. Send for Lists Free. Chicago Scale Co., Chicago.

FREE to TEMPERANCE PEOPLE
Lodging quarters during World's Fair Dedicatory Exercises, Oct. 11th to 14th, 1892. Special inducements for 1893. Enclose addressed stamped envelope for particulars. THE SYLVAN ENCAMPMENT CO., 1433 Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Ladies and Children's dress-cutting learned at home by most perfect TAILOR SYSTEM. Big money to live agts. Circulars free. Miss ANNA GRAVES, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

FOR MANY LADIES THE PERFECT COMFORT HEALTH
BALLS
NO POSSIBLE INJURY TO THE SPINE
NO METAL EYELETS TO PULL OUT OR CUT STRINGS
THE FIRST DAY EASY
NEVER BREAK OR ROLL UP
BONES
FIT SHOULDERS
CORSETS & CORSET WAISTS. FOR OTHERS THE
ELEGANT SHAPES AND MANY OF THEM
NO METAL EYELETS TO STAIN YOUR CLOTHES
KABO
BONES POSITIVELY DO NOT BREAK OR ROLL UP
FULLY GUARANTEED BY CHICAGO CORSET CO.
CORSETS ARE THE ONLY ONES GIVING ENTIRE SATISFACTION.

THE COBLENTZ CURE
Morphine, Opium and Whiskey habits cured at home. No pain, no exposure. Trial on Morphine free. One case in every county cured free. Address, COMPOUND OXYGEN ASSOCIATION, Fort Wayne, Ind.

HOME STUDY BOOK-KEEPING SHORTHAND
Each person sending us before July 1st $1 for HENDRYX'S COMPENDIUM OF BOOK-KEEPING and BUSINESS FORMS for SELF INSTRUCTION, will receive instructions by mail free. Special inducements also given during the summer to SHORTHAND students. F. H. HENDRYX, 178, Bath, N. Y.

WHEREVER THE ROCKER WASHER is used the Washboard becomes a Relic of Barbarism. It is warranted to do the washing of an ordinary family in one hour as clean as can be washed by hand. Write for full description and prices. Rocker Washer Co., Fort Wayne, Ind. Agents wanted.

New W. C. T. U. and Prohibition Song Book. By the Silver Lake Quartette and W. A. Williams. Larger than their former books. 35c. Ready June 15. Advance orders, 30c. Also music chart 40x90 in. $1; Parliamentary Chart, $1. Address
W. A. WILLIAMS, Warnock, Ohio

ALUMINUM SOUVENIR
Charm (dime size) with the Lord's Prayer coined in smallest characters, and strung on blue silk ribbon, sent free to any one FREE sending 10 cents for sample copy of The St. Louis Magazine. Aluminum is the wonderful new metal, bright as silver, light as wood, strong as steel, will not tarnish.
St. Louis Magazine, 901 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

DULUTH 7% & 8% First Mortgages
REAL ESTATE AND MINING STOCKS.
References Furnished. Correspondence Solicited.
Tvedt, Eckstein & Co., 327 W. Superior Street, DULUTH, MINN.

Dr. O. P. Brown's
GREAT EXTERNAL REMEDY,
HERBAL OINTMENT!
reaches disease through the pores, arouses circulation, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25 and 50 cents. Druggists or mail. J. Gibson Brown, 7 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

Free-fishing & Bicycle Goods if you tack up circular for Rudolph Mfg. Co., Chicago.

AGENT made $71 in four days selling my Electric Corsets and Specialties. 100 PER CENT. profit and Cash Prizes. Sample free. Dr. Bridgman, B'way, New York.

THE BABY will be given a beautiful birthday card if the mother will send baby's name and age to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. This is done to advertise LACTATED FOOD, The food that SAVES BABIES' LIVES.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order.
American Desk & Seating Co.
270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

Wall Paper Retailed. Good Paper 3c. Gold Paper 5c. Send 10c for postage on samples, and his guide "How to Paper" will be sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 136-138 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

LADIES without business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to
J. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

MILLER'S HOTEL New York City. 39 West 26th St. A Prohibition Home. Patronized by W. C. T. U. workers visiting New York. Turkish, Electric, Roman Baths.
Address. CHARLES H. HAYNES, Prop.

HOTEL FREDONIA. Washington, D. C. H St., between 13th and 14th. ELEGANT, QUIET, HOMELIKE & STRICTLY TEMPERANCE
G. H. La Fetra, Prop.

YOUR NAME ON
25 LOVELY CARDS, 1 RING, 1 LACE PIN, 1 PATENT FOUNTAIN PEN, 1 FORGET-ME-NOT ALBUM, 400 Album Verses, &c., with the New and Popular Monthly, WAYSIDE GLEANINGS, THREE MONTHS FOR 10c. LAUREL CARD CO., CLINTONVILLE, CONN.

LADIES Send to the Stevens' Dish Washing Machine Co., Cleveland, O., for descriptive circulars of this wonderful invention. No dish or wiping cloth used; truly a great blessing to the household. Agents wanted.

LADY Agents make big wages every day With our Ladies' and Children's Specialties. Over 100 different articles. Indispensable. Catalogue Free.
G. L. ERWIN & CO., Chicago, Ill.

WANTED Women to take Crochet work to do at home. Steady work. Write for particulars. L. WHITE & CO., 209 State St., Chicago, Ill

HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY. Agents make big profits. Catalogue (A) and particulars free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Washington St., Chicago.

10 cents pays for the best ladies' paper published for three months. Ladies' Bazar, Chicago, Ill

LADY AGENTS CLEAR $10 PER DAY selling my garments for ladies & children
Mrs. L. E. SINGLETON, Box 665, Chicago, Ill.

...JUST GIVE THIS YOUR ATTENTION...

THE

Woman's Temperance Publishing Ass'n

NOW LOCATED IN

THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO

Publishing

Book Printing

Job Printing

Book Binding

Electrotyping

Engraving

IS THE ONLY PUBLISHING HOUSE IN THE COUNTRY THAT IS

Owned by Women and Controlled by Women

It is thoroughly Established, and engaged in a Profitable Business

CHIEF AMONG ITS PUBLICATIONS ARE

The Union Signal
Official Organ of the World's and National W. C. T. U.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf
Official Organ of the Y. W. C. T. U.

The Young Crusader
For Temperance Children

ALSO A LARGE LIST OF

Books,

Subscription Books,

Pamphlets, Leaflets, Cards,

Pledges,

Birthday Tokens, Etc.

IT HAS UNUSUAL FACILITIES FOR DOING

ALL CLASSES OF PRINTING

IN FIRST-CLASS MANNER AND WITH DISPATCH

SEND FOR CATALOGUE OR BIDS ON WORK TO WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO

F. H. RASTALL, MANAGER

Signal Notes.

SIGNATURES to the World's Petition representing over three hundred persons were recently received from the Hawaiian Islands.

IT is said that the ecclesiastical commissioners of the Church of England derive £10,000 a year from the rents of public houses in London.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Independent states the curse of intemperance seems impending in Turkey. Many of the government officials are greatly addicted to drink.

OF the 661,000 people of the little rocky state of Maine, 146,668 have $50,278,452 deposited in savings banks. A little more than one person in every four, or one in every family, has money deposited in a savings bank. This speaks well for the prohibitory law which protects the home from the saloon in the "pine tree" state.

A CONGO missionary relates that the ship by which he went out to Africa left 1,000 cases of gin at the first port at which they touched, 500 at the second, 1,000 at the third. Two thousand five hundred cases of gin, and one missionary! "And, before I could begin my work," he said, "before I could half learn the language, that ship could be home and back again half-a-dozen times, with its cargo of destroying spirits."

LADY HENRY SOMERSET is issuing to temperance societies and workers throughout Great Britain an urgent appeal to unite in a great national demonstration in support of direct popular veto and entire Sunday closing. Open-air demonstrations and public meetings are to be held on Saturday and Sunday, June 18 and 19. Lady Henry declares the impending general election will be one of supreme importance to temperance reform, the circumstances of the hour being such that either enormous advance may be achieved or severe loss sustained.—The League Journal.

AT the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the National Temperance Society and Publishing House, held in the city of New York, May 10, 1892, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we cordially indorse the petition of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union to the governments of the world, beseeching them to raise the standard of law to that of Christian morals by the prohibition of the traffic in alcohol and opium throughout all the territory over which these governments extend.

J. N. STEARNS, Cor. Sec.

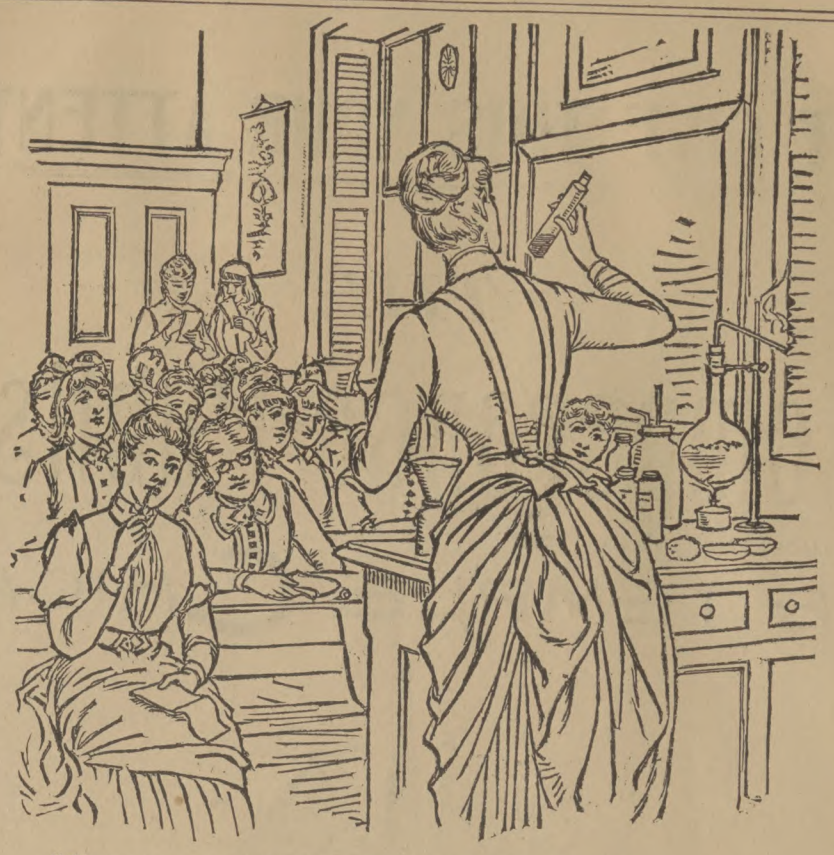
THE new Excise law in the state of New York practically gives more privileges to the saloon business than it has ever before enjoyed. The liquor capitalist is given absolute power and can take out as many licenses and open as many saloons as he desires, employing men to run them. It is said that Gov. Flower, of New York, has presented the pen with which he signed this iniquitous bill to the president of the wine, liquor and beer dealers' association as a trophy. The National Temperance Advocate expresses the sentiments of all right thinking people when it says: "If it had been dipped in the bottomless pit, it would have been still more appropriate."

THE facts relative to the destruction of lives on railroads, as recently given in the North American Review, are terrible to contemplate. It appears that by the coupling of cars, breaking of freight trains and other causes, twenty-two thousand men were killed and injured in 1889 and twenty-five thousand in 1890. The number actually killed as distinguished from those wounded, according to the foregoing, equals two thousand in 1889 and twenty-five hundred in 1890. The average for the two years is a greater loss of life and limbs than occurred at the battles of Sedan, Waterloo, Gettysburg or Shiloh. In 1889, among our railroad employes, there was one death for every three hundred and fifty-seven, and one injury for every thirty-five; while in England, there is only one death for every eight hundred and seventy-five and one injury for every one hundred and fifty-eight of the men employed. The penuriousness of the railroads in adhering to the old style link pin and coupling, which ought to be replaced by a uniform automatic safety coupling, is answerable for the largest part for this slaughter. The three implements that would do most to preserve life among the train men are: First, a uniform car coupling system; second, air brakes on freight trains; third, the block signal and interlocked switch and signal system.

False Economy

Is practiced by many people, who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surery infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.



"You see, young ladies, the value of a well-made soap depends very largely on the amount of true soap which it contains. We have found in three tests that Standard White Soap contains 67 per cent, the most select vegetable oil Castile Soap 85 per cent, and Ivory Soap 86 per cent of real soap. This last test is almost phenomenal. It shows conclusively that for the laundry, Ivory Soap has no equal."

Or, to quote the actual words of Ellen H. Richards, Instructor in Chemistry, Woman's Laboratory, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, "In the purchase of soap, it is safest to choose the make of some well known and long established firm who have a reputation to lose if their product is not good."

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

EXCURSIONS
TO CHICAGO
LOW RATES

. . . . Take advantage of the

LOW RATES

on all Railroads to Chicago next week during the great convention. Visit the great . . . . . .

WORLD'S FAIR CITY

and then while here be sure to call at our office and get a . . . .

FREE RIDE TO
HARVEY...

THE WONDERFUL TEMPERANCE AND MANUFACTURING TOWN.

Millions of dollars already invested in manufacturing industries. Hundreds of houses needed at once to accommodate factory men already at work. We can show you the best investment ever offered in or around this great City . . . . . .

COME AND SEE FOR YOURSELVES

who has the best bargains to offer, best lots, best drainage, best school facilities and best opportunities for work. Our largest sales are always made to those who come and look over the whole situation . . . . . .

WE PAY YOUR ACTUAL RAILROAD FARE

From your home to Chicago and return to the amount of, and not exceeding 2½ per cent. of what you purchase of us while here. If you wish to buy where lots will increase in value the fastest, you will buy of us. Plats and price lists free to all . . . . . .

WALTER THOMAS MILLS AND CO.
161 LA SALLE STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

ORIGINAL
DRESS REFORM ROOMS.
(Established 1875.)
Complete lines of Equipoise and Delsarte Waists, Jenness-Miller Bodices, Bust Supports, Jersey-fitting combination suits, etc., etc. Send stamp for free Illustrated Catalogue.
MRS. S. W. PIKE,
75 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY or COMMISSION, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g Co. x 213 LaCrosse, Wis.

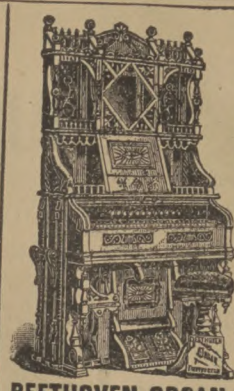
Cuts a Circle.
No Good Kitchen complete without a Chicago Rotary Biscuit and Cake Cutter, they sell at sight. AGENTS WANTED. Sample mailed for 15c. Columbia Specialty Mfg. Co., 59 Dearborn St., Chicago.

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines, Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

THE HANDY MANUAL.

This little book of 440 pages is a perfect encyclopedia of information. It answers almost every question that you might ask, whether of law, history or concerning mercantile business or farm interests. Social matters have due attention. It also contains fifty maps. The price of this manual has been 50c. We will send it to any address for 25c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.



FREE.
Our large 24-page Catalogue, profusely illustrated. Full of information on the proper construction of Pianos and Organs. We ship on test trial, ask no cash in advance, sell on instalments, and give greater value for the money than any other manufacturer in the world. Send for this book at once to BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO., WASHINGTON, N. J.

READERS of THE UNION SIGNAL have doubtless seen "Red Lines" advertised by The Harvey Land Association, and wondered what they signified. If readers of this paper will write to The Harvey Land Association, who are the original founders and promoters of Harvey, they will be sent a new map on which will be shown the corporation lines in red, and lines that mark the boundaries of Harvey proper, deriving benefit from Harvey's improvements. It must be remembered that "additions" advertised have no claim on these improvements, and are not inside the "Red Lines" copyrighted by The Harvey Land Association. Additions have no claim on the factories for labor. Map, pamphlet, and a World's Fair Souvenir will be mailed free to any reader of THE UNION SIGNAL who will address The Harvey Land Association, 819 to 825 The Rookery, Chicago, Ill.

Early Closing on Saturday.

Most of the wholesale and retail firms in Chicago have decided to close their stores on Saturday at 1:00 P. M., commencing May 1st, in order to give their clerks a much needed rest. In connection with this service the Wisconsin Central Lines beg to announce that, commencing May 1st, Excursion Tickets will be placed on sale to Lake Villa, Fox Lake, Antioch and Mukwonago. Trains leave the Grand Central Passenger Station at 8:00 A. M., 3:00 P. M., 4:25 P. M., 5:47 P. M. and 10:45 P. M. Returning trains arrive at Chicago at 7:15 A. M., 9:45 A. M., 9:59 A. M., 1:55 P. M. and 7:45 P. M.

Ticket Office, 205 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Van Houten's Cocoa, pure, soluble, economical.

BURLINGTON ROUTE.

The Burlington Route is the best railroad from Chicago and St. Louis to St. Paul, Minneapolis, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Omaha, Deadwood and Denver. The scenic line via Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Leadville, Glenwood Springs, Salt Lake City and Ogden to all California points. All its trains are vestibuled, and equipped with Pullman sleeping cars, standard chair cars (seats free), and Burlington Route dining cars. If you are going West, take the best line.

WAUKEGAN'S PROSPERITY.

The Washburn-Moen Company to Double its Works—The Clinton Wire Cloth Company to Locate on its Lands, and Several Other Concerns on the Eve of Establishment at that Point.

It is now positively asserted by insiders that the Clinton Wire Cloth Company of Massachusetts, which has for some months past been looking about for a location in the West, has decided to establish works on the land of the Washburn-Moen Manufacturing Company at Waukegan, and it is understood that this concern will employ 500 men. The Clinton Company will, it is believed, be a distinct organization from the corporation having its home in Massachusetts, and it is understood that its relations to the Washburn-Moen Company will thus be closer than they otherwise would be. Meanwhile the Washburn-Moen Company has decided to double its enormous works at Waukegan, and it is expected that definite orders to this effect will be given very soon. There is another corporation about to locate at Waukegan which is said to be larger than any other which has recently moved West, with the exception of the Washburn-Moen Company and the Grant Locomotive Works. Still another company, which will invest some $250,000, is on the point of signing a contract, and, to judge from the statements of thoroughly trustworthy persons, something like five important corporations will soon be added to the business interests of Waukegan. The demand for houses for the accommodation of the laborers already there is something enormous, and several schemes for building large numbers of houses are now on the way.—Chicago Economist.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

Vol. XVIII. CHICAGO, June 23, 1892. Number 25.

Ursula D Herrick
2419 19th st

FOR YOU!
WHAT?
OUR LATEST BOOK.
WHY?
BECAUSE IT WILL HELP YOU!
LISTEN!

"A YOUNG WOMAN JOURNALIST"

Is a delightful book; Instructive to the Young; delightful to those no longer young. It is edited by LADY HENRY SOMERSET and MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD. It contains Miss Ames' letters from Europe, three of the literary papers she wrote, MISS WILLARD'S SERMON or FUNERAL ORATION, and much more of interest. Beautifully illustrated. Price $1.50. Send orders to WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASS'N, The Temple, Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago. N. B.—Agents wanted.

We Give this

You can have the Desk or Lamp FREE

If you will buy one of our Combination Boxes of "Sweet Home" Soap and Toilet Articles, which we sell on trial too.

You must have SOAP—It is an absolute necessity—the only question is where you shall buy it; we make it a decided object for you to buy of us—direct from factory to consumer, and save all middle-men's and dealers' profits.

Our Combination Box contains a large supply of the best Soaps and finest Toilet Articles made, and will give satisfaction to the most fastidious person. We have been manufacturing Soaps for over 15 years, and operate one of the largest and best equipped plants in this country, having a capacity of ten million pounds a year.

The "Chautauqua" Desk

is a "thing of beauty" and will be "a joy forever" to all who possess one. It is artistically designed, complete in appointments, a model piece of furniture, and affords what nine out of ten homes lack—a suitable and convenient place for writing letters, studying, drawing, etc., etc., which will be used and appreciated by every member of the family.

It is made of SOLID OAK, varnished and hand-rubbed finish, with brass trimmings. It stands five (5) feet high, is two and a half (2½) feet wide and ten and a half (10½) inches deep.

It is a perfect and complete desk, and also has three roomy book shelves, a top shelf for bric-à-brac, seven pigeon-holes for papers, compartments for letter paper, ink, etc.

When placed in your home, filled with books which you prize, and ornamented with the gifts of friends, it will become a centre of attraction, and you will be grateful to us for adding a new pleasure to your life.

ORDER TO-DAY.

YOU RUN NO RISK.

We do not ask you to remit in advance, or take any chances. We merely ask permission to send you a DESK and Combination Box, and if after 30 DAYS' TRIAL you are fully convinced that the soap and toilet articles are all we claim, you can then pay the bill—$10.00. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used and we will take the box away at our own expense. HOW CAN WE DO MORE? If you want the Lamp instead of the Desk, state it in your order.

Some people prefer to send cash with order—we do not ask it—but if you remit in advance, we will place in the Box, in addition to all the other extras named, a valuable present. Where boxes are paid for in advance, we ship same day order is received. All other orders are filled in their regular turn. Persons remitting in advance can have their money refunded without argument or comment if the box or DESK does not prove all they expect. PRICE OF BOX COMPLETE, ONLY $10.00, including the DESK.

We can refer you to thousands of people who have used Sweet Home Soap for many years and still order at regular intervals, also Bank of Buffalo, Bank of Commerce, Buffalo; Henry Clews & Co., Bankers, New York; Metropolitan National Bank, Chicago, or any other Banker in the United States. Also R. G. Dun & Co., and the Bradstreet Co.

EACH BOX CONTAINS

ONE HUNDRED CAKES (full size) "SWEET HOME" Family Soap, enough to last an average family one year. Has no superior.	$6.00
11 BOXES BORAXINE, a New and Wonderful Discovery! Cannot Possibly Injure the Fabric. Simple—Easy—Efficient. In each package is a coupon for 10c., payable in goods—worth in all	1.10
One Box (1-4 Doz.) Modjeska Complexion Soap. . . . . It removes all roughness, redness, blotches, pimples and imperfections from the face. Especially adapted for the nursery or children's use.	1.10
One Bottle Modjeska Perfume, A DELICATE, refined, delicious perfume. Most popular and lasting made.	.60
One Box (1-4 Doz.) Ocean Bath Toilet Soap. A delightful and exhilarating substitute for sea bathing.	.30
One Box (1-4 Doz.) Creme Oatmeal Toilet Soap.	.30
One Box (1-4 Doz.) Elite Toilet Soap.	.25
One English Jar Modjeska Cold Cream, Delightfully Pleasant, Soothing, Healing. Cures Chapped Hands and Lips.	.30
One Bottle Modjeska Tooth Powder. Preserves the teeth, hardens the gums, sweetens the breath.	.25
One Packet Clove Pink Sachet Powder, Refined, Lasting.	.25
One Stick Napoleon Shaving Soap	.25
Price of Articles if Bought Separately,	$11.00
Price of DESK if Bought of Dealer,	10.00
All for $10 (YOU GET THE DESK GRATIS.)	$21.00

Established 1875. Incorporated 1892.
Paid up Cash Capital, $500,000.

Over Ten Thousand persons who have used "Sweet Home" Soap for several years have become Stockholders in our Company.

LARKIN SOAP MFG. CO.,
BUFFALO, N. Y.

FACTORIES: Seneca, Heacock and Carrol Streets.

NEELY'S GREAT HISTORICAL CHART,
POLITICAL AND UNITED STATES MAP.

A Double Wall Map, 5 feet 6 inches by 3 feet 10 inches, mounted on rollers top and bottom, ready to hang.

Worth $10.

A Complete History of our Government by Administrations, Political Parties and Congress from Washington to Harrison.

On one side the Largest and Latest U. S. Map, showing all States, Counties, Railroads and Towns, (Price alone $5), And on the Other Side, a Diagram, showing all the Political Parties, 11x66. A Diagram Showing all Presidents and Cabinets, 5x66, A Diagram showing Political Complexion of each Congress. A Diagram Showing Creeds of the World, 12x10. A Diagram Showing Standing Armies of each nation, 13x10. A Diagram showing Naval Tonnage of, each Nation, 13x10. A Complete Map of the World, 13x20. A Map of Central America, 10x13. A Map of Alaska, 10x13. A Map of South Africa, 10x13. A Map of Upper Nubia and Habesh or Abyssinia, 10x23. A Map of Persia, Afghanistan, and Beloochistan, 10x13. A Complete Map of Solar System, best ever made, 10x13. The names of all Cabinet Officers, with length of term. Pictures of all the Presidents from Washington to Harrison.

INDORSEMENTS.

BENSON J. LOSSING, L. L. D., Historian: "Like a Concave Mirror it reflects to a single focus an epitome of the essential elements of our national history, showing clearly at a glance the progress of the nation from its infancy to its present period of maturity."

A. R. SPOFFORD, Librarian of Congress: "The work may fairly be termed a breviary of American Politics."

AGENTS' REPORTS.

"Received sample; sold 8 maps first hour."
"Magnificent map; my boy sold 12 the first day."
"I sell 9 each day."
"I sold 6 maps in one hour."
"I have canvassed one-half day; took 18 orders."

The Latest U. S. Map, printed in colors, covers the entire back and is the best published. It alone sells for $5.00. The complete Reversible Map (printed on both sides) is 3 feet 10 inches by 5 feet 6 inches, mounted on rollers top and bottom, with tape on sides. These two maps sell separately for $10.00.

This GREAT DOUBLE MAP is sent by exprdss, prepaid, and safe delivery guaranteed, to any address in the U. S. It can be mailed, but is much safer by express. Name your nearest express office.

The money will be refunded to any one not perfectly satisfied after receiving the map. Understand fully, that all charges are prepaid by express or mail and safe delivery and perfect satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

OUR OFFER.—We will send a Map to any one sending us four subscribers for one year at $1 each. For $2 we will send a map and THE UNION SIGNAL for one year. Address all orders to WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASS'N, The Temple, Chicago.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES:
Infected Clothing ... 8
Men's Conventions vs. Women's ... 8
A Woman's Congress ... 8
The Children and Columbus ... 8
THE WATCH-TOWER ... 9
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Dedication Hymn. By A. A. Hopkins ... 2
Bill's Convert. By O. B. Bird, M. D. ... 2
An English Plea for Temperance Unity. By Rev. Canon Wilberforce ... 3
Our Great Arsenal. By Fanny H. Rastall ... 4
Fourth of July Again. By B. V. Cushman, M. D. ... 5
Where Shall we Keep Our Saloon? By Mary H. Hull ... 6
PRESIDENT'S COLUMN ... 6
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Canonized. By Warner Snoad ... 7
Dick Ellsworth's Grandfather. By Mrs. O. W. Scott ... 7
THE STILL HOUR ... 7
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
State Reporters—Missouri—Massachusetts—Oregon—Western Washington—New Jersey—Rhode Island Items—California—Michigan—Iowa—Minnesota—National Temperance Hospital Receipts ... 10, 11, 12, 13
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
To State and Territorial Presidents ... 13
Kindergarten Department ... 13
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, The Way of the World ... 14
The Temperance Show ... 14
Grandmother's Advice ... 14
England's Rulers ... 14
Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner—Soft-Shelled Nuts ... 14
CORRESPONDENCE:
What New Yorkers are Talking About—The War-Ship Texas Christened With Water—Wise Counsel for Prohibitionists—Important History ... 15
KERNELS ... 17
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ... 16, 17

Our Library Table.

SCIENCE IN THE KITCHEN, by Mrs. E. E. Kellogg, A. M. Mrs. Kellogg is chairman of the World's Fair committee on food for Michigan, and is superintendent of the school of cookery of Bay View Assembly, and also of the sanitarium school of cookery at Battle Creek, Michigan. The author has by great pains and patience reduced cooking to an art, eliminating all complicated and health-destroying recipes and giving instead, simple and scientific methods of preparing healthful dishes. One searches in vain through her "Bills of Fare for Every Day in the Year" for entrées, roasts and frys, but it is not to be doubted that the heartiest eaters will, notwithstanding, find therein abundant and appetizing supplies for the clamorous inner man. Dyspeptics, and people afflicted with the consciousness of the presence of digestive organs, will hail in this book a treasure-trove.

Health Pub. Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Perhaps there is no text book at once so abused and so persistently used as the reading book. When the new "Reader" is placed in the pupil's hands, first the pictures are examined, then the most exciting stories read, perhaps some of the poetry sampled, and the "dry" pieces unexceptionally "skipped." In a month or two the book presents a well-thumbed appearance, but its contents are pretty well mastered and the children read perforce. "Supplementary Readers" have been a source of help in providing new matter for the eager minds, and little by little thoughtful educators are putting on the market reading matter for schools that is at once interesting and instructive, and the facilities of which for awakening thought cannot be exhausted by the child's hasty trip through the book.

Messrs. Lee & Shepard, publishers, 10 Milk street, Boston, are issuing a series known as THE PICTURESQUE GEOGRAPHICAL READERS, by Charles F. King, principal of the Dearborn Grammar School, Boston. Book III, THE LAND WE LIVE IN, is now ready, and is a very attractive volume. It is continuous in style, the subjects of the chapters being brought up in conversation among the various members of a family—father, mother and children. Visits to manufacturing establishments elicit questions concerning products, machinery, manufactured articles, trade, etc. Journeys are taken to commercial centers, and government, citizenship and commerce are the themes of conversation. Teachers will find these readers helpful in their suggestiveness of topics for essays, and in the "new words" that must be learned in their perusal.

Constance Goddard du Bois, of Waterbury, Conn., is the author of a timely novel bearing the title of COLUMBUS AND BEATRIZ, in which she undertakes to make reparation for the historical calumny attached to the name of Columbus and his wife, Beatriz Enriquez, of the house of Arana. Whatever the strength of the writer's position, the story is in itself a beautiful one, though tinged throughout with a hue of sadness. While these Columbian days tend to do honor to the great navigator, there are at work unkindly souls who busy themselves in the search after condemning facts touching his life. The author of the above-named book has done a tactful thing in offsetting their efforts by her interesting, well-written, and reasonable narrative.

A. C. McClurg & Co., 117-121 Wabash Ave., Chicago, $1.

THE SABBATH FOR MAN, by Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts. This is the sixth edition of a book that has been before the public for seven years, doing noiseless but valiant battle for the observance of the Christian Sabbath. The present edition is a revision and enlargement of former issues, the author having re-enforced his army of facts, arguments and pleas, in view of the tug of war that is "on"—whether or no the World's Fair shall have closed gates on God's Holy Day. The book has been written "with special reference to the rights of workingmen, based on Scripture, literature and especially on a symposium of correspondence with persons of all nations and denominations." The author has crossed the continent six times in the seven years as a Sabbath reforming lecturer and organizer, and speaks with authority. The book aims chiefly at practical results, the suppression of Sunday work and Sunday dissipation, of Sunday mails, Sunday trains, Sunday newspapers, Sunday saloons. Numerous railroad managers are quoted as to Sunday trains, thirty-one of them saying there is no real obstacle to their complete suspension. A table of Sunday papers, by states, shows there is an average of one to each 180,000 people, which indicates that about one fourth of the families take such a paper. The author views the question from almost every known standpoint and destroys his opponents' strongest arguments.

The Baker and Taylor Co., 740 and 742 Broadway, New York City. Cloth, $1.50.

GOSPEL PICTURES IN BIBLE STORIES, by W. Y. Fullerton. Published by the American Tract Society, 150 Nassau St., New York City. Price, 60c.

Pictures are suggestive and illustrative. The author of the above book gives in it a series of plain talks on the spiritual life, drawing from the word-pictures of the Bible strong parallels in gospel truths, and impressing them on his readers by the aid of strong pictorial comparisons. A helpful book.

Henry Campbell Black, M. A., author of "Black's Law Dictionary," and other legal treatises, has just brought out from the West Publishing Company, St. Paul, Minn., a portly volume bound in calf and entitled, A TREATISE ON THE LAWS REGULATING THE MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS. The author aptly characterizes his book as a "useful tool" for the working lawyer. It is purely and solely a legal treatise, and aims to present an orderly and scientific arrangement of his subject, a clear and concise statement of its rules and principles, and an abundant but judicious citation of authorities. In the face of a great reform this book will be invaluable to those who may be called upon to prosecute or defend actions pertaining to the liquor traffic. Every form of legislation is here given, covering all the states, and every subject connected with the liquor side of the mighty question of the liquor traffic is set forth. Price, $6, or $6.30 delivered.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Then touched he their eyes saying, According to your faith be it unto you.—Matt. 9: 29.

From the very outset, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Portland, Mich., has been a staunch supporter of the Temple enterprise. She is president of the fifth district, Michigan, W. C. T. U., and through her efforts the district, consisting of four counties, pledged $500 for the Temple. Mrs. Benjamin has just sent a check for $200, to place the names of Ionia and Kent county unions on a tablet. Previous to this, $100 was sent for Allegan county, and $100 to place the name of the fifth district on the tablet, so there remains yet to come but $100 to complete this pledge, and Mrs. Benjamin writes, if she lives, this too will be paid soon. When the white-ribboners of the fifth district of Michigan come next summer to attend the Columbian Exposition, they will visit the Temple and Willard Hall with feelings of deep satisfaction; and when they view the tablet bearing the names of all their counties, beside names of many local unions, they, no doubt, will be filled with a pardonable pride, remembering how largely they have contributed toward the erection of the spacious and beautiful building. If all district presidents could be moved to follow Mrs. Benjamin's noble example, how the money would flow into the treasury. Mrs. Benjamin writes that $15 of the money sent was contributed by a dear old saint now "in glory," Miss Emeline Claflin, eighty-two years old. She took great interest in the Temple and was a devoted white-ribboner. At midnight a few days before her death she called to the bedside a faithful friend who was attending her and said she wanted to make a few gifts before her departure; of necessity they must be small. First of all she wanted to give $10 to the Ionia county pledge to the Temple, and $5 to her own union, the Saranac W. C. T. U. They requested that it might be added to the $10 she bequeathed to the Temple, knowing that this disposition of it would please her better than any other.

***

In a letter to Miss Willard Joseph Cook has this to say in regard to the Temple: "Congratulations on the 'House Beautiful!' It surpasses by far anything of its class at home or abroad!" Mrs. W. H. Munnell, state president of the W. C. T. U. of Kentucky, writes a very cheering letter in regard to the progress of raising money for the Temple in her state. She gives the following incident: "A whisky dealer said in a conversation with me, 'The Temple is one of the most beautiful buildings I ever saw,' and I concluded if it looked beautiful to such a person, it was certainly a realization of a fair vision to the women." What friends and foes alike agree upon must be an undisputed fact.

***

The following persons have each sent $1 to the Jennie Casseday tablet: Miss Mary L. Chase, Fall River, Mass.; Miss E. R. Fletcher, Dunstable, Mass., and the Fairport, N. Y., Y. W. C. T. U. The Missouri state W. C. T. U. has begun to raise $100, to place the name of their great and brave leader, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, on their tablet in Willard Hall. Mrs. Ellen Bronsen, Bolivar, Mo., sends $5 for this purpose from that union. The Y's of Nashua, N. H., send $10.50 on their pledge. Twenty-one dollars and fifteen cents come from the Irving Park, Ill., W. C. T. U., which completes their pledge of $100, and includes a full Baby Band raised by Mrs. Madison, who has been indefatigable in her work for the Temple, and was the moving spirit in securing the $100 of the Irving Park union. She has also given $100 personally, besides, has been a liberal purchaser of Temple Trust Bonds. By an oversight the following persons have not been credited with raising full Baby Bands: Mrs. I. A. Stout, Butte City, Montana, sends $15 for Baby Band and Cherub Band; she nobly says: "If my strength was as good as my will you would have received double this amount, but I find that the altitude will not allow me to walk very much." Miss S. L. Kuffel, Santa Ana, Cal., has the honor of raising a full Baby Band. The dear little editor of the Midget, Ethel Stout, Melbourne, Florida, has sent in a full Baby Band; this has been credited on the Mrs. Trego's tablet, making $60 paid on it.

***

The following will speak for itself: "By request thee will find an order for $100 from Henry Henley, of Carthage, Rush county, Ind., a veteran in his eighty-seventh year, who has been a leader in reforms for the welfare of humanity, and is keeping in touch with the great temperance work. He desires his name engraved on a tablet in Willard Hall as a memorial of his interest in the grand 'temperance movement.'" A brother in Chicago who desires that his left hand shall not know what his right hand doeth, sends a check for $100. Mrs. M. E. Wilson, Aurora, Ill., sends $20 on a pledge of $100. A noble brother from a little town in Wisconsin, whose income is less than $400 a year, and who does not desire his name mentioned, writes as follows: "Inclosed find $5 as a thank-offering to the Temple for your refusal to rent it for the sale of the vile weed."

***

A two cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box, descriptive card and bulletin; remember, all who fill a mite-box ($3.65) before next April will receive a photographic group consisting of Lady Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple. All drafts should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh. All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

Publisher's Notes.

JULY FOURTH PACKAGE.

A special literature package has been selected for use on July 4th, under request from workers. It will contain:

9 selected Timely Talks.
6 selected Signal Lights.
3 selected Gospel Lights.
9 Total Abstinence Leaflets.
10 General pledges.

This package will be sent on receipt of 10 cents; 12 packages for $1.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FOURTH OF JULY.

Requests have reached us that the issue of THE UNION SIGNAL for next week be suitable for distribution on July 4th, and that special rates be given for copies for free distribution. An effort will be made to meet this demand and copies can be secured for the purpose named at $1 per 100. Send orders at once.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

DO YOU WANT IT?

The fact is, that sentiment in favor of the principles which the W. C. T. U. was organized to extend can best be promoted by securing readers for the grand utterances in favor of the cause from the pens of leading thinkers as they appear in THE UNION SIGNAL. Anxious to accomplish the most possible in this campaign year, it has been decided to make the following offer to encourage the readers of this paper to extend its circulation.

To the person sending in the largest club of new subscribers, before September 1, 1892, we will send a copy of Miss Willard's famous book, "Glimpses of Fifty Years," or a copy of "Childhood, Its Care and Culture," as may be preferred by the club-raiser.

To the person securing the second largest club of new subscribers, we will send "The Temperance Movement," by H. W. Blair, or "A Classic Town," by Miss F. E. Willard.

The subscriptions must be annual at $1 each, ten per cent of which may be retained by the club raisers in addition to the books herein promised for services rendered in securing subscribers. All who compete will thus have some return for their labors.

Now let all see what can be done to promote the work in this direction.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, June 23, 1892. Number 25.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Two women have been elected to fellowship at Yale University.

President Harrison sent a message of condolence to ex-Secretary Blaine.

President Harrison was formally notified on Monday of his re-nomination for the presidency.

The Democratic convention visited the Columbian Exposition grounds in a body on Tuesday.

Cyclones in Southern Minnesota result in heavy damage to property, besides killing fifty people.

Count Herbert Bismarck was married at Vienna, June 21, to Countess Margaret Hoyos, of Austria.

The first session of the Democratic convention was held at Chicago, June 21. Committees were appointed and resolutions of sympathy for Mr. Blaine passed.

Emmons Blaine, the eldest son of James G. Blaine, died at his home in Chicago, June 18. Overwork at Minneapolis the preceding week, influencing his father's nomination, is the assigned cause.

The Second Presbyterian Church, of Chicago, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary on Sunday, June 19. At the time of its organization, Chicago had a population of only 6,000. In the half century it has grown to 1,200,000.

AND now comes the suggestion that Prohibitionists and People's party-ists choose the same presidential electors. This and kindred subjects will be considered at the Reformers' Conference, Cincinnati, June 28.

MISS SUSAN B. ANTHONY is in Chicago for the purpose of presenting the cause of woman before the Democratic convention now in session. She was given half an hour to speak before the resolutions committee of the Republican convention, and was received with marked courtesy and respect.

WE are glad to learn that America was outdone in the immediateness and amount of her contributions to Russia by other countries nearer by, the Society of Friends in England (always foremost in good works) having sent $165,000 between November and May, and every country in Europe, save one, subscribed something for the famine sufferers. Blessed be brotherhood!

THE fourth International Congress on the Abuse of Alcoholic Liquors is announced officially to be held at The Hague, Holland, on September 8, 9 and 10, 1892. From the American point of view all beverage use of alcoholic liquors is an abuse, but we suppose our benighted brethren of continental Europe would better meet under such a call than not to meet at all, at all.

MRS. LUCY SWITZER, our veteran pioneer on the Puget Sound coast, has resigned the presidency of Washington W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Anna C. Singer, of Spokane, has been chosen in her stead. Mrs. Singer is the wife of a Congregational minister and a woman of fine abilities and education. Mrs. Switzer has been a heroine and we believe that we shall some day sing the same song of her tuneful successor.

THE good news comes from Paris that trailing street gowns are little worn. Worth, the famous Paris modiste, has declared against them. Among his customers are the Empress of Russia and the Queens of Portugal and Italy, therefore, it is quite likely that the great army of women who follow on in the wake of such famous personages and dutifully wear what they wear will ere long leave off the filthy fag-ends of their dresses, although philosophy, science and other reasonable considerations would have but little weight.

THE two chief prizes of Northwestern University, Evanston (which had in all departments over two thousand three hundred students this year) are the Kirk prize for oratory, and the Bragdon prize for general scholarship. Both were taken by young women—Misses Nettie J. Hunt and Cora Monnier Rawlins. Mrs. Potter Palmer and our World's and National W. C. T. U. President were elected trustees of the Northwestern University, June 15. Lyman Gage, the famous financier, was also chosen to the post of trustee.

IT is now quite certain that Mrs. Mary B. Willard and her daughter Mary will sail for home early in August, reaching Evanston about August 15. Mrs. Willard is at present en route in Norway and Sweden with a party of young ladies from her Home School, these vacation and summer trips forming a very delightful and desirable feature of Mrs. Willard's plan for her young ladies. Miss Katherine Willard, who has been spending the past year in Baltimore is now at Rest Cottage, where she expects to pass the summer. Mrs. Willard will remain in this country until September 15, when she will return to Berlin accompanied by the young ladies so fortunate as to enter her Home School. Among the pupils already enrolled for next year is a daughter of Mr. Samuel Clemens, "Mark Twain." As Mr. and Mrs. Clemens have been in Berlin during the past year, they have had ample opportunity to become thoroughly acquainted with the home life and study of the school.

THE Twilight Club of New York City, answering to our Sunset Club in Chicago, has recently discussed Sunday and the saloon. We quote some of the points: "The saloon is not an American institution; ninety per cent of the saloon-keepers are foreigners: there is a growing prejudice in employing sober men even to attend bars. It is absurd that a man cannot draw up a legal contract on Sunday, while the saloon-keeper is permitted to open and pursue his business. The saloon is born of the devil, and is a menace to society. The alleged right to sell liquor and create drunkards who commit crimes is preposterous. The saloon is called the poor man's parlor, but the fact is, that except for the demoralizing influence of the saloon the poor man might have a parlor of his own." We are sorry to say that the majority of the speakers seemed, in spite of all the points they made against it, to favor a continental rather than an American Sabbath. One of the worst results of foreign travel is the un-Americanizing of our people.

THE Fresh Air Fund of the Chicago Daily News is again brought before the public and all good people will be glad to subscribe. Its method is to secure a "country week" for the children and mothers and for poor working young women who need it most, by interesting kind-hearted men and women to canvass among their neighbors on farms or in village homes persuading them to invite two little children or a mother and infant or a couple of working girls to each home for a two weeks' visit. No salaries are paid and thus what money is given or homes are secured amounts to just so much clear gain. The Chicago Daily News has inaugurated the enterprise and has also established the Lincoln Park Sanitarium for sick little babies or those who are delicate, on the lake shore on the margin of our greatest park. For every two dollars sent to the Chicago News a two weeks' outing is guaranteed to some girl or boy, sewing or shop girl, or mother and child. We wish that this movement might be taken up by some newspaper in every large city and are glad to do what we can to speed a work that could never have been carried out in any country that was not permeated with the gospel of Him who said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto me." The pressing need just now is the opening of country homes for these children; one immediate call is for a home for two weeks for two deserving young women.

MISS WILLARD goes to Cincinnati June 26, for attendance upon the Prohibition convention which meets in that city June 29 and 30. She will preside over a mass temperance meeting Sunday afternoon in Central Music Hall, which holds ten thousand people. This convention will have 1,191 accredited delegates, the largest number of any national political convention held in the United States this year.

IT is suggested by Mrs. Moots, superintendent of evangelistic work in Michigan, that the National W. C. T. U. have a flag of its own, and that it consist of the banner of our native land with one large white star in the center of the blue field, to represent the state of Wyoming, the only commonwealth on the face of the earth that has given to women the same powers in the government by which they are controlled, that it has given to man. At a recent election in Michigan the W. C. T. U. flung out such a banner on election day from its headquarters, and it proved to be a most suggestive object lesson. We believe that such a flag would be the best sort of advertisement of our conventions,—national, state, district and county—and would make any amount of helpful sentiment. If this suggestion strikes our members favorably, they will, of course, feel perfectly free to act upon it.

VERY calmly and quietly men reply, when we speak of a prohibitory law: "It cannot be enforced." What does that mean? Anarchy. If a majority of voters say that liquor shall be outlawed, and we cannot outlaw it, the meaning is, that there is a power greater than the people's will—that there is a monopolist greater than Vanderbilt or Gould—one that muzzles the press and boycotts the home. It means that the greatest capitalist in this country is the liquor capitalist, and that we are willing to stand by and let it have control. Shall we then rivet the chains, by the apathetic citizens' confession so strong already that they cannot be cast off; shall we rivet these chains still more tightly by a high license decree, which brings more money than before into the coffers of our masters? "Woe unto them who call evil good and good evil, who put darkness for light and light for darkness."

WE have lately had an interview with Mr. H. R. Thornton, one of the two heroic young men who established the mission at Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska. His account of the havoc being wrought among the natives of Alaska by liquor is heart-rending. Naturally they are a peaceable, docile race, learning eagerly, the children out stripping New England pupils of the same age, but liquor transforms them into fiends. Their abject poverty is something beyond our comprehension, and liquor dealing whalers are the cause of it. The Esquimau's harvest is his bundle of furs, the fruit of a hard year's hunting. His only means of disposing of them is through the whalers. He takes them to the ship and the whaler agrees to give him, say, about fifty dollars less than their value, but he has no recourse. Of this fifty dollars he must take thirty dollars in whisky, vile stuff which cost in San Francisco five dollars at the utmost. This leaves twenty dollars for the necessaries of life, and for them, like exorbitant prices are exacted, so that the poor man returns with not more than ten or fifteen dollars worth of goods as the result of a year's work, and a stock of whisky surcharged with fusel oil. The whaler makes at least five hundred per cent on his investment; no wonder he and his co rascals on shore are ready to shoot down the missionary who dares to interfere with their nefarious traffic. The worst feature of the case is that the agents of government seem in league with the law breakers. A government ship is sent up to Alaska every year, ostensibly to prevent this illicit traffic, but it is a significant fact that every year it fails to come till two or three weeks after the main fleet of whalers has passed northward, leaving death and destruction in their wake. Has not a Christian nation something to do to stop this accursed traffic?

DEDICATION HYMN.

For the W. C. T. U. Temple at Harriman, Tenn., April 13, 1892.

BY A. A. HOPKINS.

I wonder did the fairies dream,
When here so long they dwelt supreme,
That one day there should rise
A temple, built with willing hand
At Love's divinest own command,
In proof that Love is wise?

What sweeter wisdom could there be
Than this that tells, to you and me,
Of tender, human touch
Upon the erring lives of men,
To win them to their best again
With loving them so much?

What sweeter wisdom than to teach
The tender hearts of them that reach
The hands of Childhood up,
How glad the ministries that glow
For every thirsty soul we know
In life's one crystal cup?

What sweeter wisdom than to lead,
With Love your only law and creed,
The hearts of young and old
Along the winsome path of Right,
Your banner but a blossom white,
And Love your leader bold?

The sweetest wisdom men have known,
In silent walls of wood and stone
Its helpful speech has found;
For often there, such walls within,
Men come, from walking ways of sin,
To stand on holy ground.

Within these walls we dedicate
May some souls linger, coming late
To seek Love's better way,
Until they feel the touch of Christ,
And, sweetly evermore enticed,
No longer sin or stray.

Here let the sweetest songs be sung
That ever thrilled from human tongue—
Till waiting ones may hear
Some echo of the strains that ring
Where angels wait, and, waiting, sing,
Their carols glad and clear!

Here let the hands of Faith reach out
To some who grope in dark and doubt
And lead them to the light;
Here may the touch of Faith be strong
To heal them sick of sin and wrong,
And bless the blind with sight.

Here let the woes of God outring
On all who bane for blessing bring
To curse the sons of men;
Here let His words against the wine,
In which the eyes of serpent's shine,
Be living words again!

Here let God's lightning wrath be swift
To smite them who for gain or gift
Would barter human souls;
Here may the fires of human speech
Flame out and blister all in reach
Who take from sin its toils!

Here let the statesman come and learn
How states may wisely make return
To those who brood the State—
To motherhood, upon whose breast
The waiting generations rest
With all their solemn fate!

Here let them come who fain would build
Our future, where the law fulfilled
Is only, always, Love;
Here be the secret understood,
That men must rule for motherhood
All baser things above!

That law must ever guard and bless
The home in watchful righteousness,
And all the weak defend;
Or justice, rising in her wrath,
Will smite the rulers from her path,
To make divine amend!

Rochester, N. Y.

BILL'S CONVERT.

BY O. B. BIRD, M. D.

"Bill, ye may argify all day, and ye can't git them words out o' the Bible where it says 'wine that maketh glad the heart of man,' and 'give strong drink to the heavy hearted,' and 'use a little wine fer yer stomach's sake,' and 'give strong drink to him that is ready to perish,' and more of the same kind, which I'd find fer ye if I wasn't in such a hurry to git that hay in from the south medder."

"Perhaps not, father; but if you had a month to spare and should ransack the Bible, fly-leaves and covers, you could not get rid of the words that say 'woe to them that follow strong drink,' 'woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink,' 'the drunkard shall come to poverty,' 'strong drink is raging,' 'look not upon the wine,' and many more, all pronouncing the severest condemnation."

"Thass so, Bill; the Bible seems to say both ways, and although I don't believe in saloons, and ain't much of a drinker myself, I don't see why I mayn't as well take one side as the other."

"I know, father, and I confess I am puzzled. A short time before I left the Normal school, the graduating class took up alcohol, in chemistry; but we did not touch upon the Bible attitude."

"Wal, the Bible suits me very well; and as long as one verse is as good as another, I don't see how you can upset mine even if you do offset 'em with some on the other side."

"But I think there is a way, and that the Bible is right and altogether on the side of temperance, and perhaps even total abstinence. At any rate, I shall improve the first opportunity to post myself."

"All right, Bill, learn all you can. Now let's tackle this hay."

That evening the weekly paper arrived, and "Bill"—otherwise William H. Newberry, aged twenty-two, graduate of the state Normal school, son of Farmer Newberry, studying to fit himself for teaching—came upon a notice of a lecture by a woman, entitled "The Bible on Wine," to be given at the village, four miles distant, a few evenings later. When the time arrived, he rode to the village on horseback, provided with paper and pencil, and determined to take full notes.

The lecture was just what such lectures are almost sure to be since the women came to the front with their sharp wits and mountains of argument. That is, it was quiet and graceful in delivery, intensely earnest and unanswerable in the positions taken. William was entranced. He learned in one hour more than he could have collected for himself in a week. Being a rapid writer, he noted every main point and many of the details. He also spoke to the lady after the meeting, readily obtaining permission to copy her lists of Bible references, and when he returned home, felt that he could do more than "offset" his father's verses.

The next day proved to be rainy, and as the "south medder" was cleared of hay, and the other work well in hand, Farmer Newberry was very willing to hear William's account of the lecture. After breakfast and a drop of gin, he seated himself in a broad-armed rocker on the veranda, and said, "Now, Bill, sail in and tell us what she said. Lem'me hear how she got over the 'wine fer yer stomach's sake' and 'strong drink to him that is ready to perish.'"

The young man brought his Oxford Bible, and placing it on the corner of his mother's out-door work-table, sat down facing his father and began.

"Well, father, I am not puzzled any longer. I believe every word she said, and I cannot help thinking you will agree with her when I have told you what I can of her lecture."

"Never mind that, Bill; just go on with yer lecture."

"She began by saying that the Bible condemns wine in the strongest terms and also praises wine."

"Solid so far. That's what we were saying the other day."

"But then, if the Bible is as good a book as we think it is, or even a good book at all, there cannot be such inconsistencies in it, and so we find ourselves, at the very outset, obliged to think that there must be some other explanation."

"Yes, I see that; and I own I have thought less of the Bible jest on account o' them conterdictions."

"Well, the explanation is easy enough when we find it, and I only wonder I never thought of it myself. You know, the Bible was written in languages not now in general use—the Old Testament in Hebrew, the New in Greek—and our Bible is a translation: and a translation is not always perfectly true to the original meaning."

"Why not? Can't they tell what the writers meant?"

"Sometimes not, and sometimes there is a doubt, and sometimes there are two or three meanings to the same word, and sometimes—I suppose I ought not to say it—but I almost feel as if they translated wrong on purpose."

"Two or three meanings to the same word! Why, didn't they have a word for each thing as we do?"

"I think they did, as we do. Take our word mean, it is used for ignoble, middle and intention, with the same spelling; and there are three ways of spelling it, so that we are often obliged to decide the meaning by the way it is used."

"Jess so; but how about the translations not saying what the writers meant?"

"Well, when we examine the original writings, we find that there are nine different words used in the Hebrew, that are all translated by the word wine. This is the key to the explanation. The words themselves, and the connection in which they are used, show that something besides intoxicating liquor was often meant. In fact, there are several places where the word used does not mean anything liquid at all, and yet is given in our book as wine. This is the kind that seem almost to have been done intentionally. And when they do mean wine, they do not always mean intoxicating wine, as there were two kinds."

"Two kinds! Why, they have twenty or fifty kinds, nowdays."

"Yes, I know, and perhaps they had several varieties then. I mean one general class that was intoxicating, and one that was not. I said there were nine words used in Hebrew that were translated wine; but two will suffice for those who do not study the language: Tirosh, meaning grapes, clusters or unfermented fruit of the vine, always something good; and Shechar, which always meant something bad. In other words, Tirosh was a blessing, and Shechar a curse. In the Hebrew Bible Tirosh is never condemned, and Shechar is never commended."

"Hold on, Bill, and twist that around; how then?"

"Well, without knowing anything about the Hebrew, we can see that Tirosh is commended by its very meaning, while Shechar is condemned for the same reason,—as with our words good and evil, possession and destitution, etc."

"Wal, if there really was two words, and one was used for praise and the other for blame, why, it stands to reason there must ha' been two kinds o' wine."

"Yes, and so it is. She gave a long list of names of eminent Bible scholars who say emphatically that there was something not intoxicating which is referred to in the original writings."

"'Something?' Wasn't it wine?"

"Why, no, not always; and that makes it the more remarkable that the translators should give it as wine. There are thirty-eight places where Tirosh is used, in some of which it refers to grapes, raisins, or dried fruit. For example, in Deuteronomy 14:22, 'Thou shalt eat the tithe of thy corn and wine,' the word Tirosh is used, where it was to be eaten."

"That don't sound much like alcoholic liquor, sure. Guess I never noticed that verse."

"And there are many more with similar meaning. Of the thirty-eight times the word is used, seven are in connection with corn, as in the verse I just read, while in nineteen cases it is used with both corn and oil, as a regular article of cultivation."

"Bill, jest run over them figures again; I don't quite take 'em all in."

"Certainly. Tirosh is used in the Hebrew Scriptures thirty-eight times. In thirty four of the thirty-eight it is associated with corn, oil, or summer fruits, and sometimes spoken of as if to be eaten; and yet our Bible gives it 'wine' twenty six times, and 'new wine' twelve times."

"Can you find these places, so as to see fer yerself?"

"Yes, the lady let me copy a long list of references, after her lecture."

"Wal, don't stop now fer that, but wait fer longer evenings; jest go on with your report."

"There is no objection to the word wine itself, but to the meaning so generally attached to it. Many people insist that it always means fermented or intoxicating liquor. And on this account it would be much better if there were several words in the translation, so that we might know exactly what is meant."

"Yes, I think so, too."

"There are some places where the mere thought of intoxicating liquor is sacrilege, as Isaiah 55:1, 'Ho, every one that thirsteth;' and 62:9, 'shall drink in the courts of my holiness.' The bare idea of having these refer to intoxicating liquor seems like a profanation of all that is good and true."

"Is that the place where it says, 'come and buy wine and milk without money or price?'"

"Yes, Isaiah 55:1."

"Wal, I never thought before of that place meaning liquor that would make drunk. Guess it must mean something else, there."

"Of course it does, and in many other places. And then, if neither of these words meant grapes, raisins, or fresh juice, there is no word that did refer to those things. This fact of itself is almost an unanswerable argument."

"Why, yes, I can see that. Of course they'd have some word for those things."

"And if anything more were necessary, we have it in the writings of Pliny (born A. D. 23) where he speaks of 'wine' two centuries old, and thick as honey. Of course fermented wine could not be thick.

"And another writer (Athenæus) tells of a 'wine' in Egypt that had to be dissolved little by little in water, as Attic honey.

"And Aristotle (B. C. 384) says 'wines' dried up in goat skins, and had to be scraped off and dissolved in water."

"That sounds well. Now tell me about the 'stomach's sake,' and 'ready to perish.'"

"It says 'stomach's sake and thine often infirmities.' He was a sick man, in various ways; and Paul, anticipating the grape cure of to-day, advised him to drink grape juice, precisely as a physician of to-day would do. At any rate, she said, it was more reasonable to give this explanation than to think Paul meant you, when your stomach is well and strong.

"And Solomon was doing the same thing when he said 'give beef-tea or similar strong drink to him that is ready to perish.' And when the people laughed, she asked, in the drollest way, 'Isn't that more reasonable than to suppose Solomon meant you, when you are not ready to perish?' And then we all laughed and applauded."

"So would I. D'ye think she meant to say that the strong drink spoken of was not intoxicating liquor?"

"No, for she spoke more seriously and said that Solomon was as good a physician as many of the present day, even if he did recommend liquor for a desperate case; and that it was no excuse for healthy people to drink. Also that the negative meaning was probably as important as the affirmative, namely, Do not give strong drink to those who are not ready to perish."

"And she was right! Now about the wine at the wedding."

"The word used is kalon, and it is the same word that Jesus used when speaking of the tree that brought forth good fruit. And He never said wine, but always fruit of the vine. But even if we admit that the words—well, admitting that the words used leave the case evenly balanced as to fresh grape-juice and intoxicating liquor, the scale is easily turned by asking whether Jesus would be likely to furnish a liquor to make the company drunk, instead of a delicious and health giving beverage, such as He is making in all the grapes as they grow; and I do not think any one would be long in—"

"Bill, that's enough! After this when I hear of Bible wine, I'll first find out what kind is meant, before I think of a lot of drunken, sprawling patriarchs. But how about the other kind of wine, the kind that makes folks drunk?—if they take too much, which I don't."

"There's plenty of condemnation for that, as we all know; seventy-one texts against it in the Hebrew scriptures, five of them requiring total abstinence; terrible denunciations everywhere; and woe pronounced upon those who make others drunk; but there was not time to consider both sides in one lecture.

"And then, the principal reason these women have for looking up this question is to show that the word wine, when used with bread for communion, does not necessarily mean intoxicating liquor."

"Look a here, Bill, do they use regular liquor in churches?"

"Nearly all churches did use fermented wine until the last few years. Now that the women have taken up the matter, many have abolished it, and the prospect is that very soon nearly all will follow."

"I declare! I never thought before of liquor in the church! Why, they'd be wanting a drink up in heaven! I ain't no church member, but if I wanted to be one, I wouldn't go where they'd hold liquor under my nose. Why, if a man should swear off, and get a taste in church, it might knock his new leaf resolutions higher'n a kite."

"Yes, that is precisely what has occurred in many cases, and is what the women are trying to prevent."

"Let 'em do it! And I'd help 'em if I could."

And then he dropped his voice and asked, in a hesitating manner, "Bill, d'ye s'pose my takin' a drop now and then, when I don't feel well, or want it fer some other reason,—d'ye s'pose anybody, that is, d'ye think any one else would be led to—to take more'n he ought to?"

"Well, father, I did not intend to mention the matter, but I did overhear a remark last evening that made me wish your example was on the side of total abstinence. Neighbor Smith whispered to the man at his side that he guessed he could take a little if old Newberry could."

"Did Smith say that? Why, he's half drunk every few days. If he follows my example in drinking, I wonder if he'd follow me if I'd stop. Maybe I could help him, and save his wife and children from a lot of trouble." And with a resounding whack on the arm of his chair, while his voice melted into reverent determination, he exclaimed, "Bill, write out the strongest kind of a pledge and hand it to me I'll sign it and keep it, and try to save Smith."

Vineland, N. Y.

Every one we see pass by, and every face into which we look, has the same interests at stake that we have.—Mary T. Willard.

AN ENGLISH PLEA FOR TEMPERANCE UNITY.

BY REV. CANON WILBERFORCE.

One word has been ringing in my heart ever since I entered this hall. It came to me as I walked up those multitudinous steps leading to this room: "The Lord shall deliver Sisera into the hands of a woman." Whether it is the Sisera of opium or the Sisera of drink, God is going to deliver him into the hands of a woman. The very atmosphere of this hall is the promise of it in God's own good time; why, it is redolent of the prayers of women. This day something like thirty women have raised up their voices in this hall, and prayer has been going up with their voices, and the power of God is bound to come down.

I throw myself upon your mercies, in that I am the only poor, unfortunate male biped on a platform presided over by a woman, and—manned, I was going to say—womaned by speakers who are brought from that sex which constitutes our vote-makers, our home-makers, our happiness-makers, our home-rulers, and it is impossible for a man to stand and speak in the midst of his intellectual and spiritual superiors in that way. But if I am not able to teach, I know how to learn, and especially from those who have gained a nearer touch with the Master than I myself.

If I understand the object of this meeting, it is that we may consider the position of one branch of that all-spreading temperance movement which is to drive its roots deep down into every land in the world. I think we have great reason to thank God and take courage. Looking at the temperance movement from the personal and individual point of view, one is likely to be discouraged. Every individual woman, in searching her own work, seeing the pledges broken, the ruined homes, the hopeless lives, the despairing deaths, may find her heart almost crushed, and imagine that there is no progress. But look at the universal aspect of the movement; then you will see what ground has been gained, and thank God with all your heart. If you stand on the rocks and look out to sea you cannot see the tide rising; but look behind you; the great stones are being covered stealthily and steadily by the shining waters.

Though we are confronted with the almost always increasing drink bill, though we meet with disappointments in our individual work, yet there is a change coming over the whole of the known world in the direction of temperance. I have been attending a meeting this afternoon in Grosvenor House, presided over by the Duke of Westminster, and there a large number of earnest men and women were met to consider the awful scandal of sending out the gospel to foreign countries side by side with drink. I cannot help thinking that instead of fulfilling its destiny as foreshadowed in the words, "Ye are the salt of the earth," the Anglo-Saxon race is qualifying to be called the poison of the earth. When the duke pointed to a large map of Africa showing a line which indicated a protected zone where no intoxicating liquors might be sold, he filled me with covetousness and I said, "I hope we shall live to see that line reaching from Mashonaland to Hyde Park Corner." [Applause.]

I should fall into the mistake of making a speech if I attempted to point out the different directions in which progress is evident. In the scientific, legislative, social, and in almost every single plane we owe a great deal of our progress to the persistent resistance we have met. In the scientific side we cannot tell yet how much we owe to the resistance of one doctor, whose name ought to be enshrined in the heart of every temperance worker—Dr. Mortimer Granville. [Laughter and applause.] He went to the East End of London and delivered a lecture in which he proved that we teetotalers were not teetotalers at all, for there was alcohol in everything, and we were bound to take a certain quantity of alcohol in every loaf of bread we ate. "If you do not drink it," said he, "you eat it." After reading that I could not help recalling the answer given by a wise countryman who went to hear a lecture on latent heat. He was told that heat was everywhere, that even in a piece of ice there was latent heat which friction would bring out. "If that be so," he remarked, "will you kindly tell us exactly how many snowballs it will take to boil a kettle?" [Laughter.] I give Dr. Granville exactly the same answer when he says we teetotalers eat alcohol with our bread. The more we can spread that kind of alcohol consumption the better, and the greater and the happier our land will be. [Applause.] I would ask him, How many loaves of bread will it take to make a man drunk? [Laughter.]

Literally we have made more progress in the last two or three years than in all the previous fifty years. Certainly it has been so from the legislative point of view, though I ought not to speak about that to-night. But I deeply regret that the holy work of temperance reform should have fallen into the hands of one great party in the state. We ought to be able to work on that magnificent utterance: "We have no parties in our movement, no sectionism in our politics, no sectarianism in our religion, no sex in our constituency." [Applause.] But as is known in this country there are people who have the franchise who are beginning to perceive that a government which is so busy in protecting hares and rabbits, ought to busy itself in protecting the women and children of this land; and if it is not an interference with individual liberty to prevent a man from shooting a rabbit in his own cabbage garden, then surely it is not an unwarranted interference to place difficulties in the way of his drinking that which causes him to kill wife and children! [Applause.]

It is coming. This World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union is helping to bring it about. I don't want to keep you all night to tell you of the change socially. In the old days total abstainers were scoffed at, and we almost had to apologize for drinking water; now we find constantly people murmuring something like an apology for drinking wine in our presence. The change is coming slowly and steadily, and when we are beginning to be disheartened in our individual effort, we must look to the change that is taking place all over the world, take courage and thank God. Nowhere is there greater evidence of progress than in the direction of this particular association. I would like if I could to take a golden peg out of the inimitable utterances of God, that I might hang an exhortation upon it. As I think of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union I remember these words of our blessed Lord when He said: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal till the whole was leavened"; and I say, unite a magnificent prophecy to the work of hope here to-night; see in it an unfolding of God's own method of redeeming and purifying this world.

I look at the magnificent text and see its deepest and most spiritual signification in Him whose mother was the representative of everlasting motherliness, Almighty God. Woman on earth is the representation and embodiment of love: no love so heroic, so tender, so self sacrificing, so clinging, as a woman's love, and it is just a note of that love which no language can describe. "He so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son." I see the three measures of meal in the three-fold nature of man, in the spirit, soul and body, and the leaven is represented in the Divinity that stirs within us. The Divine nature of God Himself is implanted in every man just as the germ is implanted in every seed. It is only waiting to be called into activity as the seed waits to be called into being by the sun and the rain.

Women are the ones that we men have been sometimes accustomed to call the weaker sex. I do not know why we did so unless it were that we might keep them down before they were heard. In what were they weaker? Tennyson has dared to say, "Woman the lesser man." But he pointed out the only single case in which woman is weaker than man. She is weaker in her animal appetites in proportion as she is stronger in spiritual development. Therefore, when we can see woman, the sex, taking this sacred leaven and putting it into the three measures of meal for suffering humanity all over the world, then we grasp the meaning of that splendid promise, "Till the whole is leavened." Shall any man dare stand in the way of the irresistible mandate of the All Father? If He says you shall go on, is it not an encouragement to you, in whatever department of this great battle you are fighting? You have the Eternal Power on your side and nothing can beat you. You are not weaker because you have all the power of the hidden Christ within you.

Mark what a magnificent motto this is! It is the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. What for? To win the world for Christ and for temperance. That is the biggest word in the whole language, that word Christ. Never dare to crystallize it down into one small. narrow definition. When you go out bringing it back to Christ you are teaching the world that God loves it; that His heart is poured out constantly in strength for the sake of the world, and if you put that word first and temperance second, you are on the road to victory, for you are keeping yourself in communication with the Master. Only organize and work, believing in your power; look upon yourselves as high priestesses of humanity, believing that you are ordained of God, not necessarily by the laying on of hands, but in that splendid order of Melchisedec, which is the secret consecration of the Holy Ghost, and that power will carry you through every difficulty. Failure has nothing to do with the God whom you serve.

What we have got to do is to pray to Him constantly that we may have the mouth of wisdom. Some people, you know, have the mouth and no wisdom, while others have wisdom but no mouth. Those wise people who won't speak when we are asking God to give us both, ought to see that the prayer is answered.

Just another reason why you should organize. There must be a combination so that you may be a counteracting influence to other organizations of your sex which may be working against that which you believe to be the coming of the kingdom of heaven. I never like to introduce controversial subjects, but I cannot refrain from referring to a letter by a great lady of this land, addressed to a branch of the Primrose League and printed in the Times. I think it is very important. I am not going to introduce politics; I have not got any. My only politics is "For God and the people." [Applause.] But this noble lady says—and I want you to notice it—that a general election is coming on and that everybody has to do his utmost to support candidates who will maintain the integrity of the empire; that the other party—that is you and me—are going about the country making ridiculous promises to get votes, and she only hopes the work of such men (as myself and some others) will react upon their own heads.

Well, now, this domineering, reactionary twaddle is of no weight and value except as coming from the pedestal of the writer. I just want you to notice this. If there is a vast multitude fed with such mental pabulum as this, how intensely necessary that you shall organize yourselves to counteract that influence. God's way of meeting every evil tendency is to counteract it with a higher tendency. You know you have a lower tendency within you. All your natural man, as represented by your various appetites, tends to draw you away from God, and you have a higher nature which is to be lifted up in the power and love of God to counteract the lower, and thus you grow ever nearer and nearer to Christ.

Whilst I would not introduce a single political thought upon any consideration, I say, the mere fact of that being in the Times newspaper, is the justification of your union. "Integrity of the Empire!" Why what mere paltry, political froth to dare to use that word "integrity," that high and noble word, as though it merely referred to some such trivial question as the rectification of a frontier, the filling of an exchequer, or the repair of an armament! The word means nothing if it does not mean the integrity of the home, the purity, the love, the happiness; [applause]; and I do venture to say that the W. W. C. T. U. will do more for the "integrity of the empire," will more promote the happiness and welfare of our sovereign lady and her dominions than all the habitations of the Primrose League rolled into one. I have no politics at all; I only want you to understand this: If there is a vast female organization which goes solid for the drink traffic, we want a powerful organization which is on its knees in prayer; which knows how to put God first, and all personal considerations second, to counteract that influence in the nation; which by propaganda in the newspaper, by its utterances on the platform, by its influence in domestic and social life, will endeavor to undo the mischief done by such utterances as these.

I have only this one thing more, and that is, I heard our noble president say, "Federation is in the air"; we want it to be somewhere else than in the air. We want it to be in practical application in daily life; we want to see all the splendid remedial agencies in the world, which are helping forward the coming of the kingdom of heaven, in a close heart-union all round the world. We waste an enormous amount of force by not being concentrated at one point. I spent the whole of one afternoon with Sir Arthur Blackwood in the postoffice. He called me to the cable chamber. I could have stayed there until now. There you have one single center and, as it were, the voice of the whole world is being heard in that room. All the activities of the world going on just the same without interference, but all center there in the cable room. We want to have a cable room for all this splendid work that is going on for the Woman's Temperance Unions all over the world.

Now do not let any insular, national prejudice hinder you from casting in your lot with the work in that magnificent country on the other side of the sea. America has taught us many lessons. It has entirely condoned having sent us all those mixed drinks with such dreadful names as "Sampson with his hair on"—it has condoned all sins by some of the most splendid reforms that the world has ever seen. At the present moment it is the heart and soul of the temperance reform movement of the world. It is very easy to say that prohibition in America is altogether a mistake and a failure; Lady Henry Somerset knows it is not so. [Applause.] She has been, as I have been, to that sacred spot in the state of Maine, and has seen what call "the spirits in prison," where all the drink seized is put by for a certain time, and then once a month solemnly poured down the town sewer, whence it finds its way out to sea. That was a glorious sight for a weatherbeaten teetotaler like myself, and I regarded it as a kind of prototype and prophecy of what will one day happen in poor, unhappy Great Britain as soon as we understand that we, too, want our children and women protected. Every single branch of this union, which has its bewildering perplexity of banners all round the room, should be affiliated with the great central work in America. Then we should have in every part of this country and others, a central depot where information could be obtained, whence speakers could be sent out to do work, and whence literature could be circulated; where every branch of philanthropic work, which is really started by the power of God in Christ, would find a home and find support. It is not necessary for me to point that out, or to emphasize it, because your president has come back from America red hot with information on the subject. I speak very humbly under the presidency of Lady Henry Somerset, but I very strongly recommend the affiliation of all these branches of Christian work to the great central cause that now girdles the world. The sun never sets on the World's W. C. T. U's; that bit of white ribbon binds them all over the universe. I hope and trust this very interesting week of philanthropy shall have such a consummation as will unite our women's work in this country to that great central work in America.

W. T. P. A. JOB ROOM, NO. 42.

W. T. P. A. COMPOSING ROOM, NO. 43.

OUR GREAT ARSENAL.

BY FANNY H. RASTALL.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association has not deserted the familiar rooms at 161 La Salle street. Here still may be found the printing department where are manufactured the supplies sent out in response to letters and orders "passed on" by the busy clerks in the Temple. Just step into the elevator, and we will show you where this is done. Stop at the third floor, turn to the left toward the front of the building, and at the end of the hall find on the one side room No. 42, on the other room No. 43. The first named is the job office and the office of the superintendent of printing. You see him standing by his desk, near which is that of his assistant, the artist, a young lady who prepares many of the illustrations used in the office, and just by is the private telephone which has immediate connection with the Temple. Beyond the row of cabinets containing type, is the busy force of workmen in this department, actively executing orders for commercial and job printing. To the rear of this room is another used for storing some of the many supplies kept in stock, and near the entrance is the telephone closet, communicating with the business world outside.

Now cross the hall and look into room 43, where W. C. T. U. ammunition is produced. To the extreme right as you enter is THE UNION SIGNAL force, whose skillful fingers make it possible for you to read the words of wisdom written by the brilliant editorial corps and notable contributors to its columns. A little nearer is the rack of galleys containing the list of names of subscribers to this paper in charge of a compositor, who, with an assistant, is kept constantly busy making changes on this list, now adding a name, altering a date, or removing perhaps one who for some reason "discontinues." Five tons of type are used in this list. To your left and in front is the department where are put in type the Oak and Ivy Leaf, The Young Crusader, the Sunday School Supplement, the Monthly Bible Readings, Responsive Readings, all our books and leaflets, Our Day, The Kindergarten, Unity and other journals, as also the National Minutes, the World's Minutes and more things of like character. Such a bee hive as this is! Snugly divided from them in the corner room are the proof-readers, always scanning carefully the printed page to see that no error creeps in.

Return to the hall and pass the elevators. Just beyond is 47—the shipping room. Shelves piled with ammunition (ideas) ready for use. This is where completed work comes to be cared for until shipped. The shipping-clerk receives all orders from the clerks in the Temple, and with his assistants checks out and sends the same, keeping an accurate book-record and rendering monthly reports to the manager.

He can furnish you books, leaflets, music, papers, booklets—everything listed in the catalogue, and a catalogue too so that selections can be wisely made.

This is not all. Follow on to the rear elevator. The front elevators do not go to the basement and we must to complete investigation. It requiries more than type-setting to make books and papers ready for the shipping-room. Turn through this door to the left and go as far as you can. This is the press room—ten presses in motion. All printing is done here except THE UNION SIGNAL. This press is busy printing Our Day; another, Kindergarten; on that are sixteen pages of a book; here, flower mission cards; others are printing envelopes, tablets or badges, and each "press feeder" is attending to his own especial duty. Though the noise of machinery seems confusing, everything is in perfect system. To the right is the paper-cutter which smoothly trims the pages when ready.

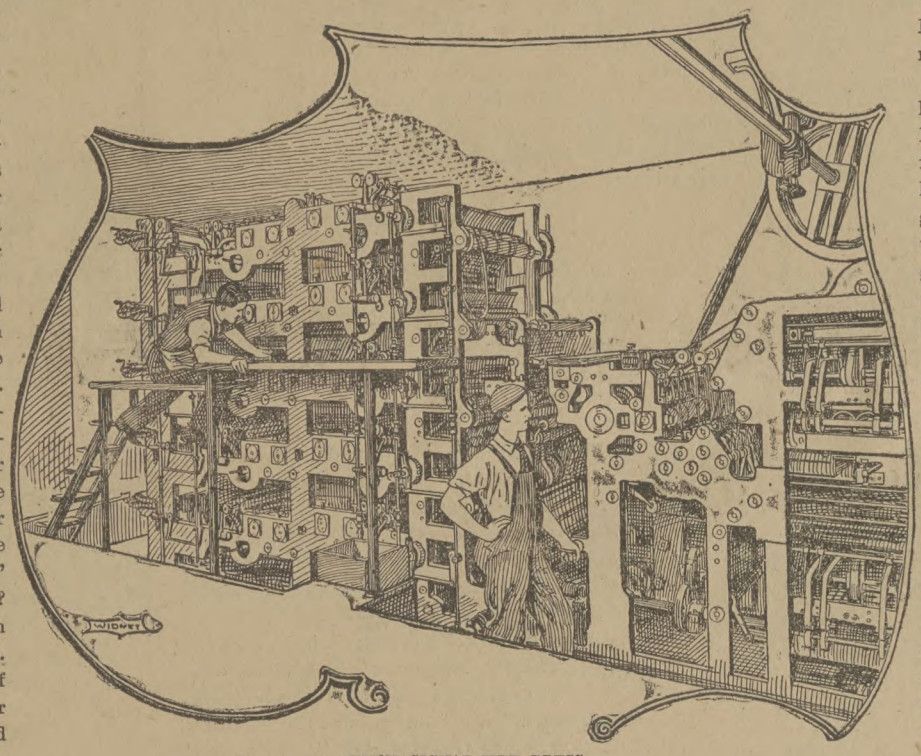
Returning, on the right is the bindery, to which the printed sheets are carried to be folded, pasted, stitched, or covered. The piles of sheets show how much is to be done here. From the bindery, the work is sent to the shipping-room up stairs.

But come a little further. You must see where THE UNION SIGNAL is printed Pass the elevator and enter the door to the right; go through it to the southeast corner, and into the rear room. See! What do you think of that? No. You never saw a press like it, never! Five presses, one above another. Note how it does its work! Five rolls of paper are placed at the farther end—four are white, one is colored. The man by the lever pushes it, the huge thing begins to move—and at the other end, almost in the twinkling of an eye, from the folder out drop your UNION SIGNALS ready for mailing! Printed, pasted, folded, at the rate of 7,200 an hour. Wonderful, wonderful! That little machine in the corner is the electric motor that runs the Mammoth. These others are the trimming machines on which the electrotype plates are curved to fit the cylinders of the press. The room through which you entered is the mailing room, where the names and addresses are placed on each paper and the package prepared for the post-office.

The plates? No, the plates are not made here, but in the foundry, which is in another building. When the forms are complete,—i. e., when pages of THE UNION SIGNAL or any other paper are in type and fully ready—they are sent to the foundry and an impression is taken in wax. This is submerged in a solution of copper and an electric current deposits the copper on the wax, which is then melted off and the copper "shell" is backed by metal. These electrotype plates are "finished" with great care and made to fit the press on which they are to be worked off for the forms in which they are placed. After using they can be stored away for reproduction of later editions or re-melted for new uses. In the foundry of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association electrotypes are made for THE UNION SIGNAL and other periodicals issued from this house, and a large amount of work is done for other printing establishments.

W. T. P. A. MAIN PRESS ROOM.

Extensive! Yes. The need is large and only a broadly planned establishment can meet it. Liberal provision has been made that none may be unsupplied. Wise W. C. T. U. women and Christian workers appreciate this, and prove it by using our publications with lavish hand wherever error lifts its head. Knowledge is power. The antidote for evil is truth, the annihilator of darkness is light. Pathetic were the words of Christ, "Oh, if thou hadst known!" How shall they know without a teacher? The printed page is a silent teacher with infinite power. Much still remains undone. Let all forces unite to complete the task of "lifting others as we climb." No labor for God and humanity is lost or unrecognized by the omniscient eye.



UNION SIGNAL WEB PRESS.

FOURTH OF JULY AGAIN.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

Every year the souls of the temperate and patriotic are vexed at the desecration of our country's birthday. In large cities the flag is put to uses more dishonoring than was the riddling shot at Sumter, or the hot dust of the Bull Run retreat. Its stripes twice-dyed in American blood, and its stars, shining with hope for the world, are draped about doors and sign-boards bearing names as un-American as the wet wares upon the bar within. Looking down any business street Fourth of July morning a special display of national colors is known to mark a saloon.

Last summer I lived in a hotel centrally located. Remembering the dewy days when I was with my brother at the firing of the first cracker "Independence" morning, and later years when daybreak found me full-gowned, waiting for my lover to take me to the "celebration," where an entire county gathered for a good time, I rose early and sat in my window to see how the day would begin in the great city.

A span of proud stepping horses with small flags in their bridles were coming, a wagon bristling with banners behind. It looked as if it might be a village "band wagon," with brown-faced boys and rosy-cheeked girls hidden among the flags, but as it rolled under the window, I discovered a load of beer kegs.

That beer wagon was the initiatory of Fourth of July demonstration in Chicago. All day long the flag of the free advertised the conditions of the worst slavery. Dry goods houses were closed, but wet goods sold more freely than usual, and customers were numerous who had bought more than they could carry home. Ah, the going home, with such agony for wife and children! I could not think of that,—I, who never had a drop of it brought to me by father, brother, or husband—but I resolved that what my voice and pen could do, it should do, to make the dear day holier, and to rescue our revered flag from the dishonor of being used chiefly to advertise beer.

The first act in that direction was to buy a pair of flags for the cashier's desk in our W. C. T. U. restaurant on my way to breakfast that morning.

SHIPPING ROOM.

In villages, drinking forms a painfully large part of the festivities. The editor in-chief of THE UNION SIGNAL last year spent July 4th in a railway train, and was so stirred by what she saw, that a vigorous leader rolled off her pen under title of "Reform or Abolish." To abolish would be treason, but to reform by substitution is possible, and directly in our line of effort.

Our great national feast is befouled with drunkenness and betting. Let patriotic women trouble it to purify. Why should it not become the rallying day of the temperance hosts of all shades of opinion, a time to meet and invite outsiders to come to the point where we agree? Every "Fourth" for ten years the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has set up its tent and banners upon Boston Com mon, and held a gospel temperance meeting from ten in the morning until seven in the evening.

I wish I could tell the story of that patriotic work as it was told me by the gifted president of the Boston Central union, Mrs. A. J. Gordon, with mother-love that reached beyond her own beautiful brood to all the unmothered of the city shining in her eyes. But that illuminating spirit defies type. At my request she wrote an account of one of those meetings, and I trust that every president of a W. C. T. U. will turn to her file of THE UNION SIGNAL—of course, every officer of a W. C. T. U. preserves such a file—and on pages 4 and 5 of the issue of July 2, 1891, she will find Mrs. Gordon's very practical letter.

A meeting of this sort in every part of every great city would do incalculable good. Most cities have as many unions as parks. Churches, if invited, would co-operate and form a nucleus. Music and lemonade would do the rest. Speeches, of course, must avoid disputed phases, but there is sure to be a great deal of personal discussion and reciprocity of opinion which will enlarge the actual commerce of thought, to the effect that every one taking part will go away with more to reflect upon than he brought. Of course the inoffensive "leaflet" which never "talks back" should be scattered everywhere. The working together to help the crowd, always attracted by an open air meeting, would knit a bond between those who now think themselves divided; the sight of people enjoying themselves, without intoxicating liquors, would be an object-lesson to many lookers-on, and only the Searcher of hearts can number the ideas and ambitions awakened in young minds for a higher plane of life and happiness than they and their parents now occupy. The effect of temperance lectures and mass-meetings upon the plastic character of youth never is formulated in statistics. If it were, no zealous reformer would be "tired of it," and we should all know that the smallest count of results in a temperance revival is the number of drinking men reclaimed—although that is large enough to richly pay all costs.

In smaller places where but one entertainment can have right of way, the program would have to be more secular and varied, and honest lemonade and cake might be a source of income for paying expenses and furnishing the literature which should be abundant.

I believe it would be possible, too, before July 4, 1893, to have a large proportion of the saloons closed by law on that day, so that we should not blush in the morning at sight of their disgraceful display of bunting, and weep at night in view of their miserable patrons.

Human nature—especially the American variety—needs a real holiday sometimes, as much as it needs a Sabbath. To arrange it, wholesome and moral, as well as jubilant and unrestrained, is in the province of woman's social talent—assuming always that the beginning of womanly wisdom in the social world is to call to her counsel and aid just the right young men. They can be found everywhere, too, when a tactful mother seeks them among her son's friends, or a discriminating young lady sifts her acquaintance to find them.

We need to learn of the German to enjoy ourselves in families, and he needs to learn to do so without beer. Too much with us, the children have their pleasure occasions, the young people have theirs, and the parents have none. So they forget to be young and to sympathize with the young; without sympathy there is no influence, and what God meant to be a swaying but firmly set trellis for young lives to grow and climb upon, becomes cold, stony and uninviting, while the immature ones, naturally depending upon it, crawl in the dirt of debauchery, seeking their birthright—happiness—where it is not, and learning at last the dear-bought lesson, "There is no pleasure in sin."

It is consistent with the intent of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to seek co-operation of churches and Christian Endeavor Societies in a crusade to recover the holy grail of our first and greatest national holiday, to empty it of rum and rioting, and fill it with festivities worthy of a great and free people.

WHERE SHALL WE KEEP OUR SALOON?

BY MARY H. HULL.

One has some very peculiar experiences in starting out to find the law in the land under which a saloon may take up its abode.

Strange to find nobody wants it near him, no one but the saloon-keeper himself, and his affection for it is based upon the money there is in it; though he will not have it near his own home if he can afford to live away from it. There seems to be no place for it, poo. thing! A decent community of people, who, in these days of lavish, complex living, think little and know less about a liquor and all its hell, wakes up some fine morning to find a saloon has planted itself right alongside. The first remark is, "Why, how is this? Indeed, you'll not put your dirt here among us. Our doors are sacred, our children are decent, and must not smell your breath. Get away. Oh, somebody come quick, and take it away! No! no! no!" A flutter and a sputter, then a hopeless acquiescence, a sly selling out of property by those who care enough and can make enough by so doing; while others must remain, tethered by their poverty, or by the smell and contagion of the victorious saloon, which waves its American flag and revenue permit. The people either go in or go away. The rich do not want it, the poor do not want it, the drunkard does not, yet it stays.

Socially, the saloon-keeper and his family in America are not in "good standing," however rich he becomes, for it is inbred in us that the saloon is a public nuisance, a disgrace and an outrage. This speaks well for our social conditions, and proves that after all this "dollar-country" does not quite worship the dollar; but here is the puzzle: The saloon dollar has dominion and lies at the bottom of an infernal and imperious business; a business which morally speaking no living man tries to defend. A sort of defense is sometimes attempted in the maudlin saying, "It is sin's necessity. Men must and will drink, and somebody must supply. I am a noble martyr ministering to men's sinful necessities."

Everybody is trying to run away from the saloon—everybody, except a chosen few and its victims, who have thrown in their nickels, dimes, dollars, manhood, families, their all; these would run away too, if they could but keep their legs under them, and their right minds to guide what legs they have. Most strange paradox; who can understand it but the great beast himself—this nineteenth century monstrosity, the saloon!

The seekers after the law in other decent communities find they may hold their ground a little more successfully if they but get hold of the situation in time. In case this community is a town or village or a small city, and not a block in a metropolis, and if the majority care enough for their homes to fight for them, they may wield a little switch of a law called local option, which can be worked by most eternal vigilance; such as is required to keep one's house warm when the weather is at zero, or to keep a dainty home free from dust when a blizzard is blowing. It takes a mighty vigilance to keep one's children from being bitten when mad-dogs have the street, but then it can be done. One can stay inside and let the dogs have it. Villages and small cities can keep the beast at bay if they hide well and defend themselves only from the inside. This monster feels these little hurts to the amount of being annoyed enough to fling his tail in their faces, and to move on a pace or so.

It is finally found that a block in a city has no protection whatever. The seeker for it has the law respecting a saloon for a neighbor read at headquarters out of a book, but learns that the 200 feet or 500 feet from a church or school, and all that about the consent of householders or land-holders is all talk—the exercise of a sort of arbitrary power on the part of a mayor. It is un-American to ask him to use it. He has no solid law to protect him when he enforces it. He lays himself open to having a mandamus served on him, for the saloonmen keep well posted on their advantages; their attorneys stand with fists close to the mayor's face, and say: "Move if you dare; I'm ready." Combined and well organized, the saloon more and more dares to hold "the powers that be" at bay, while whimpering, unorganized, uncombined, scattered, timorous temperance forces come up once in a while, when aroused by some especially outrageous defiance of law, and want somebody to do something—"quick!" The fact is, our weak, inefficient attention to these things leads us exactly where the fly was led, when

"Up he springs, but both his wings
Are in the web caught fast.
The spider laughed, 'Ha, ha, my boy,
I have you now at last.
Tell me, pray, how are you now?'
Said the spider to the fly;
'You fools will never wisdom get
Until you dearly buy.'"

Yes, we are buying wisdom at a fearful price—selling innocent blood for it, until we have actual Judas-money piled so high in the treasury that it takes more than a generation of statesmen to know what to do with it. Judas himself does not want it; the priests will have none of it. It will, perhaps, some day buy a field of blood. It is costly wisdom, but we are getting it.

The public officials in the city are stuck fast on to the spear of the "people's" will, taking the consequences of a will that doesn't will anything at all, while it whimpers: "They ought to prevent" a saloon going here or there. They cannot prevent it going exactly where it pleases if it pays its five hundred dollars, and if the keeper is a man of good character.

What is "a man of good character"? Legally, any person who has not been in the penitentiary; one who has not been convicted of crime. A good voting character is any one not a criminal, nor a woman, nor an idiot; so of course he is good enough to run a saloon.

Piteously, almost, does a chief executive in this position ask, "Why do not the temperance forces combine? Why do you not really care for your interests as the saloonmen care for theirs? The executive only stand in the gulf between you and them. We can do only that in which the law protects the official." Personally many an officer of the law would enforce it in the interests of prohibition, if temperance men and women were at his elbow organized, with their attorney beside the saloon's attorney, to interpret the law according to its intent and purpose; to expose and contest every point in which it is being wrested to the liquor traffic's advantage, and to show the executive the law's guarantee for his protection in the face of the saloon's threat to "knife" him if he sets the law's machinery against it.

The law is just as weak or just as strong as the will of the people that made it, and its executor is no stronger than the law. The mayor and the police of a city need the Prohibitionists to stand by them in the execution of the law as strongly as the saloon stands by them in its violation. They are in "a strait betwixt two"—for they are threatened and defied by the liquor traffic and many of them would be glad to show their righteous determination to execute the law whatever it be. They have not all gone into office for "boodle." Shall the saloon be kept within the law? The Prohibitionists must help the officials to do it.

PRESIDENT'S COLUMN

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.
AMERICAN—Chicago, Ill., The Temple, La Salle St.
ENGLISH—London, 57 Gordon Square, N. W.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. OFFICERS.
President—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large—LADY HENRY SOMERSET, 57 Gordon Square, N. W. London, Eng.
Secretary—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, O.
Assistant Secretary—ANNA A. GORDON, Evanston, Ill.
Treasurer—MRS. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS, 26 Chomedy St., Montreal, Can.

"All that I sought to be and am not, comforts me."

Patience must dwell with Love, for Love and Sorrow
Have pitched their tents together here;
Love all alone will build a house to-morrow,
And Sorrow not be near.
To-day, for Love's sake, hope, still hope in Sorrow;
Rest in her shade and hold her dear;
To-day she nurses thee and on to-morrow
Love only shall be near. —Christiana Rossetti.

***

A paragraph crept into the Watch-tower recently, the scope of which was unintentionally broad. It referred to the "government going through the pockets of the people, while the police held us by the throats." The special application of this statement is to be found in New York City, where there is good authority for believing that the people are charged from five to seven millions of dollars for police protection, while at the same time the police levy on the saloons, gambling houses and houses of ill-fame for immense sums, spent in their own interest and to advance the interests of Tammany Hall. Please let this explanation explain.

***

Mrs. Edith S. Davis, 492 Washington St., Milwaukee, Wis., has been made my associate superintendent in the department of work for the promotion of purity. Mrs. Davis has spoken and written to great acceptance on this difficult subject, and I hope that our state superintendents and workers throughout the country will remember this address and send reports to her; also look to her for suggestions, because with all my other cares I cannot give such attention to the department as I should be glad to bestow were it at all practicable. Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, Boston, Mass., headquarters of the W. C. T. U., is one of our lecturers in this department, and Mrs. L. Williams, of Cameron, Mo., is another; and Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, the Temple, Chicago, though last appointed, is unexcelled upon this theme. Those wishing for information about mothers' meetings should write to Mrs. Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Battle Creek, Mich., who is working up this department efficiently, while Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, 111 W. 75th St., New York City, is achieving desirable results in the line of work for the promotion of purity in literature and art.

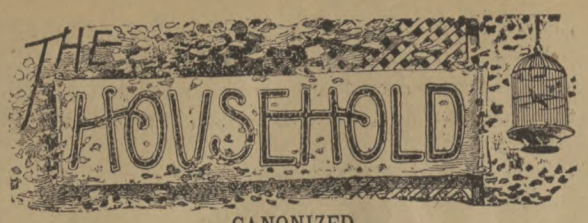
***

Phillips Brooks has these great exhortations which all leaders should pray over and ponder:

Or turn your thoughts to another sort of abundance—the abundance of friendship and acquaintances. "Happy the man of many friends," we say; but hardly have we said it when we stop ourselves. So many of the men of many friends whom we have known have run to waste. So many of the popular men have been tyrannized over and ruined by their popularity. Their principles have crumbled; their selfhood has melted away; they have become mere stocks and stones for foolish men to hang garlands on, not real men, real utterances of divine life, leading their fellowmen, rebuking sins, inspiring struggles, saving souls. Ah, yes; not merely to make men love you and honor you, but to know how to be loved and honored without losing yourself and growing weak,—that is the problem of many of the sweetest, richest, most attractive lives; and there is only one solution for it, which blessed indeed is he who has discovered. To stiffen yourself against the praise and honor of your fellowmen, to make yourself insensible, to be a stoic and insist you will not care what men think of you, that is the base way of escape; that is as if a rich man escaped avarice by throwing his money in the sea, or as if a scholar escaped pedantry by laboriously forgetting all he knew.

But if the much-loved man can look up and demand the love of God; if, catching sight of that, he can crave it and covet it infinitely above all other love; if, laying hold of its great freedom he can make it his, and know that he loves God, and know that God loves him, then he is free. Then let him come back and take into a glowing heart the warmest admiration and affection of his brethren; let him walk the earth with hosts of friends, the heaven that he carries in his heart preserves him. They cannot make him conceited, for he who lives with God must be humble. They cannot drown his selfhood, for the God he loves and serves is always laying upon him his own personal duties, and bringing his soul before its own judgment seat every day. He who knows that God loves and honors him may freely take all other love and honor, however abundant they may be, and he will get no harm. All that is weak and foolish and unworthy he will cast aside; all that is worthy he will take worthily.

Frances E. Willard.



CANONIZED.

BY WARNER SNOAD.

An angel came to earth to find a saint!
He crossed the threshold of a holy fane,
Where radiant hues of myriad tinted paint,
Gleamed like rich jewels through each window pane.
Fair women knelt in saintly-seeming prayer,
But bonnets, husbands, rivals choked each mind;
Some Christians, as a leaven, worshiped there,
But ne'er a saint God's messenger could find.

He sought the couch of suffering and pain,
"And here," said he, "my search is surely blest—
Amongst His chosen 'twill not be in vain
To seek the object of my eager quest."
But ah, he found a cross is hard to bear!
And few there be who do not chafe or faint
Beneath a burden crushing to despair;
Some faithful ones kept watch, but ne'er a saint.

Then next he crossed the threshold of a home!
Amid her little ones, a mother stood,
High as the vault of a cathedral dome
She deemed the sanctity of motherhood.
"This is not sanctity," the angel said,
"It is but selfishness in Love's disguise;
No light to guide a wanderer's feet is shed;
Within four walls her heart, her treasure lies."

Down paths as commonplace as paths could be,
With others' troubles on her shoulders laid,
A woman passed—the angel turned to see,
An insignificant, toil-worn old maid.
He kissed with reverence her garment's hem,
Then back to heaven with joyful heart he flew
And cried, "Dear Lord, for zone or diadem
A precious jewel I have found for you."

DICK ELLSWORTH'S GRANDFATHER.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

It was about ten o'clock in the morning, and old Mr. Dexter, the village blacksmith, was at work as usual in his shop. He was hammering a piece of hot iron, and sparks were flying at a lively rate, when he became aware that some one stood between him and the sun. He gave one glance, and then with a little grunt of disapproval continued his work.

The tall young fellow who had slouched into the shop with his hands in his pockets watched him for a few moments, and then remarked in an aggrieved tone: "You don't seem very glad to see me, Uncle Jed."

The old man paused, and, wiping the sweat from his forehead, gave his companion a comprehensive look. "That's so, Dick! I was hoping they'd put you in the lock-up, and keep you there for one spell. Who paid the fine this time?"

"Mother," was the answer.

"Humph! took about twenty washin's at fifty cents apiece; you ain't worth no such sum," said the old man, as he leaned against a wagon he was reconstructing. "No sir, you ain't worth it. I said the last time I paid for your breakin' Stovers' winders, that I wouldn't spend another cent on you. But it seems your mother don't believe in jails. Now tell me the truth, Dick, wasn't you the worse for liquor when you drove off the doctor's horse?"

"Well, that's about the size of it, I suppose. Of course folks make a great fuss over it because the carriage got broken; but I'd only had some beer."

The old blacksmith groaned. "I thought so! I thought so! And you're the grandson of Jacob Ellsworth. My soul! ain't I glad he can't see what the family's come to?"

Dick's face grew red and angry. "I don't see what you're always talking about him for. I'm not to blame for having a grandfather!"

"To blame! To blame!" echoed his uncle. "No, but you're to blame for disgracing a name you ought to be proud of. Just think of it! A man that kept saloons out of this town as long as he lived. Well, I've held on to you, Dick, because you never knew what 'twas to have a father. Maybe if he'd lived you'd have been a better boy; but I've tried to take his place as well as I could. And you've had your mother—no boy could wish for a better—but the more we do the worse you are. And I've made up my mind that if you can't break with the crew you're goin' with, and keep away from saloons, I'm done with you. Your grandfather himself wouldn't blame me for feelin' clear discouraged."

"Then you don't want me to work for you any longer?" said Dick questioningly.

The sturdy old blacksmith pondered a moment. "No, I don't," and then he took up his hammer.

Dick drew himself to his full height and spoke bitterly: "Enough said then. I'll go where I won't be preached at and where I won't hear about my grandfather, day in and day out," and out of the shop he went, with more energy than he had shown for many a week.

Mr. Dexter let his hammer drop again and leaned against the old wagon. All that he had done for this wayward nephew seemed like time and money and anxiety thrown away. And now he had left without one word of gratitude. No wonder this "serpent's tooth" pierced his faithful old heart, nor that tears ran down his cheeks leaving a light streak through the coal grime. But Mr. Dexter did not really believe that Dick meant to go away. "He'll be back by dinner time," said he to himself, with a long sigh; and then he reheated his iron and hammered away, stroke upon stroke, just as so much of the world's work has to be done.

As for Dick, he walked on, expecting every moment to hear Uncle Jed calling him back. But no voice followed him, nor did the church bells ring: "Turn again, Whittington, Lord Mayor of London!"

Reaching the outskirts of the village he saw a young girl approaching. It was Lida Minot, the one girl in Conway that Dick thoroughly admired. His admiration followed the law of contradictions, however, for she was as unlike himself as possible. Erect, energetic, full of purpose and principle, a leader in all good works among the young people—that was Lida. She lived near Mrs. Ellsworth, and had helped her through many a hard trial, as a strong young person will sometimes help an older one, by practical sympathy. And, while she felt nothing but contempt for Dick's present worthlessness, she would not pass him without sign of recognition, as her girl friends did. He had been her playmate in childhood, and then a good-natured schoolmate with an excellent record, and she was always hoping and expecting a return to his early ways.

But this morning Lida had heard how he and two boon companions had taken good Doctor Gerry's horse and carriage from a patient's door, and driven far and fast until they were thrown out and the carriage broken. She knew he had been arrested, and that his mother had gone out very early to secure his release, and now, here he was! She felt indignant, and gave him a mere fraction of a bow, while her face bore no gleam of friendliness.

"I'm going away, Lida," said he; "I've had a falling out with Uncle Jed, and I'm off to seek my fortune."

"Well," said the girl coolly, "I believe I would go if I were in your place. Is your mother willing?"

"I just left the shop, but I guess mother won't care. Nobody'll care," and Dick, looking along the roadway, was vain enough to expect Lida to say she cared, and beg him to go home. But she was not the girl to do that. Instead she spoke in her most cutting tone.

"Oh, your mother will be lonely for a while probably, but she will be spared a good many heart aches! I'll tell her you're gone, and I think she won't break down under the loss."

Dick looked at her with a new expression. Was it possible that his mother could let him go so easily? He turned away, but Lida was aroused, and felt it her "duty" to give him a little sound advice.

"Dick," said she, "why don't you behave yourself? Why don't you stop going in bad company, and act as you used to? I don't believe you care any more about beer and such stuff than I do. Your mother says you don't, and I think it's a shame for you to wear out her life and ruin yourself in this way. If you'd only try, you might be as good a man as your grandfather was. Why, mamma says that he—"

"I know that story," interrupted Dick, "and I vow I'll go far enough to get away from Grandfather Ellsworth if I have to walk a thousand miles."

"Where are you going, really?" asked Lida, relenting a little as he walked away.

"To Joppa," replied Dick without turning.

"I don't care if he does," soliloquized Lida as she continued her homeward walk; "I hope he will half starve; I hope he'll have a fever or some accident to wake him up, he's such an idiot!" All of which implied that our clear-eyed young friend believed in providential interposition. Human philosophy in its natural state runs along side the Divine after all, and if we had God's opportunities we would often use them in case of extremity, just as He does—for wholesome discipline.

Lida was rather tender-hearted, however, and long before she reached home was wondering if her harsh words had hurt Dick's feelings, or would drive him to desperate deeds. But nothing had yet struck through his padding of vanity and selfishness. As he traveled on and on, without a pause for rest or food, he was pitying himself and wondering why it was that people were so determined not to let him have his own way! But conscience kept pace with him, waiting her opportunity.

It was not until five o'clock that a fellow-traveler accosted him. Then, just as the pangs of hunger and homesickness began to grow unbearable, he heard the rattle of wheels, and a farm wagon loaded with bags passed him.

Norwich, Conn.

(To be Continued.)

The Still Hour.

A DAY BY DAY BIBLE READING.

BY REV. C. C. HARRAH.

(Luke 24:13-27; Isaiah 61:66.)

Sunday. Luke 24:13–27. Verse 16, It should be our daily prayer that our spiritual eyes may be opened and be kept open; so that, as we journey through this world, we may always recognize Christ, when spiritually He comes near to us. Verse 17, If we are truly Jesus' disciples, He will come to us in all our times of gloom and trial, with sympathy and help. Verse 27, How much trouble and doubt we might avoid if we knew more of the Scriptures. How can any one know the Bible when he never has, for any length of time, made a business of its study.

Monday. Isa. 61. Verse 1, Our Lord applied this prophecy to Himself in the beginning of His blessed work of reform and salvation. Luke 4:18–20. Verse 11, The work of the Gospel has always been hindered by the imperfect way that it has been understood. All the prophecies show that God means it to be a reforming and transforming power in the world. It is not constructed as a "system of theology," but its words were meant to be spirit and life. Jno. 6:63.

Tuesday. Isa. 62. Verse 1, The great Deliverer will not rest until His kingdom extends through all the nations and the glorious change in the condition of His people is accomplished. Verse 7, We should pray every day for the overthrow of the kingdom of darkness, and that everywhere men may love and serve our Lord Jesus Christ. And we should work as we pray.

Wednesday. Isa. 63. Verse 1, Edom represents Israel's most inveterate enemies. The great Deliverer will at last come in triumph, having accomplished a victory over all the enemies of the church, and no more shall any be found to rise up against Him. Verse 8, With all sincerity and earnestness, we should pray to God that we may be chosen in Christ unto salvation; and we may well doubt if we are thus chosen, if we are false to God and to our covenant with him.

Thursday. Isa. 64. Verse 1, When the enemies of righteousness seem to be multiplied, and everything seems to go against us, we should always resort to prayer. We need the presence of God, and then the greatest obstacles will disappear. Verse 4, God has purposes of good toward His people, and we should never doubt His ability to remove mountain-like difficulties, in order that the good may be accomplished.

Friday. Isa. 65. Verse 1, If the Jews proved unfaithful to God, the growth of the church should not suffer, for the Gentiles would be welcomed into it. If we are not true to God, others will be raised up to do the work of the kingdom, and we shall perish in our sins. Verse 20, Human life would be much longer than it now is, if all observed the laws of God in their bodies, and would stop their ways of intemperate living. When the world truly becomes Christian, premature death will no longer be known.

Saturday. Isa. 66. Verse 1, In this day of fine churches, we should keep in mind that no house can be built so acceptable to God as the contrite spirits of His people, which are the temples that He delights to honor by His presence. Verse 13, As a mother never ceases to think of and plan for the welfare of her children, so God will never forget His servants.

THE PRAYER MEETING TOPIC.

(The Good Service that Boys and Girls May do. Jno. 6:9.)

1. It seems to be the chief thought with many boys and girls, that they are in this world simply to be amused. They never can amount to much until they get that notion out of their minds, and regard themselves as here to do something.

2. The opportunity that boys and girls have to become superior to the multitude, is found in their diligent use of the time that others spend without profit. This boy mentioned in the text would have lost his great opportunity, if, instead of being with Jesus, he had gone off seeking fun with other boys.

3. All boys and girls can build up reliable and pure characters, and do great service for the world by preparing themselves to become noble men and women.

4. In the work of the church, in the home and in all the common ways and opportunities of life, there is so much that boys and girls can do to help along the good and put down the evil.

Peoria, Ill.

We fail to think in how many ways Christ gave Himself to us. First, as our Exemplar, showing us how to lead a true life,—then as our Redeemer when He yielded Himself to the death of the cross, last, and greatest of all, as our Transformer when in His resurrection life He sheds forth the Spirit to dwell in our hearts and work in us His nature.—F. E. W.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LADY HENRY SOMERSET, MARY ALLEN WEST, } EDITORS.

MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, } OFFICE EDITORS.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President Board of Directors.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DEP'T BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

Him hath God exalted with His right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.—Acts 5:31.

MEN'S CONVENTIONS VS. WOMEN'S.

Attendance upon the National Editorial Convention, as well as upon the convention of the International Press League, both recently held in San Francisco, suggests comparison between the way men and women conduct conventions. Of course the women in mind, when a white-ribboner writes, are primarily W. C. T. U. women, whose conventions have come to be known for the "neatness and dispatch" with which they transact business; but various women's clubs, women's press associations, and most emphatically the Federation of Women's Clubs, show a striking contrast to the way men conduct conventions.

First, Women meet for business; men, to have a good time. Business first, then pleasure, is women's motto, while in the convention referred to, attention to business was a secondary matter sandwiched in between pleasure trips and junketings.

Second, Women's conventions are more orderly and conducted more in accord with parliamentary law. Some of the blundering or intentional over-riding of established principles during the late editorial convention, had they occurred in a National W. C. T. U. meeting, would have been heralded from one end of the country to the other as proof of woman's incompetency.

Most of all did we miss the Christian courtesy which distinguish our National Convention and its presiding officer, her careful guarding of the rights of the minority, so careful that we sometimes think she favors her enemies more than her friends. There was more self-seeking, more political wire-pulling in the two days' session of the editorial convention than we should see in two solid years of W. C. T. U. conventions.

These, however, may be considered as incidentals; while the convention did much valuable work. Bringing together representatives of the press from every part of the country, affording them not only opportunities for seeing the country from ocean to ocean, but what is of more importance, of close personal contact during two or three weeks, must result in great good. Northern editors will not "wave the bloody shirt" quite as defiantly, nor will southern editors sneer at the Yankees quite as contemptuously after passing three weeks together in friendly association.

One of the most valuable papers presented was by T. Sambola Jones, of Louisiana, on "A Non-Political View of the Press in Relation to the Negro." Its circulation, North and South, would do good. Another valuable paper, especially noticeable for the high moral ground it took, was on "The Country Newspaper as an Educator," by Hon. John Nagle, of Wisconsin. "Newspaper Book-keeping; How it can Detect Errors and Prevent Mistakes in Business Policy," by V. S. McClately, of San Francisco, was a clear-cut, business document which we hope will be printed and find a place on every business-manager's desk. Women were represented upon the program by a paper on "Women in Journalism," written by Mrs. S. M. Moses, of the Illinois Woman's Press Association, and in her absence, admirably read by Mrs. S. W. Pratt, of the same association. It was enthusiastically received and by many pronounced the best paper of the session.

The stand taken by this association on the woman question is peculiar and puzzling to those who do not see behind the scenes. It was very eager to have the women's press associations become auxiliary to it thus swelling its membership and revenue. A strong minority are staunch friends of the women, chivalric in efforts to have justice accorded us; but the majority are determined adherents to the doctrine of masculine supremacy. Their absolute unconsciousness of the fact that women journalists have some rights that men are bound to respect, is amusing. Even the best of them seemed to think that to elect a woman third vice-president would be all-sufficient recognition of women in journalism and for two years have labored hard to do so; both times the woman candidate was defeated, showing the intense masculinity which rules the association.

There has been a woman assistant recording secretary, Miss Virginia C. Clay, of Huntsville, Alabama, acceptably filling that office last year. This year Miss Louise Francis, who owns and edits the Castroville Enterprise, California, was nominated for that office by Mr. Allen B. Lemon, chairman of the California reception committee, and elected by acclamation, only to be coolly told that the new constitution just adopted made no provision for the office of assistant secretary, so woman has no official recognition in the National Editorial Association.

The resolutions committee of the National Editorial Association was favored in having as its chairman, Mr. Gilmore, of Louisiana, a clean, strong man, who brought in an unusually good set of resolutions, which were adopted unanimously. Among them was the following:

"WHEREAS, the public press is the educator of the people, and should educate up and not down.

Resolved, That as an Editorial Association, we earnestly protest against publishing the disgusting details of crime, reports of divorce trials and other demoralizing matter. We also desire to place on record our recognition of the fact that report of honorable deeds is just as much news as reports of crime, and more worthy of record by the public press.

The California W. C. T. U. through its secretary, Mrs. D. J. Spencer, sent in a strong memorial in favor of action along this line.

INFECTED CLOTHING.

It is a painful reflection that the horrors of the "sweating system" are most intense in the trades with which women are most responsibly connected, i. e., the clothing trades.

Women make nearly all the clothing, and women purchase about three-quarters of all that is bought; women are proverbially conscientious, and yet, as purchasers, they encourage the great manufacturers who are directly responsible for the present system. At last, however, vigorous measures have been adopted by the Illinois Women's Alliance for the abolition of the whole system, and the Chicago W. C. T. U's being active members, it is especially appropriate that the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL be kept abreast of this movement.

A fortnight ago we spent an afternoon among the tenement house cloak makers, and recorded the following observations: One rag shop on ground floor, with a dying Italian bambino on the top floor, and the tenement "homes" between filled with Italian women finishing knee pants for a sweater whose shop is near by; one diphtheria patient in ground floor rear room, the presence of the disease being duly billed upon the door (in the adjoining front room, cloaks were being finished); one blind baby with its head raw with eczema held in the mother's lap while she sewed coats; one baby with its throat showing aggravated post scarlatina swelling, held by the mother as she sewed coats (she had not stopped cloak-making in the sick-room during the acute stages of the disease). The district nurse also mentioned a case under her care where the neighbor below sews cloaks, and took her work upstairs with her to the sick room throughout the typhoid fever of the neighbor above. These conditions inevitably spread infection as they destroy, by competition with decent shops, the hiring of the mass of clothing workers.

The measure proposed for the abolition of the sweating system embraces three provisions: a label to be used by the seller, a license to be obtained by the sweater, and a penalty for the seller, the sweater and the tenement house owner or agent who violate any provision of the sanitary regulation of the clothing trades.

As the sweater is a means of vast profit to the great clothing manufacturers he is sure of their support in this struggle of the purchasers to obtain non-rejected clothing. It rests, however, with the purchaser to demand a label upon every garment exposed for sale, and to refuse to accept any garment not so provided.

The present situation is wholly evil. The tenement-house clothing-maker who usually cannot read nor write nor cipher, is paid ten cents per cloak, and frequently defrauded even of this shameful pittance. The sweater's victims in the shops receive from one to five dollars a week for working from six a. m. to ten p. m. throughout July, August and September, and starve along with nothing to do throughout the winter.

A committee appointed by the Trades and Labor Assembly of Chicago recently addressed to one thousand office-holders and candidates for office a letter saying: "We beg to call your attention to the fact that the 'Sweating System' exists in Chicago only by the open and chronic violation of the laws, state and municipal, with regard to sanitation, inspection, child labor and school attendance. We are directed to ask you what measures you would recommend citizens to take to secure the enforcement of the existing laws, and the enactment of new ones, to put an end to this public scandal, and what action it is within your power and disposition to take as a public representative?"

Pending the symposium thus called forth, the Alliance calls upon the city council and the public to take immediate action for the defense of the purchaser from infection, by demanding a label upon every garment offered for sale, stating the address of the shop in which it was made.

This is a lever which enables every woman in the whole country to lend a hand to the sweater's victim. And the time to do it is now, when the season of manufacture is just opening. Do not buy any garment unless it has a label showing where it was made!

A WOMAN'S CONGRESS.

Among other things contemplated by the Woman's Council, the executive officers of which were recently in session in Chicago, is a sort of congress of women to be held next winter in Washington. The plan is this: To invite representative women, and especially the presidents of societies, to sit as a national legislature, expressing in bills of the proper legal form what may appear to them to be the best things for the people's education, sanitation, laws relative to property and divorce, and many other themes of a sociological sort, that might well be the subjects of study and respectful recommendation to the actual Congress in session under the golden dome. The press would be likely to "help these women," and public opinion would be aroused, educated, concentrated more by this manifestation of interest on the part of the home-making class than it could be in any other way. Representative women, sent by their respective societies, could not fail to be a force for good.

The council also advises that the same method be pursued in each state, for the purpose of securing more helpful legislation, and in each municipality that better ordinances may be adopted for the people's good. If women only knew their power, and realized the well-nigh irresistible force of organized brain and purpose, their combined efforts, co-operating outside of Congress, legislature and city council, with the minority of good men inside those circles, would, in a few years, entirely change and incalculably improve the legal aspects of our government. And when women had thus demonstrated the good that they could do by indirection, the best men in the country would not be slow to invest them with that "direct veto" of evil and promulgator of good—the ballot.

THE CHILDREN AND COLUMBUS.

The movement for the Columbian Public School National Celebration, on October 12, has our hearty indorsement. We hope that the local unions will help forward this endeavor in every practicable way. Francis Bellamy is chairman of the committee, and The Youth's Companion office, Boston, is his headquarters. The object of the movement is not only to interest the youth of the country in the World's Columbian Exposition, but also to give to the American public school a fitting prominence as the fruit of four centuries of American life. It is believed that the 12th of October comes as near being the anniversary of the discovery of America as any date upon which we can fix. On that day, the dedication of the Columbian Exposition grounds will take place in Chicago. It is significant that the first approval of this suggestion came from the public school pupils, themselves. The World's Congress Auxiliary of the World's Fair then took up the proposition. We have thirteen million children in the public schools, and what they do will profoundly impress the entire nation. There is to be a program of exercises, simple and adapted to every school, which will be sent on application. The stars and stripes should float from every schoolhouse in the republic on this day of days. We earnestly hope that an effort will be made to secure from the children on the occasion referred to, their vote in favor of keeping the grounds of the great Exposition clean from intoxicating liquors of every sort, and closing those grounds on the great American rest day. Let us make common cause, not only for national glorification, but for an advance movement in the splendid fight for clear brains, without which our public schools can never be the mental luminaries that our ideal demands.

SOME of our good friends say that THE UNION SIGNAL is not so thorough a temperance paper as it ought to be. Perhaps we should make the point, in reply, that business men have the tact to mingle their advertisements with other subjects, heading them after such a manner that we are all beguiled into the reading, and that they thus attract those who would not read at all were it not for the skillful style in which their wares are set forth. Men who have the ingenuity to write such advertisements not unfrequently receive a salary of ten thousand dollars per year. We wish to make THE UNION SIGNAL an organism which shall enshrine the living, throbbing, vital issues of the day, putting temperance always at the fore but not making our paper a Paganini violin that twangs forever on one string. We would rather liken it to the full orchestra and, though far below a musical standard so high and so delightful as our figure indicates, we assure our kind readers that we hear its music with our spiritual ears and shall put as much of what we hear into musical notation as our abilities and the space that circumscribes us will allow.

We hope every white-ribboner has a copy of the neat little calendar for 1892 of our red letter days. Perhaps the most important of these is the birthday of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, September 22, which was selected by request of our National W. C. T. U. President as World's W. C. T. U. Day, in honor of our pioneer missionary explorer. It will be remembered that last year the day of this celebration was May 24, a date chosen simply for convenience, but it was felt that an historic interest would attach to the birthday of this intrepid leader. We wish to make it certainly as great a demonstration as that of last year, and to do so we shall need to rally our forces to the utmost, for since the Crusade no single day has ever been celebrated with so much interest and in such a universal fashion and with results so far-reaching and important. Two hundred thousand copies of The Union Signal were ordered, and five thousand dollars came into the treasury as the result of meetings held by our white-ribboners.

We begin thus early to call attention to this date in the earnest hope that the response may be even greater than last year. We received hundreds of letters assuring us that the collection was sent with unfeigned pleasure, not only because of the good it would do the World's W. C. T. U. but because of the greater good that had already accrued to the local union from a public meeting which had demonstrated to the people that the local and the world workers were closely linked and that the solidity of the white-ribbon movement is such that its strength is felt in every one of its auxiliaries, no matter how small and distant it may be. The average amount of money from each union was but $2 and a fraction, showing that we did not depend upon large collections, but upon that far richer harvest resulting from the aggregated interest and energy of multitudes. We hope that orders for The Union Signal special number for this day of days will begin at once. They flowed in to us in such numbers last year that we were unable to fill them all in time for the appointed day. We beg you, dear sisters, to take time by the forelock this year and get in your orders early. We shall try to make this the most attractive and most interesting issue of The Union Signal ever known. It will contain the program of the meeting and the songs (some of them new and from Anna Gordon's White Ribbon Hymnal) will also be given with pictures and sketches of leaders not hitherto illustrated in our columns, and special contributions from distinguished writers in all parts of the world.

